START

The Emma Goldman Papers

REEL

47

The Emma Goldman Papers

A Microfilm Edition

Reel 47

Goldman Writings

October 25, 1890 to December 31, 1912

Edited by

Candace Falk
Ronald J. Zboray
and
Daniel Cornford

Goldman Writings Editorial Staff:

Research:	Barbara Loomis	Robert Cohen
	Sarah Crome	Rebecca Hyman
Production	Jessica Weiss	Françoise Vergès

CHADWYCK-HEALEY INC.

Alexandria, Virginia — Cambridge, England

The Emma Goldman Papers Project

Editors

Candace Falk, Ph.D
Editor and Director

Ronald J. Zboray, Ph.D
Microfilm Editor

Daniel Cornford, Ph.D
Associate Editor, Correspondence Series

Alice Hall, J.D.
Associate Editor, Government Documents

Administrative Staff

Sally Thomas
Administrative Analyst

Ami Samuels
Administrative Assistant

Jennifer Collins
Administrative Assistant

Susan Wengraf Exhibit Designer

Research Associates

Robert Cohen, Ph.D
Dennis McEnnerney

Sarah Crome

Barbara Loomis, Ph.D Tom Peabody

Production Editors

Ellen Ratcliffe

Jennifer Smith

Kurt Thompson

Editorial Assistants

Brigida Campos
Christopher Gales
Leigh Anne Jones
Joanne Newman
Rachel Rivera

Colleen Cotter
Susan Grayzel
Michael Katz
Kristin Penner
Maxine Snow
Jessica Weiss

Oz Frankel Marilynn Johnson
Sherry Katz
Julia Rechter
Françoise Vergès

International Search Coordinators

Brenda Butler

Karen Hansen

International Researchers

Henrik Berggren
Paul Durden
Professor Lu Zhe
Barry Pateman

Furio Biagini
Wolfgang Haug
Gaetano Manfredonia
Eleni Varikas

Maria José Del Rio
Miguel Flamarich I Tarrasa
Kazuko Ohta
Susumu Yamaizumi

Research Assistants and Translators

Elena Balashova
Sigrid Brauner
Yvette Chalom
Simonetta Falasca-Zamponi
Jeffrey Garrett
Catherine Houndshell
Gerd Horton
Susan Kahn
Rae Lisker
Nancy Mackay
Caroline Pincus
Naomi Seidman
Elizabeth Station
Lars Tragardh

Howard Besser
Leif Brown
Roger Cook
Karl Fields
Rose Glickman
Andrew Heinze
Yoshi Igarashi
Vivian Kleiman
Delfina Marcello
Mary Odem
Elizabeth Reis
Paola Sesia-Lewis
Tyler Stoval

Khojesta Beverleigh
June Brumer
Erik Ellner
Salvador Garcia
John Guo
Rebecca Hyman
Titch Jones
Liu Zi-Jian
Caroline Massee
Sheila O'Neil
Byron Schiffman
Daniel Soyer
Jennifer Terry
Marcia Yonemoto

CHADWYCK-HEALEY INC.
Alexandria, Virginia; Cambridge, England; Paris

Copyright © 1990 by
The Emma Goldman Papers

Documents included in this publication have been reproduced with the permission of the archives in which the original documents are located.

Documents from private collections have been reproduced with the permission of the successors and heirs of the collections. Every attempt has been made to contact all successors and heirs of the private collections.

The arrangement of the pages on microfilm is the property of Chadwyck-Healey Inc., and no copy of this complete reel of microfilm may be made without the written permission of Chadwyck-Healey Inc.

In memory of Brenda J. Butler (1953-1990)

who, from 1987 to 1990, coordinated the search for Goldman documents in Europe, Asia and the Soviet Union, thus expanding the Goldman Papers collection to reflect the international dimension of Goldman's life and work.

Contents

Reel 47

Goldman Writings:
October 25, 1890 to December 31, 1912

[Excerpt from Lecture] An Eloquent Woman / Emma Goldman. – 29 cm. In The Baltimore Critic. –(Oct. 25, 1890).

[Interview. Anarchy's Den] / Emma Goldman. – p. 2 ; 43 cm. In The World. –(July 28, 1892, fragment).

[Interview] A Talk with Emma Goldman / Emma Goldman. – p. 2 ; 43 cm. In The New York Times. –(July 28, 1892).

Who Will Thrash Mr. Most? / Emma Goldman. – p. 3 ; 43 cm. In The World. –(July 29, 1892).

Applaud Berkman / [Emma] Goldman. – p. 2 ; 28 cm. In The New York Times. –(July 29, 1892).

[Interview] Reporters Attacked by Anarchists / Emma Goldman. – p. 1 ; 28 cm. In Rochester Herald. –(July 29, 1892).

Eingesandt / Emma Goldman. – p. 4 ; 31 cm. In Der Anarchist [New York]. –(July 30, 1892).

[Excerpt from Lecture] Wild Anarchist Talk / Emma Goldman. – p. 2 ; 44 cm. In The New York Times. –(Aug. 2, 1892).

[Excerpt from Lecture] They Talked a Great Deal / Emma Goldman. – p. 1 ; 43 cm. In The World. –(Aug. 2, 1892).

[Attention! Comrades and friends! In German] Aufruf! Genossen und Freunde! / Emma Goldman. – p. 1 ; 32 cm. In Der Anarchist [New York]. –(Aug. 13, 1892).

[Excerpt from Lecture] The Demonstration of the Unemployed / Emma Goldman. – pp. 1-2 ; 28 cm. In The World. –(Aug. 20, 1893).

[Excerpt from Lecture] Urging Men to Riot / Emma Goldman. – p. 8 ; 28 cm. In The World. –(Aug. 22, 1893).

[Interview] Nellie Bly Again: She Interviews Emma Goldman and Other Anarchists / Emma Goldman. – pp. 1, 3 ; 42 cm. In The World. –(Sept. 17, 1893).

[Excerpt from Lecture] "May Anarchy Live" / Emma Goldman. – p. 1 ; 43 cm. In The World. –(Oct. 5, 1893).

[Testimony] Here Is Oakey Hall / Emma Goldman. – p. 8 ; 41 cm. In The World. –(Oct. 6, 1893).

[Testimony] Emma Goldman Testifies / Emma Goldman. – p. 2 ; 43 cm. In The New York Times. –(Oct. 6, 1893).

[Testimony] Emma Goldman on the Stand / Emma Goldman. – 28 cm. In The Brooklyn Daily Eagle. –(Oct. 6, 1893).

[Testimony] Only the Moral Law / Emma Goldman. – p. 8 ; 43 cm. In The World –(Oct. 7, 1893).

[Testimony] Anarchy Her Only Faith / Emma Goldman. – p. 9 ; 43 cm. In The New York Times. –(Oct. 7, 1893).

[Testimony] Emma Goldman's Beliefs / Emma Goldman. – p. 4 ; 43 cm. In The New York Daily Tribune. –(Oct. 7, 1893).

[Testimony] Anarchy and Ignorance / Emma Goldman. – 28 cm. In The Brooklyn Daily Eagle. –(Oct. 7, 1893).

[Testimony] No Room for Emma Goldman / Emma Goldman. – 28 cm. In The Brooklyn Daily Eagle. –(Oct. 16, 1893).

[Testimony] The Law's Limit / Emma Goldman. – p. 7 ; 44 cm. In The World. –(Oct. 17, 1893).

[Interview] Emma on the Island / Emma Goldman. – p. 9 ; 43 cm. In The World. –(Oct. 19, 1893).

"My Year in Stripes" / Emma Goldman. – pp. 1-2 ; 43 cm. In The World. –(Aug. 18, 1894).

[Excerpt from Lecture] Hailed Emma Goldman / Emma Goldman. – p. 8 ; 43 cm. In The World. –(Aug. 20, 1894).

[Excerpt from Lecture] Howls for Emma Goldman / Emma Goldman. – p. 2 ; 43 cm. In The New York Times. –(Aug. 20, 1894).

[Summary of Lecture] Apparently Tamed / Emma Goldman. – 28 cm. In The Brooklyn Daily Eagle. –(Aug. 21, 1894).

[Friends of Alexander Berkman] / Emma Goldman. – p. 2 ; 31 cm. In The Firebrand [Portland]. –Vol. 1, no. 24 (July 21, 1895).

[Interview, Th]e Red Queen Is Here / Emma Goldman. – 36 cm. In The Pittsburgh Leader. –[(Sept? 1895, fragment)].

Alexander Berkmann / Emma Goldman. – p. 54 ; 47 cm. In The Torch [London]. –Vol. 2, no. 4 (Sept. 1895).

[Excerpt from Lecture] Emma Goldman in London / Emma Goldman. – pp. 173-174 ; 36 cm. In Liberty [London]. –Vol. 2, no. 22 (Oct. 1895).

The Condition of the Workers of America / Emma Goldman. – pp. 3-4 ; 36 cm. In The Firebrand [Portland]. –Vol. 1, no. 41 (Nov. 17, 1895).

Between Ourselves / Emma Goldman. –p. 53 ; 28 cm. In Liberty [London]. –Vol. 3, no. 5 (May 1896).

Eastern and European Propaganda / [Emma Goldman]. – p. 2 ; 40 cm. In The Firebrand [Portland]. –Vol. 2, no. 16 (May 24, 1896).

[Summary of Lecture] Propaganda in the East / [Emma Goldman]. – p. 2 ; 41 cm. In The Firebrand [Portland]. –Vol. 2, no. 18 (June 7, 1896).

The Berkman Fund Again / Emma Goldman. – p. 2 ; 41 cm. In The Firebrand [Portland]. –Vol. 2, no. 29 (Aug. 23, 1896).

[Interview] Emma Goldman Here / Emma Goldman. – p. 3 ; 43 cm. In The Pittsburg[h] Leader. –(Nov. 20, 1896).

[Excerpt from Lecture] A Woman Anarchist / Emma Goldman. – p. 6 ; 44 cm. In The Pittsburg[h] Leader. –(Nov. 22, 1896).

[Summary of Lecture] For Berkmann and Anarchism / Emma Goldman. – p. 2 ; 44 cm. In The Pittsburg[h] Post. –(Nov. 22, 1896).

[Summary of Lecture] Emma Goldman Again / Emma Goldman. – p. 2 ; 44 cm. In The Pittsburg[h] Leader. –(Nov. 23, 1896).

[Summary of Lecture] Another Talk on Anarchism / Emma Goldman. – p. 8 ; 43 cm. In The Pittsburg[h] Post. –(Nov. 23, 1896).

[Excerpt from Lecture] Goldman's Cry Against Society / Emma Goldman. – p. 3 ; 43 cm. In The Pittsburg[h] Post. –(Nov. 27, 1896).

Marriage / E[mma] Goldman. – p. 2 ; 40 cm. In The Firebrand [Portland]. –Vol. 3, no. 24 (July 18, 1897).

[Summary of Lecture] Joy at the Death of Canovas / Emma Goldman. – p. 1 ; 43 cm. In The New York Times. –(Aug. 17, 1897).

[Excerpt from Lecture] Anarchy in Spain and in New York / Emma Goldman.— pp. 1-2 ; 43 cm. In The World. —(Aug. 17, 1897).
[Excerpt from Lecture] Emma Goldman: Rochester Anarchist Has Broken Out Once More / Emma Goldman.— p. 10 ; 29 cm. In The Rochester Union and Advertiser. —(Aug. 21, 1897).
[Excerpt from Lecture] Meeting of the Anarchists / Emma Goldman.— p. 2 ; 28 cm. In The New York Times. —(Aug. 23, 1897).
[Excerpt from Lecture] Her Comrades Rebuke Emma Goldman / Emma Goldman.— p. 10 ; 28 cm. In The New York Tribune. —(Aug. 23, 1897).
[Excerpt from Lecture] Anarchy / Emma Goldman.— p. 2 ; 28 cm. In The Evening Bulletin [Providence]. —(Sept. 4, 1897).
[Summary of Lecture] Emma Goldman, Anarchist / Emma Goldman.— p. 7 ; 44 cm. In The Boston Daily Globe. —(Sept. 6, 1897).
[Excerpt from Lecture] More Anarchy / Emma Goldman.—28 cm. In The Providence Daily Journal. —(Sept. 6, 1897).
[Interview] Told to Get Out / Emma Goldman.— pp. 1,9 ; 43 cm. In The Evening Bulletin [Providence]. —(Sept 8, 1897).
[Interview] Emma Goldman, the Anarchist / Emma Goldman.— p. 7 ; 43 cm. In The Boston Daily Globe. —(Sept. 9, 1897).
[Excerpt from Lecture] Advised Strenuous Measures / Emma Goldman.— p. 6 ; 43 cm. In The Boston Daily Globe. —(Sept. 13, 1897).
[Summary of Lecture] Emma Goldman / Emma Goldman.— p. 324 ; 36 cm. In Lucifer, The Light-Bearer [Chicago]. —no. 680 (Oct. 13, 1897).
[Excerpt from Lecture] Anarchy Her Theme / Emma Goldman.— p. 22 ; 44 cm. In St. Louis Post-Dispatch. —(Oct. 17, 1897).
[Interview] Police Prevent the Anarchist Meeting at the Grant Statue / Emma Goldman.— p. 10 ; 43 cm. In St. Louis Post-Dispatch. —(Oct. 20, 1897).
[Interview] What Is There in Anarchy for Woman? / Emma Goldman.— p. 9 ; 43 cm. In St. Louis Post-Dispatch. —(Oct. 24, 1897).
[Summary of Lecture] "Reds" in a Calm / Emma Goldman.— p. 5 ; 43 cm. In The Chicago Tribune. —(Nov. 12, 1897).
[Interview] Emma Goldman: Rochester's Own and Only Anarchist... / Emma Goldman.— p. 7 ; 29 cm. In The Rochester Union and Advertiser. —(Dec. 3, 1897).
[Summary of Lecture] The Red Flag Was Waved / Emma Goldman.— p. 6 ; 32 cm. In The Rochester Herald. —(Dec. 6, 1897).
Various Voices / Emma Goldman.— pp. 423-4 ; 37 cm. In Lucifer, The Lightbearer [Chicago]. —no.692 (Jan. 5, 1898).
[Letters from a tour. In German] Reise-Briefe. Part 3 / Emma Goldman.— pp. 2-3 ; 36 cm. In Sturmvogel [New York]. —Vol. 1, no. 6 (Jan. 15, 1898).
[Interview] Free Speech? / Emma Goldman.— p. 8 ; 28 cm. In The Evening Bulletin [Providence]. —(Jan. 22, 1898).
[Summary of Lecture] In Hedley Hall / Emma Goldman.— p. 5 ; 28 cm. In The Evening Bulletin [Providence]. —(Jan. 24, 1898).
[Summary of Lecture] Emma Goldman's Address / Emma Goldman.— p. 2 ; 43 cm. In The Boston Daily Globe. —(Jan. 25, 1898).
[Letters from a tour in America. In German] Reisebriefe aus Amerika. [Part 1] / Emma Goldman.— p. 94 ; 25 cm In Der Arme Konrad [Berlin]. —(Feb. 5, 1898).
[Excerpt from Lecture] What Emma Goldman Thinks of Patriotism / Emma Goldman.— p. 2 ; 43 cm. In The Pittsburg[h] Post. —(Feb. 25, 1898).

[Excerpt from Lecture] Emma Goldman Again / Emma Goldman. – p. 2 ; 43 cm. In The Pittsburg[h] Post. –(Feb. 26, 1898).

[Excerpt from Lecture] Again Emma Goldman / Emma Goldman. – p. 3 ; 43 cm. In The Pittsburg[h] Post. –(Feb. 28, 1898).

[Summary of Lecture] Various Voices / Emma Goldman. – p. 71 ; 37 cm. In Lucifer, The Lightbearer [Chicago]. –(March 2, 1898).

[Letters from a tour in America. In German] Reisebriefe aus Amerika [Part 2] / Emma Goldman. – 31 cm. In Der Arme Konrad [Berlin]. –(March 5, 1898).

[Letters from a tour in America. In German] Reisebriefe aus Amerika. Part 3 / Emma Goldman. – 25 cm. In Der Arme Konrad [Berlin]. –(March 12, 1898).

[Summary of Lecture] Emma Goldman in Philadelphia / Emma Goldman. – pp. 2-3 ; 43 cm. In Free Society [San Francisco]. –(March 13, 1898).

[Excerpt from Lecture] Commune Celebrated / Emma Goldman. – p. 2 ; 43 cm. In The Pittsburg[h] Leader. –(March 13, 1898).

A Letter from Emma Goldman / Emma Goldman. – p. 3 ; 28 cm. In Solidarity [New York]. –Vol. 1, no. 9 (March 15, 1898).

[Letters from a tour in America. In German] Reisebriefe aus Amerika. Part 4 / Emma Goldman. – 33 cm. In Der Arme Konrad [Berlin]. –(March 26, 1898).

[Letters from a tour in America. In German] Reisebriefe aus Amerika. [Part 5] / Emma Goldman. – 32 cm. In Der Arme Konrad [Berlin]. –(April 2, 1898).

[Excerpt from Lecture] Animal Instincts of Man / Emma Goldman. – p. 8 ; 28 cm. In The Rocky Mountain News [Denver]. –(April 15, 1898).

[Excerpt from Lecture] Christian Idea Is False / Emma Goldman. – p. 8 ; 28 cm. In The Rocky Mountain News [Denver]. –(April 16, 1898).

[Excerpt from Lecture] Emma Goldman, Anarchist / Emma Goldman. – p. 16 ; 34 cm. In The San Francisco Call. –(April 27, 1898).

A Short Account of My Late Tour / Emma Goldman. – p. 2 ; 36 cm. In Solidarity [New York]. –(June 15, 1898).

Miss Emma Goldman. Replies to Questions Asked by Mr. F.B. Livezey / Emma Goldman. – 28 cm. In The Sentinel [Detroit]. –(July 30, 1898).

New York Anarchist Leaders Denounce the Murder of Austria's Empress / Emma Goldman. – p. 20 ; 28 cm. In The World. –(Sept. 18, 1898).

An Undelivered Speech / Justus Schwab, Ed[ward] Brady and Emma Goldman. – p. 8 ; 35 cm. In Liberty [New York]. –Vol. 13, no. 9 (Jan. 1899).

[Excerpt from Lecture] Free Speech Suppressed in Barre, VT / Emma Goldman. – pp. 1, 3 ; 36 cm. In Free Society [San Francisco]. –Vol. 5, no. 17 (March 5, 1899).

[Interview] An Interrupted Interview... / Emma Goldman. – p. 2 ; 43 cm. In The Evening News [Detroit]. –(March 14, 1899).

To My Friends and Comrades in New York / Emma Goldman. – p. 2 ; 35 cm. In Free Society [San Francisco]. – Vol. 6, no. 21 (May 7, 1899).

[Excerpt from Lecture] An Anarchist Propagandist / Emma Goldman. – p. 5 ; 43 cm. In Oakland Enquirer. –(July 15, 1899).

[Excerpt from Lecture] From San Jose / Emma Goldman. – p. 1 ; 36 cm. In Free Society [San Francisco]. – Vol. 5, no. 37 (July 23, 1899).

Emma Goldman in Oakland, Cal. / Emma Goldman. – pp. 2-3 ; 36 cm. In Free Society [San Francisco]. –(July 23, 1899).

[Summary of Lecture] Emma Goldman: The Woman Anarchist Talks to Stocktonians Two Evenings / Emma Goldman. – p. 5 ; 40 cm. In Stockton Daily Record. –(July 24, 1899).

[Excerpt from Lecture] Emma Goldman in Stockton, Cal. / Emma Goldman. – pp. 2-3 ; 36 cm. In Free Society [San Francisco]. – Vol. 5, no. 38 (July 30, 1899).
[Excerpt from Lecture] Farewell! / Emma Goldman. – p. 2 ; 36 cm. In Free Society [San Francisco]. – Vol. 5, no. 40 (Aug. 13, 1899).
[Excerpt from Lecture] Socialist Idea of Marriage / Emma Goldman. – p. 8 ; 28 cm. In The Rocky Mountain News [Denver]. – (Aug. 19, 1899).
The Effect of War on the Workers / Emma Goldman. – pp. 10-11 ; 40 cm. In Freedom [London]. – Vol. 14, no. 146 (March-April 1900).
The Propaganda and the Congress / Emma Goldman. – p. 1 ; 36 cm. In Free Society [San Francisco]. – Vol. 6, no. 21 (April 8, 1900).
Observations and Suggestions / Emma Goldman. – pp. 1-3 ; 36 cm. In Free Society [San Francisco]. – Vol. 6, no. 23 (April 22, 1900).
Some More Observations / Emma Goldman. – p. 1 ; 36 cm. In Free Society [San Francisco]. – Vol. 6, no. 24 (April 29, 1900).
A Letter from Emma Goldman / Emma Goldman. – p. 4 ; 34 cm. In Free Society [San Francisco]. – Vol. 6, no. 39 (Aug. 12, 1900).
Amérique / Emma Goldman. – pp. 189-190 ; 28 cm. In Rapports du Congrès Antiparlementaire International de 1900 / Les Temps Nouveaux [Paris]. – Vol. 3, nos. 23 & 31 (Sept. 20, 1900).
The Paris Congress / E[mma] Goldman. – pp. 1, 3 ; 35 cm. In Free Society [San Francisco]. – Vol. 6, no. 49 (Oct. 21, 1900).
The Paris Congress / E[mma] Goldman. – p. 3 ; 36 cm. In Free Society [San Francisco]. – Vol. 6, no. 50 (Oct. 28, 1900).
From the Paris Congress / [Emma Goldman]. – 35 cm. In Free Society [San Francisco]. – Vol. 6, no. 51 (Nov. 4, 1900).
[Excerpt from Lecture] Rented by Emma Goldman / Emma Goldman. – p. 2 ; 28 cm. In The New York Times. – (Dec. 12, 1900).
[Excerpt from Lecture] Anarchists Made Furious / Emma Goldman. – p. 4 ; 25 cm. In New York Daily Tribune. – (Dec. 12, 1900).
[Excerpt from Lecture] Free Speech Strangled / Emma Goldman. – pp. 1-2 ; 43 cm. In Free Society [Chicago]. – Vol. 7, no. 12 (April 21, 1901).
[Excerpt from Lecture] Defends Acts of Bomb Throwers / Emma Goldman. – p. 8 ; 43 cm. In The Cleveland Plain Dealer. – (May 6, 1901).
[Recently Comrade Emma Goldman Lectured in Lynn, ...] / Emma Goldman. – p. 5 ; 25 cm. In Free Society [Chicago]. – Vol. 7, no. 15 (May 12, 1901).
Gaetano Bresci / Emma Goldman. – p. 1 ; 43 cm. In Free Society [Chicago]. – Vol. 7, no. 18 (June 2, 1901).
[Summary of Lecture] Report from Chicago / Emma Goldman. – p. 3 ; 22 cm. In Free Society [Chicago]. – Vol. 7, no. 19 (June 9, 1901).
[Excerpt from Lecture] Emma Goldman, High Priestess of Anarchy, Whose Speeches Inspired Czolgosz to His Crime / Emma Goldman. – p. 2 ; 43 cm. In The Chicago Daily Tribune. – (Sept. 8, 1901).
[Interview] Emma Goldman in Jail Charged with Conspiracy / Emma Goldman. – pp. 1, 3 ; 43 cm. In The World. – (Sept. 11, 1901).
[Interview] Emma Goldman in Law's Grasp / Emma Goldman. – pp. 1, 3 ; 43 cm. In The Chicago Daily Tribune. – (Sept 11, 1901).
[Interview] Emma Goldman's Own Story / Emma Goldman. – p. 3 ; 28 cm. In The Chicago Daily Tribune. – (Sept. 11, 1901).
[Excerpt from Lecture] Emma Goldman Speaks / Emma Goldman. – 26 cm. In The New York Times. – (Dec. 10, 1901).

To the Strikers of Paterson / Emma Goldman. – 43 cm. In La Questione Sociale [Paterson, NJ]. –(July 5, 1902).

[Excerpt from Lecture] Police Eyes on Anarchy / Emma Goldman.– p. 5 ; 43 cm. In The Chicago Tribune. –(Nov. 17, 1902).

[Excerpt from Lecture] Close Doors to Anarchy / Emma Goldman.– p. 15 ; 44 cm. In The Chicago Tribune. –(Nov. 24, 1902).

Free Speech in Chicago / Emma Goldman.– p. 377 ; 36 cm. In Lucifer, The Light Bearer [Chicago]. –no. 947 (Dec. 11, 1902).

A Card / Emma Goldman.– p. 4 ; 28 cm. In Free Society [Chicago]. –Vol. 9, no. 50 (Dec. 14, 1902).

[Excerpt from Lecture] Restrainment Versus Government / Emma Goldman.– pp. 387-388 ; 36 cm. In Lucifer, The Lightbearer [Chicago]. –(Dec. 18, 1902).

[Emma Goldman to the "Cronaca Sovversiva". In Italian] Emma Goldman alla "Cronaca Sovversiva" / Emma Goldman.– p. 2 ; 28 cm. In Cronaca Sovversiva [Barre, Vt.]. –Vol. 1, no. 1 (June 6, 1903).

[For freedom. In Italian] Per la Liberta / Emma Goldman.– p. 1 ; 28 cm. In Cronaca Sovversiva [Barre, Vt.]. –no. 27 (Dec. 5, 1903).

[Anarchy. In Italian] Anarchia / Emma Goldman.– p. 1 ; 29 cm. In Cronaca Sovversiva [Barre, Vt.]. –no. 5 (Jan. 30, 1904).

[Excerpt from Lecture] Anarchists' Big Rally / Emma Goldman.– p. 6 ; 28 cm. In The New York Times. –(Sept. 12, 1904).

Voltairine de Cle[y]re / E[mma] G[oldman].– p. 213 ; 35 cm. In Lucifer, The Lightbearer [Chicago]. –(Dec. 8, 1904).

Mother Earth / Emma Goldman.– New York : Emma Goldman, [1906, advertisement].

"Mother Earth" / Max Baginski and Emma Goldman.– p. 3 ; 40 cm. In Freiheit [New York]. –(Feb. 3, 1906).

Mother Earth / Emma Goldman and Max Baginski.– pp. 1-4 ; 22 cm. In Mother Earth. –Vol. 1, no.1 (March 1906).

The Tragedy of Woman's Emancipation / Emma Goldman.– pp. 9-18 ; 22 cm. In Mother Earth. –Vol. 1, no. 1 (March 1906).

The Child and Its Enemies / Emma Goldman.– pp. 7-14 ; 22 cm. In Mother Earth. –Vol. 1, no. 2 (April 1906).

A Sentimental Journey. –Police Protection / E[mma] G[oldman] and M[ax] B[aginski].– pp. 43-45 ; 22 cm. In Mother Earth. –Vol. 1, no. 2 (April 1906).

[Excerpt from Lecture] Woman Anarchist Calls Our Flag a Sham / Emma Goldman.– p. 18 ; 43 cm. In The New York Times. –(April 4, 1906).

Alexander Berkman / E[mma] G[oldman].– pp. 22-24 ; 22 cm. In Mother Earth. –Vol. 1, no. 3 (May 1906).

[Interview] An Anarchist Honeymoon / Emma Goldman.– p. 1 ; 43 cm. In The New York Times. –(May 26, 1906).

A Letter / Emma Goldman.– pp. 13-14 ; 22 cm. In Mother Earth. –Vol. 1, no. 4 (June 1906).

[The tragedy of woman's emancipation. In German] Die Tragödie der Frauenemanzipation / Emma Goldman.– pp. 5-15 ; 17 cm. In Die Freie Generation: Dokumente der Weltanschauung des Anarchismus. – London : Varlagagruppe. Die Freie Generation, 1906.

Russell Sage / Emma Goldman.– pp. 1-3 ; 22 cm. In Mother Earth. –Vol. 1, no. 6 (Aug. 1906).

To the Readers / Emma Goldman. – p. 30 ; 22 cm. In Mother Earth. – Vol. 1, no. 7 (Sept. 1906).
Letters to the Editor in Prison / Alex[ander] Berkman, Emma Goldman and Carl Nold. – p. 590 ; 37 cm. In Lucifer, The Lightbearer [Chicago]. – no. 1075 (Sept. 27, 1906).
The Tragedy at Buffalo / Emma Goldman. – pp. 11-16 ; 22 cm. In Mother Earth. – Vol. 1, no. 8 (Oct. 1906).
[The tragedy at Buffalo. In German] Die Tragödie in Buffalo / Emma Goldman. – pp. 2-3 ; 40 cm. In Freiheit [New York]. – (Oct. 27, 1906).
Police Brutality / Emma Goldman. – pp. 2-3 ; 22 cm. In Mother Earth. – Vol. 1, no. 9 (Nov. 1906).
To the Readers of Mother Earth / Emma Goldman. – p. 55 ; 22 cm. In Mother Earth. – Vol. 1, no. 9 (Nov. 1906).
Free Country! / A[lexander] Berkman, H[arry] Kelly, and E[mma] Goldman. – p. 3 ; 29 cm. In Cronaca Sovversiva [Barre, Vt.]. – Vol. 4, no. 45 (Nov. 10, 1906).
To My Readers / Emma Goldman. – pp. 7-8 ; 22 cm. In Mother Earth. – Vol. 1, no. 10 (Dec. 1906).
As to "Crammers of Furnaces" / Emma Goldman, Alexander Berkman, and H[arry] Kelly. – pp. 21-23 ; 22 cm. In Mother Earth. – Vol. 1, no. 10 (Dec. 1906).
Police Education / E[mma] G[oldman]. – pp. 2-3 ; 22 cm. In Mother Earth. – Vol. 1, no. 11 (Jan. 1907).
Lecture Tour / Emma Goldman. – p. 18 ; 22 cm. In Mother Earth. – Vol. 1, no. 11 (Jan. 1907).
"Mother Earth" Sustaining Fund / E[mma] G[oldman]. – p. 34 ; 22 cm. In Mother Earth. – Vol. 1, no. 11 (Jan. 1907).
Free Speech Defense Fund / Emma Goldman. – p. 34 ; 22 cm. In Mother Earth. – Vol. 1, no. 11 (Jan. 1907).
[Excerpt from Lecture. Anarchism Is Not Necessarily Violence] / [Emma Goldman]. – 28 cm. – (Jan. 6, 1907, police transcript).
[Excerpt from Lecture] Emma Goldman Arrested for Talking Violence / Emma Goldman. – p. 16 ; 43 cm. In The New York Times. – (Jan. 7, 1907).
Among Barbarians / Emma Goldman. – pp. 10-11 ; 22 cm. In Mother Earth. – Vol. 1, no. 12 (Feb. 1907).
Anent My Lecture Tour / Emma Goldman. – p. 31 ; 22 cm. In Mother Earth. – Vol. 1, no. 12 (Feb. 1907).
Free Speech Defense Fund / [Emma Goldman]. – p. 32 ; 22 cm. In Mother Earth. – Vol. 1, no. 12 (Feb. 1907).
Free Speech Fund Expenditures / Emma Goldman. – pp. 32-33 ; 22 cm. In Mother Earth. – Vol. 1, no. 12 (Feb. 1907).
"Mother Earth" Sustaining Fund / E[mma] G[oldman]. – p. 33 ; 22 cm. In Mother Earth. – Vol. 1, no. 12 (Feb. 1907).
Lecture Tour / Emma Goldman. – p. 30 ; 37 cm. In Lucifer, The Lightbearer [Chicago]. – no. 1085 (Feb. 14, 1907).
Anent My Lecture Tour / Emma Goldman. – p. 16 ; 20 cm. In Mother Earth. – Vol. 2, no. 1 (March 1907).
Observations and Comments / [Emma Goldman]. – pp. 4-8 ; 20 cm. In Mother Earth. – Vol. 2, no. 1 (March 1907).
Notice / Emma Goldman. – 18 cm. In Mother Earth. – Vol. 2, no. 1 (March 1907).
Ernest Crosby / Emma Goldman. – p. 1 ; 22 cm. In Cronaca Sovversiva [Barre, Vt.]. – no. 11 (March 16, 1907).

Observations and Comments / [Emma Goldman]. – pp. 60-65 ; 20 cm. In Mother Earth. – Vol. 2, no. 2 (April 1907).
On the Road / Emma Goldman. – pp. 65-71 ; 20 cm. In Mother Earth. – Vol. 2, no. 3 (April 1907).
Anent My Lecture Tour / Emma Goldman. – p. 71 ; 20 cm. In Mother Earth. – Vol. 2, no. 3 (April 1907).
[Excerpt from Lecture] Anarchy and Snuff at Goldman Meeting / Emma Goldman. – p. 4 ; 50 cm. In The Minneapolis Journal. – (April 7, 1907).
[Excerpt from Lecture] How "Anarchy's Queen" Would Train Children / Emma Goldman. – p. 6 ; 28 cm. In The Minneapolis Journal. – (April 8, 1907).
[Excerpt from Lecture] Goldman Extols Drama / Emma Goldman. – p. 8 ; 23 cm. In The Minneapolis Journal. – (April 9, 1907).
[Interview] Anarchy Expounded by Woman Leader / Emma Goldman. – pp. 1, 11 ; 45 cm. In The Winnipeg Tribune. – (April 10, 1907).
Observations and Comments / [Emma Goldman]. – pp. 119-123 ; 20 cm. In Mother Earth. – Vol. 2, no. 3 (May 1907).
On the Road / Emma Goldman. – pp. 128-135 ; 20 cm. In Mother Earth. – Vol. 2, no. 3 (May 1907).
[Excerpt from Lecture] Strike Viewed Through Emma Goldman's Glasses / Emma Goldman. – p. 2 ; 28 cm. In The San Francisco Call. – (May 6, 1907).
[Summary of Lecture] Miss Emma Goldman Says Religions Are Curse to Humanity / Emma Goldman. – p. 14 ; 26 cm. In The San Francisco Call. – (May 17, 1907).
Observations and Comments / [Emma Goldman]. – pp. 176-178 ; 20 cm. In Mother Earth. – Vol. 2, no. 4 (June 1907).
[Excerpt from Lecture] Roosevelt Is Not Friend of Labor / Emma Goldman. – p. 12 ; 43 cm. In The Oregonian [Portland]. – (June 3, 1907).
Observations and Comments / [Emma Goldman]. – pp. 205-211 ; 20 cm. In Mother Earth. – Vol. 2, no. 5 (July 1907).
On the Road / Emma Goldman. – pp. 215-222 ; 20 cm. In Mother Earth. – Vol. 2, no. 5 (July 1907).
Anent the Amsterdam Conference / Emma Goldman. – p. 222 ; 20 cm. In Mother Earth. – Vol. 2, no. 5 (July 1907).
Observations and Comments / [Emma Goldman]. – pp. 235-239 ; 20 cm. In Mother Earth. – Vol. 2, no. 6 (Aug. 1907).
A Literary Nuisance / Emma Goldman. – pp. 250-253 ; 20 cm In Mother Earth. – Vol. 2, no. 6 (Aug. 1907).
Amsterdam Conference Fund / Emma Goldman. – pp. 259-260 ; 20 cm. In Mother Earth. – (Aug. 1907).
Brief News and Comment / Emma Goldman, Alexander Berkman and Hypolyte Havel. – p. 6 ; 28 cm. In The Demonstrator [Home, Wa.]. – Vol. 5, no. 4 (Aug. 21, 1907).
Observations and Comments / [Emma Goldman]. – pp. 273-274 ; 20 cm. In Mother Earth. – Vol. 2, no. 7 (Sept. 1907).
Our Amsterdam Letter / Emma Goldman. – pp. 274-275 ; 20 cm. In Mother Earth. – Vol. 2, no. 7 (Sept. 1907).
To Our Comrades / Emma Goldman, et al. – pp. 292-293 ; 20 cm. In Mother Earth. – Vol. 2, no. 7 (Sept. 1907).
[An appeal. In German] Ein Appell / Emma Goldman, et al. – p. 6 ; 38 cm. In Freiheit [New York]. – (Sept. 14, 1907).

[Anarchy. In Italian] Anarchia / Emma Goldman. – p. 276 ; 26 cm. In Il Pensiero [Rome]. – Vol. 5, no. 18 (Sept. 16, 1907).

Observations and Comments / [Emma Goldman]. – pp. 295-302 ; 20cm. In Mother Earth. – Vol. 2, no. 8 (Oct. 1907).

The International Anarchist Congress / Emma Goldman. – pp. 307-319 ; 20 cm. In Mother Earth. – Vol. 2, no. 8 (Oct. 1907).

[Interview] "Can't Keep Me Out," Cries Red Emma / Emma Goldman. – p. 9 ; 43 cm. In The World. – (Oct. 8, 1907).

[Types, ideas and decisions from the Anarchist congress. In Yiddish] Tipen, Ideen un Beschliese funden Anarchistishen Kongres / Emma Goldman. – p. 2 ; 28 cm. In Freie Arbeiter Stimme [New York]. – (Oct. 12, 1907).

Artists-Revolutionists / E[mma] G[oldman]. – pp. 357-359 ; 20 cm. In Mother Earth. – Vol. 2, no. 9 (Nov. 1907).

Observations and Comments / [Emma Goldman]. – pp. 360-366 ; 20 cm. In Mother Earth. – Vol. 2, no. 9 (Nov. 1907).

"La Ruche" / Emma Goldman. – pp. 388-394 ; 20 cm. In Mother Earth. – Vol. 2, no. 9 (Nov. 1907).

[Summary of Lecture] Emma Goldman's Lecture / Emma Goldman. – p. 68 ; 28 cm. In Freedom [London]. – (Nov. 1907).

[The Anarchist congress of Amsterdam. In Italian] Resoconto generale del Congresso Anarchico di Amsterdam / Emma Goldman, et al. – 26 cm. In Il Pensiero [Rome]. – no. 20-21 (Nov. 1, 1907).

[Summary of Lecture] Direct Action as the Logical Tactic of Anarchism / Emma Goldman. – 24 cm. In Louis J. Domas, "[Report to] Commissioner of Immigration." – (Nov. 19, 1907).

Observations and Comments / [Emma Goldman]. – pp. 419-426 ; 20 cm. In Mother Earth. – Vol. 2, no. 10 (Dec. 1907).

Reply / Emma Goldman. – pp. 447-449 ; 20 cm. In Mother Earth. – Vol. 2, no. 10 (Dec. 1907).

Anent My Lecture Tour / Emma Goldman. – pp. 473-474 ; 20 cm. In Mother Earth. – Vol. 2, no. 10 (Dec. 1907).

[Excerpt from Lecture] Trade Unionism / Emma Goldman. – 24 cm. In Louis J. Domas, "[Report to] Commissioner of Immigration." – (Dec. 12, 1907).

[Excerpt from Lecture] The Revolutionary Spirit in Modern Drama / Emma Goldman. – 24 cm In Louis J. Domas, "[Report to] Commissioner of Immigration." – (Dec. 14, 1907).

[Excerpt from Lecture. Misconceptions About Anarchism] / Emma Goldman. – 24 cm. In F.W.C. Maasch, "[Report to] Commissioner of Immigration." – (Dec. 24, 1907).

Patriotism: A Menace to Liberty / Emma Goldman. – New York : Mother Earth Pub. Ass'n., [1908?].

[Interview] Conversation avec Emma Goldman et le D. Friedeberg [Conversation with Emma Goldman and Dr. Friedeberg. In French] / Emma Goldman. – 42 cm. In La Guerre Sociale [Paris]. – [1908?].

A Beautiful Ideal / Emma Goldman. – Chicago : J.C. Hart, [1908?].

What I Believe / Emma Goldman. – New York : Mother Earth Pub. Ass'n., [1908].

[The Anarchist congress of Amsterdam. August 1907. In French] Congrès Anarchiste tenu à Amsterdam Août 1907 / Emma Goldman, et al. – Paris : La Publication Sociale, 1908.

Observations and Comments / [Emma Goldman]. – pp. 479-485 ; 20 cm. In Mother Earth. – Vol. 2, no. 11 (Jan. 1908).

Anent My Lecture Tour / Emma Goldman. – pp. 534-535 ; 20 cm. In Mother Earth. – Vol. 2, no. 11 (Jan. 1908).

Mother Earth Sustaining Fund / Emma Goldman. – pp. 535-536 ; 20 cm. In Mother Earth. – Vol. 2, no. 11 (Jan. 1908).

Our Propaganda / Emma Goldman. – pp. 579-581 ; 20 cm. In Mother Earth. – Vol. 2, no. 12 (Feb. 1908).

[Summary of Lecture] Emma Goldman on Trades Unions. Declares Anarchy Is the Ideal State / Emma Goldman. – 28 cm. In The Advertiser [London, Ont.]. – (Feb. 20, 1908).

[Excerpt from Lecture] Famous Anarchist Delivers Lecture / Emma Goldman. – p. 10 ; 28 cm. In The Free Press [London, Ont.]. – (Feb. 20, 1908).

[Excerpt from Lecture] Emma Goldman Held Forth Again / Emma Goldman. – p. 6 ; 28 cm. In The Advertiser [London, Ont.]. – (Feb. 21, 1908).

[Excerpt from Lecture] Anarchist Looks on Darker Side / Emma Goldman. – p. 10 ; 28 cm. In The Free Press [London, Ont.]. – (Feb. 21, 1908).

[Interview] Emma Goldman Rebukes Unions; Scores Church / Emma Goldman. – p. 3 ; 42 cm. In St. Louis Post-Dispatch. – (Feb. 28, 1908).

[Interview] Would Banish Emma Goldman / Emma Goldman. – p. 1 ; 25 cm. In St. Louis Times. – (Feb. 28, 1908).

[Excerpt from Lecture] Emma Goldman Meek As a Lamb in Her Harangue / Emma Goldman. – p. 2 ; 43 cm. In St. Louis Post-Dispatch. – (Feb. 29, 1908).

Mother Earth / Emma Goldman and Alexander Berkman. – pp. 1-2 ; 20 cm. In Mother Earth. – Vol. 3, no. 1 (March 1908).

Observations and Comments / [Emma Goldman]. – pp. 5-11 ; 20 cm. In Mother Earth. – Vol. 3, no. 1 (March 1908).

The Joys of Touring / Emma Goldman. – pp. 36-40 ; 20 cm. In Mother Earth. – Vol. 3, no. 1 (March 1908).

[Interview] Emma Goldman, High Priestess of Anarchy, Sneers over Crime / Emma Goldman. – p. 4 ; 27 cm. In Chicago Daily Journal. – (March 3, 1908).

[Interview] Police Defied by Emma Goldman in Upholding "Reds" / Emma Goldman. – pp. 1-2 ; 43 cm. In Chicago Daily Journal. – (March 6, 1908).

[In Defense of Anarchy] / Emma Goldman. – 1908 March 6, draft.

[Interview] Goldman to Rap Society / Emma Goldman. – p. 2 ; 43 cm. In Chicago Daily Journal. – (March 7, 1908).

[Interview] Emma Goldman Clashes with Police on Meeting / Emma Goldman. – pp. 1, 3 ; 43 cm. In The Inter Ocean [Chicago]. – (March 8, 1908).

[Excerpt from Lecture] Reds' Leader Flays Police / Emma Goldman. – pp. 1, 3 ; 43 cm. In Chicago Daily Journal. – (March 17, 1908).

[Interview] Emma Goldman Blames Police / Emma Goldman. – 43 cm. In The Chicago Tribune. – (March 29, 1908).

En Route / Emma Goldman. – pp. 71-72 ; 20 cm. In Mother Earth. – Vol. 3, no. 2 (April 1908).

[Summaries and Excerpts from Lectures] / Emma Goldman. – 25 cm. In Walter E. Carr, "[Report to] U.S. Commissioner of Immigration". – (April 9, 1908).

En Route / Emma Goldman. – pp. 132-134 ; 20 cm. In Mother Earth. – Vol. 3, no. 3 (May 1908).

[Summary of Lecture] Wants "No Government" Society / Emma Goldman. – p. 1 ; 28 cm. In Common Sense [Los Angeles]. – (May 2, 1908).

[Excerpt from Lecture] Goldman–Bauer Debate / Emma Goldman. — pp. 1, 3 ; 43 cm. In Common Sense [Los Angeles]. — (May 16, 1908).
[Excerpt from Lecture] Wood Denounces Y.M.C.A. Directors / Emma Goldman. — p. 12 ; 43 cm. In The Morning Oregonian [Portland]. — (May 25, 1908).
[Excerpt from Lecture] Too Large an Army Now / Emma Goldman. — p. 9 ; 43 cm. In The Morning Oregonian [Portland]. — (May 27, 1908).
En Route / Emma Goldman. — pp. 189-190 ; 20 cm. In Mother Earth. — Vol. 3, no. 4 (June 1908).
[Excerpt from Lecture] Emma Goldman in Oregon / Emma Goldman. — pp. 295-296 ; 26 cm. In The Public [Chicago]. — Vol. 11, no. 534 (June 26, 1908).
Defying the Gods / Emma Goldman. — pp. 223-226 ; 20 cm. In Mother Earth. — Vol. 3, no. 5 (July 1908).
"What I Believe," by Emma Goldman / Emma Goldman. — p. 3M ; 28 cm. In The World. — (July 19, 1908).
Emma Goldman Leaves the Question of Violence Entirely Alone / Emma Goldman. — p. 388 ; 26 cm. In The Public [Chicago]. — Vol. 11, no. 538 (July 24, 1908).
George Pettibone / Emma Goldman. — pp. 253-254 ; 20 cm. In Mother Earth. — Vol. 3, no. 6 (Aug. 1908).
[What I believe. In Italian] Quello che io credo / Emma Goldman. — pp. 1-2 ; 29 cm. In Cronaca Sovversiva [Barre, Vt]. — no. 32 (Aug. 8, 1908).
Labor Day / E[mma] G[oldman]. — pp. 297-299 ; 20 cm. In Mother Earth. — Vol. 3, no. 7 (Sept. 1908).
The Latest Police Outrage / Emma Goldman. — pp. 273-275 ; 20 cm. In Mother Earth. — Vol. 3, no. 7 (Sept. 1908).
To Our Readers / Emma Goldman. — pp. 279-280 ; 20 cm. In Mother Earth. — Vol. 3, no. 7 (Sept. 1908).
[Excerpt from Lecture] Berkman's Partner Abuses the Police / Emma Goldman. — p. 9 ; 43 cm. In The New York Times. — (Sept. 14, 1908).
Apropos of My Lecture Tour / Emma Goldman. — pp. 318-319 ; 20 cm. In Mother Earth. — Vol. 3, no. 8 (Oct. 1908).
[Excerpt from Lecture] Emma Goldman Says She Is Coming Back / Emma Goldman. — p. 5 ; 40 cm. In The New York Times. — (Oct. 17, 1908).
The Joys of an Agitator / Emma Goldman. — pp. 347-350 ; 20 cm. In Mother Earth. — Vol. 3, no. 9 (Nov. 1908).
[Interview] Emma Goldman Says Anarchism Will Mean Absolute Equality and Freedom for Women with No Dual Code / Emma Goldman. — p. 1 ; 43 cm. In St. Louis Post-Dispatch. — (Nov. 1, 1908).
[Excerpt from Lecture] Devil Called a Benefactor by Emma Goldman / Emma Goldman. — p. 16 ; 42 cm. In St. Louis Post-Dispatch. — (Nov. 2, 1908).
En Route / Emma Goldman. — pp. 351-355 ; 20 cm. In Mother Earth. — Vol. 3, no. 10 (Dec. 1908).
[Interview] Emma Goldman Says Everett Ought to Be Annexed to Russia / Emma Goldman. — p. 4 ; 28 cm. In The Everett Morning Tribune. — (Dec. 15, 1908).
[Excerpt from Lecture] Married State Attacked / Emma Goldman. — p. 16 ; 28 cm. In The Oregonian [Portland]. — (Dec. 21, 1908).
The White Slave Traffic / Emma Goldman. — New York : Mother Earth Pub. Ass'n., [1909].

The Drama: The Strongest Disseminator of Radical Thought / Emma Goldman. – pp. 19-23 ; 18 cm. In The Suppression of Free Speech / edited by Alden Freeman. – East Orange : East Orange Record Print, [1909].

A New Declaration of Independence / Emma Goldman. – New York : [Mother Earth Pub. Ass'n?], 1909.

The Joys of Touring / Emma Goldman. – pp. 370-379 ; 20 cm. In Mother Earth. – Vol. 3, no. 11 (Jan. 1909).

Dear Friend / Emma Goldman, et al. – (Jan. 26, 1909, leaflet).

On Trial / Emma Goldman. – pp. 411-417 ; 20 cm. In Mother Earth. – Vol. 3, no. 12 (Feb. 1909).

[Summary of Lecture] Mills and Goldman Debate the Question / Emma Goldman. – p. 3 ; 22 cm. In The San Francisco Call. – (March 1, 1909).

[Interview] Emma Goldman Says Dawning Era Will Crush President / Emma Goldman. – 35 cm. In The San Antonio Daily Express. – (March 15, 1909).

The End of the Odyssey / Emma Goldman. – pp. 47-51 ; 20 cm. In Mother Earth. – Vol. 4, no. 2 (April 1909).

[In the United States of America. In German] Vereinigte Staaten / Emma Goldman. – 33 cm. In Der Freie Arbeiter [Berlin]. – (April 10, 1909).

A Woman Without a Country / Emma Goldman. – pp. 81-82 ; 20 cm. In Mother Earth. – Vol. 4, no. 3 (May 1909).

The Easiest Way / Emma Goldman. – pp. 86-92 ; 20 cm. In Mother Earth. – Vol. 4, no. 3 (May 1909).

[Interview] Policemen Stop Emma Goldman; Clear the Hall / Emma Goldman. – pp. 1-2 ; 54 cm. In The World. – (May 24, 1909).

[Excerpt from Lecture] Mild Goldman Talk While Police Listen / Emma Goldman. – 28 cm. In The New York Times. – (May 25, 1909).

[Interview] An Interview with Emma Goldman / Emma Goldman. – 43 cm. In The New York Times. – (May 30, 1909).

Our Friends, the Enemy / Emma Goldman. – pp. 110-111 ; 19 cm. In Mother Earth. – Vol. 4, no. 4 (June 1909).

[Excerpt from Lecture] Emma Goldman Talks in Barn / Emma Goldman. – pp. 9-12 ; 21 cm. In The Suppression of Free Speech in New York and in New Jersey... – [(June 1909)].

A New Declaration of Independence / Emma Goldman. – pp. 137-138 ; 20 cm. In Mother Earth. – Vol. 4, no. 5 (July 1909).

[Summary of Lecture] Emma Goldman Speaks That Piece / Emma Goldman. – 28 cm. In The New York Times. – (July 3, 1909).

The Spanish Uprising / Emma Goldman. – pp. 174-176 ; 20 cm. In Mother Earth. – Vol. 4, no. 6 (Aug. 1909).

Our Fight / E[mma] G[oldman]. – pp. 187-189 ; 20 cm. In Mother Earth. – Vol. 4, no. 6 (Aug. 1909).

Adventures in the Desert of American Liberty / Emma Goldman. – pp. 210-215 ; 20 cm. In Mother Earth. – Vol. 4, no. 7 (Sept. 1909).

[Interview] Emma Goldman Says She Will Fight to Finish, War with Chief Matthews and His Men / Emma Goldman. – pp. 1, 5 ; 43 cm. In The Worcester Telegram. – (Sept. 6, 1909).

[Excerpt from Lecture] Nineteen Cops Hear Lecture on Anarchy / Emma Goldman. – pp. 1, 9 ; 43 cm. In The Worcester Telegram. – (Sept. 9, 1909).

[Excerpt from Lecture] Talks on Pedagogy / Emma Goldman. – 24 cm. In The Telegram [Worcester, Ma]. – (Sept. 10, 1909).

[Interview] Police May Turn Hose on Anarchists / Emma Goldman. – p. 2 ; 43 cm. In Public Ledger [Philadelphia]. –(Sept. 28, 1909).

In Justice to Leon Szolgosz / Emma Goldman. – pp. 239-241 ; 20 cm. In Mother Earth. – Vol. 4, no. 8 (Oct. 1909).

In Defense of Free Speech / Emma Goldman. – pp. 241-243 ; 20 cm. In Mother Earth. – Vol. 4, no. 7 (Oct. 1909).

[Testimony] Emma Goldman Talks Anarchy Before Judges / Emma Goldman. – p. 1 ; 43 cm. In Public Ledger [Philadelphia]. –(Oct. 2, 1909).

[Interview] Miss Goldman Speaks Her Mind Quite Freely / Emma Goldman. – pp. 1-2 ; 37 cm. In Public Ledger [Philadelphia]. –(Oct. 2, 1909).

The Anarchist's Letter / Emma Goldman. – p. 2 ; 43 cm. In Public Ledger [Philadelphia]. –(Oct. 3, 1909).

[Interview] Woman Anarchist Ready for a Test / Emma Goldman. – p. 2 ; 43 cm. In Public Ledger [Philadelphia]. –(Oct. 4, 1909).

[Testimony] Emma Goldman's Case to Be Reheard / Emma Goldman. – p. 2 ; 43 cm. In Public Ledger [Philadelphia]. –(Oct. 7, 1909).

Emma Goldman and M'Kinley's Death / Emma Goldman. – p. 8 ; 43 cm. In Public Ledger [Philadelphia]. –(Oct. 8, 1909).

[Excerpt from Lecture] Goldman Meeting Without Goldman / Emma Goldman. – p. 2 ; 43 cm. In Public Ledger [Philadelphia]. –(Oct. 9, 1909).

Miss Goldman's Views / Emma Goldman. – p. 7 ; 43 cm. In Public Ledger [Philadelphia]. –(Oct. 16, 1909).

[Interview] Anarchists Not Allowed to Meet / Emma Goldman. – p. 2 ; 43 cm. In Public Ledger [Philadelphia]. –(Oct. 17, 1909).

[Excerpt from Lecture] N.Y. Socialists Protest / Emma Goldman. – p. 2 ; 43 cm. In Public Ledger [Philadelphia]. –(Oct. 18, 1909).

[Excerpt from Lecture] Emma Goldman, Raconteur / Emma Goldman. – p. 8 ; 28 cm. In The New York Times. –(Oct. 23, 1909).

[Excerpt from Lecture] Anarchist–Socialist Parade for Ferrer / Emma Goldman. – p. 8 ; 43 cm. In The New York Times. –(Oct. 24, 1909).

Francisco Ferrer / Emma Goldman. – pp. 275-277 ; 20 cm. In Mother Earth. – Vol. 4, no. 9 (Nov. 1909).

Adventures in the Desert of American Liberty / E[mma] G[oldman]. – pp. 292-297 ; 20 cm. In Mother Earth. – Vol. 4, no. 9 (Nov. 1909).

A Tribute / Emma Goldman. – pp. 323-325 ; 20 cm. In Mother Earth. – Vol. 4, no. 10 (Dec. 1909).

[Excerpt from Lecture] The Suffrage Quest a Wild Goose Chase / Emma Goldman. – p. 16 ; 43 cm. In The New York Times. –(Dec. 13, 1909).

[Excerpt from Lecture] Doesn't Like New Theatre / Emma Goldman. – p. 2 ; 28 cm. In The New York Times. –(Dec. 20, 1909).

Anarchism and Other Essays / Emma Goldman. – 2nd. rev. ed. – New York : The Mother Earth Pub. Ass'n., [between 1910 and 1919, advertisement].

Tragedy of Woman's Emancipation / Emma Goldman. – New York : Mother Earth Pub. Ass'n., [1910?].

Appeal / Emma Goldman, et al. – New York : [Mother Earth Pub. Ass'n?, 1910, leaflet].

The White Slave Traffic / Emma Goldman. – pp. 344-351 ; 20 cm. In Mother Earth. – Vol. 4, no. 11 (Jan. 1910).

[Interview] Emma Goldman to Talk on the White Slave Traffic / Emma Goldman. – 27 cm. In The Milwaukee Daily News. –(Jan. 22, 1910).

Light and Shadows in the Life of Avant–Guard / Emma Goldman. – pp. 383-391 ; 20 cm. In Mother Earth. – Vol. 4, no. 12 (Feb. 1910).

[Interview] Emma Goldman in St. Louis to Attack Clergy / Emma Goldman.– p. 1 ; 43 cm. In St. Louis-Post Dispatch. –(Feb. 1, 1910).

[Excerpt from Lecture] Emma Goldman's Talk As Heard by Miss Martyn / Emma Goldman.– p. 4 ; 28 cm. In St. Louis Post-Dispatch. –(Feb. 3, 1910).

[Interview] Drama Is Aid to Anarchy Emma Goldman Asserts... / Emma Goldman.– p. III: 7 ; 43 cm. In St. Louis Post-Dispatch. –(Feb. 6, 1910).

[Excerpt from Lecture] Elite Peek at "Red" Emma, She Peeks at Them / Emma Goldman.– pp. III: 1, 5 ; 43 cm. In St. Louis Post-Dispatch. –(Feb. 6, 1910).

[Summary of Lecture] Anarchist Leader Waves Red Flag / Emma Goldman.– p. 1 ; 29 cm. In The Michigan Daily [Ann Arbor]. –(Feb. 20, 1910).

[Excerpt from Lecture] Students Jeer Anarchy / Emma Goldman.– p. 1 ; 28 cm. In The Michigan Daily [Ann Arbor]. –(Feb. 22, 1910).

Light and Shadows in the Life of an Avant–Guard / Emma Goldman. – pp. 16-23 ; 20 cm. In Mother Earth. – Vol. 5, no. 1 (March 1910).

Light and Shadows in the Life of an Avant–Guard / Emma Goldman. – pp. 45-50 ; 20 cm. In Mother Earth. – Vol. 5, no. 2 (April 1910).

Goldman's Own Narrative of Her Visit and Reception in Madison / Emma Goldman.– 19 cm. In The State Journal [Madison]. –(April 1, 1910).

Light and Shadows in the Life of an Avant–Guard / Emma Goldman. – pp. 87-90 ; 20 cm. In Mother Earth. – Vol. 5, no. 3 (May 1910).

Light and Shadows in the Life of an Avant–Guard / Emma Goldman. – pp. 124-130 ; 20 cm. In Mother Earth. – Vol. 5, no. 4 (June 1910).

The End of the Odyssey / Emma Goldman. – pp. 159-163 ; 20 cm. In Mother Earth. – Vol. 5, no. 5 (July 1910).

[Excerpt from Lecture] Comstock Heckled at Labor Temple / Emma Goldman.– 28 cm. In The New York Times. –(Nov. 2, 1910).

Japanese Radicals Condemned to Die / Emma Goldman, et al. – 28 cm. In The New York Call. –(Nov. 12, 1910).

A Rejoinder / Emma Goldman. – pp. 325-328 ; 20 cm. In Mother Earth. – Vol. 5, no. 10 (Dec. 1910).

[Marriage and Love. In Yiddish] Harat un Freie Liba / Emma Goldman.– translated by A.B.C.D. – New York : Isidor Schwartz, [between 1911 and 1940].

Anarchism : What It Really Stands For / Emma Goldman.– [1st. ed.] – New York : Mother Earth Pub. Ass'n., 1911.

Marriage and Love / Emma Goldman.– [1st. ed.] – New York : Mother Earth Pub. Ass'n., 1911.

The Psychology of Political Violence / Emma Goldman.– New York : Mother Earth Pub. Ass'n., 1911.

On the Trail / Emma Goldman. – pp. 352-354 ; 20 cm. In Mother Earth. – Vol. 5, no. 11 (Jan. 1911).

On the Trail / Emma Goldman. – pp. 386-391 ; 20 cm. In Mother Earth. – Vol. 5, no. 12 (Feb. 1911).

Our Sixth Birthday / Emma Goldman and Alexander Berkman. – pp. 2-4 ; 20 cm. In Mother Earth. – Vol. 6, no. 1 (March 1911).

On the Trail / Emma Goldman. – pp. 17-22 ; 20 cm. In Mother Earth. – Vol. 6, no. 3 (March 1911).

Are Kotoku Protests Justified? / Emma Goldman. – pp. 57-60 ; 19 cm. In Mother Earth. – Vol. 6, no. 1 (March 1911).

[Against a one-sided class-propaganda. In German] Gegen einseitige Klassen–Propaganda / Emma Goldman. – 28 cm. In Der Sozialist [Berlin]. – (March 1, 1911).

[Excerpt from Lecture] Gracious! We're All Immoral, in Emma's Opinion / Emma Goldman. – p. 22 ; 43 cm. In St. Louis Post-Dispatch. – (March 2, 1911).

[Interview] Anarchism and Socialism Defined / Emma Goldman. – p. 18 ; 44 cm. In The Herald of Revolt [London]. – Vol. 1, no. 5 (April 1911).

On the Trail / Emma Goldman. – pp. 50-55 ; 20 cm. In Mother Earth. – Vol. 6, no. 2 (April 1, 1911).

The Mexican Revolution / Emma Goldman. – p. 4 ; 22 cm. In The Agitator [Los Angeles]. – Vol. 1, no. 11 (April 15, 1911).

Emma Goldman in Hearty Sympathy / Emma Goldman. – 35 cm. In Regeneracion [Los Angeles]. – (April 22, 1911).

On the Trail / Emma Goldman. – p. 84 ; 20 cm. In Mother Earth. – Vol. 6, no. 3 (May 1911).

[Interview] Emma Goldman Comes to Preach "Anarchism" to I.W.W.'S / Emma Goldman. – p. 11 ; 28 cm. In The Fresno Morning Republican. – (May 14, 1911).

[Excerpt from Lecture] Emma Goldman Talks at the I.W.W. Hall / Emma Goldman. – p. 10 ; 28 cm. In The Fresno Morning Republican. – (May 15, 1911).

[Excerpt from Lecture] Emma Goldman in Kansas / Emma Goldman. – p. 3 ; 28 cm. In The Industrial Worker [Spokane]. – (May 18, 1911).

No Factional Issue / Emma Goldman. – 28 cm. In Regeneracion [Los Angeles]. – (June 16, 1911).

On the Trail / Emma Goldman. – pp. 151-157 ; 20 cm. In Mother Earth. – Vol. 6, no. 5 (July, 1911).

[The masses. In German] Die Masse / Emma Goldman. – pp. 113-114 ; 33 cm. In Der Sozialist [Bern]. – Vol. 3, no. 15 (Aug. 1, 1911).

Special Offer / Emma Goldman. – p. 193 ; 19 cm. In Mother Earth. – Vol. 6, no. 7 (Sept. 1911).

[Interview] Labor's Seeress Predicts a Commune If M'Namaras Die / Emma Goldman. – 30 cm. In The Globe and Commerce. – [(Oct.? 1911?)].

October Twenty-Ninth, 1901 / Emma Goldman. – pp. 232-235 ; 20 cm. In Mother Earth. – Vol. 6, no. 8 (Oct. 1911).

Dear Friend / Emma Goldman. – New York : Mother Earth Pub. Ass'n., 1911 Oct. 2, leaflet.

The Crime of the 11th of November / Emma Goldman. – pp. 263-266 ; 20 cm. In Mother Earth. – Vol. 6, no. 9 (Nov. 1911).

Observations and Comments / Emma Goldman. – pp. 290-292 ; 20 cm. In Mother Earth. – Vol. 6, no. 10 (Dec. 1911).

The New Year / Emma Goldman. – pp. 322-323 ; 20 cm. In Mother Earth. – Vol. 6, no. 11 (Jan. 1912).

The Power of the Ideal / Emma Goldman. – pp. 24-27 ; 19 cm. In Mother Earth. – Vol. 7, no. 1 (March 1912).

The Power of the Ideal / Emma Goldman. – pp. 49-54 ; 19 cm. In Mother Earth. – Vol. 7, no. 2 (April 1912).

[Interview] Sex Problem Talks Fill Hall to Doors, Says Emma Goldman / Emma Goldman. – p. 12 ; 25 cm. In The Daily News [Denver]. – (April 17, 1912).

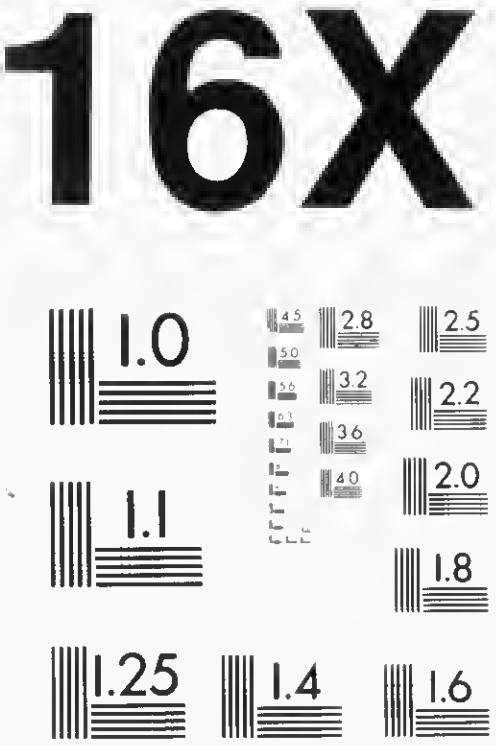
[Excerpt from Lecture] Pulpitless Preacher Creates Scene at Goldman Meeting / Emma Goldman. – p. 16 ; 43 cm. In The Denver Post. – (April 17, 1912).

Suffrage Dealt Blow by Women of Titanic / Emma Goldman. – p. 8 ; 41 cm. In The Denver Post. – (April 21, 1912).
Chantecler Most Talked of Play of Age, as Viewed by F.W.W. and Emma Goldman / Emma Goldman. – p. 5 ; 43 cm. In The Denver Post. – (April 23, 1912).
Nation Seethes in Social Unrest—Goldman / Emma Goldman. – pp. 1,11 ; 42 cm. In The Denver Post. – (April 26, 1912).
Woman Center of Social Storm Which Is Sweeping Us Along / Emma Goldman. – p. 6 ; 43 cm. In The Denver Post. – (April 28, 1912).
Greed of Capital Basis of Social Unrest Today / Emma Goldman. – p. 9 ; 43 cm. In The Denver Post. – (April 30, 1912).
The Power of the Ideal / Emma Goldman. – pp. 87-92 ; 19 cm. In Mother Earth. – Vol. 7, no. 3 (May 1912).
[Excerpt from Lecture] Threats Made by Woman "Red" / Emma Goldman. – p. 2 ; 43 cm. In The San Francisco Call. – (May 12, 1912).
[The Outrage of San Diego] / [Emma Goldman]. – [1912 May 16, draft].
Are We Really Advancing? / Emma Goldman. – [1912 June?, draft].
The Outrage of San Diego / Emma Goldman. – pp. 115-122 ; 20 cm. In Mother Earth. – Vol. 7, no. 4 (June 1912).
A Tribute to Mikolasek, Murdered in San Diego / Emma Goldman. – pp. 123-125 ; 19 cm. In Mother Earth. – Vol. 7, no. 4 (June 1912).
The Power of the Ideal / E[mma] G[oldman]. – pp. 125-131 ; 20 cm. In Mother Earth. – Vol. 7, no. 4 (June 1912).
1840 to 1912 / Emma Goldman. – p. 2.; 43 cm. In Solidarity [Newcastle]. – (June 1, 1912).
[The outrage of San Diego. In Italian] Contro la Vandea! / Emma Goldman. – 29 cm. In Cronaca Sovversiva [Barre, Vt.]. – (June 1, 1912).
[Interview] Emma Goldman and Ben Reitman Tell of San Diego Experience / Emma Goldman. – p. 4 ; 43 cm. In The Industrial Worker [Spokane]. – (June 6, 1912).
The San Diego Outrages / Emma Goldman. – 36 cm. In Freedom [London]. – (July, 1912).
The Power of the Ideal / Emma Goldman. – pp. 164-168 ; 19 cm. In Mother Earth. – Vol. 7, no. 5 (July 1912).
The Power of the Ideal / Emma Goldman. – pp. 190-193 ; 19 cm. In Mother Earth. – Vol. 7, no. 6 (Aug. 1912).
Ross Winn / Emma Goldman. – pp. 208-211 ; 19 cm. In Mother Earth. – Vol. 7, no. 7 (Sept. 1912).
[The drama: a powerful disseminator of radical thought. In Japanese] Kindaigekiron / Emma Goldman. – pp. 19-27 ; 22 cm. In Kindai Shisó[Tokyo]. – (Oct.-Nov. 1912).
Peter Kropotkin / Emma Goldman. – pp. 325-327 ; 20 cm. In Mother Earth. – Vol. 7, no. 10 (Dec. 1912).
Comrades and Friends / Emma Goldman. – p. 358 ; 20 cm. In Mother Earth. – Vol. 7, no. 10 (Dec. 1912).

Introduction to Reels 47 through 55

The Goldman Writings Series is a collection of Goldman's published essays, essay drafts, and lectures, as well as summaries of (and excerpts from) speeches as they appeared in newspaper articles and interviews from 1890 to 1940.

The collection emphasizes Goldman's lesser-known essays and previously unpublished drafts. Essays available in recent editions or published in book form have not been included. Where possible, various editions of popular essays are part of the collection.



This document series also includes drafts of articles and lectures. Selected translations of Goldman's writings in French, Italian, German, Danish, Swedish, Norwegian, Spanish, Japanese, Chinese, Russian, and Yiddish, illustrate the international influence of Goldman's ideas during her life.

The newspaper articles reveal the public Emma Goldman as she was portrayed by the contemporary press. The articles underscore her wit, humor, and intellectual curiosity as well as her composure when confronted with hostility and sexism.

The Goldman Writing Series follows the public life of Emma Goldman from 1890 to 1940. Four periods stand apart in terms of both her activity and the attention focused on her: the years she published, edited, and wrote for Mother Earth, with the lively narratives of her lecture tours across the United States; her return from the Soviet Union, including her criticism of Leninism, the attacks from the Left against her anti-Leninist positions, and her responses; her brief return to the United States in 1934, a respite from the exile that separated her from her family and comrades in the United States; and finally, the years of the Spanish Civil war: her visits to Barcelona and Madrid, her analysis of the transformations in Spain and of the controversies concerning the alternative tactics employed by Spanish anarchist organizations in their militant and political struggle against Fascism.

The Goldman Writing Series is largely self-explanatory. Users seeking contextual information about Emma Goldman's activities should turn to the informational text accompanying the Correspondence series of the microfilm.

16X
1.0
1.1
1.25
1.4
1.6
1.8
2.0
2.2
2.5
2.8
3.2
3.6
4.0
4.5
5.0
5.6
6.3
7.1
8.0

890117033

The Emma Goldman Papers

[Excerpt from Lecture] An Eloquent Woman / Emma Goldman.– 29 cm. In The Baltimore Critic. –(Oct. 25, 1890).

Obtained from Butler Library, Columbia University.

ow say better."

ing needs touching up. passed to give to a mill- oadway Institute hall for is is in direct violation which this structure and illus market was erected. for the public civilians levences in; to afford a house where associations rposes may be formed of discuss matters that freedom or safety. To lic hall away from the ve it to a company of re likely to be called upon he masses in some crisis to injury and exhibiting carelessness for free in should forever prohibit nsed the measure from t upon the council floor

uncil would only adjourn ndred years, what a blessi and what a mass of shame would be saved the people

CARD FROM

graphical Union No. 12

which has existed for the ths between this organiza- vening Globe has been wi thdrawal of the paper from rnalism in this city and a new evening paper which men. The following extract the last issue of the paper ber 28)

a brief, but somewhat and exciting career, the to withdraw ld of Baltimore jour- During its life it pro- ndeavored to give to the readable paper, but its ith the union printers almost impossible for it . Some $20,000 were he few months of the ife, and there seemed to of extending its cir- or general business in- and a very small and territory. This being been concluded that would be folly. It nly mean the loss of a m of money, with no ever receiving a proper our heartfelt thanks to the y for the many favors shown trouble, and our gratitude to for their co-operation

TYPOGRAPHICAL UNION No. 12

Voters of Maryland.

ion of Representatives to the ess will take place on the 4th of It will be among the most s occurred within our history ve and vital questions affecting the people will have to be de- er before, perhaps, since the our republic has there been a demand for clean, courageous, resentatives derrate the importance or grav- ent questions when we assert bition of the Licensed Liquor most urgent and far-reaching day. It hurts the interests of e results as no system of tariff , no matter how burdensome or in its character, can possibly l, moral, financial and political posed by the report of the Com- ittee on the "Alcoholic Liquor and entirely of Democrats and made as recently as last April, causes four-fifths of all crimes this country, imposes upon the of all the State, county taxes, wastes $800,000 a year in a home market for this much on products, inexpressibly mars ally a half million people for ess, causes three-fourths of the the country, is responsible for of insanity and imbecility y any good."

every good citizen to weigh rt of these frightful facts and at the ballot-box. Should ive in a civilized or Christian this question, like all others interests of the people, only at the ballot-box by the their Representatives.

urge the voters of Maryland on the 4th of November who are pledged to the constitu- of this great destructive tion Party. Candidates for of high character and abil- s having this principle to le have no bitter words for the being necessarily committed to relieve the country. the reason, conscience, patriot of the individual voter, of mere party loy- ty of protecting the best in- people.

stand together at the ballot their unanimous con- of the extinction of mere party; will be prompted and , corruption and courtesies.

persons who sell non-union cigars, but no decided action was taken. The printers re ported that the fight against the Globe was still on, although from present appearances it would soon be over.

Musical Union sent a communication to the Federation, in which they called atten- tion to the fact that the Clothing Cutters and Trimmers had on Labor Day employed an out-of-town band, and recommended that the Federation take such action as would prevent this being done again. A committee comprising Messrs. Cooney, Grey, Ransom, Heath and Ratcliffe were appoint- ed to wait upon the organization com- plained of, and request that in the future none but Baltimore musicians be employed.

The Bricklayers reported that the addition to the House of Refuge was being built by scab bricklayers, and warned the stone- cutters not to be misled into working on this building with scab workmen.

The Plasterers asked the assistance of the Federation to strengthen their organization. The carpenters were requested to use their best endeavors to have none but union plas- terers employed on buildings upon which other union men were employed.

A communication was read from the American Federation of Labor, notifying the local body of the annual meeting in Detroit in December next.

It was then decided to nominate candidates from whom a delegate to the convention would be selected. After Messrs. Duncan, Hamon, and Baxter had been nominated, the Federation adjourned.

AN ELOQUENT WOMAN.

Truths to the Foreigners in German of Their Condition and How to Remedy It.

Miss Emma Goldman, of New York, de- livered two addresses to workingmen in this city on Sunday last. The first one was at Industrial Hall, where she spoke to the International Workingmen in the afternoon, and at night spoke before the Workingmen's Educational Society at Canmakers' Hall.

Miss Goldman is a young woman of per- haps twenty three years of age, and is a fine speaker. She was born in Germany, but at an early age left her native country to go with her parents to Russia, where she began to notice the oppression of the poor, and, like many others, she immediately set to work to study out some means to alleviate their condition. At the Canmakers' Hall meeting she said, among other things, that when she came to this country and saw the magnificent buildings, and then saw the wretched squalor of the tenement houses, she wondered and cried "Oh! how did it come to pass that such grand and magnifi- cent things can exist so close to such wretched misery." And she was of the opinion that conditions in this country were almost as bad as in Europe.

She said that wages were comparatively less in this country than in Russia, since in the latter country everything is so much cheaper. Another thing was that in Russia they knew that there existed a tyrant, but in America all were supposed to be free; yet men are hanged for free speech, while others were sent to Blackwell's Island. Yet there are people to teach you how to throw off the yoke. The same general conditions exist in all countries, and the authorities and those to whom we are accustomed to look for advice appear to be in league against us. Michael Cohn and William Harvey also made addresses.

A Lively Meeting

L. A. 1233, K. of L., met as usual last Tuesday night at Industrial Hall. Good work is being done in this assembly, a fine spirit prevails and interest in the aims of the order is growing as is manifested by the constantly increased attendence. The quarterly report of D. A. 41 was on the secretary's table and was read and discussed, with the report of the delegates. The report of the committee on Pinkertonism was dis- cussed, and the following unanimously passed:

Resolved, that L. A. 1233 K. of L., de- nounces the employment of Pinkertons as an American, in this, that property fears to rely on the immediate legal safeguards of the posse comitatus, the militia, the police of the cities, and the national army and navy, thereby inciting mob violence, and insult- ing all constituted authority. And in view of the foregoing, and the ample powers of the State board of police commissioners, this assembly asks such legislation as will prevent their employment at any time in this State.

Local Labor Notes.

Canmakers' Assembly at its last meeting adopted a form of agreement for a year to be signed by their employers and their com- mittee, and instructed the committee to go ahead with its work. The co-operative can factory scheme is likely to assume definite shape in a few days.

Electrical Assembly, 6280, had a lengthy discussion Wednesday evening, when all ex-members were invited to be present. The subject was "political action," and the vote will be handed in next week.

L. A. 7307 Clothing Cutters and Trim- mers, last Friday passed resolutions against the Globe, and elected two new members.

Tailors' Assembly will hold a ball and hop shortly.

Myrtle Assembly, is going to give an entertainment and hop in December next.

Cigarmakers' Union elected five new mem- bers last week.

Typographical Union meets tomorrow (Sunday) afternoon.

Outcast of the Haven, Home and Hos- pital, Kindness, 218 North Eutaw St. Room 7 is MEETING OF THE DISTRICT ASSEMBLY.

No Assistance Fund. A Lengthy Discus- sion.

District Assembly 41, K. of L. met on Monday night at Industrial Hall, J. G. Schonfarber presiding, Chas. M. Metz, secre- tary.

Considerable routine business was trans- acted, and reports from assemblies took up over an hour, after which the D. M. W. called up the special order of business, namely, the establishing of an assistance fund. Quite a lengthy discussion ensued, many members claiming that the assistance fund would be an incentive to strikes, while others contended that strikes in themselves were not evils, being often the cause of con- siderable thought which would not other- wise be exercised. One delegate declared he was in favor of strikes, and added that a

But when a campaign lie is just a plain every day lie, a malicious distortion of the truth intended to mislead, without being really ingenious enough to deceive even the most simple-minded, then the campaign lie fails of its purpose and becomes a dangerous boomerang, recoiling with fatal effect on awkward men who thought to hurl it.

The moral wherein lies in its applica- tion. About a month ago the able gentle- men who comprise the National Congres- sional Committee issued a very pretty little book of some thirty pages, purporting to be a "Republican record made during nine months of Congress." It names these bills as passed, as being the republican record:

1.—A federal election law.
2.—A protective tariff law.
3.—Silver restored.
4.—Obstruction knocked out.
5.—A just pension law.
6.—Contract labor forbidden.
7.—Convict labor forbidden.
8.—An effective eight-hour law.
9.—The American hog vindicated.
10.—A uniform bankruptcy law.
11.—Two more new States.
12.—Six new ships for the navy.
13.—Harbor fortifications.
14.—Supreme Court relieved.
15.—Shipping bills.

Now, then, there isn't a man but knows that to claim that these fifteen bills were passed by the last Congress is an idle un- truth. It is plainly the deliberate purpose of the congressional committee to make the reader believe that both Senate and House passed these bills, and by inference, that they were approved by the President and became laws. "Congress," including House and Senate. The deliberate intention to deceive is no apparent, that really one feels impatient at the stupidity of the committee. There isn't a negro leader in the fifteenth ward that couldn't do better.

It is not worth while wasting time on all the claims made in the "Record." But the readers of THE CRITIC are probably inter- ested in Nos. 6, 7 and 8. There it is asserted that among the bills passed by the last Con- gress was one prohibiting contract labor; another forbidding convict labor, and another providing "an effectual eight-hour law."

Now, Congress did nothing of the kind. The House passed certain bills, which I will consider in detail in a moment, but the Senate never took them up. Nay, more, when Senator Blair—who, with all his crankiness, is an honest, sincere man—when Senator Blair, I say, stood up on the floor of the Senate in the closing days of the session and implored the Senate, implored his own republican colleagues, to make good their platform pledges and pass the labor bills that had come over from the House, he was smothered and crushed on all hands, and not one of the bills was passed. And to Maryland's shame, be it said, Senator Arthur P. Gorman went out of his way to join the republicans in their deliberate plot to choke off every honest effort to give labor a chance to be even heard in the Senate of the United States.

With the Senate, then, refusing to let these bills come up even in their calendar order, it is simply an absurdity to claim that "Con- gress" passed these labor bills. On the con- trary, "Congress" deliberately refused to pass them. As well might it be claimed by the democrats of the Fifteenth Congress that "Congress" passed the Mills' bill, to revise the tariff, because the bill passed the House, but was defeated in the Senate.

Now, it isn't necessary for any one to abuse the republican party in this matter of its so-called "labor legislation." The plain, cold facts are severe enough. It is claimed, then, that "Congress" passed no less than five labor bills, pure and simple measures asked for by the labor societies of the land.

1. An effective prohibition of alien con- tract labor. (H. R., 9332.)

2. An effective eight-hour law, constitu- ting eight hours a full day's work for all Government employes. (H. R., 9701.)

3. An adjustment law, enabling claimants under the old eight-hour law to submit their cases to judicial arbitrement. (H. R. 11120.)

4. A law prohibiting the employment of convict labor on government works. (H. R. 3328.)

5. A law prohibiting the use of the pro- duct of convict labor by the government in any of its departments. (H. R., 3296.)

This is the list of the labor bills. As a matter of fact, the only labor bill that passed the House and the Senate—that is, the only bill that was passed by Congress, and on being approved of course by the President, because a law—that single, solitary except- ion, is the bill called up and passed by young Buckbridge of Baltimore on Labor Day, to protect the lives of miners in the Territories. That is the only labor bill actually enacted by "Congress," and the committee evidently regard that bill as of so little importance that it is not even mentioned in all the claims and records put forth by the com- mittee!

Consider these five bills for a moment. The most important of them is the second, the "effective" eight-hour law, constituting eight hours a full day's work for all govern- ment employes. Recall for a moment the history of the eight-hour law. It was first introduced in the House in 1868, by General Banks, of Massachusetts, a republican. He had been a mill-hand a very long time in the first half of the [illegible] and knew

THIS MATERIAL MAY BE PROTECTED BY COPYRIGHT LAW (17 U.S. CODE)

881014019

The Emma Goldman Papers

[Interview. Anarchy's Den] / Emma Goldman. — p. 2 ; 43 cm. In The World. — (July 28, 1892, fragment).

Obtained from the University of California, Berkeley. Institutional Location: Doe Library.

could not get in. He said he was a modeller and had been away looking for work."

HE KNOWS BERKMAN AND MOLLICK.

"Do you know Berkman?"

"Yes, I know him."

"Do you believe he did right in shooting Frick, the manager of the Carnegie mills?"

"That is my own business."

"What sort of man is Berkman; a determined fellow?"

"Yes," he replied, "he is the kind of man to carry out what he proposed to do."

"You know Mollick?"

"Yes, I have seen him."

"Do you suppose he knew of Berkman's intention to kill Frick?"

"No."

"Did you or Miss Goldman know of it?"

"I don't think any one knew. Berkman isn't the man to talk about such things."

"When did you see him last?"

"I don't know, about ten days ago, I think; something like that."

"What were the relations between him and Miss Goldman?"

"Oh, they were friends, I think."

Timmerman speaks English well, but with a strong foreign accent. At this point of the interview he concluded that he had said enough and satisfied himself by replying to every question. "Wait till Miss Goldman comes, and talk to her."

Timmerman left the house then without entering the Anarchist's rooms, but returned in an hour. He again tried the door and went out. Then at 4.30, another young man came in. A tenant whispered to THE WORLD reporter that the newcomer was known as "the little man," and it was he who had gone away with Miss Goldman when she left the house. This man was short and stockily built, with a brown complexion and just a trace of a mustache. His eyes were shifty and his head hung down most of the time, giving his brows a beetling look. He was about 5 feet 6 inches in height, and weighed something like 135 pounds. His dress consisted of a battered straw hat, a light colored sweed frock coat in a year of two's wear, a negligé shirt that had been worn for at least a week, and dark trousers. He had a key to the rooms and had just entered, when the reporter accosted him. He declared that he could not understand English and one of the women in the house kindly acted as interpreter. Like Timmerman he was cautious, only much more so. He was undoubtedly sharper and deeper than Timmerman.

THE PORTARTER OERTER.

"You live here with Miss Goldman?"

"Yes."

"What is your name?"

"Oerter."

"Your full name?"

"That's enough."

Oerter did not ask the reporter nor the interpreter to enter the room, but drawing a wooden chair up near the threshold he sat down. He had barely been seated when he was asked:

"Are you an Anarchist?"

He rose from his seat, stretched himself to his full height, and for once looking his questioner in the face, said proudly, "I am."

Several pointed questions relating to his connection with Berkman and Miss Goldman were asked, and unsatisfactory answers in monosyllables were returned. Once he placed his hands in a menacing way on his hip, and the interpreter started back, pale and trembling.

"Oh, I'm afraid," she said, "he may kill us."

A good-natured smile and friendly tap on Oerter's shoulder, with the remark that no harm could come to him through the interview, restored confidence on all sides, and the Anarchist resumed his seat, looking downward in a dogged way.

"Where is Miss Goldman now?"

"I don't know."

"You left the house with her; where did you part company?"

"That's my business."

"Is she coming back here?"

"I don't know."

"Suppose the police should insist upon your answering?"

"Well, let the police come." He said this with a defiant gesture and an air of bravado. Then rising from his seat he said: "Come back later and see Miss Goldman, she may be here in a couple of hours."

LOOK UP TO EMMA AS A QUEEN.

Like Timmerman, Oerter seemed to consider Emma Goldman as a superior being. They spoke of her with respect, even with a sort of petty awe. Twenty minutes after THE WORLD reporter left the house Oerter emerged. He didn't look to the right nor left, but at a good pace proceeded up the street towards Third avenue. Occasionally he would put his hand to his hip as if feeling for or adjusting a weapon, and at every forty or fifty paces he would look over his shoulder. He turned the downtown corner of Third avenue, walked about twenty yards and then meeting a crowd, doubled and walked with bowed head and slouching gait back to the corner of Fifth street. He crossed the street and quick as a flash darted into the basement doorway of a saloon.

This saloon has a narrow entrance on the side of a stoop leading to the front door of the house No. 206 Fifth street, of which it is the basement. White enamelled letters spell out the sign:

ZUM GROBEN MICHEL.

This is said to mean "Kept by Big Michael," and is almost an infallible locator to Anarchists that their kindred spirits may be found. The proprietors are Michael Kretschmann and Shalas. Kretschmann, who is the "Groben Michel," a giant in stature, with a pigeon chest, was standing behind the bar in an undershirt with sleeves rolled up above the elbows. The saloon extends through two large, dingy rooms with a low ceiling blackened by tobacco smoke. A dilapidated pool table stood near the front and beyond, in the rear room, and a group of dark-visaged men in undershirts were playing pinpool. There were about forty men in the two rooms and every one was in an undershirt, some with pipes in their mouths and others with glasses of beer in their hands. The walls were hung with advertisements of Anarchistic papers and on a rack were bound files of La Revolte, L'Autonomie and other periodicals evidently of Anarchistic views.

AND HERE WAS EMMA GOLDMAN.

In the far right-hand corner of the second room, near a dusty, cobwebbed window, sat a woman. Alone in that gathering of hard-faced, half clad men, encveloped in a dense atmosphere of choking smoke, she reclined placidly in a barroom chair, reading. She seemed rather pretty. The back of her chair was tilted against the rear wall, and [illegible] am Berkman's. She couldn't live with her first husband and went with Mollick."

"But Mollick signs his name to his letters to her as Pollak?"

"Is that so?"

Miss Goldman tried to be arch. It was a dismal failure she did not repeat.

"THE POLICE MAKE ME TIRED."

"Mollick met his wife in Buffalo, and when they came here Berkman assisted them and we all lived together in Thirty-six street. No, I don't know where his wife is now, but I believe she has gone to Long Branch to see her husband. The papers made a big fuss about me, but I have not been concealing myself. I have been around town all the time.

"Were you called up on last night by Chief O'Mara, of the Pittsburg police?"

"No, I was not. The police make me tired. They are mostly fools. They go about mysteriously and do nothing. All they ever did was to put that old fool, Most, in jail."

"You are a friend of Most's?"

"A friend! The old fraud! I only wish that when I had a chance to do it, I had made him give me some of his money. He is a coward, and an Anarchist for revenue only."

"Were you not his Anarchistic wife before he took up with Lena Fischer and you met Berkman?"

"Ha, ha, ha!"

Again that hard, unmusical laugh. This time it had a ring of humanity in it that belied her words. "I was not," she said decisively.

"When was it that you had a chance to make him give you money?"

"You reporters are too impertinent. I hate reporters."

"Why?"

"Because I hate all inquisitors. I have travelled all over this country, lecturing to the groups, and I have spoken here when that ballroom Most was afraid of the police. Yes, I am a Russian, but from what part of Russia I do not propose to tell. But above all I am an Anarchist."

"You are proud then of your lover's achievement?"

"Indeed I am, we all are."

"You received several telegrams last Saturday; were they from Berkman?"

"Now, I don't propose to say any more. I have told you enough, and I suppose you will write a lot of lies. You all do, because your people must pander to the capitalists who of being implicated in the attempt to kill Mr. Frick. Shortly after noon the officials on duty at the Central Station noticed two foreigners acting suspiciously just outside the fence. A guard was placed at each end of the alley to prevent the escape of the strangers in case it was considered necessary to arrest them.

The officers for their care and patience were rewarded by seeing the men stop a boy and talk to him for several minutes. When he escaped from the man the boy was held up by the police, and he told what he knew without hesitation.

WANTED TO FIND BAUER'S CELL.

The lad said the man wanted to know the exact location of the cell in which Henry Bauer, the Anarchist who was captured yesterday, is confined. They asked a number of other questions about the plans of the Central Station Building. Shortly afterwards the men presented themselves at the desk of Detective McTigue and asked to be shown the cell in which Bauer was confined.

"Step right in and I will show you," said McTighe. Sinater and Peslick walked into the corridor, and then McTighe, pointing to an empty cell, said: "Walk right in there."

The men did as they were told. The door was quickly closed behind them and they were prisoners. They do not deny that they are Anarchists, but contend that they know nothing of the plot to kill Mr. Frick.

They say Sinater owed Bauer $1 and wanted to give it to him. Their homes have been searched to-night. The usual quantity of Anarchist literature was found, but nothing of an absolutely criminating character. They will be held until there is opportunity for a more complete investigation.

SOME OF THE "MARKED" MILLIONAIRES.

The list of millionaires found in the possession of Bauer, the Anarchist, arrested yesterday, has not been made public.

It is known, however that it includes these names: R. F. Jones, F. B. Laughlin, E. M. Ferguson, A. M. Myers, John W. Chalfant, Gilbert T. Rafferty, Joshua Rhodes, Herbert Hoetetter, C. G. Hussey, Mrs. T. M. Howe, H. C. Frick, Henry Phipps, David Reighard, J. J. Vandergrift, W. G. Park, sefiers McKee, H. W. Oliver, Joseph Horne and Charles Arbuthnot.

The residence of each was also given. Many of the men named have made themselves objectionable to the Anarchistic element, and there is no reason to believe that Bauer collected the names for fun.

Proof of the statement of Inspector McKelvey that the Pittsburg Anarchists had planned great schemes of destruction is found in the fact which became known to-day that an attempt was made Monday evening to blow up the boiler and engine departments of the Carnegie mills at Twenty-ninth street, this city. These departments are in direct connection with the heating and forge department which have been in constant operation since the remainder of the mill shut down.

At each furnace and forge eight men are employed. There are eighteen shops, consequently 144 men were at work at the time the attempt was made.

UNWARNED OF THE DANGER.

Few of the men knew of the threatened danger until it had passed. Whoever made the attempt did the work with precaution. The engineer in charge of the machinery had left his post but a few minutes. The waterman, whose duty is to keep guard of the gas, fires and water, left his position to breathe fresh air on the outside of the building.

When he left his post the gas was burning under the boilers. The gas is led to the boilers through a two-inch pipe and the flow is enormous. When the waterman returned he noticed that there was no fire under the boilers. The steam was getting down, yet strange to him the usual hissing sound of escaping gas caught his ear. Not thinking to observe the usual precaution of shutting off the gas, as all the feedcocks were open, he

A GROUP SKETCH. HERE IS GROBEN MICHEL.

[illegible] give you bread and these Anarchists like to read the lies about us. Your lists——"

"Won't you tell me when you last heard from Berkman?"

"That is no concern of the public. Now sir I will say no more. If you were to ask questions all night I would not answer."

THE OTHER ANARCHISTS AROUSED.

Of the one the swarthy, bald-faced and grimy Anarchists in the front room had been coming near to where their queen sat. Some one of them probably gave her a sign to say no more. A dozen stalwart black and red-bearded Anarchists stood a few feet back of the reporter. Another reporter approached and asked Emma Goldman a question. With her eyes glancing with significant look at the group of her friends she said in a voice far louder than was necessary, we found that it could have been heard in the front room:

"I have nothing to say. Will you not let me alone?"

As if her words were a signal, half a dozen Anarchists closed about the reporter, waving their fists in the air and hurling oaths and objurgations in German and Russian at the reporters. One man stood near a table with an ice-pick in his hand.

"ALL REPORTERS SHOULD BE KILLED."

The group grew larger. Emma Goldman rose to her feet. One burly Anarchist, broader chested than Sullivan, clenched his fists and, with face aflame with fear, heat and anger, exclaimed in German that all reporters should be killed.

"Yes, he can understand German," he howled, "You——"

"No," replied the woman in German, "he is an American." She smiled that hollow cavernous smile, her eyes shone behind her glasses. A glad and proud look was on her face, and while she made a faint display of quieting her slaves her pale face took on some color and she stood there wreathed in smiles amid smoke and beer fumes.

The WORLD reporter bowed to the gesticulating and cursing gang of inflamed men, some of whom looked like wild beasts, with their hairy breasts exposed through their gauze shirts. Perhaps it was the heavy walking stick and disappearance of unconcern as he walked through the mob that saved the reporter. The other, a representative of the Tribune, was not so fortunate. He was struck behind the neck and in the back and kicked as he neared the door. He might have fared worse had the rushing mob not hurried him to the door. As soon as the sunlight was reached, the four leaders stopped at the threshold and like snarling beasts drew back into their den, foiled of their prey. They were afraid to venture beyond the confines of their jungles. The Tribune reporter is a slightly built young man and had not even a walking stick with him. He was unarmed and a stripling and for those reasons [illegible] opportunity, as he himself was responsible for the peace of the city." Mr. Frick thanked the superintendent for his kindness, and upon insisting that the officer be reimbursed, Supt. O'Mara granted his request.

Inspector McKelvey who is acting superintendent of Police, has been especially vigilant, and the haunts of the Anarchists are being watched day and night. It has taken an extra supply of men, but the work has been prosecuted with unerring vigilance. When Inspector McKelvey was spoken to this afternoon he said:

BERKMAN'S CHIEF ACCOMPLICE.

"I think we have Bauer and Knold implicated. As to Knold, there is no question as to his connection with this case. We now have witnesses who will swear positively that he was with Berkman on Saturday morning and walked outside while he went upstairs. This man Knold is a slick one. While he would not admit that he showed Berkman Mr. Frick's office, he admitted he showed him the Chronicle-Telegraph Building. Now, there was no reason for him pointing out the Chronicle-Telegraph Building unless it was to show where Mr. Frick's office is. We have all the prominent local Anarchists spotted, and if any of them try to get away they will be arrested.

"I do not believe the story of a man handing Berkman a package just before he shot Mr. Frick. I am satisfied he was prepared for the work long before he got to the office. We also have a good case against the Long Branch anarchist Mollick. He was familiar with the assassin, and sent him money to complete the job. He sent him considerably more than $6. Until Supt. O'Mara returns with the prisoner I do not know just what course we will pursue."

A LITTLE MORE LAW NEEDED.

"The law is a little lax in regard to Anarchists, and I think the Legislature should remedy it. The only charge we can get against most of these fellows is conspiracy. I am sorry the Grand Jury is not in session, as we would surely railroad all of these men. Chief Murphy has taken charge of the Allegheny end of the case. At first I was inclined to think Berkman was alone in this matter, but I am now satisfied that there was an organized movement against Frick, and Berkman was only the tool of a number of conspirators."

CONSPIRACY TO KILL LEADING CITIZENS.

"In a few days there will be some developments that will startle the community. There were more Anarchists here than the people supposed, and they were getting ready to carry out some gigantic schemes. We were lucky in securing these people when we did, as an attempt would have been made on several of our prominent citizens, and there is no telling where it would have ended."

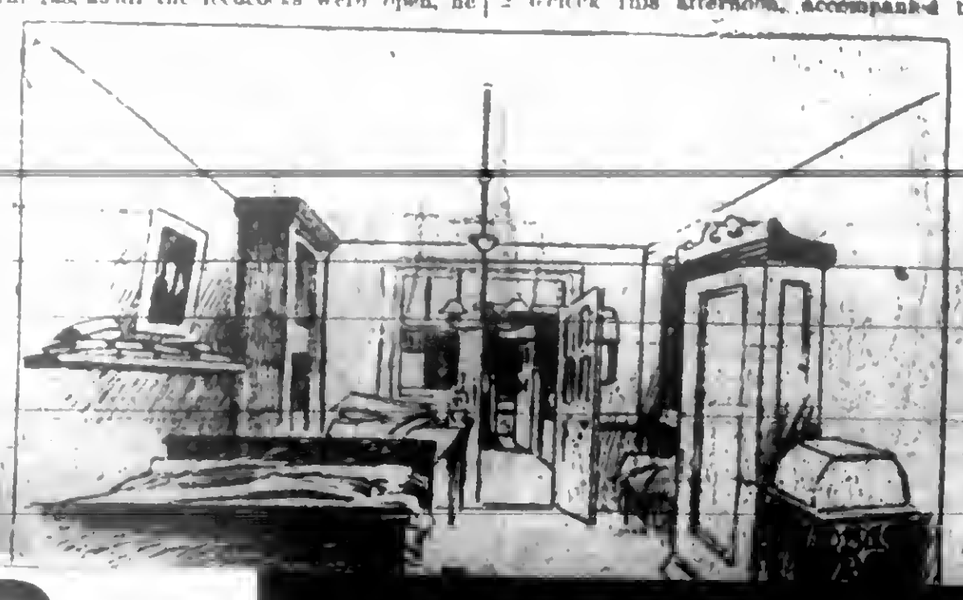
The police are now satisfied that Berkman had made every arrangement to escape—that his intention was to go to Allegheny and remain in hiding with Knold until it was safe for him to attempt to get out of the country.

Inspector Kelly, of the South Side, is keeping a lookout for all the Anarchists on that side of the river. There are several groups of them, and while he has not enough evidence to arrest them they are being watched day and night, and orders have been issued to arrest any of them who attempt to leave the city.

THE KNOLD-MOST CORRESPONDENCE.

Knold, when questioned by Inspector McKelvey, admitted receiving letters from Herr Most. He said that Most's instructions were very pointed, and that he had issued strict orders to destroy all letters written by him. This is the reason the police have been unable to get much evidence against any of the men. They have not a scratch of the pen from each other. Many of them have circulars and Anarchistic literature, but nothing to criminate any one else. Knold is the only one of the lot who is at all communicative, and at times becomes excited and tells some things that have been valuable to the police. It is more than probable that Herr Most will be arrested by Supt. O'Mara before he returns, as Knold has said that the only way Berkman could have received his address was through Most. Knold is very anxious to regain his liberty, and he is the man the police expect the most from. He makes incendiary speeches and tells what the Anarchists will do.

BERKMAN AND BAUER RETICENT.



Berkman and Bauer are exceedingly close mouthed and they will not say anything. They seem determined to fool the police as much as possible and pretend not to care what is done with them. Berkman will not accept the services of any lawyer unless the lawyer promises to conduct the case as he (Berkman) wants it conducted.

O'MARA TAKES OFF MOLLICK

Whether He Had the Right to Do So Is a Mooted Question.

[SPECIAL TO THE WORLD.]

LONG BRANCH, July 27.—Frank Mollick, who was held here by the police for complicity in the plot to kill Mr. Frick, was taken by Chief Roger O'Mara to Pennsylvania to-night. The manner in which he was removed from here and facts that came to light after his removal are such that Chief O'Mara has made himself liable to arrest for kidnapping. Chief O'Mara arrived here shortly after 2 o'clock this afternoon, accompanied by

BEST COPY AVAILABLE

881014019

The Emma Goldman Papers

[Interview. Anarchy's Den] / Emma Goldman. – p. 2 ; 43 cm. In The World. – (July 28, 1892, fragment).

Obtained from the University of California, Berkeley. Institutional Location: Doe Library.

connection with Berkman and Miss Goldman were asked, and unsatisfactory answers in monosyllables were returned. Once he placed his hands in a menacing way on his hip, and the interpreter started back, pale and trembling.

"Oh, I'm afraid," she said, "he may kill us."

A good-natured smile and friendly tap on Carter's shoulder, with the remark that no harm could come to him through the interview, restored confidence on all sides, and the Anarchist resumed his seat, looking downward in a dogged way.

"Where is Miss Goldman now?"

"I don't know."

"You left the house with her, where did you part company?"

"That's my business."

"Is she coming back here?"

"I don't know."

"Suppose the police should insist upon your answering?"

"Well, let the police come." He said this with a defiant gesture and an air of bravado.

Then rising from his seat he said: "You go back later and see Miss Goldman, she may be here in a couple of hours."

LOOK UP TO EMMA AS A QUEEN.

Like Timmerman, every person to consider Emma Goldman as a superior being. They speak of her with respect, even with a sort of petty awe. Twenty minutes after THE WORLD reporter left the house Carter emerged. He didn't look to the right or left, but at a quick pace proceeded up the street towards Third avenue. Just before reaching he would put his hand to his hip as if looking for or adjusting a weapon, and after every forty or fifty paces he would look over his shoulder. He turned the downtown corner of Third avenue, walked about twenty yards and then meeting a crowd, doubled and walked with bowed head and slouching gait back to the corner of Fifth street. He crossed the road and quick as a flash darted into the basement doorway of a saloon.

This saloon has a narrow entrance on the side of a stoop leading to the front door of the house No. 206 Fifth street, which is the basement. White enamelled letters spell out the sign.

ZUM GROBEN MICHEL.

This is said to mean "Sign of Big Michael," and is almost an infallible guide to Anarchists that there kindred spirits may be found. The proprietors are Michael Kretschmann and Shalax Kretschmann. Who is the "Grobe Michel," a giant in stature, with a pigeon chest, was standing behind the bar in an undershirt with sleeves rolled up above the elbows. The saloon extends through two large, dingy rooms with a low ceiling blackened by tobacco smoke. A dilapidated pool table stood near the open passageway into the rear room, and a group of dark-visaged men in undershirts were playing pinpool. There were about forty men in the two rooms and every one was in an undershirt, some with pipes in their mouths and others with glasses of beer in their hands. The walls were hung with advertisements of Anarchistic papers and a rack was filled with files of La Revolte, Der Sturm and other periodicals evidently of Anarchistic views.

AND HERE WAS EMMA GOLDMAN.

In the far right-hand corner of the second room, near a dusty, cobwebbed window, sat a woman. Alone in that gathering of hard-faced, half clad men, she looked like a dense atmosphere of cheap tobacco smoke she reclined placidly in a barrel chair reading. She seemed rather pretty. The back of her chair was tilted against the rear wall, and her left foot rested on the rung of a chair in front of her. A white straw hat with a blue band streaked with dotted white lay on the table at her elbow.

Chestnut-brown hair that had been parted on the side fluffed over her forehead in front, only a trace of the part. The back of the short hair was as negligently arranged. She has a shapely head; light blue-gray eyes, shielded by glasses; a small, finely chiselled nose rather too wide at the nostrils for symmetry, a colorless complexion, cheeks that once had been full, but now were slightly sunken. She a moderately pinched mouth, a feature of face that loses its beauty of form in the first decline to the chin. The mouth in repose is hard and sensual, the corners gross, the lips full and bloodless.

A neck that once was round was still well poised, but as she turned her head the tendons bulged out and drew the skin into blotches here and there, adding to the slight disappointment one had with after leaving the upper part of the face. A thin figure, five feet four inches in height. A waist still with hard flesh, clothed in white flannel, a tan-colored belt and a skirt of dark cloth striped with white.

That was Emma Goldman, the Queen of the Anarchist drinking den at the moment that afternoon.

"You are Miss Emma Goldman?"

"I am."

The reporter passed some pleasantries and she smiled. Her lips were full and the teeth were right than what their face would disclose. The lower front teeth were set wide apart, and on either side there were dental hollows, making the front of the mouth look black, or rather that dull opaque color characteristic of the inside of a hollow tooth. She spoke English well and with expression, but there was a discernible accent.

PROUD OF BEING AN ANARCHIST.

"Yes, I know Berkman. He was a splendid man, a man of brains and courage. And I am an Anarchist. I am, and I am proud of it. They have arrested Mollick, I see. Well, I am sure that Mollick had nothing to do with that little affair in Pittsburg."

"But Mollick and Berkman were friends."

"Oh, yes, they were friends, and I suppose Mollick owed Berkman some money. In fact, I know he did, and that is why he sent it to him."

"When did you last see Berkman?"

"Oh, some time ago; a week, maybe, or ten days. I don't remember exactly."

"Did he tell you where he was going and what he was going to do?"

"No, he does not make confidences with people in that way about such matters."

"But you are his wife?"

"Ha! ha! yes, I am his wife, but in the anarchistic way, you don't know what that is? The anarchists don't believe in marriages by law. We want no law and when we agree to marry, why ha! ha! there you are."

"The anarchist wife then does not expect the confidences of her husband?"

"Why should we? But that is a matter I don't propose to discuss."

"You lived with Mrs. Mollick?"

"Yes."

"The name under the bell is Pollak, is that her real name?"

"I suppose so. She is Mollick's wife, as I

A JOLLY SKETCH HAD IN GROBEN MICHEL'S.

give you bread, and the capitalists like to feed the lies about us Anarchists."

"Would you tell me when you last heard from Berkman?"

"That is no concern of the public. No, sir, I will say no more. If you were to ask questions all night I would not answer."

THE OTHER ANARCHISTS ALOOF.

One by one the anarchy, hellcat and grime that lives below the surface in Paradise coming near to where the reporter sat. Some of them pretended gave her a wide berth. A dozen stalwart black and tattooed Anarchists stood a few feet back of the reporter. Another together approached and leaned. Finally a tall man stepped up. With her eyes glancing way to right and left as the girl up other friend she said in a low voice that was necessary so loud that it could have been heard in the street that I have nothing to say. Will you not leave us alone?"

As if her words were a signal, half a dozen Anarchists closed in at the reporter, waving their fists in the air and hurling oaths and objurgations at reporter and Russian at the reporters. One burly fellow with an ugly look in his hand.

AN ANARCHISTS SHOUT TO BE KILLED.

The group grew large. Then a Bohemian came to her feet. One of the crowd broader shouldered and stouter built than his fellows, with face flame with hate, stood at Langer, exclaimed in German that all reporters should be killed.

Yes, he can understand German. He followed when

"No, replied the woman in German, "he is an American." She noted that hollow cavernous stalls, her eyes shone behind her glasses. A glad and proud look was on her face, and while she made a faint display of smoothing her shawl, her pale face took on some color and she stood there breathing in short and shrill shrieks.

The World reporter bowed to the scowling and cursing crowd of infuriated men, some of whom looked like wild beasts, with their hairy breasts exposed through their open shirts. Perhaps it was the lurid glare which struck and disappearance of upon seen as he walked through the hall that was to be the perfect. The other impressions of the Anarchists was not so favorable. The way struck behind the neck and in the face and kicked as he neared the door. He might have fared worse had the crowd not hurried him to the door. As soon as the sunlight was reached, the four leaders stopped at the threshold and like starving beasts drew back into their dens fearful of their prey. They were afraid to venture beyond the confines of their cages. The reporter is a slightly built young man and could not exactly walking. He was unarmed and a struggle would be their favor. The courage was not there and so just for moment, while they allowed the coal of fire to pass through their assailants' bodies and eyes.

WHY THIS DEMONSTRATION.

The cause for this violent outbreak was the effort made by the chief of police to obtain testimony with the purpose of the Anarchists and the suppression of the Book of Modern Crime. It was established that Mollick, Berkman and Dallas to blind the world by the assassination of Frick, but the day was not ripe for the deed. Mollick had failed to obtain the necessary funds. Chief O'Mara had learned that Mollick was planning to leave for a visit to Europe. New York Sun.

Come as soon as possible, nothing dangerous.

EMMA.

That telegram was sent by Emma Goldman and Modick and Chief O'Mara has read his name was signed. Mollick knew that he was being followed by detectives and that he would be arrested on his arrival in New York. Several days ago Mollick left his home in Allegheny City, telling his wife that he was going to Cleveland, Ohio, to see his brother. Mrs. Walsh, a neighbor of Mollick, says that yesterday that in the afternoon a telegram had been received by Mollick, but that she did not know who sent it. Miss Goldman was asked about this telegram during the latter part of the interview, but having read in the afternoon papers that both Mollick and her landlady had given it to the police she gave the signal to the Anarchists to break up the interview.

EMMA PROBABLY BEING WATCHED.

At Police Headquarters Sergeant Bell, who was in charge of the Detective Bureau was asked if there was any intention of arresting Emma Goldman as an accomplice in the conspiracy to murder.

"I don't know," he replied, "we will have to wait until she can be connected with the matter. That is in the hands of the Pittsburg police. She has committed no crime here."

She may leave town?"

The detective shrugged and said, "I think not."

FIVE CONSPIRATORS IN CELLS

Two More Anarchists Arrested at Pittsburg—Probing the Plot.

(SPECIAL TO THE WORLD.)

PITTSBURG, Pa., July 27.—Five Anarchists are now behind the bars of the Allegheny County Jail or the Pittsburg Central Police Station and there is good reason to believe that accumulates that under cover of the Homestead strike the Anarchists hatched the plot which involved the destruction of many lives. The details are still meagre, but enough is known to convince the police authorities that many persons were implicated in the plot to murder H. C. Frick, Chairman of the Carnegie Steel Company (limited), and that if this succeeded, other murderous plans were to be executed.

The chief feature to-day was the arrest of Paul Minster and August Pollak on suspicion throw a piece of lighted waste into one of the gas mains. A slight explosion occurred.

MISS GOLDMAN'S ROOMS. DRAWN FROM A PHOTOGRAPH.

WORKMEN STARTLED BY THE SHOCK.

The shock startled the men near at hand, but they did not realize the danger they had escaped. The quick return of the waterman saved the building. Five minutes of a delay on his part would have permitted an accumulation of gas sufficient to blow the building to atoms and the workmen to eternity. The circumstances of the affair was kept quiet until to-day. Supt. Dillon was seen in regard to the matter. He said:

"A remarkable escape on the part of the workmen in the forge de, at Twenty-third street was probably made. It was a lucky moment when the man in charge returned. But a few minutes delay on his part would have allowed sufficient gas to pour under the boilers to make an explosion that would have caused the mill to be wrecked and the loss of many lives. No one knows who made the attempt."

While Dillon says, as Supt. Dillon says, that he does know who is guilty of this attempt at wholesale murder, there is no doubt in the minds of the authorities that it was the work of an Anarchist. There may be arrests in this case before morning.

THE CARNEGIE OFFICES GUARDED.

The Carnegie Company office on Fifth avenue is now under constant surveillance of the police. One of the front-office men is on duty the whole day, from the time the company offices open in the morning until they close at night. When the man on duty goes for lunch he is relieved by another, so that the building is not left unguarded for a single moment. The object is to prevent any more cranks coming around and attempting the lives of any in the office.

For several days past suspicious-looking characters have been loitering about the building, but have made no attempt to enter, and it is supposed they are pickets appointed by the Homestead strikers to watch men who apply for work.

Supt. O'Mara anticipated there might be trouble some time ago, and, until two days before the attempted assassination of H. C. Frick occurred, had an officer constantly on guard at the Fifth avenue offices.

COMPLIED WITH MR. FRICK'S REQUEST.

Mr. Frick discovered that his offices were guarded and suspected that some one of the company had taken precautions of the kind without letting him know of it. Mr. Frick went to Supt. O'Mara and requested him to remove the officer, saying he felt perfectly safe, and thought having a officer posted out in front would create a bad impression. Supt. O'Mara assured him he had placed a guard in front of the offices on his own re-

BEST COPY AVAILABLE

881017005

The Emma Goldman Papers

[Interview] A Talk with Emma Goldman / Emma Goldman.— p. 2 ; 43 cm. In The New York Times. —(July 28, 1892).

Obtained from the University of California, Berkeley. Institutional Location: Doe Library.

the formal extradition proceedings he was taken to the station and appeared to be content with his action until the train was pulling into the station. When the officers started to lead him toward the cars he held back and did not appear to wish to enter the train. He was helped along, however, and in a few minutes was on his way to Philadelphia.

A TALK WITH EMMA GOLDMAN.

SAYS BERKMANN IS A GOOD MAN BUT NOT HER HUSBAND.

When inquiries were made for Emma Goldman, the Anarchist and friend of the assassin, Berkmann, at her lodgings at 210 Fifth Street yesterday, Mrs Walsh, the janitress, said that she had gone out and could not tell when she would return. On July 15 Miss Goldman and a Mrs Pollock called at the house, and the latter engaged rooms for herself and the Goldman woman. A young man who gave his name as Carter also came and lived in a room with the Goldman woman, and occasionally another man, a large sized fellow, stayed with the women in the house. Both men were very coarse-looking, Mrs. Walsh said.

While Mrs. Walsh was giving this information the young fellow Carter came in. When he was asked where Miss Goldman was he refused to tell, and hurriedly left the house and ran to the Bowery. After zigzagging on that and adjacent streets and looking around to see if he was being followed, he finally ran into the lager beer saloon at 210 Fifth Street known as "Zum Groben Michel," kept by the Anarchist Peukert, which is a resort for Anarchists of the rabid Autonomous type.

Carter was followed to this place, and here Emma Goldman was also found reading a paper. On being spoken to, she first denied that she was Goldman, but when she saw that she was known she declared that she would not say anything.

"Are you married to Berkmann?" she was asked.

She excitedly replied that she was not, and added that her friendship for the assassin was of the platonic kind. Both of them were Anarchists and helped each other. Whenever he was in need of money she gave him some, and if she happened to be "broke" and he had cash he would give her a part.

"Have you heard from Berkmann or written to him since he left the city?" Miss Goldman was asked.

"No, I have neither heard from him nor have I written to him," she replied, and the next moment she changed her answer to: "If we have corresponded it is none of your business nor that of anybody else."

She was then asked whether Johann Most had supplied her with money to give to Berkmann. She indignantly denied that she had received any money at all from Most, although she wished she had taken his money when she could have got it. He gets money very easily, she said, from poor and ignorant working people. On this money he lived like a gentleman and preached Anarchy, telling his fools that Providence sent him to show them the way to deliverance from the tyranny of the capitalists.

"But," added Miss Goldman, "Most is a coward, and simply talks. He would not dare to go out and kill a capitalist, as did the brave Berkmann."

As to the relations between Berkmann and Mollick, Miss Goldman said that Berkmann befriended him, as he had a family, and lent him money, and when Mollick secured work he began paying Berkmann back what he owed him. Miss Goldman admitted that she had sent Mollick the telegram telling him to come on to New York, and adding that there was nothing dangerous. She meant by this that Mollick's wife, who was sick, wanted to see him, although she was not in a dangerous condition.

Would she go and visit Berkmann in prison? She would not, because she might get arrested, though, as a matter of fact, she expected to be arrested at any moment by the police here.

Several vicious looking Anarchists who were in the saloon told the reporters to get out of the place. As they were going out, Peukert, who is a tall man, seized a reporter by the back of his collar and with the help of the others shoved him out, and one of them administered a blow from behind. A police officer, who was on the sidewalk, said that the Anarchists were a dangerous set of men, and he would arrest any of them for assault if the reporter chose to make a complaint. The reporter said: "Never mind."

AN ANARCHISTIC BLAST.

SUBSTANCE OF AN ARTICLE IN "DER ANARCHIST."

The rabid Anarchistic sheet called Der Anarchist, published at 315 East Forty-fourth Street, and said to be owned by Peukert, contained a violent article in its issue of July 23, over the signature of "Sepp." In the course of his article the writer says:

"Let us Anarchists persevere in teaching the necessity of action. Let us everywhere support those who are ready to act, let us everywhere teach the necessity of procuring and using weapons, everywhere fan hatred against modern society to a flame. And so, by means of our instigation, through our support of every one who will act, by the dissemination of knowledge in the use of weapons, by hate—by all these combined—the social revolution will be inaugurated, and will break out before even we think it. Then, then will we repay in full what was done to us that has been done to humanity.

"Throw up, comrades, arouse yourselves from your sloth, and although many of you may fall in the front ranks other fighters will take your places. For what have we to lose? Life? We live negatively only, nothing more.

"Or should [illegible] out of consideration for wives and children? No, no revolutionist should waste [illegible] everything that would stand in the way of doing what is necessary to overthrow [illegible]. As long as we stand in the field of [illegible] and cannot look back. Let us [illegible] everything that may hold us back [illegible] of extermination.

[illegible] to the light! Enough words have been [illegible] now action. Hurrah for the [illegible] of poison! Hurrah for dynamite! Hurrah [illegible]"

In the night of July 16 Mrs. Webb was delivered of a stillborn child. All this time Mrs. Parsell and the brothers and sisters of the sick woman did not suspect that anything criminal was being done under their roof. As days passed after the birth and Mrs. Webb appeared to grow steadily worse, however, they became alarmed and told Webb they were going to call in Dr. G. J. Strong of Long Island City to attend her. Webb protested against any interference with the treatment of his wife at the hands of the so-called Drs. White and Dale, but Mrs. Parsell was firm, and on Thursday evening of last week she sent for Dr. Strong.

"As soon as I saw the sick woman," said Dr. Strong yesterday, "I saw that she was suffering from blood poisoning. I became suspicious that a criminal operation had been performed. The sick woman was very reticent and seemed to want me to leave the sickroom. I told Mrs. Parsell then that I would not treat her daughter unless I was allowed to bring in other physicians in consultation. She begged me, as did other members of the family, to do all I could to save the woman's life.

"On Friday afternoon I held a consultation at the house with Dr. W. J. Burnett of Long Island City and Dr. E. H. Grandin of New-York. After our examination we knew that the sick woman was suffering from blood poisoning as the result of a criminal operation. We informed her family of this and told them that Mrs. Webb must die. That night, I understand, the so-called Dr. White and Dr. Dale called to see the woman. They were told they could not enter the house, as three other physicians were treating the case. They seemed to be frightened at this and hurriedly left.

"Monday evening, late, I got word that Mrs. Webb had died. At once I went and notified Coroner Meiners of Long Island City."

Coroner Meiners put himself in communication with the police. They decided to first arrest Webb. While riding down to the police station with Coroner Meiners Webb admitted that the physician who had treated his wife was Dr. McGonegal, and the female doctor was Marian A. Dale. He denied that any criminal operation had been performed, and said he had called in Dr. McGonegal because he had long been the physician of his family.

Late Tuesday night the Long Island City officers came to this city to arrest McGonegal and the woman Dale. They found Miss Dale, who is a tall, spare, blonde woman of forty four years, at her home at 231 West One Hundred and Twenty-second Street, and soon afterward found McGonegal. Early yesterday morning they started with their prisoners for Long Island City.

Miss Dale stoutly denied that she had participated in any criminal operation on Mrs Webb. Old McGonegal at first absolutely denied his identity. He did not look just as he did when the jury found him guilty of the killing of Annie Goodwin, for he had cut off a foot or more of his white beard, and his white hair was cut closer. When the police insisted that he must go along with them he became very profane. Finally he admitted that he was McGonegal, but denied that he had had any hand in causing Mrs. Webb's death.

All three of the prisoners were in the Long Island City Police Station yesterday morning. They would not talk to anybody. McGonegal admitted to Coroner Meiners that he had called upon Mrs Webb and had attended her in her sickness, but denied again that there had been any criminal operation. Webb admitted that the still-born child of his wife had been buried by him in the yard of his home, and designated the spot. Coroner Meiners committed all three of the prisoners to the county jail.

Yesterday afternoon an autopsy was held over the body of Mrs. Webb in the house where she died. It was conducted by Prof. C. C. Lockley of this city and Drs. Strong and Burnett of Long Island City. It did not take long to determine that the woman had died of blood poisoning as the result of a criminal operation. Coroner Meiners got together the jury he had impaneled during the evening and went to the house to view the body. Permission was given to bury the body, and the funeral will be held at 2 o'clock this afternoon from St. Thomas's Church.

From Lawyer Birdsall, who defended McGonegal when he was being tried for the murder of Annie Goodwin, was learned that since he was released on bail McGonegal had been spending most of his time at the homes of friends in this city, although he made flying trips out of town.

The inquest in the Webb case will probably be held to-morrow. The police and the coroner believe they have a clear case against McGonegal.

On Oct. 15, 1890, Judge Fitzgerald sentenced Dr. McGonegal to fourteen years at hard labor in the State prison, for causing the death of Annie Goodwin. He was then locked up in the Tombs. The Judges of the General Sessions refused to entertain a motion for a new trial. McGonegal's counsel went to Brooklyn and Supreme Court Judge Pratt issued a certificate of reasonable doubt on Nov. 11, and the case was sent to the General Term of the Supreme Court. That court affirmed the finding of the lower court.

Bail had been fixed at $5,000 under the stay granted by Justice Pratt, and McGonegal secured a bondsman in David B. Cox of 315 East One Hundred and Nineteenth Street. He went to Port Chester pending the result of the action before the General Term of the Supreme Court. As soon as it was learned that the decision of that court was against him a stay was secured from Justice Dykman of Westchester, pending an appeal to the Court of Appeals. The same bail was continued, and hence it was that McGonegal remained at large.

District Attorney Nicoll said yesterday that the arrest of McGonegal for another murder was a strong illustration of the danger of country Judges interfering with the administration of justice in criminal cases in this city. "This office did everything that was possible in the McGonegal case," he said. "We could not control the acts of the Supreme Court Judges who granted the stays. We bitterly opposed them, as well as the applications for the reduction of bail from $20,000. Judges of the Supreme Court, however, reduced the bail, as you know, and McGonegal went free pending the decision on the appeal of his case to the Court of Appeals. His bail was never forfeited, and he has been as free as air to go and come as he pleased so long as he was here when he was wanted.

"It was not the fault of this office that the case was not decided at the June term of the Court of Appeals. We intended to push it [illegible] Assistant District Attorney [illegible] was ill [illegible]

length of cable in the action [illegible] its and to the dragging effect [illegible] shore, as well as to reduce [illegible] from the action of waves and [illegible]

The deep-sea temperatures [illegible] of an exceedingly interesting [illegible] are shown in three forms of [illegible] accompanying the report. [illegible] face temperatures of the water [illegible] the shores of the Hawaiian [illegible] ber, 1891, was 77 Fahrenheit [illegible] line from Honolulu to [illegible] run between Dec. 12, 1891, and [illegible] the surface temperature was [illegible] 78° near Honolulu and 52° [illegible] fornia. On a great circle [illegible] Bay and Honolulu, run between [illegible] Nov. 21, 1891, the surface [illegible] California coast was closest [illegible] near Honolulu 78°. In the [illegible] serial temperatures, the mean [illegible] at 1,000 fathoms was found [illegible] belt, and the average bottom [illegible] depths greater than 1,000 fathoms [illegible]

PLATT CANNOT [illegible]

MR. CARTER AND SEC[illegible] GIVE THE PRESIDENT [illegible]

WASHINGTON, July 27 — [illegible] Chairman of the Republican [illegible] tee, reached Washington [illegible] from New York, and is still [illegible] came "to finish up the little [illegible] Land Department business, [illegible] able to complete at the time [illegible] resignation.

On the subject of the politi[illegible] cularly the outlook for Harri[illegible] son and Platt and Warner [illegible] ceedingly non-communicative. [illegible] the campaign would show [illegible] perfect, he said, and that was [illegible]

J. S. Clarkson came to the [illegible] leg. He said he had run over [illegible] to test Washington cabstand [illegible] resort. No, there was no politics [illegible] he knew that Mr. Carter was [illegible] would see the President before [illegible] always made it a point to call [illegible] when in Washington. It is [illegible] the other news-things he [illegible] cept his reply to the question [illegible] and the President were apt to [illegible]

"Did you ever know Mr. [illegible] for the Republican ticket?" [illegible]

Mr Carter has spent nearly [illegible] York and vicinity, and he [illegible] President that how matters [illegible] big city. He spent several hours [illegible] House to day, and there no doubt [illegible] he imparted to Mr Harrison [illegible] sions he had received.

Secretary Elkins had [illegible] President, as the result of [illegible] York Sunday, that the Republican [illegible] New York was still doing business [illegible] Platt at the old stand, [illegible] had advised the President [illegible] clearly in the wrong.

That both Platt and [illegible] son some time in June [illegible] petable. They have fortunately [illegible] h old power over the [illegible] machine, and that it will [illegible] treat with him. It harmonizes [illegible] word. A Republican who [illegible] watch of the situation in [illegible] correspondent of THE TIMES [illegible] situation existing at the [illegible] ella Convention had not changed [illegible]

"Platt," the man said, "[illegible] returned home that Harrison [illegible] more him. The President [illegible] vice of a number of Republicans [illegible] no use for Platt, and [illegible] pression that Platt was [illegible] of any importance in New [illegible] this would be the proper [illegible] knowing that the [illegible] Republican machine in New [illegible] as ever, Platt was willing [illegible] Already he sees signs of a [illegible] of Harrison. The latter's [illegible] the last week in New-York [illegible] the Republicans waiting for [illegible] word to begin work. They look to the city crowd for [illegible]

"This is now in line with [illegible] rison's advisers have taken [illegible] to see the point of a situation [illegible] to see a backdown by the [illegible] few days. If there is to be [illegible] will have to take the initiative [illegible] who is most vitally concerned [illegible] of this campaign."

The appointment of A. [illegible] Controller of the Currency [illegible] mony and the first Treasurer [illegible] been flung at the Empire [illegible] since Batchellor was made [illegible] and he wanted to be Minister [illegible]

Policeman Kasop[illegible]

Patrolman Kasop of the [illegible] cinct, Brooklyn, endeavored [illegible] picious-looking men in [illegible] o'clock yesterday morning [illegible] promptly knocked him [illegible] recovered his feet, captured [illegible] handed him over to a [illegible] after the other man.

The man ran about [illegible] policeman could get out [illegible] Several shots were [illegible] created the fugitive's skull [illegible] He was so weak from the [illegible] had to be carried to the station [illegible] soon revived and said he [illegible] 34 Underhill Avenue. [illegible] is Morgan. Both men [illegible] Walsh for examination.

In his flight Watson threw [illegible] which the police say had [illegible]

Sent to Mayor Ho[illegible]

The Dearborne Street [illegible] who was exposed in THE [illegible] ing some of his circulars [illegible] Mendy of Brooklyn. The [illegible] rill, Ma., and he promptly [illegible] dog as a "[illegible] mode."

4

BEST COPY AVAILABLE

881014020

The Emma Goldman Papers

Who Will Thrash Mr. Most? / Emma Goldman. – p. 3 ; 43 cm. In The World. – (July 29, 1892).

Obtained from the University of California, Berkeley. Institutional Location: Doe Library.

DIAGRAM OF BOMB FOUND IN BAUER'S HOUSE.

"Allegheny is particularly crowded with them, but since Chief Murphy and the Pittsburg police have got after them they are showing the white feather and have closed their mouths. They can't keep quiet and will open up in a few days. There are several other people in Allegheny implicated in this affair, and they will be landed."

"The Pittsburg police have put a quietus on anarchy in this city, and the ground they have gained they do not intend to lose. They have not made any wholesale arrests, and they do not intend to," said Inspector McKelvey this morning. "It is not our intention to hold any one that we are not reasonably sure of convicting. It would be easy enough for us to arrest fifteen of the Anarchists in the two cities, but, as we have no case against them, it would be utterly foolish for us to lock them up. We have dealt as carefully with these cases as possible. Of course, we had considerable luck, but it took some good hard work. We have not nearly completed our work yet, and in a few days we may be able to get at the root of this whole business. There is now no doubt but that this was an organized plot. I think Bauer was in it, but he is the smartest one of the outfit, and not one of us has talked to him. There is no use for us to do so until we get some catch on him, which we expect almost any moment."

"Will Herr Most be arrested?"

"No; I do not think that we will have any use for him. I believe Emma Goldman's story that Most is an Anarchist for revenue only. I think he is a coward and a sneak. He has a number of these people who fear him, and it will be almost impossible to connect him with the case. However, we will see to it that he will not get away. In fact, this matter has been taken up by the police authorities all over the United States, and the Anarchists are being watched at every turn. I do not think that they can be watched too much. This anarchist question has aroused the whole country, and the police of each city have decided to find out just how strong they are. No one had any idea of the number of people of this kind we have had in our cities. We have furnished some valuable pointers to the police of other cities, and they have helped us.

PEUKERT, THE RED OF REDS.

Paul Eckert, the Allegheny Anarchist, who lived in the house with Knold, was a visitor at the Central Police Station this morning. He called to see Inspector McKelvey. They had a long conversation, but what the result of it was is not known. Eckert went in to see Knold and they had a long talk. Superintendent of Police O'Mara was expected home this morning with Mollick, but he did not arrive. He sent word that he intended to stop over in Philadelphia to look up a clue there. He will be home to-morrow morning.

Paul Einster and August Pirnack, the men arrested yesterday afternoon as suspicious characters because they inquired as to what cell Bauer, the Anarchist, occupied, were discharged. There was not the slightest indication that they were in any way connected directly with Bauer. They were Germans, and thought they would be permitted to see Bauer, that they might collect some money he owed them.

WHO WILL THRASH MR. MOST?

Emma Says He Is a Rogue and a Washrag and Ought to Be Whipped.

Joseph Peukert, head of the Autonomist group, sat in "Groben Michel's" saloon, No. 209 East Fifth street, yesterday, in a fiery red undershirt. He was preparing for mailing his paper, Der Anarchist, dated July 30. He sat in the back part of the saloon, where many of the plans of action of the group are hatched.

"Don't come near me," he shouted as the reporter approached him, "I don't want anything to do with capitalistic spies."

When informed the reporter only wanted to purchase one of his papers he quietly wrapped one up and sold it for three cents. When asked whether he would express any opinion upon Berkman, Miss Goldman, or Anarchy in general, he exclaimed: "I would not help in your blood-money!" and refused to answer any questions put to him.

This issue of Der Anarchist is mild compared with last week's. That the Autonomists have become scared through fear of arrest is evident, and Peukert indulges in none of the bloodthirsty language of the last number. The only editorial mention of the Berkman attempted assassination is a comparison of Berkman to Brutus. The concluding paragraph reads:

A millionaire robber like Frick is more powerful and more absolute in this country than any of the crowned despots of the Old World. He may have crimes upon crime and there is no power to call him to justice. Executions and outlaws are all the same [illegible]

the corruption existing in the Pelikan office he was discharged in the middle of July, 1891, under a promise that he would employ him soon again.

Comrades, if there is a spark of self-esteem left in you, if you do not identify yourselves with the rascalities of this charlatan, you will remember these words. It is you who support him and furnish him the means to lead this luxurious life. Through your sweat and your blood he has made himself prominent. Often has he said he would rather be a Carl Schurz than John Most.

But enough has been said. It would take volumes to describe his miserable deeds.

His cry is "The police are after him," and a greater disgrace could not befall Berkmen than Most to be identified with him. Berkman would never take him into his confidence because he knew Most to be a gossip. Most has already often prevented comrades from performing valuable deeds. The fanatic Russian people have discovered the base character of Alexander III., and it is to be hoped that the enlightened German comrades will finally see the miserable doings of John Most. So long as we cherish demagogues of this kind, who become great through us and our pennies, the movement will be checked and the ruling classes will triumph. Words do no good with such a fellow, a good thrashing would perhaps not change this moo, but it might shut up his mouth.

EMMA GOLDMAN.

AT ANARCHY'S HOTBED.

The Autonomists Still at Large, and in Savage, Sullen Mood.

Neither unpleasant notoriety nor warm weather had any effect upon the Fifth street band of Anarchists yesterday. Emma Goldman, the so-called wife of Berkman, the assailant of H. C. Frick, and the acknowledged queen of the Autonomists, spent the day in Zum Groben Michel's dingy beer saloon at 209 Fifth street, and was at home, perfectly at home, to all callers. "Tough Mike," as he would be named in English, and very appropriately, too, was as grufi and surly as usual. As for the other three unkempt law-haters Timmerman, Oerter and Puckert, they smoked cigarettes and chattered away in German, as if there were no such irritating and ticklish things as dollar marks and dynamite pellets.

Down the street, a block away, where live Berkman and his wife, Timmerman and Mrs. Mollick, the Anarchistic wife of the Long Branch suspect, it was different only in degree of hilarity that marked the conduct of all. The newly discovered fact that No. 340 Fifth street was the abiding place of bloodthirsty dynamiters and the hatchery of all sorts of plots had given the neighborhood something to talk about. Every tenant in the big flat-house had a visitor and every time a new visitor came he or she was watched by the others in hopes that the newcomer might be no officer of the law or a lowwhiskered ogre with a string of bombs dangling from his waist.

There was no attempt at secrecy. The firemen next door laughed and joked with the policeman who passed on, and even the postman called a few moments to talk over the situation with the occupants of the parlor floor. Jolly Mrs. Walsh, the caretaker, who was nearly scared out of her wits the day before by reading the newspaper accounts of her undesirable tenants, was just having a picnic. She even went so far as to act as interpreter for Mrs. Mollick. But an interpreter was hardly needed. Mrs. Mollick had very little to say.

If she or Miss Goldman had thought of vacating the apartments it was not until yesterday morning, when the agent of the landlord gave notice that they must leave the 1st of August. The rooms were rather disorderly and the two little Mollicks, or rather Kertschalls, as they are the children of her first husband, were sprawled over the floor, sucking chunks of ice as big as their heads.

Mrs. Mollick returned from Long Branch Wednesday evening, where she had seen her husband depart for Pittsburg in charge of Chief O'Mara. She looked jaded and appeared to have lost much sleep. But she wouldn't admit that there was anything troubling her. She felt sure, she said, that her husband would have no difficulty clearing himself of the charge of complicity in the attempted assassination of Mr. Frick, and it would be only a few days before he would be liberated.

With these assertions, rather reluctantly made, Mrs. Mollick seemed to feel that public interest in her affairs ceased. She clinched her teeth when the subject of the mysterious telegram sent her husband at Long Branch was mentioned. Not even the suave Mrs. Walsh, whose choice German is often sandwiched with an emphatic American "see?" could make Mrs. Mollick say another word. So many questions were put to her that finally, in desperation, she ran to a rear room, and jumping in bed yelled to Mrs. Walsh that she was very ill and would see no more visitors.

And she kept her word. Not a soul save the student-faced Timmerman got into that room afterward. However, Timmerman was no visitor, and he ran to and from Zum Groben Michel's whenever the notion struck him. Only once during the day did he get away from Fifth street, and that was in the morning when he walked down the Bowery. At the intersection of Division street he met his partner, Oerter, and they held a quick consultation and compared notebooks. Timmerman then kept down the street, and was lost sight of after he turned the corner and went into the restaurant at No. 20 North William street. That is the restaurant which Herr Most patronizes, and is a general rendezvous for Anarchists.

Timmerman's mysterious errand started a report that Emma Goldman and her followers were about to change quarters. That there was any call for such a move struck Miss Goldman as being funny. "Why should we go away?" she said, as she sat in the back room of Tough Mike's place. She looked, as though she wanted to add, "It's very convenient to this place," and then she settled back comfortably in her chair, tilted it as usual, and looked defiant. Like her friend, Mrs. Mollick, Emma grew suddenly mute and said she was through with all reporters—bright men who sold their talents and ideas to capitalists.

Joseph Peukert, the scheming, foxy leader of the New York autonomists, sat at a long table near Miss Goldman. He was apparently engaged in addressing copies of the Der

Dr. LESLIE E. KEELEY

Has established at Babylon, L. I., a branch institute for the treatment of Alcoholism, Morphine and Nervous Diseases. For terms address Wm. O'Hall, Babylon, L. I., or 118 to 124 West 25th st.

said to a World reporter, however, that he was somewhat astonished last night when arrested, as it was entirely unexpected.

"I have not troubled myself with the case," he said, "and it is perfectly immaterial to me what action Lawyers Fay and Wilson may take."

Judge Van Doren, who issued the warrant for Capt. Layton's arrest, was sitting in the room while he was talking, and when the Captain left, a few minutes afterwards, spoke to the reporter about the case. Said he: "I understand that Chief Justice Beasley is very angry over Chief O'Mara's action. He has, I hear, charged him with kidnapping and said that the Pittsburg man should be arrested. I have no doubt that the proceedings of Chief O'Mara were a little unusual for an officer, but I hardly see how he can be charged with the offense of kidnapping Mollick."

HENRY BAUER.

Lawyer Thomas F. Fay, of Long Branch, said this morning that an appeal would be made either to-day or to-morrow to Hon. Abbett, of New Jersey, and that every step would be taken to have Chief O'Mara and Capt. Layton punished. Civil suits for damages, the two lawyers say, will also be begun against the police officers.

Capt. Layton is well known in and around Long Branch, and the news of his arrest, published exclusively in THE WORLD, evoked considerable astonishment. He has always been an officer of integrity and worth, and the report of his alleged backsliding from virtue has caused no end of talk. To-day it is an absorbing topic of conversation in Monmouth county.

F. J. Hehll, Mollick's late employer, says that many of the reports published about Mollick are in the main untrue. "Mollick," he said, "I never received a high quantity of letters, despite all reports to the contrary, and what letters or telegrams he did receive were not carefully guarded. Why, that telegram reading: 'Come as soon as possible. Nothing dangerous,' which Miss Goldman sent, and the police are making such a fuss over, he showed me as soon as it was received. He wished me to translate it for him, and when we understood its wording exclaimed, 'My wife has been sick for some time. I must go to her at once.' He left immediately after the receipt of the telegram for New York, but remained away only a short time. That Mollick is guilty of complicity in a plot of such magnitude seems to me highly preposterous."

Late last night a humbly clad man, apparently a workman, called at the house of Lawyer Fay. He said that he had come all the way from Pittsburg to see him, and wished to know when he would return. What connection this may have with the affair the lawyer doesn't know. The man said he would come back, but up to a late hour to-day had not returned.

The two lawyers who have stirred up this difficulty for Chief O'Mara and Capt. Layton are angered at the contemptuous treatment they received yesterday, and vow that they will go the length of the law to get satisfaction. When Chief O'Mara left so hurriedly yesterday he referred to Lawyers Fay and Wilson as a couple of windbags. They heard of this, and now say that the Pittsburg officer will find out shortly that there is something more than wind after him.

Capt. Layton's hearing is set down for Aug. 2.

"VIVE L'ANARCHIE."

A Prose Poem by F. Oerter Found Among Miss Goldman's Papers.

Among the papers found on the mantelshelf in Emma Goldman's room was a long prose poem, written in a fine German hand. It was entitled "Vive l'Anarchie; or, The End of Terror," and signed "Fritz Oerter." Oerter looks to be about twenty-four years old. He is one of the lodgers in the Goldman apartments and boldly announces himself an Anarchist. A full description of him and a brief interview is printed elsewhere in these columns. His poem, freely translated, is as follows:

VIVE L'ANARCHIE.
THE END OF TERROR.

"Surrounded by the people of his court the stern ruler sits in silence, while at his feet fawn his servile subjects. Loud strains of music fill the air, and courtiers nimbly bow

WEAK MEN

Easily, Quickly, Permanently Restored.

Wasting, Nervousness, Debility and all the train of evils from early errors or later excesses, the results of overwork, sickness, worry, &c. Full strength, development and tone given to every organ and portion of the body. Simple, natural methods. Immediate improvement seen. Failure impossible; 2,000 references. Book, explanations and proof mailed (sealed) free. Address

ERIE MEDICAL CO.,
64 Niagara St., Buffalo, N. Y.

WEAK NERVOUS sufferers from youthful errors, [illegible]

[illegible] murder by wholesale, and [illegible]

"You rich are the cause of all misery and sorrow. You take pleasure for yourselves in abundance, while to us you leave nothing but suffering. The youth's strength and the maiden's fresh, rosy cheeks soon disappear in your service in the factory.

"You spare not even the little child yet in its infancy.

"You steal the last drop of blood from the people, although they work your mills.

"See not you those pale girls wandering through the streets at nighttime? You leave them nothing but the choice either to sell themselves or starve.

"And does not the growing army of the proletariat frighten you?

"Woe unto you when sick of your power they break into your palaces. You have violated the eternal laws of nature, and you have placed your senseless work in their stead.

"A murmur is heard in the distance. It grows and grows, as the prisoner continues tirelessly and forcefully.

"While your surroundings are a desert, you enjoy life on a blooming oasis. The power upon which you built hopes is nothing but a hollow phrase. Your Christianity is a lie, and your pity is nothing but flattery. While you enslave thousands you deem yourselves happy and free.

"But you are not. The spirit of revolution lives in the land. May it linger about you day and night, may it terrorize you with silent contempt. May beads of terror stand on the brows of you modern robbers. May terror follow your proud ladies into their inmost privacy. May it turn from you, prince, the people whom you believed to be loyal.

"And may it tear from your shoulders the crimson robe of state that you bought with blood!"

"Cease, daring woman!" cried the prince, as he drew his sword. "What care I? I'll kill you, you brazen ranter. But no, death by the sword is much too good. I will kill you by inches in the darkest underground cell, where you shall slowly starve to death. Come on, ye slaves! Drag that woman away!"

"Thus spake the ruler with words of hatred and contempt, while the rich courtiers surrounding him rejoiced.

"But nobody stirred, and a strong, handsome youth, with a dagger in his hand, stepped from the midst of the silent slaves.

"Advancing quickly, he liberated her, and cried aloud:

"'As for you, O! Prince, know that this woman speaks the truth. We have had enough of your tyranny. We also are of a noble race. Too long have we foolishly wasted our blood in your service. You scoundrels, now defend yourselves if you are not cowards!'

"How the ladies of the rich screamed and the proud men turned pale. Some prepared for battle, while others cowardly fled.

"A hot battle, a wild battle, another dance—a dance of swords.

"The slaves won their first fresh wreath of victory.

"False nobility tumbled down, the ruler fell and thus ended Mammon's reign of terror.

"Liberty unchained makes all mankind happy and equal. FRITZ OERTER.

BERKMAN ALWAYS AN AGITATOR.

Miss Goldman Especially Advanced in Her Views as to Marriage.

A Ludlow street Russian who knew Berkman in Russia, and who was intimately acquainted with his movements and those of Emma Goldman in this country, furnished yesterday some interesting new details of their lives.

"I lived as a boy in the same town with Berkman in Russia," he said. "This was Kowno. Berkman was born in St. Petersburg, but he removed early in life to Kowno, where I met him, and we attended school together. He was an unruly pupil, difficult to manage, and was frequently involved in trouble with the teachers. He was even when fifteen years old an avowed disbeliever in a God.

"Berkman remained at this school three years and then entered a higher school, the Gymnasium. By this time he was known among all the pupils as a Nihilist conspirator. He prepared Nihilistic literature, and stole type from the school supplies to print the matter. He belonged to an association of Nihilists known as "Narodnaya Wollia," whose members planned the scheme that resulted in the assassination of Czar Alexander II. He also published a paper advocating Nihilistic doctrines, called the Narodnaya Wollia.

"It was while he and his fellow-conspirators were with great secrecy conducting the affairs of the society and the paper that a copy of the paper was found in his possession by the principal of the Gymnasium. He told a policeman, and Berkman was arrested.

When Baby was sick, we gave her Castoria.
When she was a Child, she cried for Castoria.
When she became Miss, she clung to Castoria.
When she had Children, she gave them Castoria.

H-O Means Hornby's Oats NOTHING MORE

Imitations abound. The genuine is sold only in two pound packages and has the big H-O on the wrapper.

WEAK MEN

BEST COPY AVAILABLE

881014020

The Emma Goldman Papers

Who Will Thrash Mr. Most? / Emma Goldman. – p. 3 ; 43 cm. In The World. –(July 29, 1892).

Obtained from the University of California, Berkeley. Institutional Location: Doe Library.

service. Should it not smile to every right-thinking man that, in view of all these cruel outrages against the working people, such monsters should be wiped out? Yes, they must be exterminated in order that the people may enjoy the full enjoyment of the fruits of their labor. They must be exterminated wherever they show themselves and with them all the institutions of rule and exploitation of men by men. The people bleeding from a thousand wounds cry out on hearing the shots from Pittsburg and exclaim "Hail, Brutus!"

Emma Goldman has a signed article on John Most, calling him despicable and cowardly names. Most in his old age appears to be denounced alike by his former associates and the general public, but he says he does not mind it, and next week, in his Freiheit, he will expose these "tools of the spy Peukert."

This is what Peukert's friend, Miss Goldman, thinks of Most:

For many years a man has been successful in posing as a hero and martyr, committing the biggest rascalities and slanders to ruin the best workers in the movement. All this is under the cloak of Anarchism, and not a hand raised to tear the mask from the face of this man. The man of whom I speak here is John Most, the Anarchist leader, the man who dares to compare himself with Kropotkine and Perowskaya and other heroes of our movement.

Comrades and friends, in taking up my pen it is for the purpose of placing this man, Most, in the right light. My motive is not that of hatred (for, out of regard for the interest of the movement, I never opposed Most) but an indignation at the stand this blackguard has taken against our comrade Berkman. It is the indignation which every honest workingman must feel over the outrageous, slanderous conduct of this informer and demagogue.

I suppose our comrades will have read the interview Most had with a reporter of the EVENING WORLD, and I ask what could induce a man to act in so mean and contemptible manner. It could only be the vilest personal hatred and envy, and it is fear that makes this man speak in this manner. Most is cowardly—yes, one of the biggest cowards, as every one who is slightly acquainted with him knows.

I, who, I am sorry to say, have learned to know him only too well, and have studied thoroughly every shade of his character, am free to say that Most is a most contemptible coward, a liar, a dissimulator and at the same time a washrag. All his so-called heroic deeds did not originate from his love for the cause or devotion to principle. Oh, no. His was prompted entirely by personal and selfish motives. It was the vilest sort of vanity that forced him to advocate his principles. What great deeds has Most ever done? He has spent a few years in prison, where in fact he had an easy time. The workingmen gave their last cent so that this parasite should not be in want, but when there was occasion for deeds to be done or to aid others he showed himself cowardly and contemptible.

I will give a few illustrations. The meeting in Union Square on May 1 he did not attend out of fear, although he appealed to the comrades weeks before to attend the demonstration. I further mention the meeting in Philadelphia at which he feared to speak because Comrade Hoffman was arrested shortly before that, and the present action in regard to Berkman is the most monstrous and cowardly of all.

Out of fear and personal hatred he spreads lies about Comrade Berkman. Instead of utilizing Berkman's deed to further our propaganda he endeavors to smirch his character and uses all methods, no matter how wicked, to injure him. Among other things he told the reporter that Berkman was a poor workman, although he has assured me and others hundreds of times that Berkman was a very clever and industrious workman. The reason for this lie because Berkman freely spoke his opinions and told Most that he was anything but an Anarchist, and because he disclosed the corruption existing in the Freiheit office he was discharged in the middle of July, 1891, under a promise that he would employ him soon again.

Comrades, if there is a spark of self-esteem left in you, if you do not identify yourselves with the rascalities of this charlatan, you will remember these words. It is you who support him and furnish him the means to lead this luxurious life. Through your sweat and your blood he has made himself prominent. Often has he said he would rather be a Carl Schurz than John Most.

Not enough has been said. It would take volumes to describe his miserable deeds.

His cry is "The police are after him," and a greater disgrace could not befall Berkman than Most to be identified with him. Berkman would never take him into his confidence because he knew Most to be a gossip. Most has already often prevented comrades from performing valiant deeds. The fanatic Russian people have discovered the base character of Alexander III., and it is to be hoped that the enlightened German comrades will finally see the miserable doings of John Most. So long as we cherish demagogues of this kind, who become great through us and our people, the movement will be checked and the ruling classes will triumph. Words do no good with such a fellow, a good thrashing would perhaps not change this man, but it might shut up his mouth.

EMMA GOLDMAN.

AT ANARCHY'S HOTBED.

The Autonomists Still at Large, and in Savage, Sullen Mood.

Neither unpleasant notoriety nor warm weather had any effect upon the Fifth street band of Anarchists yesterday. Emma Goldman, the so-called wife of Berkman, the assailant of H. C. Frick, and the acknowledged queen of the Autonomists, spent the day in Zum Groben Michel's dingy beer saloon at 209 Fifth street, and was at home, perfectly at home, to all callers. "Tough Mike," as he would be named in English, and very appropriately, too, was as gruff and surly as usual. As for the other three unkempt law-haters Timmerman, Derter and Puckert, they smoked cigarettes and chattered away in German, as if there were no such irritating and ticklish things as dollar marks and dynamite pellets.

Down the street, a block away, where live Berkman and his wife, Timmerman and Mrs. Mollick, the Anarchistic wife of the Long Branch suspect, it was different only in degree of hilarity that marked the conduct of all. The newly discovered fact that No. 3140 Fifth street was the abiding place of bloodthirsty dynamiters and the hatchery of all sorts of plots had given the neighborhood something to talk about. Every tenant in the big flat-house had a visitor and every time a new visitor came he or she was watched by the others in hopes that the newcomer might be no officer of the law or a fat-whiskered ogre with a string of bombs dangling from his belt.

There was no attempt at secrecy. The firemen next door laughed and joked with the policeman who passed by, and even the postman dallied a few moments to talk over the situation with the occupants of the parlor floor. Jolly Mrs. Walsh, the caretaker, who was nearly scared out of her wits the day before by reading the newspaper accounts of her undesirable tenants, was just having a picnic. She even went so far as to act as interpreter for Mrs. Mollick. But an interpreter was hardly needed. Mrs. Mollick had very little to say.

If she or Miss Goldman had thought of vacating the apartments it was off until yesterday morning, when the agent of the landlord gave notice that they must leave the 1st of August. The rooms were rather disorderly Anarchy, but every question that was put to the Queen of the hour was digested quickly by Peukert, who was ready to intercept her if she started to reply indiscreetly. When Miss Goldman ended further conversation by turning her back on her questioner, she began talking to Peukert in German. The editor of Der Anarchist said but little in reply and Emma left her seat and went to her home.

In the mean time business with Zum Groben Michel was rushing in every sense of the word. One of the habitues of his place is something of an artist, and at Michel's request he had sketched a likeness of THE WORLD reporter who had visited the place Wednesday. The likeness was stuck conspicuously on the mirror behind the bar, and to all inquiries the brawny fellow explained that the original of that picture was down on the books for a thorough thumping at sight.

The others in the room guffawed like a gang of stage brigands at this remark and signified their willingness to see that the job was well done. That made big Mike smile for the first time during the day. It was a particularly ill mistake the sign painter made when he fixed up the inscription on the windows of the saloon. Herr Michel ordered "Zum Graden Michel," or, "kept by Michael the Honest," but the painter wrote it "Groben," and thus saddled on Mike the soubriquet of "Tough," something that no one would have wittingly done for a crisp $100 bill.

When Emma Goldman reached her home the first question she asked Mrs. Mollick was whether she had obtained bail for her husband. The answer was no, and then Emma left for the beer saloon again. Five minutes after she had been seen to depart Timmerman, with true Anarchistic regard for truth, declared and vowed that she had not been home that afternoon. For a young man this Timmerman is a marvel. He can inhale a question and answer it like a born Yankee, and tell a falsehood with the grace of a cockney sneak-thief. His regard for that peak-faced Miss Goldman amounts almost to reverence.

E. Michaelis & Son, real-estate agents at No. 88 Second avenue, said yesterday afternoon that they found the Anarchists very undesirable tenants, and would take immediate steps to get them out of the house at No. 340 Fifth street.

It was said at Police Headquarters that neither Mrs. Mollick nor Emma Goldman would be arrested unless there were further developments.

LAWYERS AFTER O'MARA.

The Arrest of Police Captain Layton Does Not Fully Satisfy Them.

[SPECIAL TO THE WORLD.]

LONG BRANCH, July 28.—Capt. James Layton, Chief of the Long Branch Police Department, who was arrested late last night for his connection with the alleged kidnapping of Frank Mollick, was seen this morning, but refused to talk at length on the subject. He said to a WORLD reporter, however, that he was somewhat astonished last night when arrested, as it was entirely unexpected.

"I have not troubled myself with the case," he said, "and it is perfectly immaterial to me what action Lawyers Fay and Wilson may take."

Judge Van Doren, who issued the warrant for Capt. Layton's arrest, was sitting in the room while he was talking, and when the Captain left, a few minutes afterwards, spoke to the reporter about the case. Said he: "I understand that Chief Justice Beasley is very angry over Chief O'Mara's action. He has, I hear, charged him with kidnapping and said that the Pittsburg man should be arrested. I have no doubt that the proceedings of Chief O'Mara were a little unusual for an officer, but I hardly see how he can be charged with the offense of kidnapping Mollick."

HENRY BAUER.

Lawyer Thomas P. Fay, of Long Branch, said this morning that an appeal would be made either to-day or to-morrow to Gov. Abbett, of New Jersey, and that every step would be taken to have Chief O'Mara and Capt. Layton punished. Civil suits for damages, the two lawyers say, will also be begun against the police officers.

Capt. Layton is well known in and around Long Branch, and the news of his arrest, published exclusively in THE WORLD, evoked considerable astonishment. He has always been an officer of integrity and worth, and the report of his alleged bookmaking from virtue has caused no end of talk. To-day it is an absorbing topic of conversation in Monmouth county.

F. J. Heidl, Mollick's late employer, says Mollick are in the main untrue. "Mollick," he said, "never received a high quantity of letters, despite all reports to the contrary, and what letters or telegrams he did receive were but carefully guarded. Why, that telegram reading: 'Come as soon as possible. Nothing dangerous,' which Miss Goldman sent, and the police are making such a fuss over, he showed me as soon as it was received. He wished me to translate it for him, and when we understood its wording exclaimed, 'My wife has been sick for some time. I must go to her at once.' He left immediately after the receipt of the telegram for New York, but remained away only a short time. That Mollick is guilty of complicity in a plot of such magnitude seems to me highly preposterous."

and balance in the merry dance. How lightly they jump about, and yet, but a moment before they were regaling at a sumptuous feast. These know not the meaning of sorrow and distress, hunger and poverty.

"The army of slaves stands not far away. Bitterly they gaze upon the gay scene before them. They forsooth are to protect the wretches who have enslaved them!

"If the happy dancers knew what thoughts are brewing in the minds of their slaves, if they realized the insulted pride of manhood that swelled their breasts, if they cared to read the hatred and fierce wrath that blazed from their eyes, less joyful would be the dance, and these proud homes would often tremble.

"If they but knew it, they are dancing upon a live, glowing volcano, which may burst forth and consume all the ill-fated mortals who dwell upon its crest. Suddenly the music stops. Not a murmur stirs the air as the sovereign rises and thus in a loud voice doth speak:

"'Quiet are the times, and firmly are we seated on our throne (for this, thanks to our gods), although the thunder of rebellion roars in our neighbors' lands.

"'The sacred altar which made us powerful and revered still stands firm. Capital and monarchic power yet command respect. The workingman does his duty, and the miner daily descends the shaft. The police and army vigilantly guard the laws. As for the fiends who sneak about the land to stir up my poor people, we will catch them, persecute them, and by main strength force them to silence.

"'A demon of this kind, a devil in female garb, fell into the hands of my lackeys and was seized. It is my humor to-day that I sit in judgment upon her. What, ho! ye rogues, come bring her shackled before me!'

"Thus spoke the prince. A murmur of applause ripples over the courtiers, who wait expectant of the fun to come. A queenly maiden, tall and proud, is led in amid the jeers of the assembled courtiers.

"No diadem adorns her brow, yet plainly does she bear the stamp of true nobility. There she stands, upheld by her courage and pride—the people's wife in Mammon's temple. Her arms are chained together, but her eyes, in unrestrained freedom, roam about the hall and boldly meet those of the supporters of tyranny. A painful silence prevails among the multitude who are there to seek revenge. All listen to her as she speaks in clarion tones:

"'You pinion me and imagine that you tie genius when you only tie the body—the genius of liberty which starts the fire in the hearts of the poor people. O ye fools! your power is little; you can make me suffer, you can kill me, but a hundred others will take my place and talk boldly to the people. And if you pile up our bodies mountains high and spill our blood in streams, still will the people unterrified gain their liberty with the courage of lions.

"'Governed by selfishness, caring only for your advantage, enemy of every noble feeling, bitterly despising the poor and weak, you have gathered for your own use the treasures of this world which were stored here for everybody, and us you have enchained.

"'No means are too bad for you to use in maintaining your power. You not only murder, but murder by wholesale, and fight with horrible prowess.

"'You rich, are the cause of all misery and sorrow. You take pleasure for yourselves in abundance, while to us you leave nothing but suffering. The youth's strength and the maiden's fresh, rosy cheeks soon disappear in your service in the factory.

"'You spare not even the little child yet in its infancy.

"'You steal the last drop of blood from the people, although they work your mills.

"'See not you those pale girls wandering through the streets at nighttime? You leave them nothing but the choice either to sell themselves or starve.

"'And does not the growing army of the proletariat frighten you?

"'Woe unto you when sick of your power they breaks into your palaces. You have violated the eternal laws of nature, and you have placed your senseless work in their stead.'

"A murmur is heard in the distance. It grows and grows, as the prisoner continues fearlessly and forcefully.

"'While your surroundings are a desert, you enjoy life on a blooming oasis. The power upon which you built hopes is nothing but a hollow phrase. Your Christianity is a lie, and your pity is nothing but flattery. While you enslave thousands you deem yourselves happy and free.

"'But you are not. The spirit of revolution lives in the land. May it linger about you near and high, may it terrorize you with silent contempt. May beads of terror stand on the brows of you modern robbers. May terror follow your proud ladies into their inmost privacy. May it turn from you, prince, the people whom you believed to be loyal.

"'And may it tear from your shoulders the crimson robe of state that you bought with blood!'

"'Cease, daring woman!' cried the prince, as he drew his sword. "What care I? I'll kill you, you brazen ranter. But no, death by the sword is much too good. I will kill you by inches in the darkest underground cell, where you shall slowly starve to death. Come on, ye slaves! Drag that woman away!'

"Thus spake the ruler with words of hatred and contempt, while the rich courtiers surrounding him rejoiced.

"But nobody stirred, and a strong, handsome youth, with a dagger in his hand, stepped from the midst of the silent slaves.

"Advancing quickly, he liberated her, and cried aloud:

"'As for you, O! prince, know that this woman speaks the truth. We have had enough of your tyranny. We also are of a noble race. Too long have we foolishly wasted our blood in your service. You scoundrels, now defend yourselves if you are not cowards!'

"Now the ladies of the rich screamed and the proud men turned pale. Some prepared for battle, while others cowardly fled.

"A hot battle, a wild battle, another dance—

"The slaves won their first fresh wreath of victory.

"False nobility tumbled down, the ruler fell and thus ended Mammon's reign of terror.

"Liberty unchained makes all mankind happy and equal. FATTE OMARA.

BERKMAN ALWAYS AN AGITATOR.

Miss Goldman Especially Advanced in Her Views as to Marriage.

A Ludlow street Russian who knew Berkman in Russia, and who was intimately acquainted with his movements and those of Emma Goldman in this country, furnished yesterday

Berkman's education in the gymnasium was regarded as a bright scholar, studied Russian, German, French, Greek. The Stories pen-book tells dull or stupid pupil are absolutely [illegible]. After the discovery of his Nihilistic [illegible] was publicly expelled from the Gymnasium in the presence of some three hundred [illegible].

"At this time a Russian Nihilist, [illegible] Jacobovitch, the author of revolutionary poems, went from St. Petersburg to Kovno to confer with Berkman and other Nihilists. Jacobovitch was a member of the Executive Committee of the Narodnaya Wollia Society. He organized, with Berkman's assistance, a state chamber of the order in Kovno, and Berkman became its leader. This man Jacobovitch was arrested as one of the leading Kovno conspirators and was hanged in St. Petersburg a short time afterwards.

"It was in 1887 or early in 1888 that Berkman left Kovno for this country, and arrived here about three years ago and upon going to an Anarchist meeting at No. 58 Orchard street of the Pioneers of Liberty I found Berkman there taking an active part in the proceedings. We renewed our acquaintance and Berkman and I attended many meetings together. He was a sworn enemy of Most and was recognized as an individual Communist or Autonomist. I believe that he was largely influenced by Anarchist Joseph Baronieff in changing from Socialism to Anarchism.

"At this time Berkman was living with Miss Emma Goldman, as his wife. Young Aronstamm also lived with the girl at the same time, she being what the Anarchists call a 'community wife' to both of them. They lived in Forsyth street, and I paid them a couple of visits at Berkman's invitation. I frequently talked with her and found that she was an Anarchist of the most radical type. She was an enthusiast on the subject and spoke her sentiments openly, but I never heard her refer to any special conspiracy or plot with which she was associated with Berkman. She earned money as a seamstress and in other ways, and kept Berkman pretty liberally supplied with funds.

"It was during the time that I was on visiting terms with them that I attended a lecture on marriage which Miss Goldman delivered in American Star Hall, No. 105 East Broadway. Berkman escorted her to the hall and there was a large audience. She advanced the idea that women had a perfect right to live with a 'community' of husbands; that such was in fact their duty as well as their pleasure. She also believed that men had the same right to have a 'community' of wives. At one point in her address many of the women in the hall put their handkerchiefs to their faces and blushed and several of them rose from their seats and left the hall. This did not appear to disconcert the speaker at all and she continued to express her opinions at length. Some of the audience applauded her bold utterances.

"Miss Goldman, I am told, practised what she preached, and her own social life was an exemplification of the sincerity of her radical views. Soon after this lecture I lost sight of Berkman and Miss Goldman and only occasionally heard of them as agitators in the cause of communistic anarchism."

ALL EYES ON HOMESTEAD.

Carnegie's Agents Directing All Their Batteries at the Principal Mills.

[SPECIAL TO THE WORLD.]

PITTSBURG, Pa., July 28.—There is little change in the strike situation at the mills of the Carnegie Company in this city, Duquesne and Beaver Falls, and the locked-out workmen are beginning to realize that the big steel firm are making all their efforts at Homestead. There is no doubt but that the firm expects the settlement of the difficulties at the Homestead mills to end all the strikes elsewhere.

The Carnegie officials will, however, before long present to the strikers at Beaver Falls and at the Union Mills a new scale of wages. The rate of pay will be practically the same as under the Amalgamated Association agreement with the company, but that organization will not be recognized by the company. The contracts, if made, are to be made with each man individually, and will not expire until Jan. 1, 1894. The scale has not been completed, but will be in book form in a few days. The finishers will profit by the new arrangement.

Pattison and Arbitration.

Dr. John C. Wyman, of the Humanitarian League, of Brooklyn, has received from Gov. Pattison of Pennsylvania the following answer to the appeal for arbitration in the Homestead troubles at the Carnegie mills:

COMMONWEALTH OF PENNSYLVANIA,
EXECUTIVE CHAMBER,
HARRISBURG, July 24, 1892.

Dr. John C. Wyman,

MY DEAR SIR: The Governor directs me to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 21st inst., and to thank you for the kindly interest you have taken in the subject matter thereof. He has noted your suggestions and will be pleased to give them due and careful consideration.

Very respectfully,
H. K. [illegible]
Private Secretary.

For Hot Weather Cooking

YOU SHOULD USE A NON-[illegible] SHORTENING AND [illegible] MATERIAL.

Cottolene

6

BEST COPY AVAILABLE

881017007

The Emma Goldman Papers

Applaud Berkman / [Emma] Goldman.– p. 2 ; 28 cm. In The New York Times. –(July 29, 1892).

Obtained from the University of California, Berkeley. Institutional Location: Doe Library

of the dozen or more teams kept as relays on Thirteenth Street. The company's stable bosses said that by the great care exercised only a few horses had died.

The animals, after being taken to the stables, rubbed down, and bathed, seemed little refreshed when starting out on another trip. They came out of the stalls with no show of life, exhibiting just about as much energy as have many men during these wilting days.

Between 150 and 200 horses died in this city on Wednesday and yesterday. Most of these belonged to private owners, and were removed by the city contractors.

The ambulance of the American Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals was kept on the jump day and night. In thirty-six hours twenty-five horses which had been overcome in the street were cared for. At 5 o'clock yesterday six orders on the books could not be attended to at once because of the number of calls. The Superintendent said that in all his experience he had never known the heat to have such telling effects upon horses and other animals. When horses were overcome, he said, the best treatment was at once to strip off the harness, bathe the animal's head with cold water, and administer a strong tonic. In most cases it was preferable to let the horse lie out of doors, for the air is nearly all stables was stifling.

The society has not made an arrest this week for cruelty to the poor beasts about town. The Superintendent said this fact spoke well for the humanity of the drivers, who, for the most part, showed much more consideration for the horses than they did some years ago.

Attempt to Wreck a Train.

A bold attempt to wreck a train on the Long Island Railroad between Whitestone and College Point was made last evening. The train due at Whitestone at 9 o'clock had just rounded a curve about a mile west of the station when the engineer saw in the light of the rays of the headlight a large rock lying in the middle of the track. He immediately reversed the engine and succeeded in slowing up sufficiently so that when the cowcatcher struck the rock, the weight of which was nearly 500 pounds, it was sent spinning ahead. The only harm done was a slight damage to the cowcatcher. The passengers were badly frightened. There is no doubt entertained but that the outrage was the work of train wreckers. This is the second attempt to wreck the same train made within a week. There is no clue to the perpetrators.

A Plucky Officer.

Policeman William J. Peterman of the Sixth Precinct was called last night to the house 140 Elm Street to arrest Cornelius Shea, who had assaulted his mother. When he entered the room on the third floor of the house, Shea jumped out of the window upon the roof of a two-story extension.

The officer jumped after him, and in doing so sustained his left ankle. He succeeded, however, in capturing Shea, and held him until assistance arrived. The officer was taken to the Chambers Street Hospital.

A Candidate for Governor.

Gorham, N. H., July 28.—Congressman McKinney (Dem.) of Manchester has announced to friends that he has entered the field as a candidate for the Democratic nomination for Governor.

superintendent and the prisoner when they alighted from the train. Mollick was taken to the Central Police Station, in Oak Alley, and was locked in a cell next to that occupied by his fellow-Anarchist Bauer. Neither, however, was aware of the close proximity of the other.

The Superintendent was shown the Long Branch dispatch announcing the arrest of Chief Leyton of that town for permitting Mollick to leave the State without process of law. O'Mera laughed and observed: "I don't see what objection can be made when Mollick himself left the State of his own volition. He signed the paper waiving extradition without coercion and came along willingly. I wanted to make information against him, but Chief Layton said, 'Oh, take him along, he has practically surrendered himself.' The only objection or opposition he made at any time was when he found on arriving at the station at Long Branch that his wife was not there. On the train I left him to his own devices. He was in the smoking car most of the time, and he has not been handcuffed since his arrest.

When the Chief was questioned about Mollick's complicity he said: "Mollick denies having had anything to do with Berkmann. He admits that he sent Berkmann money. He declares he has not seen Berkmann since last April, and is unable to understand how Berkmann discovered where he lived. The Chief said that the so-called Philadelphia Anarchists who have been mentioned in the case said that they had refused to have anything to do with Berkmann because they regarded him as a Nihilist, while they were Socialists. Berkmann went to one of their meetings in Philadelphia and gave expression to some of his theories, and was promptly ejected. The Chief said in conclusion that the letters he had found in Mollick's room were written in German, and had been left in New-York for translation. He also expressed his belief that Herr Most was not involved in the scheme to assassinate Mr. Frick, because of his distrust for Berkmann. Mollick will remain in jail until September, when the Grand Jury will meet.

APPLAUD BERKMANN.

NEW-YORK ANARCHISTS MAKE LOTS OF RABID TALK.

Miss Goldmann, the Anarchist, was at the saloon "Zum Grobea Michel" yesterday drinking beer and talking with her Anarchistic associates. She declared that she wished to have nothing to do with newspapers or with reporters, and refused to talk.

In yesterday's issue of Der Anarchist she had a letter bitterly denouncing John Most, her quondam friend and teacher, as a liar, a coward, and an all-around rascal and good-for-nothing. She especially denounced his unfavorable criticism of Berkmann.

Der Anarchist also published an editorial article approving of the attempted assassination of Mr. Frick, and counseling the extermination of all such men, in which it said:

"A millionaire robber like Frick is more purposeful and more obnoxious in this country than any of the overfed dressers of the Old World. He may pile up crimes upon crimes, and there is no power to bring him to [illegible] Lawmakers and judges [illegible] are [illegible] to every right-thinking mind [illegible] that, in view of all these crimes against the working people, such monsters ought to be [illegible]

"For, such men must be annihilated in order that the people may be saved. In the free and full enjoyment of the fruits of their labor, they will make themselves [illegible] [illegible] [illegible]

881017007

The Emma Goldman Papers

Applaud Berkman / [Emma] Goldman.– p. 2 ; 28 cm. In The New York Times. –(July 29, 1892).

Obtained from the University of California, Berkeley. Institutional Location: Doe Library.

Newburg all passengers [illegible] next and humid day [illegible] very not during the day as passed in the Columbia.

FATALITIES IN NEW-JERSEY.

Deaths due to heat were reported from numerous New-Jersey towns and cities, including Jersey City, Trenton, Union, and Newark. In the latter city the heat killed five persons.

Work was stopped in Graham & Co.'s brick yards at Bordentown because of the heat, the temperature in the clay banks being 125°.

COOLER IN NEW-ENGLAND.

An east wind began to blow yesterday in Boston, driving the mercury down to 72½° at 2 P. M., from 93° marked the day before at the same hour. Two fatal cases of prostration were reported there yesterday morning.

It was one degree hotter at Worcester yesterday than the day before, and the humidity was greater. A number of prostrations occurred. It was still growing hotter at Springfield, but a breeze was blowing.

Reports from Providence, Newport, and New Haven told of continued heat, but clearer air, with fresh winds. Hartford missed the wind, however, and the people in the street walked in a temperature of [illegible]. It was the hottest day known in Hartford since 1870, when nearly 300 persons were prostrated.

COOLING OFF IN THE WEST.

Seventeen fatal cases of sunstroke and eight prostrations were reported in Chicago yesterday up to 7 o'clock P. M. The heat was moderating rapidly at that hour.

At Winnipeg the mercury stood at 42°, and the weather was much cooler in Minneapolis and St. Paul. Five laborers died in Milwaukee yesterday and the day before of sunstroke, and there were about twenty prostrations. The thermometer ranged from 85° to 95°, but frequent showers cooled the air.

During a thunderstorm a picnic party took refuge under a tree on Rodney's Island, Wis. The tree was struck by lightning and three boys were killed.

There were thirteen prostrations from the heat in Cincinnati, two of which were fatal. The cases of sunstroke were fewer, but the patients were more severely affected. Many prostrations and one death occurred in West Bay City, Mich., where the thermometer ranged from 98° to 102° in the shade.

RAINS IN THE SOUTHWEST.

Rain fell on Wednesday night all over the State of Kansas, saving the corn crop, which had been in danger of destruction from the hot winds. Hundreds of acres of corn had begun to turn brown, but the timely rains will restore them to good condition. Much damage was done to the various crops by high winds in the northwestern part of the State. A fall of 20° in temperature followed the storm.

THUNDERSTORMS ON THE COAST.

A thunderstorm sent the mercury down in Baltimore yesterday, and a good wind blew all day. The thermometer rose into the nineties, and many prostrations were reported. Three deaths from the heat occurred in Wilmington, Del.

STILL HOT IN CANADA.

Great heat prevailed in Toronto, Ontario, yes-

STRIKER HELD FOR MURDER

JUDGE MAGEE REFUSES TO ADMIT CRITCHLOW TO BAIL.

WITNESSES SWEAR THAT THEY SAW HIM SHOOT FROM BEHIND THE BARRICADE—THE NEWS OF THE JUDGE'S DECISION CAUSES A SENSATION IN HOMESTEAD—CONSTABLES BUSY.

PITTSBURG, July 28.—One of the strikers, Sylvester Critchlow, has been held for murder in the first degree by Judge Magee. The offense is not bailable, and Critchlow will remain in jail until September, when the Quarter Sessions Court will open. This news created a sensation in Homestead, and led to a further exodus on the part of those strikers who participated in the riot, and who suspect that warrants have been issued for their arrest. Yesterday and today constables were searching Homestead for suspects with no success.

Up to this afternoon the general tone of the strikers has been one of confidence in their ability to avoid the charge of murder, on the ground that there were no witnesses outside of their own men, and that they were therefore perfectly secure. To-day, however, when Critchlow was arraigned before Judge Magee not more than a dozen persons were in court, so sanguine were the strikers that bail would be allowed. The Prosecuting Attorneys were present and Messrs. John F. Cox and W. J. Brennan for the prisoner.

J. M. Dixon, a clerk of the company, was called, and said that he was in the mill yard on the morning of July 6. He saw Critchlow between 8 and 9 o'clock in front of the office with a gun on his shoulder. He was marching toward the main gate. He could not say whether Critchlow went through the gate or not. He was within three feet of the witness. There were two or three persons with Critchlow. Witness said that there was a good deal of firing going on, but he was perfectly cool. The other men had no guns, but some had clubs. He said that the reason he was not excited was because he was a guardsman and had heard firing before.

H. H. Hervey, assistant paymaster of the company, was at the mill at 8 o'clock in the morning and saw Critchlow about 8:30 in the road in front of the office going toward the main gate. He had an army musket and was walking rapidly. He was the only man in the crowd who had a gun. There was firing going on at that time down where the barges were, and Critchlow was going toward that point.

Samuel Stewart, clerk in the company's mill, went up at 8:12 and saw the main gate open and about a dozen men there. All had clubs;

[illegible] all institutions of rule and exploitation of men by men. The people, shooting from a thousand [illegible] for the fatal shots from Pittsburg.—Mail [illegible]

Anarchist Timmermann, one of Miss Goldmann's friends and associates, says that Assassin Berkmann belonged to the autonomous group of Anarchists who believed that every member should take revenge for his own wrongs without consulting any one. They hold meetings, he said, but if any member wishes to kill a man he goes and kills him without consulting anybody else.

Timmermann says that if Anarchy prevailed no one would have to work more than two or three hours a day.

WORKMEN FOR HOMESTEAD.

A PARTY OF THIRTY-FIVE SENT FROM THIS CITY.

The train which left the Pennsylvania Station in Jersey City at 6 o'clock last evening for the West carried thirty-five workmen for the Carnegie Mills at Homestead. The morning papers of yesterday contained advertisements for blacksmiths, engineers, pipefitters, riveters, painters, bricklayers, and laborers, "to go out of the city," and applicants were told to apply at the New-York Employment Bureau, 736 Broadway. The bureau, which has a branch in Philadelphia at 928 Arch Street, is conducted by D. J. Cotter, whose son told a reporter of THE TIMES yesterday that he was requested two weeks ago by Manager Hoffman, the head of the Philadelphia branch of the Carnegie Company, to secure 200 first-class workmen of the class advertised for yesterday morning to go to Homestead.

Nearly all of the 200 men had already been engaged, Mr. Cotter said. Each man had been told where he was to go, and very few of them had manifested any trepidation. Not one of the accepted applicants had changed his mind when informed that his destination was to be Homestead.

The workmen who left last night were mostly riveters, and union men. Those who left on the 6 o'clock train were accompanied by J. Donovan, a Pittsburg employee of the Carnegie Company. Another party will leave to-day or to-morrow.

TROOPS STILL GOING HOME.

WHAT GEN. SNOWDEN SAYS OF THEIR WORK—THE EVICTED FAMILIES.

HOMESTEAD, Penn., July 28.—Gen. Snowden and the balance of his staff left for Philadelphia this afternoon. All the troops have gone except the Fifth, Fifteenth, and Sixteenth Regiments, four companies of the Tenth, the Sheridan Troop, and Battery B. Over 800 men are at work in the mills.

Before leaving Homestead Gen. Snowden said: "The troops have behaved admirably, the discipline being almost perfect. I am well satisfied with the showing. It is deplorable indeed, that a condition exists which necessitates the calling out of the State militia every two or three years to suppress troubles arising out of wage disputes. Some other

SHATTERED BY AN EXPLOSION.

CHEMICAL WORKS AT SPRINGFIELD DESTROYED—ONE MAN MISSING.

ORANGE, N. J., July 28.—The little town of Milburn and the surrounding country was shaken at 7:55 o'clock to-night by a terrific explosion, which shook the houses and ground and caused terror to the inhabitants for several miles about. The explosion occurred at the Celluloid Zapon Works at Springfield, a mile and a half south of Short Hills, and the concussion was heard as far away as the City of Newark.

The works where the explosion took place are in ruins, and the houses near the factory are wrecked, while for a radius of two miles there is hardly a pane of glass unbroken. One man, a negro, employed in the mill, is missing. His name cannot be learned.

The factory is situated in a hollow about a mile from Short Hills, and is operated by the Frederick Crane Chemical Company of New-York, which has an office at 14 Barclay Street. The company manufactured varnish and patent brass and silver lacquers.

The works included about twenty brick buildings, which were erected five years ago. Since then the works have been burned down three times. About twenty men are employed in the factory.

At 6 o'clock to-night all the men left the works, except the engineer, fireman, watchmen, and the colored workmen. The latter should have left, but lingered in factory No. 13 to finish some work. In this building was stored a quantity of guncotton, and it is probable that the negro in some manner exploded this.

A large crowd soon gathered about the factory, which caught fire immediately. A volunteer fire department was formed and an effort made to prevent the spreading of the flames. The laboratory next to factory No. 13, however, burned down. The firemen, fearing another explosion, were afraid to venture near the buildings.

A rumor was circulated that all four men in the works had perished, but at the heat of the excitement all were discovered in the crowd except the negro. At about 10:30 o'clock the fire burned itself out.

Two frame houses near the works, occupied by George Bessler and Justice of the Peace Georgh Mulford, were razed almost to the ground. Mrs. Bessler, who is ill, was prostrated by the shock, and her life is in danger. The Mulford family were bruised and cut to some extent, but no one was seriously injured. Mr. Mulford says that some time ago Superintendent Crane told him that no dangerous explosives were used in the works, and he threatens to sue for damages.

Pilcher & Manda's conservatories at Short Hills, which cover about five acres, were badly damaged, nearly three acres of glass being broken. The train due at Orange at 8:14 was passing Short Hills at the time, and the shock threw passengers from their seats.

ELIZABETH, N. J., July 28.—The terrific explosion of the Crane Chemical Works was distinctly felt in this city, nine miles distant. The Bowker fertilizing factory, one mile south of here, on Staten Island Sound, was so badly shaken that the walls cracked in several places, and even some of the big

For all diseases caused by a disordered liver or impure blood—Dyspepsia, Biliousness, the most stubborn Skin, Scalp and Blood affections, the "Discovery" is the only remedy so certain and effective that it can be guaranteed. If it doesn't benefit or cure, you have your money back.

It's not only the best, but it's the cheapest blood-purifier sold, no matter how many dozen are offered for a dollar.

With this, you pay only for the good you get.

KNUTE NELSON FOR GOVERNOR.

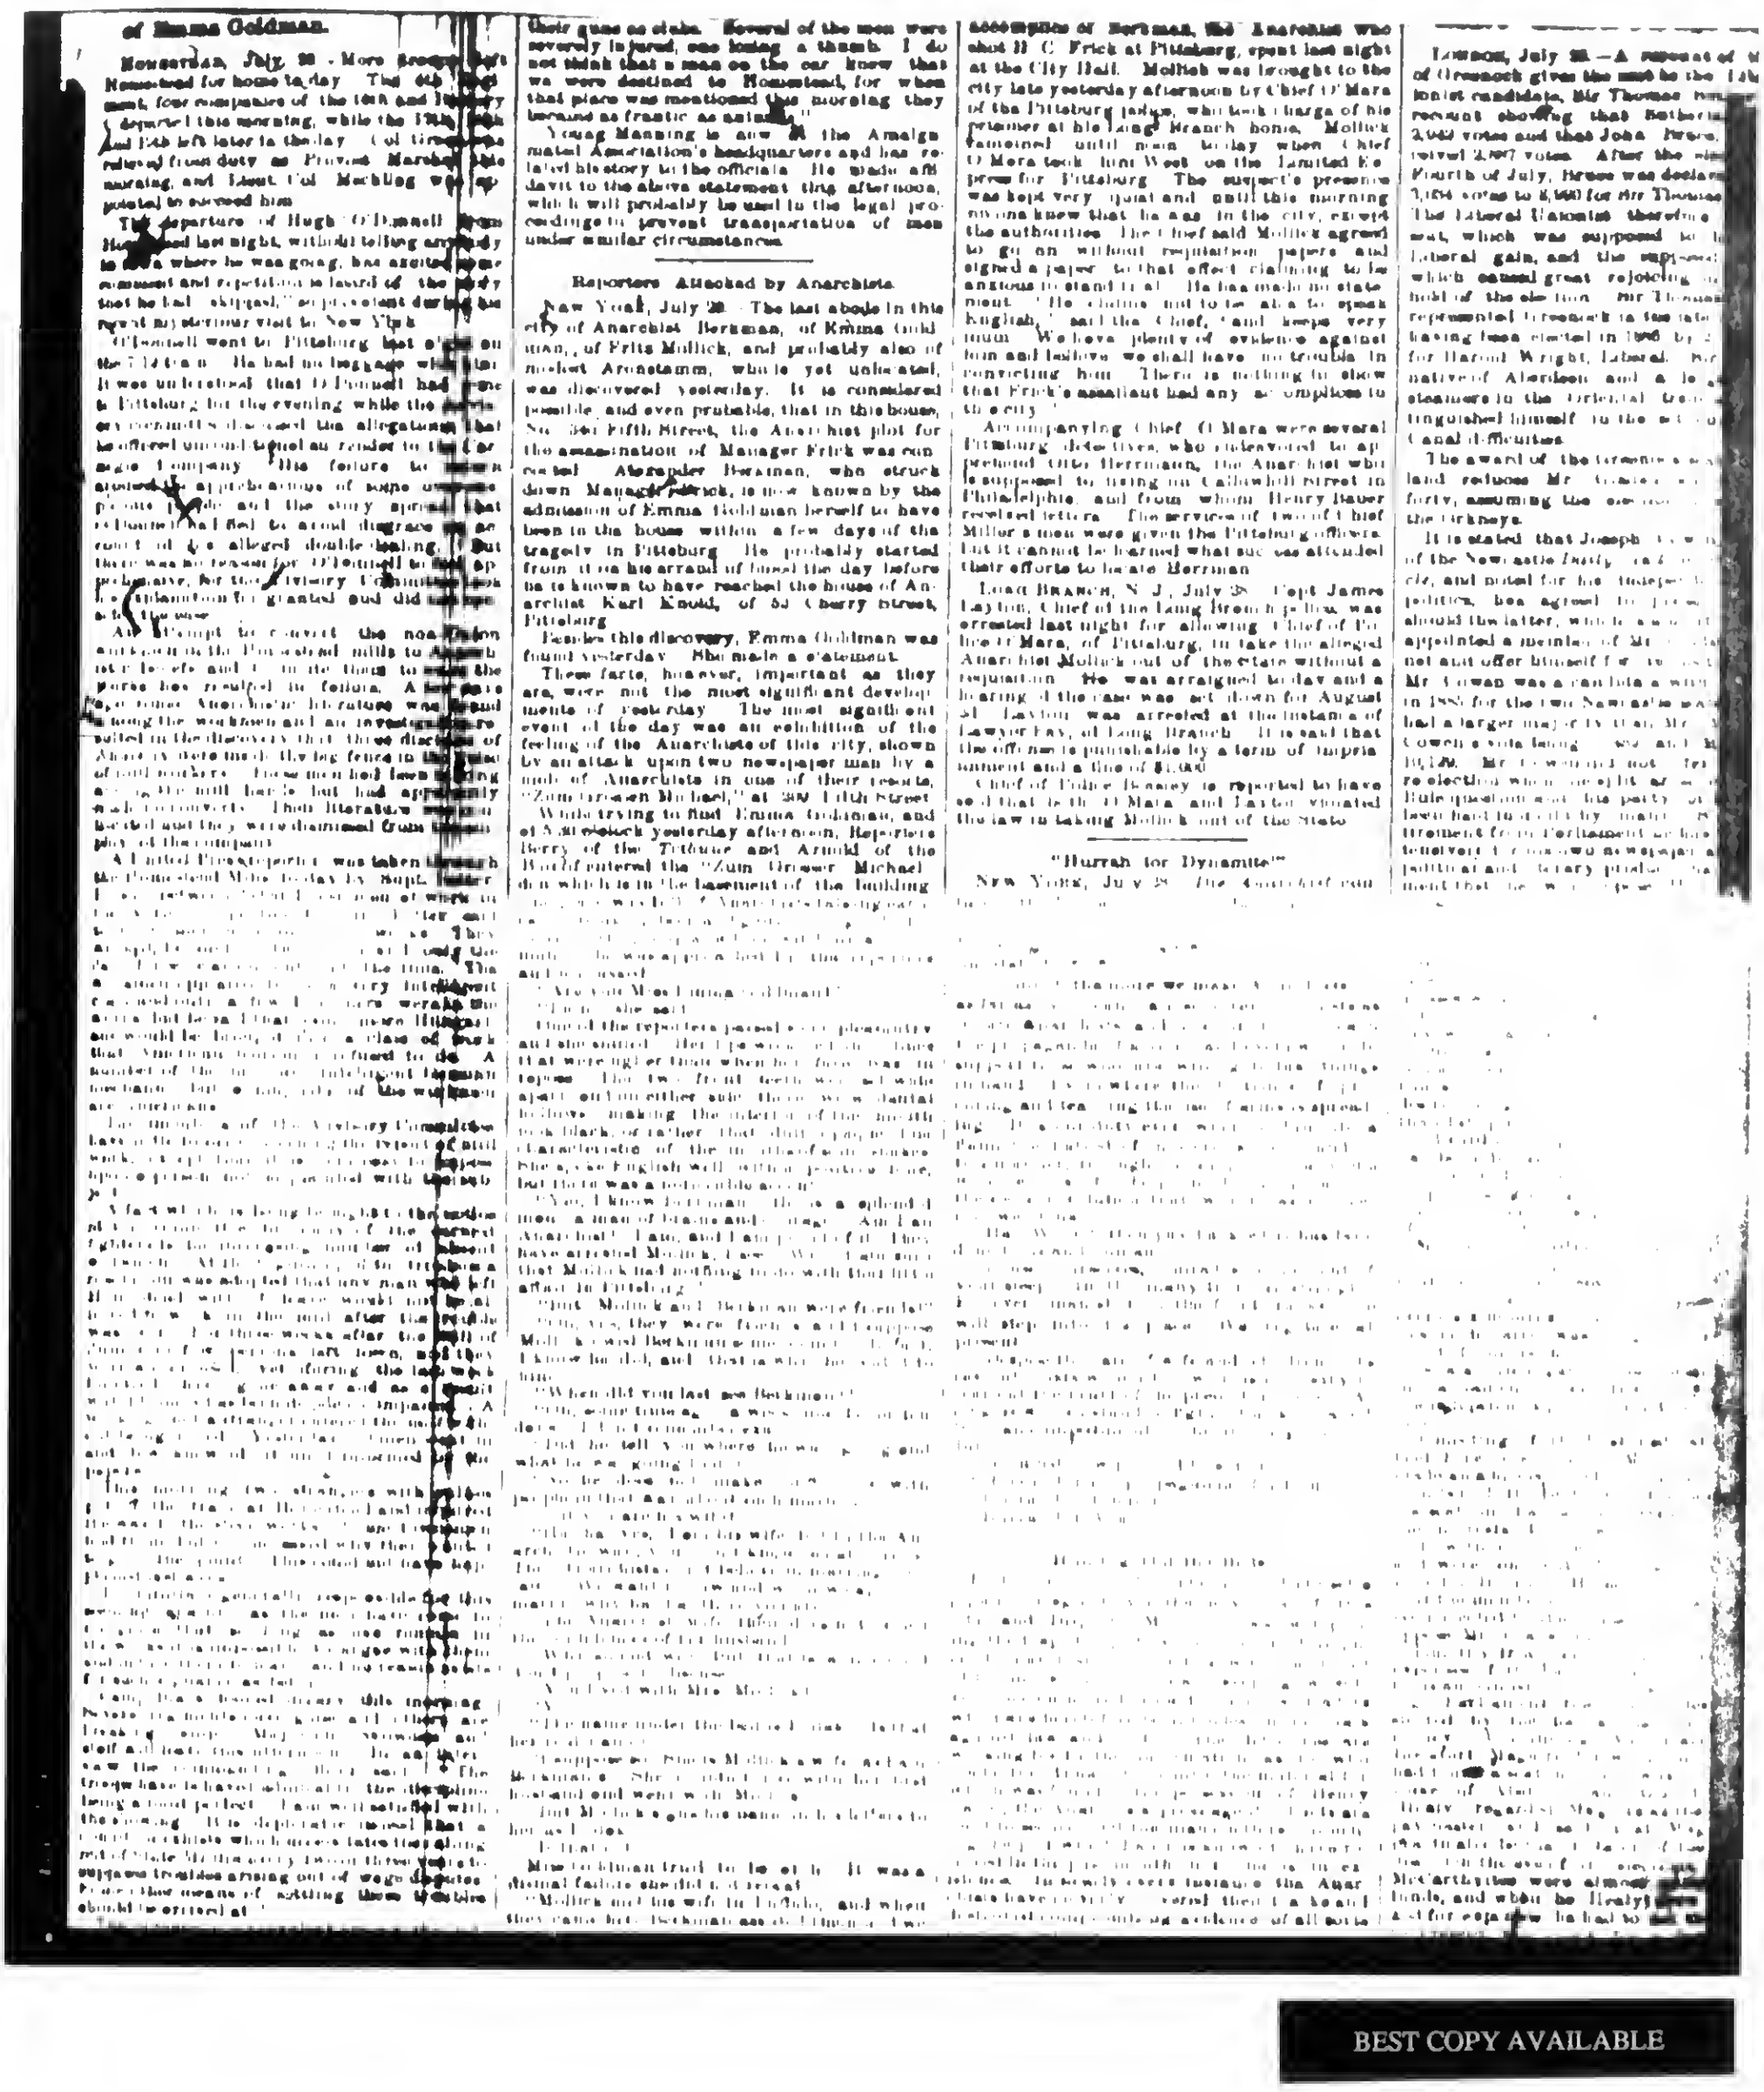
REPUBLICANS OF MINNESOTA NOMINATE A STATE TICKET.

ST. PAUL, July 28.—The convention was late in assembling, and even after being called to order at 2:30 was unable to get down to work at once, on account of the committees not having completed their work. William Henry Eustis of Minneapolis presented a resolution eulogizing James G. Blaine, sympathizing with him in his recent afflictions, and expressing the hope that he may again be called into service after having enjoyed a hard-earned rest. The resolution was adopted by a rising vote, with cheers.

A number of other favorite speakers, including Alden J. Blethen, Gov. Merriam, National Committeeman Evans, and others were called for and responded briefly. Finally, at 4:15, the Committee on Credentials reported, and the report was adopted. State Senator [illegible] presented a resolution pledging the [illegible] re-election of United States [illegible] resolution was greeted and [illegible] by a rising vote.

The Committee on Resolu[illegible] session till the afternoon, [illegible] under consideration being the [illegible] option. It was discussed [illegible] length, and finally the [illegible] not to mention that subj[illegible] form. Through its Chair[illegible] tions Committee reported, t[illegible] indorses the national platf[illegible] istration of President Harri[illegible] means to secure to every [illegible] ballot and a fair count [illegible] and future legislation.

BEST COPY AVAILABLE



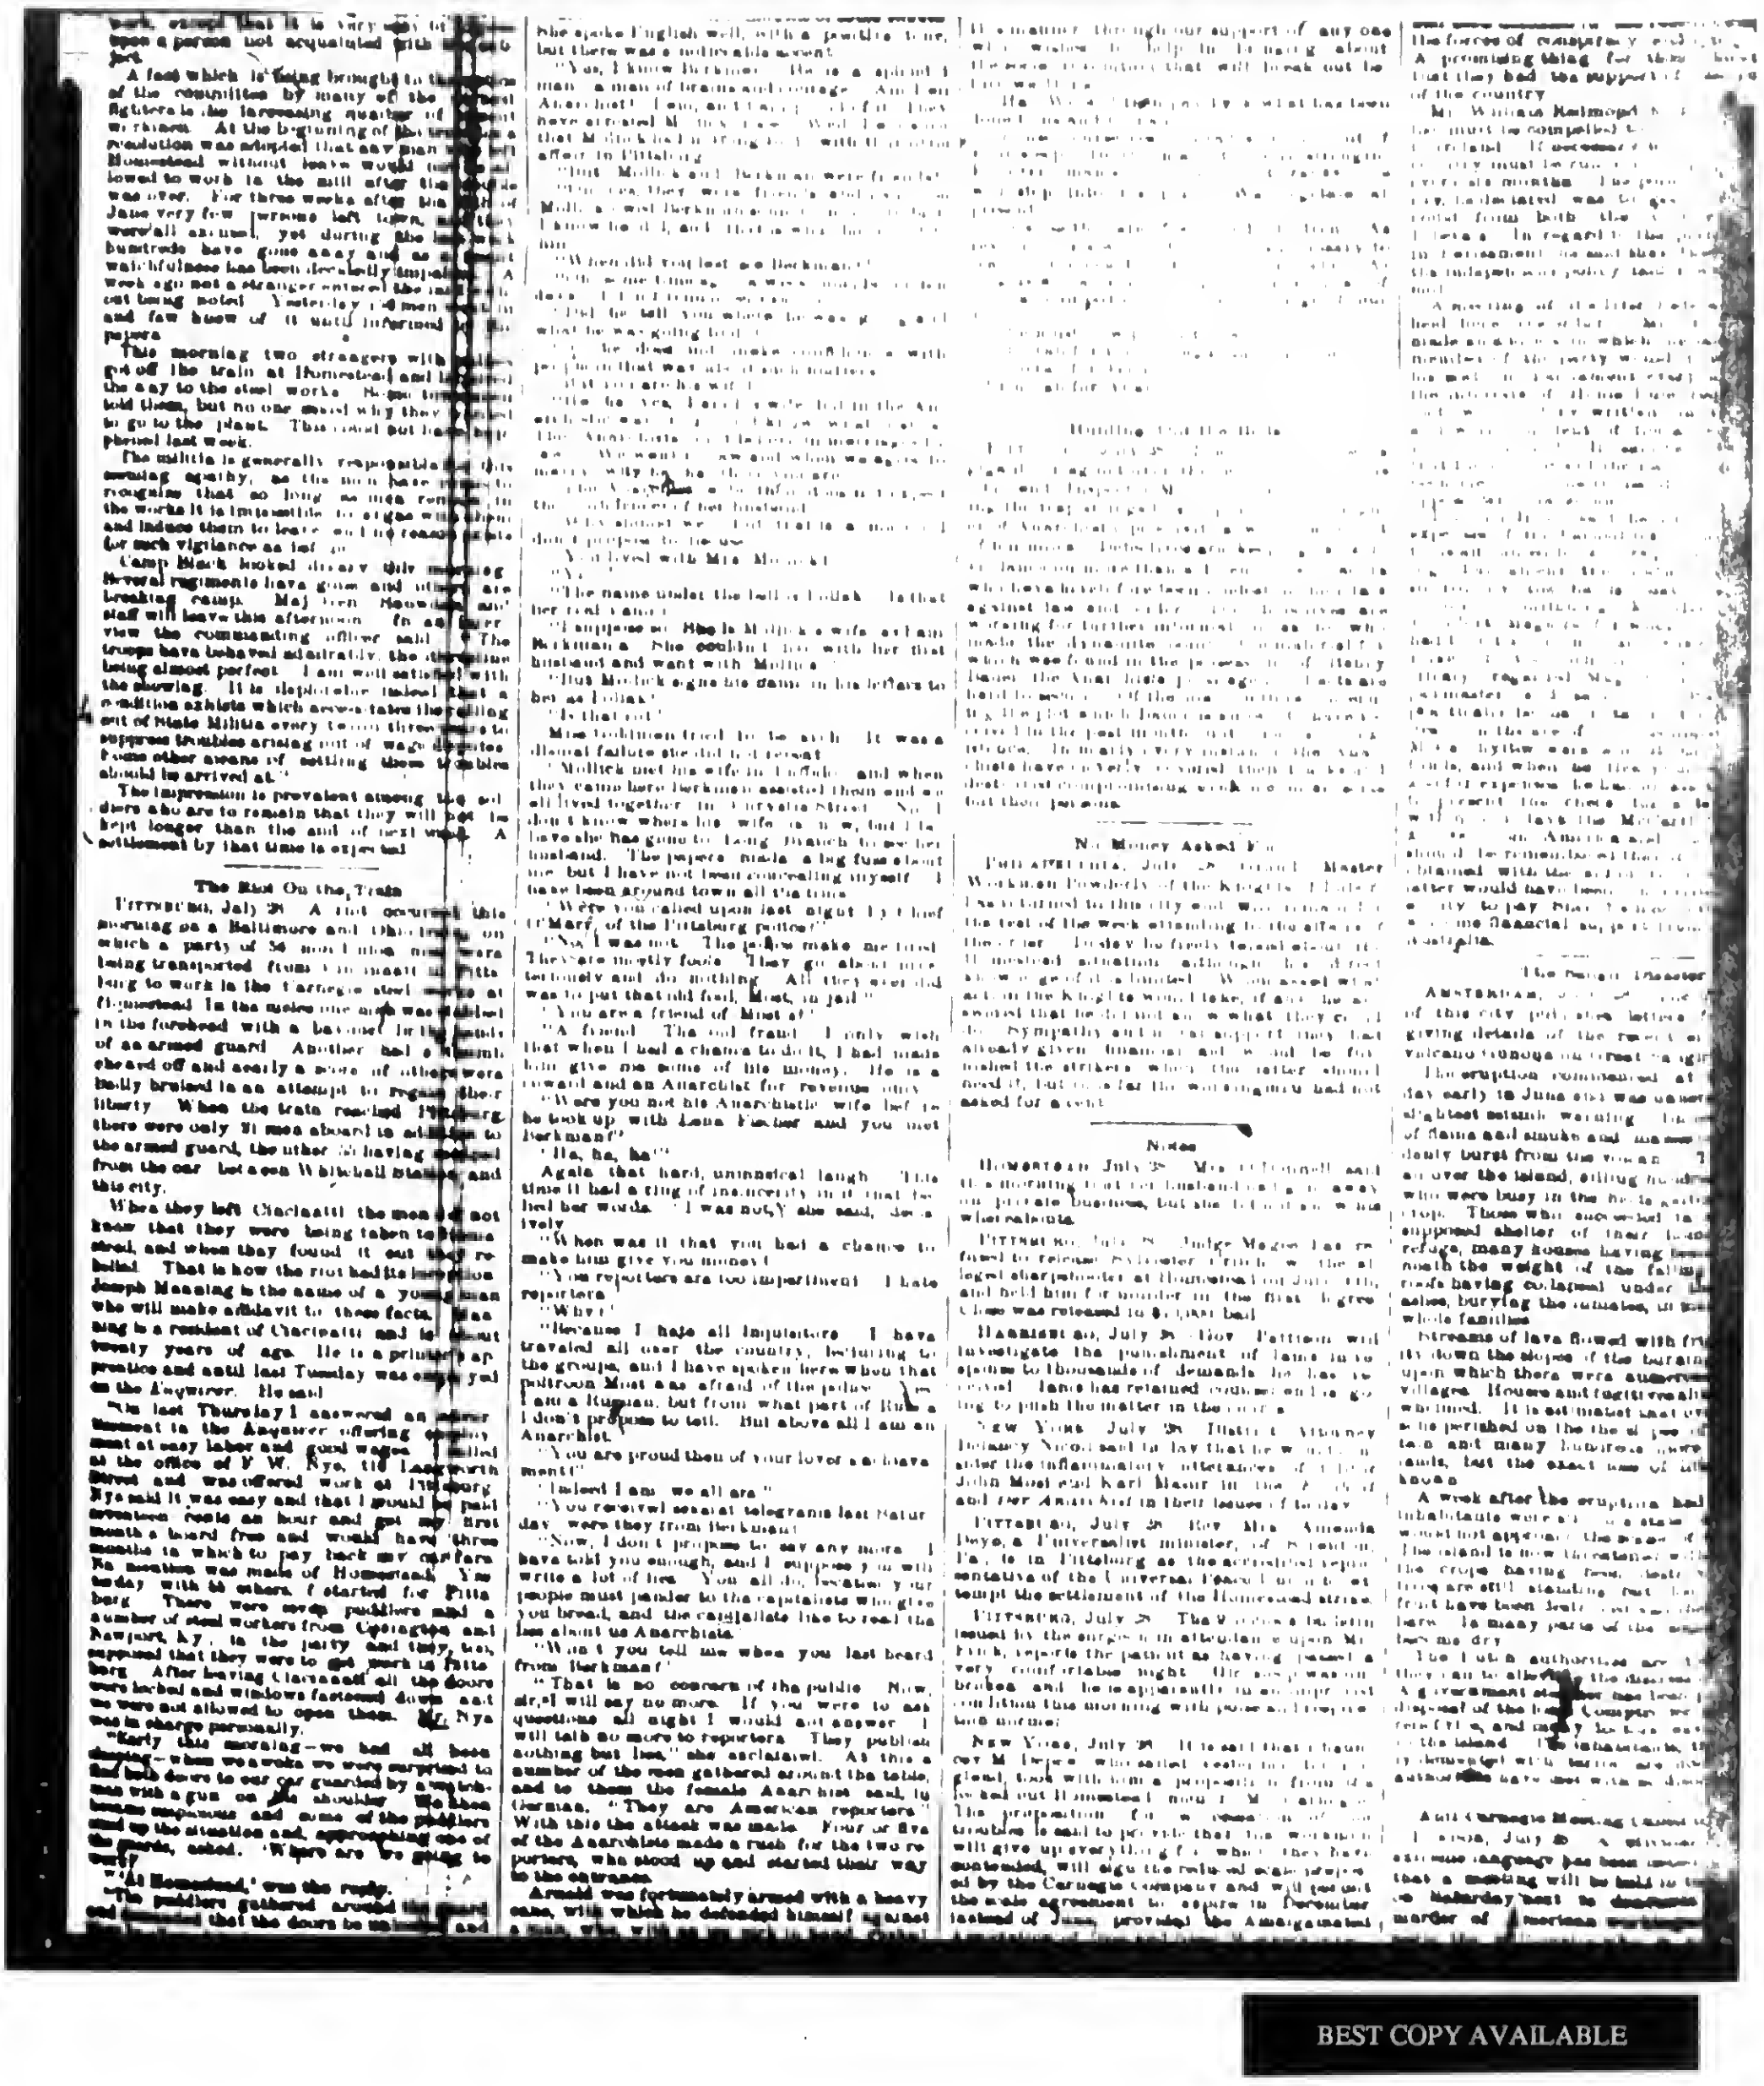
8

900524000

The Emma Goldman Papers

[Interview] Reporters Attacked by Anarchists / Emma Goldman.— p. 1 ; 28 cm. In Rochester Herald. —(July 29, 1892).

Obtained from the Rochester Public Library, Rochester, NY.



BEST COPY AVAILABLE

900524000

The Emma Goldman Papers

[Interview] Reporters Attacked by Anarchists / Emma Goldman.— p. 1 ; 28 cm. In Rochester Herald. —(July 29, 1892).

Obtained from the Rochester Public Library, Rochester, NY.

BEST COPY AVAILABLE

900524000

The Emma Goldman Papers

[Interview] Reporters Attacked by Anarchists / Emma Goldman.— p. 1 ; 28 cm. In Rochester Herald. —(July 29, 1892).

Obtained from the Rochester Public Library, Rochester, NY.

THE ROCHESTER

BER 4,054. ROCHESTER, N. Y., FRIDAY, JULY 29, 1892.

refused to let them pass and then the peddlers jumped on him. There was a terrible scene. Every man in the car jumped from his seat, some making for the doors, others tried to break through the windows, and some got into a fight. The guard struck one of the peddlers with the bayonet of his gun and cut a long gash across his forehead. In their frantic efforts to get out of the car the men got into a fight between themselves and for about half an hour there was a perfect reign of terror and many heads and noses were broken.

"At Whitehall the guard was thrown from his position and the door was burst open. The men commenced to jump off and they kept dropping off all the way to the city. I escaped in the crowd at the depot. The other men I suppose went on to Homestead. The guards made no attempt to shoot but used their guns as clubs. Several of the men were severely injured, one losing a thumb. I do not think that a man on the car knew that we were destined to Homestead, for when that place was mentioned this morning they became as frantic as animals."

Young Manning is now at the Amalgamated Association's headquarters and has related his story to the officials. He made affidavit to the above statement this afternoon, which will probably be used in the legal proceedings to prevent transportation of men under similar circumstances.

Reporters Attacked by Anarchists

New York, July 28.—The last abode in this city of Anarchist Berkman, of Emma Goldman, of Fritz Mullick, and probably also of noted Arnstamm, who is yet unlocated, was discovered yesterday. It is considered possible, and even probable, that in this house, No. 340 Fifth Street, the Anarchist plot for the assassination of Manager Frick was concocted. Alexander Berkman, who struck down Manager Frick, is now known by the admission of Emma Goldman herself to have been in the house within a few days of the tragedy in Pittsburg. He probably started from there for Pittsburg the day before he is known to have reached the house of Anarchist Karl Knodl, of 53 Cherry Street, Pittsburg.

Inside this discovery, Emma Goldman was found yesterday. She made a statement.

These facts, however, important as they are, were not the most significant developments of yesterday. The most signal and event of the day was an exhibition of the feeling of the Anarchists of this city shown by an attack upon two newspaper men by a mob of Anarchists in one of their resorts, Comrade Neebe's, at 340 Fifth Street.

While trying to find Emma Goldman and at Neebe's yesterday afternoon, Reporters Berry of the Tribune and Arnold of the Herald entered the Zum Grauen Mutterli den which is in the basement of the building. The place was full of Anarchists taking refreshments, drinking beer and gesticulating. In the midst of the excitement a bible and Emma Goldman. She was approached by the reporters and was asked:

"Are you Miss Emma Goldman?"

"I am," she said.

One of the reporters passed quite obscenely outside, declared his intention of killing the reporter.

Berry was struck from behind in the neck and back, by two men, was kicked and thrown through the doorway. Arnold succeeded in getting out unharmed.

A police officer stood at the corner of Third Avenue, 100 feet distant. He was immediately informed of the assault, and of the presence of the Goldman woman, and declined to enter the place or to make any arrests without warrants were sworn out. None of the Anarchists were known except by sight and they dispersed immediately after the assault.

Mollick Taken to Pittsburg

Philadelphia, July 28.—Frank Mollick, the Long Branch hatter accused of being an accomplice of Berkman, the Anarchist who shot H. C. Frick at Pittsburg, spent last night at the City Hall. Mollick was brought to the city late yesterday afternoon by Chief O'Mara of the Pittsburg police, who took charge of his prisoner at his Long Branch home. Mollick remained until noon today when Chief O'Mara took him West on the limited express for Pittsburg. The suspect's presence was kept very quiet and until this morning no one knew that he was in the city, except the authorities. The Chief said Mollick agreed to go on without requisition papers and signed a paper to that effect, claiming to be anxious to stand trial. He has made no statement. "He claims not to be able to speak English," said the Chief, "and keeps very mum. We have plenty of evidence against him and believe we shall have no trouble in convicting him. There is nothing to show that Frick's assailant had any accomplices in this city."

Accompanying Chief O'Mara were several Pittsburg detectives, who endeavored to apprehend Otto Herrmann, the Anarchist who is supposed to living on Callowhill Street in Philadelphia, and from whom Henry Bauer received letters. The services of two of Chief Miller's men were given the Pittsburg officers but it cannot be learned what success attended their efforts to locate Herrman.

Long Branch, N. J., July 28.—Capt. James Layton, Chief of the Long Branch police, was arrested last night for allowing Chief of Police O'Mara, of Pittsburg, to take the alleged Anarchist Mollick out of the state without a requisition. He was arraigned today and a hearing of the case was set down for August 3d. Layton was arrested at the instance of lawyer Lee, of Long Branch. It is said that the offense is punishable by a term of imprisonment and a fine of $1,000.

Chief of Police Jessen is reported to have said that both O'Mara and Layton violated the law in taking Mollick out of the State.

"Hurrah for Pretender"

New York, July [illegible]. A reporter [illegible] learned the following [illegible]

"The more people [illegible] Frick and their comrades, [illegible] believe that [illegible]

"We think the more we make Anarchists [illegible] as far as you can call [illegible] Anarchists [illegible]

ONE SEAT CHANGED.

GLADSTONE'S MAJORITY REDUCED TO FORTY.

Meeting of Parnellites and Anti-Parnellites in Dublin. Late Details of the Sangir Disaster. Etna Again Active. General Foreign News.

London, July 28. A recount of the votes of Greenock gives the seat to the Liberal Unionist candidate Sir Thomas Sutherland. The recount showing that Sutherland received 3,764 votes and that John Bruce, liberal, received 3,687 votes. After the election on the fourth of July, Bruce was declared elected by 1,856 votes to 1,850 for Sir Thomas Sutherland. The Liberal Unionist therefore retains the seat, which was supposed to have been a Liberal gain, and the supposed capture of which caused great rejoicing on the threshold of the election. Sir Thomas Sutherland, having been elected in 1886 by [illegible] for Harold Wright, Liberal. Sir Thomas is a native of Aberdeen and a large owner of steamers in the Oriental trade and has distinguished himself in the settlement of Suez Canal difficulties.

The award of the Greenock seat to Sutherland reduces Mr. Gladstone's majority [illegible] forty, assuming the election of a [illegible] the Orkneys.

It is stated that Joseph [illegible] of the Newcastle Daily [illegible] or and noted [illegible] politics, has agreed to oppose Mr. [illegible] at the latter who is [illegible] appointed a member of Mr. [illegible] not at liberty to [illegible] Mr. Cowen was a candidate [illegible] in 1885 for the two [illegible] had a larger majority than Mr. [illegible] now belong [illegible] Mr. [illegible] election which the split [illegible] [illegible] decided by [illegible] [illegible] of Parliament [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] that [illegible] [illegible]

[illegible] meeting of the Irish [illegible] this city yesterday, and a [illegible] of all classes were [illegible]

[illegible] Lewis said that the Parnell

BEST COPY AVAILABLE

900625007

The Emma Goldman Papers

Eingesandt / Emma Goldman.— p. 4 ; 31 cm. In Der Anarchist [New York]. —(July 30, 1892).

Obtained from the Columbia University Libraries.

Eingesandt.

Lange Jahre hat es ein Mann fertig gebracht, sich als Held und Märtyrer hinzustellen, die grössten Scharkereien zu verüben und zu verläumden und so die besten Kräfte zu untergraben.

Und dies alles unter dem Deckmantel des Anarchismus, ohne dass auch nur eine Hand sich erhoben hätte, die Maske von dem Gesicht dieses Mannes herab zu reissen.

Der Mann von dem ich hier spreche ist Johann Most der „Anarchistenführer," der Mann, der es wagt, sich an die Seite eines Kropotkin, einer Petrowskaya und anderer Helden unserer Bewegung zu stellen.

Genossen und Freunde, wenn ich jetzt die Feder ergreife, um Euch diesen Most in das richtige Licht zu stellen, so ist es wahrlich nicht persönlicher Hass, (ich bin gerade im Interesse der Bewegung noch nicht gegen Most aufgetreten), sondern die Empörung über die Haltung dieses Schuften, unserem Genossen Berkmann gegenüber. Ja, die Empörung die einen jeden ehrlichen Arbeiter ergreifen muss, über dieses verläumderische Treiben, über dieses Denunziantenthum dieser Demagogen.

Die Genossen werden das Interview, das M. mit einem Reporter hatte, an anderer Stelle übersetzt finden.

Was, frage ich, kann einen Menschen veranlassen, so gemein, so niederträchtig zu handeln?

Einfach der schmutzige persönliche Hass, der Neid und die Furcht ist es, was diesen Menschen treibt so zu sprechen. Most ist feig, feig bis zum Aeussersten, dass ist jeden bekannt, der Ihn nur ein bischen genau kennt.

Ich, die ich Ihn leider gut kennen gelernt habe, die jeden Charakterzug zur Genüge studirte, ich behaupte, das Most ein ganz erbärmlicher Feigling, ein Lügner, Schauspieler und zugleich ein Waschlappen ist.

Alle seine sogenannten heroistischen Thaten sind nicht der Liebe zur Sache, der Ergebenheit zum Prinzip entsprungen. Oh nein! Es war Berechnung, es war ganz schmutziger Ehrgeiz, der Ihn zwang „sein" Prinzip(?) zu vertreten. Was hat denn Most bisher Grosses geleistet? Ein paar Jahre hat er im Gefängniss, wo es Ihm nebenbei bemerkt, sehr gut erging, zugebracht, das ist Alles. Die Arbeiter haben ihren letzten Cent hingegeben, um es diesen Parasiten an nichts fehlen zu lassen.

Wo es aber gab, irgend eine That zu vollbringen oder Andere zu unterstützen, da hat er sich stets feige und erbärmlich gezeigt.

Ich führe nur aus letzter Zeit einige Beispiele an, die Versammlung auf Union Square am 1. Mai, wo er aus Furcht nicht kam, trotzdem er Wochen zuvor versprochen, die Genossen mochten sich an der Manifestation betheiligen. Weiter die Versammlung in Philadelphia, die er deshalb sich nicht zu adressiren getraute, weil kurz zuvor Genosse Hoffmann verhaftet wurde.

Dann kündigte ich, dass ein Complott bestehe, [illegible] tödten. Ich glaube, Berkmann versuchte es selbst [illegible] Er glaubte sich damit viel Ruhm zu erringen und [illegible] was er wollte [zweifache Druckfehler]. Wenn es eine Aufschwindung war, so sind darin nicht meine Freunde, sondern die Autonomisten betheiligt.

Die Genossin Goldmann erklärt Most als „thatlosen Cäsar" und den Genossen Modlak, welcher in Long Branch verhaftet wurde, als einen „Autonomisten", als welcher er wahrscheinlich ein Freund Berkmann's war.

Besser hat sich noch kein Demagoge selbst entlarvt!

Eingesandt.

Lange Jahre hat es ein Mann fertig gebracht, sich als Held und Märtyrer hinzustellen, die grössten Scharkereien zu verüben und zu verläumden und so die besten Kräfte zu untergraben.

Und dies alles unter dem Deckmantel des Anarchismus, ohne dass auch nur eine Hand sich erhoben hätte, die Maske von dem Gesicht dieses Mannes herab zu reissen.

Der Mann von dem ich hier spreche ist Johann Most der „Anarchistenführer," der Mann, der es wagt, sich an die Seite eines Kropotkin, einer Petrowskaya und anderer Helden unserer Bewegung zu stellen.

Genossen und Freunde, wenn ich jetzt die Feder ergreife, um Euch diesen Most in das richtige Licht zu stellen, so ist es wahrlich nicht persönlicher Hass, (ich bin gerade im Interesse der Bewegung noch nicht gegen Most aufgetreten), sondern die Empörung über die Haltung dieses Schuften, unserem Genossen Berkmann gegenüber. Ja, die Empörung die einen jeden ehrlichen Arbeiter ergreifen muss, über dieses verläumderische Treiben, über dieses Denunziantenthum dieser Demagogen.

Die Genossen werden das Interview, das M. mit einem Reporter hatte, an anderer Stelle übersetzt finden.

Was, frage ich, kann einen Menschen veranlassen, so gemein, so niederträchtig zu handeln?

Einfach der schmutzige persönliche Hass, der Neid und die Furcht ist es, was diesen Menschen treibt so zu sprechen. Most ist feig, feig bis zum Aeussersten, dass ist jeden bekannt, der Ihn nur ein bischen genau kennt.

Ich, die ich Ihn leider gut kennen gelernt habe, die jeden Charakterzug zur Genüge studirte, ich behaupte, das Most ein ganz erbärmlicher Feigling, ein Lügner, Schauspieler und zugleich ein Waschlappen ist.

Alle seine sogenannten heroistischen Thaten sind nicht der Liebe zur Sache, der Ergebenheit zum Prinzip entsprungen. Oh nein! Es war Berechnung, es war ganz schmutziger Ehrgeiz, der Ihn zwang „sein" Prinzip(?) zu vertreten. Was hat denn Most bisher Grosses geleistet? Ein paar Jahre hat er im Gefängniss, wo es Ihm nebenbei bemerkt, sehr gut erging, zugebracht, das ist Alles. Die Arbeiter haben ihren letzten Cent hingegeben, um es diesen Parasiten an nichts fehlen zu lassen.

Wo es aber gab, irgend eine That zu vollbringen oder Andere zu unterstützen, da hat er sich stets feige und erbärmlich gezeigt.

Ich führe nur aus letzter Zeit einige Beispiele an, die Versammlung auf Union Square am 1. Mai, wo er aus Furcht nicht kam, trotzdem er Wochen zuvor versprochen, die Genossen mochten sich an der Manifestation betheiligen. Weiter die Versammlung in Philadelphia, die er deshalb sich nicht zu adressiren getraute, weil kurz zuvor Genosse Hoffmann verhaftet wurde.

Ich glaube, dass ein Complott bestehe, [illegible] tödten. Ich glaube, Berkmann versuchte es selbst [illegible] Er glaubte sich damit viel Ruhm zu erringen und [illegible] was er wollte [zweifache Druckfehler]. Wenn es eine Aufschwindung war, so sind darin nicht meine Freunde, sondern die Autonomisten betheiligt.

Die Genossin Goldmann erklärt Most als „thatlosen Cäsar" und den Genossen Modlak, welcher in Long Branch verhaftet wurde, als einen „Autonomisten", als welcher er wahrscheinlich ein Freund Berkmann's war.

Besser hat sich noch kein Demagoge selbst entlarvt!

Correspondenz.

Am Samstag Abend sollte eine Protest-Versammlung der hiesigen „Internationale" in Betreff der Homsteadter Affaire stattfinden. Die Versammlung fand auch richtig statt und hatte sich in Folge der Bekanntwerdung der That unsereres wackeren Genossen A. Berkmann eine ziemliche Anzahl — hauptsächlich jüdischer Genossen eingefunden.

Die Mehrzahl der Anwesenden erwartete, dass der Vortragende sich im Grossen und Ganzen besonders über das letzte Erreigniss aussprechen und die That B's. propagandistisch verwerthen werde. Dem war aber nicht so. John Most, der Vortragende konstatirte, dass die Homesteadter Affaire in eine neue Phase getreten sei; ein „Mann" — Most kennt wohl Genosse B. nicht oder ist die Erinnerung an an ihn ihm unangenehm — habe auf Frick geschossen. Die Eindrücke seien verschieden gewesen u. s. w., allgemeine Nachrichten, die man in jeder Zeitung gelesen hatte, ohne nur einmal auf den hohen, propagandistischen Werth dieser That, die der ganzen anarchistischen Bewegung in Amerika neuen Ansporn gibt, einzugehen.

Hierauf sprach dieser „Anarchistenführer" über den Homesteadter Streik, welche überaus ernste und lehrreiche Affaire von ihm in einer geradezu empörenden beständig effecthaschender Weise — durch faderne, ranzige Witze versuchte er die Lachmuskeln der Anwesenden in Bewegung zu setzen — behandelt wurde. Während dieser Komödie versuchte er der Denunziant wird an anderer Stelle behandelt die geradezu heroische That B's. zu einer Fratze herabzuziehen. Gehen denn den ehrlichen, nicht ganz fanatischen Anhänger nicht bald die Augen auf.

Nach Most sprach Genossin Goldmann, die Ge

Dann sodann wir solche Demagogen gross ziehen, welche durch uns und unsere Groschen „Grössen" werden, wird die Bewegung gehemmt sein und die herrschende Klasse triumphiren.

Worte helfen bei solchen Menschen nichts; eine Tracht Hiebe würde diesen Menschen wohl nicht ändern, aber ihm das Maul stopfen.

Emma Goldmann.

Correspondenz.

Am Samstag Abend sollte eine Protest-Versammlung der hiesigen „Internationale" in Betreff der Homsteadter Affaire stattfinden. Die Versammlung fand auch richtig statt und hatte sich in Folge der Bekanntwerdung der That unsereres wackeren Genossen A. Berkmann eine ziemliche Anzahl — hauptsächlich jüdischer Genossen eingefunden.

Die Mehrzahl der Anwesenden erwartete, dass der Vortragende sich im Grossen und Ganzen besonders über das letzte Erreigniss aussprechen und die That B's. propagandistisch verwerthen werde. Dem war aber nicht so. John Most, der Vortragende konstatirte, dass die Homesteadter Affaire in eine neue Phase getreten sei; ein „Mann" — Most kennt wohl Genosse B. nicht oder ist die Erinnerung an an ihn ihm unangenehm — habe auf Frick geschossen. Die Eindrücke seien verschieden gewesen u. s. w., allgemeine Nachrichten, die man in jeder Zeitung gelesen hatte, ohne nur einmal auf den hohen, propagandistischen Werth dieser That, die der ganzen anarchistischen Bewegung in Amerika neuen Ansporn gibt, einzugehen.

Hierauf sprach dieser „Anarchistenführer" über den Homesteadter Streik, welche überaus ernste und lehrreiche Affaire von ihm in einer geradezu empörenden beständig effecthaschender Weise — durch faderne, ranzige Witze versuchte er die Lachmuskeln der Anwesenden in Bewegung zu setzen — behandelt wurde. Während dieser Komödie versuchte er der Denunziant wird an anderer Stelle behandelt die geradezu heroische That B's. zu einer Fratze herabzuziehen. Gehen denn den ehrlichen, nicht ganz fanatischen Anhänger nicht bald die Augen auf.

Nach Most sprach Genossin Goldmann, die Ge

Wie wird die That B's. am besten ausgenutzt? Diese Frage ist jetzt zu verneinen.

B. hat die That verübt im gerechten Zorn und in Empörung über die Schurkereien Frick's, er wollte ihn für seine Verbrechen strafen, nicht richten.

Mit einer Sympathie [illegible] man keinen Hund unter dem Ofen [illegible] wird wenig genützt. Nein! Die beste Vertheidigung wird die That finden, wenn dem [illegible] folgen. Das wird Propaganda machen [illegible] mehr als einen Frick. [illegible] ragoer Affairs machen wir nicht wieder die alten Fehler! Wenn daher Sammlungen vorgenommen werden, so geschehe es um Mittel für eine Propaganda a la Berkmann zusammen zu bringen. Auch diese, und sie ist die beste Agitation muss mit den nöthigen Mitteln unterstützt werden.

Diese That hat mehr gewirkt, als hundert Reden eines Most und Anderer. B. hat uns gezeigt, hat der Masse des Volkes gezeigt, dass Menschen wie Frick nicht besser sind als alle anderen Menschen, dass sie keine Götter seien, dass sie nicht ungestraft die Arbeiter ausbeuten und jede Scheusslichkeit verüben können, in ihre Körper dringen Kugeln sehr gut und nutzbringend. B. hat aber auch weiter gezeigt, dass man dem Uebel an der Wurzel beikommen soll.

Arbeiter sollen nicht gegen Arbeiter ihre Waffen gebrauchen, Gewalt anwenden, nein, sie sollen ihre Ausbeuter beim Kragen nehmen, sie sollen diejenigen vernichten, die Banditen und Mörder auf sie hetzen, die sie dem Hunger preisgeben wollen. Ihr Frick's zittert! Brutus ist erwacht! Und Ihr Genossen, lasst die Gelegenheit nicht vorübergehen, lasst neue Thaten folgen. Die Bourgeoisie soll vor Angst zitternd nicht mehr Pulste zu verlassen sich getrauen. Ahmt das Beispiel der Genossen in Frankreich nach.

Hoch die Anarchie!

Sepp.

Quittungen.

[illegible] Gratzschahn 81.

Zur Unterstützung

des wöchentlichen [illegible] Vorrath 25c., [illegible] 81.

Briefkasten.

P. G. in Phil. [illegible]

BEST COPY AVAILABLE

12

881017010

The Emma Goldman Papers

[Excerpt from Lecture] Wild Anarchist Talk / Emma Goldman. – p. 2 ; 44 cm. In The New York Times. –(Aug. 2, 1892)

Obtained from the University of California, Berkeley. Institutional Location: Doe Library.

Spanish Minister of Marine, accompanied by his suite, landed at Huelva last evening to take part in the Columbian celebration. He was received with military honors. The streets, which were gayly festooned, were filled with people.

As the Columbine caraval Santa Maria, which had come from Cadiz, came to her moorings, salvos of artillery were fired by all the foreign vessels in the harbor. The appearance of the Mexican corvette was the signal for loud cheers for Columbus, Mexico, and Spain.

PRINCE BONAPARTE WINS.

HE IS RELEASED FROM HIS ISLE-OF-MAN MARRIAGE.

LONDON, Aug. 1.—The Bonaparte divorce case, which has been before the public a number of times lately, came up again in the Divorce Court to-day, when the petition of Prince Louis Clovis Bonaparte, to declare null the marriage contracted by him in the Isle of Man, on the ground that the respondent, Mrs. Megone, had a husband living at the time of her marriage to him, was granted.

Several hearings had previously been given on the petition, which has been pending for months.

RUSSIAN GOVERNMENT PLANS.

A MINISTER-PRESIDENT TO DISTRIBUTE THE PORTFOLIOS.

ST. PETERSBURG, Aug. 1.—An important change is impending in the method of conducting the Central Government.

The Czar, according to the new arrangement, will appoint directly a Minister-President, who will distribute the Ministerial portfolios himself, and will be alone responsible to the Czar. M. Abazor Abaza will probably be the first President appointed.

NEW PANAMA CANAL COMPANY.

PARIS, Aug. 1. The concessions and assets of the Panama Canal Company have been acquired by a syndicate headed by M. Hélard, Vice President of the Paris Chamber of Commerce.

A new Panama Canal Company will soon be launched. Shares of the old company have recently risen 7 points.

REPORTED DYNAMITE OUTRAGES.

PARIS, Aug. 1.—Several of the papers of this city to-day report that an attempt was made last night to blow up with dynamite a number of buildings in Versailles. Searching inquiries, however, fail to confirm the rumor.

THE FRENCH ELECTIONS.

PARIS, Aug. 1. The elections have resulted in a gain by the republicans of 150 seats.

They have obtained a majority in four of the eleven Councils held by the Monarchists.

CONDENSED CABLEGRAMS.

—The German steamer Russia, Capt. Schmidt, which sailed from Baltimore July 16 for Hamburg, and the steamers Napoli and Breton came in collision in the Elbe and went ashore on the Island of Finkenwarder. The Breton and Napoli were subsequently floated and towed into Hamburg.

—Princess Beatrice has telegraphed to Queen Victoria from Castle Heiligenberg, Germany, saying that she is newise suffered from the midnight alarm of Friday last, when part of the castle was destroyed by fire.

—As the first Monday in August is a regular holiday in Great Britain, the Bank of England and the Stock Exchange here were closed yesterday and business throughout the country was suspended.

—The Italian Government will send a squadron to South America, including the cruisers Dogali and Bausan and the gunboats Venlero and Prevana.

—A secret national Polish printing press has been discovered in Warsaw, and 300 arrests have been made.

—Two cases of dynamite were stolen yesterday while in transit from Marseilles to St. Etienne.

—The Bulgarian Government will issue a decree on Aug. 15 restoring the liberty of the press.

Mexican News Items.

CITY OF MEXICO, Aug. 1.—A strict investigation made in all parts of Mexico shows that there is not a single case of cholera in the republic. The Government has taken every precaution to prevent the introduction of cholera.

Banks report that there has never been so much exchange on the United States sold as in July, presumably for payment for cereals.

The Mexican Consul at Southampton has been transferred to the Vice Consulate at Paris, and Senor Pimadores has been appointed Consul at Southampton.

The Second Secretary of the Spanish legation here has been recalled for promotion.

The Mexican Commissioners to the Spanish Exposition departed to-day.

The telephone company has been obliged to establish another central office in this city on account of increasing business.

The Anglo-American publishes a Honduras special saying that President Leiva has sent a Commissioner to the revolutionists begging for terms of peace.

This Fellow Praised Berkmann.

NEWARK, N. J., Aug. 1.—The Newark group of Anarchists, directed by leaders in New-York City, held a secret meeting at 103 Prince street this city, last night. The neighborhood [illegible] mainly by Russian Jews. [illegible] was present, and where [illegible]

Mount Ida, Ala., Aug. 1.—So far as known at this hour, (9 P. M.) the election throughout the State has been a very quiet one, though great interest was manifested. A novel feature was that in many places the colored voters turned out and not only voted but worked like beavers for Jones and the straight Democratic ticket, and aided materially in piling up large majorities for the Democratic Party. The Register has received bulletins from thirty-eight of the sixty-six counties in the State, which show handsome majorities for Jones, except in Hale County. The indications are that Jones has carried Montgomery (his home) County by 6,000, Bullock by 2,000, and Talladega by 500.

WILD ANARCHIST TALK.

BERKMANN PRAISED AT A PUBLIC MEETING OF THE REDS.

The crazy utterances of Anarchy were howled forth for three hours at a public meeting held in a hall at 193 Bowery last evening. More than 300 wild eyed, unshaven, unclean, and foul-mouthed men, and about a score of hard-featured, cigarette smoking young women, crowded the hall, and though the smoke-burdened air was so nauseating as almost to stupefy those unaccustomed to it, the people stood there and shrieked with delight that was only measured by the violence of the speeches made.

The handbills circulated, announced that the meeting would be held as a "general labor meeting" to consider the Homestead troubles and the attempted assassination of Mr. Frick. The police well knew, however, that the meeting was to be held under the auspices of the particular circle of Anarchists to which Berkmann, the man who tried to assassinate Frick, belonged, the Autonomists, as they call themselves. When the police learned this it was stated that a number of policemen would be sent to the meeting and that, if the speakers dared to make incendiary remarks, the crowd would be dispersed and the orators locked up. The police did not materialize, though, save for two uniformed officers stationed at the outside door.

It was a gathering of men and women of many nationalities, so there were speeches made in English, German, French, and Hebrew. Emma Goldman, the woman who has attained notoriety because she once lived with Berkmann, was at the meeting, an object of envy to all the women there because of the devotion and attention shown her by the sterner sex. Joseph Peukert, a hatchet-faced Hungarian with scraggy black whiskers, said to be the head of the Autonomist Circle, was also there.

Dyer D. Lum, who succeeded Parsons, the Chicago Anarchist, as editor of the Alarm, was first to get on the platform, which was draped with the Stars and Stripes. He said he spoke as an American. He did not favor meetings. He favored acting. When the police had executed his friends at Chicago, he said, they boasted that they had driven the Anarchists into their holes.

"Well," said he, "if they prefer underground methods we will give them to them. I hope that no resolution of sympathy will be passed for Berkmann. He deliberately sacrificed his life by trying to take that of Frick. The lesson for capitalists to learn is that workingmen are now growing so desperate that they not only deliberately make up their minds to die, but decide to take such men as Frick to St. Peter's gate with them.

"I do not want to incite anybody here to violence. I do not think anybody here needs inciting. If you and I want anything done do not let us urge others to do it, but let us, like men, do it ourselves. We must teach these rich people that we care nothing for their law and order. We appeal to that spirit to release us from slavery which has caused men to wade through rivers of blood. We glory in the fact that the strikers at Homestead shot down the hired Pinkerton thugs, but we glory more in the fact that among us there was a man with courage enough to go to Pittsburg, do his work, and then honestly say, 'I came here to kill Frick.' It is such men that will free our race from its present slavery."

Joseph Peukert made a similar speech in German. He spoke of the "martyrs of Paris and Chicago" as men whose example might well be followed by all who desired to see the human race freed from the bondage of capital and government. Merlino, a Paris Anarchist, followed with a speech of a most incendiary character in which he frankly confessed that the acts of Anarchy were crimes, but said that they were crimes that it was necessary to commit in the present state of society.

"Revolution is inevitable in America as it is in Europe," he said. "Law is merely the instrument with which capital stabs labor in the back."

Emma Goldman talked for a half hour in German. "We must make the most of the deed of Berkmann's," she said, "and follow it with other similar deeds until there are no more despots in America."

Brassey's Sunbeam Goes Down.

From the London Daily News.

Lord Brassey's yacht Sunbeam, which had been purchased by Lord Cantelupe, was intended for the pearl fishing on the South Australian coast, and Capt. Read was taking the vessel out for this purpose. When she was lying off an island in Admiralty Gulf on the 27th of March, a leak was discovered, and she was run ashore in order to have her patched up. After lying there about twelve hours, the mate reported that she was making water fast, and then efforts were made to get her off. These, however, were unsuccessful, and she sank about half a mile from shore. After remaining a short time at Admiralty Gulf, the Captain decided to go in the whaleboat to Roebuck Bay in order to catch the mail steamer due there in three weeks' time. The inhabitants of Admiralty Gulf endeavored to dissuade the Captain from the attempt, but he nevertheless left, and was accompanied by nine of his crew.

The committee appointed to make the decision as to the political course of the association consisted of "Silver-Dollar" Smith, W. T. O'Brien, Fred Seelig, Henry Loewy, and Thomas J. Sullivan. It was to report next week as to what course was to be taken. The bets offered were 2 to 1 on an affiliation with Tammany and the Democratic Party.

At the picnic yesterday, Barney Rourke and First Lieut. Martin Kirby, with a number of members of the John J. O'Brien Association, wore enormous yellow rosettes bearing the legend, "Timothy D. Sullivan Association." Thomas J. Sullivan, who has been known as the leader of the Four Hundred of the old district, was there in all his glory. Turning aside for a moment from the delights of the ballroom floor, he said:

"Harrison is bound to be elected. To-day for the first time the Harrison six came out in the policy shops. The three numbers are 13, 26, 44. There were thirteen States originally, twenty-six when 'old man' Harrison was elected, and forty-four now, see! It came out when the two ends of the old 'Ate' were united in spite of Paddy Divver. Here is my boy," continued Mr. Sullivan, bringing up a handsome, stalwart lad of five, all frills and knickerbockers, "What's your name, sonny!"

"John L. Sullivan," promptly replied the child.

"Show the gentleman how you're goin' to knock out Tammany."

The child immediately struck a pugilistic attitude.

"That's it," said the proud father; "sock it to 'em with your left."

This incident did away with any official announcement of how the John J. O'Brien Association would go in the coming campaign. The Sullivan people were all bitter against Tammany. The secret of the dissatisfaction among the Sullivan men was told by one of the local politicians.

"Rourke and Sullivan," he said, "had made a deal to control the old 'Ate' and knock Divver out. Sullivan was to have one end of the district and Rourke the other. But Paddy was too quick for them, and when the reapportionment was made, the 'fat' of the Third Assembly District fell to him, and Rourke and Sullivan were left out in the cold. Now it's everything to beat Tammany. It seems strange to see Harney's men here with Sullivan badges on, but it is all in the interest of practical politics. Divver has been announced to be here, but you won't see him; you can bet your life on that."

The entertainment provided by Timothy D. Sullivan was all that the fancy of the elite of the district could desire. There was one drawback about the barbecue. The unhappy animal which had been drawn about in a cart during the hot weather last week and left to stand almost roasting alive in the sun, with the placard around its neck announcing that it was to be killed and cooked at the festival, did not come to its end according to programme. The butcher who was to have dispatched it died from the heat and was buried on Sunday. The ox was therefore slaughtered privately and the meat brought up in large pieces already cooked to the grounds, where slices were distributed sandwiched with black bread to about 1,000 people.

There were games of all sorts, including a seventy-five-yard dash, a one-mile walk, a sack and a fat-men's race. Three policemen ran a three-mile run, and there was a deputation of a dozen of their fraternity to help preserve the peace. The leaders sat at tables and consumed much champagne, and the guests satisfied themselves with beer and sandwiches. There was dancing in the evening, in which a large crowd participated.

Among those present were Thomas F. Walsh, James Oliver, Barney Rourke, Martin Kirby, Louis Leevitt, "Silver Dollar" Smith, Timothy D. Sullivan, Michael Derry, John J. Donohue, Charles Anderson, John C. Fitzgerald, M. J. Costello, Archibald M. Craig, John J. White, Bernard Martin, Denis Shea, Judge Henry M. Goldfogle, John Simpson, William T. O'Brien, Frederick Seelig, Maurice Gottlieb, William Snell, "Morry" Isaacs, Florence J. Sullivan, and James McManus.

TIMOTHY D. SULLIVAN'S GAMES.

The games of the Timothy D. Sullivan Association took place yesterday at Snizer's Harlem River Park. There were 700 entries, but not half contested in the various events, and the games were given under the rulings of the Amateur Athletic Union. James E. Sullivan of the New-Jersey Athletic Club was referee, J. T. Norton of the Manhattan Athletic Club clerk of the course, and Arthur J. Lumley, John P. Kokhamit, Dr. H. H. Lehn, P. Snell, and E. P. Hagan judges. Summary:

75-Yard Dash, Open Handicap.—Won by A. W. Herris, Manhattan AC; J. Dunn second, and P. Kenny third. Time—0:08.

One-Mile Walk, Open Handicap.—Won by L. Liebgold, H. Obertubessing second. Time—8:00.

One-Mile Run, Open Handicap.—Won by A. J. Dunlap, Xavier AA, W. O'Keefe, Xavier AA, second. Time—4:35.

Running High Jump.—Won by N. E. Sweeney, Xavier AA, 5 feet 7 inches; Thomas Nixon, St. George AC, second, 5 feet 4 inches.

600-Yard Run (Novice) Scratch.—Won by Thomas Nixon; J. Mark Bass second. Time—1:34.

Back Race.—Won by T. J. Grode, New-Jersey AC.

75-Yard Run, Scratch, for Members of Association Only.—Won by J. Sullivan, E. H. Cregan second, J. Collins third.

Three-Mile Run, to Members of New-York Police.—Won by P. Hickey of the Fifteenth Precinct, D. Argue second. Time—18:45.

Fat Man's Race.—Won by A. R. Love.

Shot and Wounded His Nephew.

DANBURY, Conn., Aug. 1.—Michael O'Donnell to-night shot and probably fatally wounded his nephew, Michael Kelly. About 8 o'clock Kelly visited O'Donnell and asked him to have a drink. O'Donnell refused and an altercation ensued, in which Kelly picked up a stone and hurled it at his uncle. Kelly started to throw another stone, when O'Donnell took a pistol from his pocket and fired two shots, both of which hit Kelly, one in the leg and the other in the breast, just above the heart. The latter wound will probably prove fatal.

The wounded man was taken to the hospital and his assailant was arrested. O'Donnell is [illegible] that the firm, Potter, announ[illegible] of the old men [illegible] granted their positi[illegible] came in from the [illegible] workmen, Mr. Pott[illegible] that to-day he tole[illegible] the present.

"We have broke[illegible]

That there has [illegible] ranks of the look[illegible] seen, particularly [illegible] cited groups of [illegible] All of the twenty[illegible] live in Homestead, [illegible] left the mill for th[illegible] committees who ca[illegible] promise not to retu[illegible]

PITTSBURG, Penn[illegible] tisipated in the d[illegible] stead after the anni[illegible] July 6 will be pre[illegible] eanit and battery, [illegible] pocket picking, an[illegible] meanore.

The work of secu[illegible] to convict those en[illegible] Pinkertons and the[illegible] men has been goin[illegible] now so far advance[illegible] made in a few da[illegible] Among them are es[illegible] ticularly active [illegible] time the men ran [illegible] taking the propert[illegible]

The Thirty-third [illegible] this city, started [illegible] morning. The pla[illegible] departments appe[illegible] of police is about t[illegible] has occurred.

W. J. Brennen, a[illegible] Association, intend[illegible] the court this mor[illegible] nal act of 1883, pr[illegible] wage disputes by a[illegible] act in session an[illegible] until to-morrow. T[illegible] fifty Homestead m[illegible] cannot be appeal[illegible] pany also signs th[illegible]

The Allegheny H[illegible] did not reconvene o[illegible] morning with no[illegible] has posted notices [illegible] Wednesday evenin[illegible]

The steamer Tide[illegible] stead with non-uni[illegible] an average fifty m[illegible]

H. C. Frick is out[illegible] sicians made that [illegible] said it was not like[illegible] ble office this week[illegible]

Informations we[illegible] fore Alderman Rol[illegible] Co). Hawkins, Lieu[illegible] ant Surgeon Grim[illegible] aggravated assault [illegible] battery. Warrants[illegible] aggravated assault[illegible] the thumbs, and [illegible] shaving his head, [illegible] brought for damag[illegible]

WASHINGTON, Au[illegible] (Dem., Ala.,) the C[illegible] committee of the [illegible] vestigated the I[illegible] Penn., and the acti[illegible] that place, has pre[illegible] mit it for appro[illegible] day. It relates ch[illegible] and termination o[illegible] first an epitome o[illegible] committee at Hom[illegible]

The report then[illegible] tions that suggest[illegible] the evidence tak[illegible] stantially as follo[illegible] pany justified in [illegible] Was the treatment[illegible] just? Were the m[illegible] duct during the [illegible] justified in employ[illegible] the property? H[illegible] in the matter?

After the report [illegible] committee it will [illegible] diciary Committee[illegible] House.

A Big [illegible]

PORTLAND, Me., [illegible] broke out on the t[illegible] & Co.'s paint and [illegible] an hour later th[illegible] tire block, a four-[illegible] occupied by Walk[illegible] Frank Brothers, in[illegible] & Co., grocers. T[illegible]

Revoked.

The State Comm[illegible] the license of the [illegible] ville, L. I., which [illegible] is taken away on t[illegible] of the home refus[illegible] perintendent.

TELEGRA[illegible]

—The stockholders [illegible] and Rochester Rail[illegible] ed yesterday in favo[illegible] Company has been t[illegible] nies of Rochester ar[illegible] of the consolidation[illegible]

—William Brown[illegible] fifty-three years, [illegible] kicked by a horse, [illegible] in a stall, with a sh[illegible] with its hind feet [illegible] death.

—James Bowles of [illegible] three, was killed Sa[illegible] while heading a [illegible] and Northbridge [illegible] pastime.

13

BEST COPY AVAILABLE

881014026

The Emma Goldman Papers

[Excerpt from Lecture] They Talked a Great Deal / Emma Goldman. – p. 1 ; 43 cm.
In The World. – (Aug. 2, 1892)
Obtained from the University of California, Berkeley. Institutional Location: Doe Library.

"Circulation Books Open to All."

TWO CENTS. NEW YORK, TUESDAY, AUGUST 2, 1892. PRICE T

which have escaped the observation of our astronomers."

More remarkable than all these fulfilled predictions is the reference found in "Gulliver's Travels" to the astronomers of Laputa, whom Dean Swift made to discover the exact two moons of Mars, giving not only the exact distance of one of them, but also the times of revolution correct within a few hours. Were these references to the two moons which science discovered for the first time in 1877 mere chance? Or were they, as some people have thought, but indications of a tradition which has come down from prehistoric times.

And if so, how could the people of prehistoric times have known of the existence of the two moons of Mars unless they had actually heard of them from people on that planet?

These are some of the problems which the Lick and other big telescopes may serve to solve during the present week.

LOOKING THROUGH THE LICK LENS.

The Mountain-Top Observers Hindered Somewhat by Clouds in the Skies.

[SPECIAL TO THE WORLD.]

SAN FRANCISCO, Aug. 1.—Astronomers at Lick Observatory are having much difficulty in observing Mars, because of cloudy skies, but it is hoped that on Wednesday, when Mars is in exact opposition, they may have better luck. For two hours every night for a month Mars has been studied on the meridian and observations will be continued during this month. The 700-diameter magnifying power has brought Mars within 50,000 miles, but the planet is so near the horizon that the atmosphere is much disturbed. However, with the big telescope the satellites can be plainly seen, even by a novice. The eclipses of the inner satellite in the planet's shadow are easily observable.

Since the outer satellite does not suffer eclipse at the present time it is necessary to obtain the positions of that satellite by micrometrical measurements, which are taken regularly in order to determine properly its orbit.

The south polar cap of Mars was unusually brilliant and large a month ago, but it is rapidly diminishing in size and brightness. At present there are numerous dark markings within this polar cap as if there were large areas from which snow had disappeared.

These markings have not been seen before at any observatory. The region known as the lacus solis is now seen to be very different from its appearance as described in drawings of Schiaparelli. The Fountain of Youth, a large, dark region heretofore seen single, now appears double through the large refractor.

SCHIAPARELLI.

But most remarkable of all are three or more very prominent bright projections on the southwest limb of Mars, visible several nights three weeks ago. They will probably be visible on the southeast limb in two or three weeks, when it is hoped to determine more fully their character. Apparently these projections arise from very bright regions in the planet. Whether they are high mountains or are due to something else is now impossible to say. Perhaps they are the gilded domes of what are the Pulitzer Buildings of Mars, or perhaps they are gigantic signals to Earth.

Up to the present time Schiaparelli's canals have not been seen double. Drawings of the planet are made on each clear evening. These drawings will finally be converted into a single map at the close of the summer observations.

Last night the south polar cap was very complex, and numerous dark markings were visible. The unique spectacle of markings in the snow caps has been noted, not only with the large telescope by Schaberle and Campbell, but also with a twelve-inch glass by Barnard, who said some time ago that on one night a dark streak would appear across the polar cap, and that there then would follow its separation and then the disappearance of a large portion of the polar cap, leaving two

The discoveries just made at Mount Hamilton are interesting and scientifically valuable. They are, in brief, a contradiction of the supposed doubling or "gemination" of the "canals" of the planet Mars, and a clearer definition of the extraordinary satellites or moons of that body, which to all other telescopes are mere dots of light.

AT THE WARNER OBSERVATORY.

Prof. Swift Thinks the Canal Theory Will Be Finally Overthrown.

[SPECIAL TO THE WORLD.]

ROCHESTER, Aug. 1.—Prof. Lewis R. Swift, of the Warner Observatory, didn't go up to the observatory to-night in search of more

THEY TALKED A GREAT DEAL.

But the Anarchists, at Their Meeting, Said Very Little.

GLOCKNER BERKMAN AND HURLED ANATHEMAS AT CAPITAL.

If "Money Talks" the Meeting Would Have Been Silent, for the Total Collection Was 90 Cents—Lemm, Peukert, Miss Goldman and Others Fulminate—Only Three Policemen to Watch Nearly One Thousand People.

Very close on to a thousand Anarchists were packed into Military Hall, No. 193 Bowery, last night. There were a few curiosity seekers there, but they left very soon. The audience was not diminished, however, as others climbed up the stairs to fill the vacant places. Not more than seventy-five chairs were in the room, and the crowd had to stand. The sweat-room of a Turkish bath was never hotter than that room. Yet the majority of those present stood the killing heat for two hours.

They were there to hear the would-be assassin, Berkman, glorified, and they proposed to do it. The beer, exuding from their pores, trickled down their faces and drenched their heads with, with matted hair, they looked like men who would not only abolish all governmental law, but bath-tubs, too. A few were well dressed, yet they showed they were as rabid as the most unkempt. About twenty-five women were present.

The publicity given to the meeting warned the leaders that it would be unwise to give too free vent to their incendiary ideas. The police doubtless realized this, for only three officers in uniform were on duty at the hall, of whom but one understood German.

Anarchists don't have chairmen to preside at their meetings. They carry their opposition to existing forms even to the conduct of their assemblages, and parliamentary law is as hateful to them as the laws of property. There were no red flags to rouse the Anarchists' enthusiasm and there were no inscriptions on the walls. A few strips of the National colors left over from a Grand Army gathering were the decorations in the hall, and the Anarchists tried not to see them.

Dyer D. Lum, who has been arrested a score of times in Philadelphia on various charges, and who edited the Alarm, Anarchist Parson's paper, in Chicago when that worthy, now canonized by the Reds, was put in prison for the Haymarket bomb-throwing, got up and begged the audience to keep quiet.

"I am here as an American," he said, "and I am not afraid to speak my sentiments. It is time that we should abolish the system of slavery now dominating this country. When my friends were executed in Chicago the cry was, 'Let's run the Anarchists into their holes.' Well, if they prefer underground work let's give it to them."

This was greeted with loud applause by the few who could understand English.

"We do not meet here," he continued, "to sympathize with the poor workingmen of Homestead, but to glorify the hero who sold his life for the cause."

Joseph Peukert, the leader of the Autonomists, who is as violent as a rabid dog in the seclusion of a frequent beer-cellar, arose and began a disjointed harangue. His declamation was remarkable for the rapid translation from yells to whispers. Peukert has a short, black mustache and chin whiskers and a shifty eye. He is no Demosthenes unless the famous old Greek was something like Peukert before he put the pebbles in his mouth. Peukert seemed to please his fellow-Anarchists, though. He would creep up in a low voice and suddenly explode with a yell that tickled the reds immensely. Mr. Peukert sustained his reputation for caution—in the open. He harped on the wrongs of the workingman. He spoke in German.

"This immense audience," he began, "is proof of the great interest the American workingmen take in the battle of labor against capital."

With this little feeler he went on to say that under our system of government the law was given the power to starve the many. He spoke of the tyranny of the money power, and said it was ridiculous to talk of conspiracies. There was now no conspiracy; it was a rebellion of the people against capital. Thousands of heroes, he declared, were ready to jump into the breach and sacrifice their lives for the cause.

"Berkman's heart," he exclaimed, "was in the right spot. His example will be followed by hundreds. It was a noble example, well worthy of imitation. We fully indorse his deed. They say that Anarchists are bloodthirsty. We are not. It is the bloody barbarism of capital that we fight."

Peukert sat down, and Emma Goldman, the toothless queen of the Reds, got up. She was dressed in a cheap blue and white striped dress, wore her glasses, and her hair was as much awry as it is at 2 o'clock in the morning, when she holds court in "Tompkins

BECOMES AN EPISCOPALIAN.

Daniel Lord, of Lord, Day & Lord, Confirmed by Bishop Littlejohn.

Bishop Littlejohn's latest visit to the Far Rockaway parish was marked by an interesting and singular scene at the parish church. As the venerable Bishop arose to administer the right of confirmation to such as had applied, there advanced from the body of the church an old gentleman with silvery hair and bent form to take his stand with the children before the altar. He was of greater age than the Bishop himself and his face bore the marks of intellectuality, culture and refinement. The Bishop was amazed, for he knew that face. It was Daniel Lord, the millionaire, and executor of the Astor and Morgan estates, and the head of the firm of Lord, Day & Lord, which was established by the great jurist, Daniel Lord, his father.

Few in the church knew the man, for he lives a retired life at his magnificent home near Lawrence. Even the rector, Dr. Sayres, was surprised, although he had received some intimation from Mr. Lord that this step was in contemplation. Mr. Lord had been a Presbyterian, and his connection with the Presbyterians was well known. He was on terms of intimacy with Dr. William Adams, Roswell Hitchcock, Gov. Morgan, James Brown, the banker, and many other famous Presbyterians. His father was their advisor and the friend of Union Theological Seminary, which doubtless owes much of its prosperity to the Lord family. During the recent Briggs excitement the counsels of Mr. Lord and his firm were sought by Dr. Briggs and his friends.

After the ceremony the Bishop and the rector, Dr. Sayres, who is likewise a man of years, stood together and spoke with Mr. Lord. Mr. Lord explained that his thoughts had been dwelling for many months upon the step he had just taken. In his retirement at home, overlooking the sea, his mind had turned to religious subjects, to the relations of his soul to the world and to God, and he said this course seemed to offer him rest and peace and contentment in his last days.

BARON HIRSCH TO VISIT US.

The Philanthropist Plans a Tour of This Country.

Baron Hirsch is coming to America. He is now completely restored to health, and, according to a Paris letter in one of the local Hebrew newspapers, the famous philanthropist intends spending several months here.

It is expected he will cross the ocean in another month or six weeks, accompanied by two prominent New Yorkers now in Europe—J. Seligman and James Hofman—who are members of the Hirsch Relief Fund of America.

"Yes, I recently heard of Baron Hirsch's proposed visit to this country," said Manager Solomon yesterday at the Hirsch Fund headquarters, No. 36 Broadway. "Just before the Baron's pilgrim, about three weeks ago, I received information from an authoritative source that he was planning an extended trip to the United States and Canada.

"I have received no official communication on the subject at all. It was from a letter I received from a person who is kept well informed as to the Baron's movements. The Baron's interests are so great and he is such a prodigious worker that he finds little time for pleasure trips. But he has set his heart on paying us a visit."

Several prominent Hebrews when seen yesterday said that the Baron would receive a tremendous ovation from his brethren in this city, who have long solicited him to cross the ocean. It is more than likely also that the Baron will be received by New York society, as he is a warm personal friend of the Prince of Wales.

VITRIOL IN HER RIVAL'S FACE.

A Jealous Girl's Atrocious Act at a Southern Methodist Camp-Meeting.

[SPECIAL TO THE WORLD.]

DUBLIN, Ga., Aug. 1.—Daisy Johnson, a prepossessing young lady, was sitting in one of the tents at the Methodist camp-meeting at Lothair, Montgomery County, to-day, conversing with several friends, when Winnie Davis, another good-looking young woman, appeared, and, without any warning, dashed the contents of a bottle containing vitriol in Miss Johnson's face. Miss Johnson gave a piercing scream and began running around the crowded camp grounds. Miss Davis stood by watching her victim suffer until a large crowd gathered.

Four doctors are doing everything possible to lessen the young woman's suffering. Her

Both girls claimed the same admirer, and because the young lover paid his respects more frequently to Miss Johnson Miss Davis became offended. Sam Jones, the revivalist, is expected to-night and no doubt will handle the affair in his off-hand manner. Miss Davis has disappeared, but will be arrested to-night. Both girls belong to rich families.

SAYS SHE IS TOO GIDDY AT FIFTY.

Mrs. Oliver Elopes for the Second Time with the Same Lover.

[SPECIAL TO THE WORLD.]

KINGSTON, N. Y., Aug. 1.—Mrs. Everett Oliver, the wife of a prominent farmer living

NO MERCY ASKED OR SHOWN.

Furious Sarts Make Desperate War on Russians at Tashkend.

THE DEPUTY GOVERNOR STONED TO DEATH BY A MOB.

Seventy-five Killed and Hundreds Wounded in the Battle Between Natives and Troops — Hand-to-Hand Fighting in Mosques Hurriedly Turned Into Fortifications—Details of a Cholera Riot Hitherto Suppressed.

ST. PETERSBURG, Aug. 1.—Private letters from Tashkend, a town of Asiatic Russia, in Syr-Darya, report that the facts in regard to serious rioting there July 6, in connection with the cholera epidemic, were suppressed by the Government.

From these letters it is learned that the native Sarts, believing the doctors were poisoning cholera patients, determined to put an end to the murderous practices they imagined were employed. The wildest rumors were current of cruelties inflicted by physicians, causing the immediate death of patients, and these stories aroused the people's fury to the highest pitch.

Five thousand Sarts suddenly invaded the Russian quarter and wrecked the residence of Deputy Governor Poutintseff, who fled on the approach of the howling mob. His flight was discovered and he was overtaken in the street by an infuriated crowd, and was shockingly maltreated. He pleaded for mercy, but in vain.

Finally he was flung to the ground, and after being trampled upon was stoned to death, his features being mutilated beyond recognition.

The authorities took immediate steps to suppress disorder and protect other officials. A body of troops was hurried to the scene under orders to adopt most rigorous measures in dealing with rioters.

Arriving where the defiant Sarts were assembled the troops opened fire, killing several.

The Sarts, armed with pistols and daggers and undaunted by the deadly fire, made a desperate resistance.

The two forces closed in on each other and a furious hand-to-hand fight ensued, the maddened Sarts, when their pistols were emptied, slashing savagely with their daggers and doing much execution with those weapons.

The drilled and better armed soldiers were unable to overcome their fanatical opponents, but after being reinforced by a body of Cossacks they succeeded in quelling the riot.

The Sarts, not disheartened by repulse, soon prepared to resume the attack. They took possession of the mosques, converted them into temporary forts and defied the authorities.

A large number of soldiers were despatched to dislodge them, but this was no easy task, as the Sarts were ensconced behind protecting walls and could shoot down the soldiers while they themselves were in a practically safe position. The Sarts made a stanch resistance, firing from loopholes with telling effect.

The troops at last concentrated and making a grand assault carried the mosques. A scene of carnage ensued. Although the Sarts found they could not cope with their military opponents, no quarter was asked or given, and, defiant to the end, they fell by scores before the soldiers.

Sixty Sarts were killed and hundreds wounded, many most grievously. The soldiers suffered heavily, fifteen being killed and many wounded.

So great was the excitement the authorities found it necessary to strongly patrol the town day and night.

Many arrests have been made, and there is no doubt that an example will be made of all convicted.

It is feared that there may be a renewal of the troubles, and precautions have been taken accordingly. The troops were largely reinforced and everything done to put a summary and effectual end to further uprisings.

Tashkend, the capital of Russian Turkestan, has a population now estimated at 100,000. It is one of the largest and most important cities in Central Asia. Like all old cities in asterized by the special trades carried on in each. Asiatic Tashkend in 1871 had 78,180 inhabitants, mostly Sarts, with a few Uzbegs, Kirghises, Hebrews, Russians and Germans. A depression in the southeast is occupied by Russian Tashkend, dating from 1865, which has clean, broad streets lined with poplars, the low, pleasant-looking houses being surrounded by gardens. In 1875 its population, exclusive of military, was 4,800, mostly Russians.

The Sarts, who played a prominent political part in Turkestan until the Russian conquest, are of Turco-Tartar origin and speak a pure Jagatai dialect, but they are mixed to a great extent with Persians, Kirghises and Mongols. They are sub-divided into clans and lead a semi-nomadic life.

When settled they are peaceful [illegible]

881014026

The Emma Goldman Papers

[Excerpt from Lecture] They Talked a Great Deal / Emma Goldman.– p. 1 ; 43 cm.
In The World. –(Aug. 2, 1892)
Obtained from the University of California, Berkeley. Institutional Location: Doe Library.

ED BY SCHIAPARELLI.

drawings of Schiaparelli. The Fountain of Youth, a large, dark region heretofore seen single, now appears double through the large refractor.

But most remarkable of all are three or more very prominent bright projections on the southwest limb of Mars, visible several nights three weeks ago. They will probably be visible on the southeast limb in two or three weeks, when it is hoped to determine more fully their character. Apparently these projections arise from very bright regions in the planet. Whether they are high mountains or are due to something else it is now impossible to say. Perhaps they are the gilded domes of what are the Pulitzer Buildings of Mars, or perhaps they are gigantic signals to Earth.

Up to the present time Schiaparelli's canals have not been seen double. Drawings of the planet are made on each clear evening. These drawings will finally be converted into a single map at the close of the summer observations.

Last night the south polar cap was very conspicuous, and numerous dark markings were visible. The unique spectacle of markings in the snow caps has been noted, not only with the large telescope by Schaberik and Campbell, but also with a twelve-inch glass by Barnard, who said some time ago that on one night a dark streak would appear across the polar cap, and that there then would follow the separation and then the disappearance of a large portion of the polar cap, leaving two white spots.

The discoveries just made at Mount Hamilton are interesting and scientifically valuable. They are, in brief, a contradiction of the supposed doubling or "geminations" of the "canals" of the planet Mars, and a clearer definition of the extraordinary satellites or moons of that body, which to all other telescopes are mere dots of light.

AT THE WARNER OBSERVATORY.

Prof. Swift Thinks the Canal Theory Will Be Finally Overthrown.

[SPECIAL TO THE WORLD.]

ROCHESTER, Aug. 1.—Prof. Lewis R. Swift, of the Warner Observatory, didn't go up to his observatory to-night in search of more revelations from Mars. The sky was overcast with clouds and not a star was visible in the sky. All last night, however, the professor passed in the observatory in company with Prof. D. P. Todd, director of Amherst College Observatory. A bar was placed across the eye-piece of the instrument to keep the extraordinarily brilliant light of Mars from blending the sought for objects, and the scientists plainly saw the satellites. One of the satellites was followed until it was within five minutes of disappearing behind the planet.

After noting the date relative to the satellites, Prof. Swift examined the ephemeris in the nautical almanac. The data of both agreed, thus proving that the objects were not stars. As the satellites were discovered before the ephemeris was examined there could be no delusion. The snow zones were very conspicuous at the south pole, but no particular markings on Mars were visible.

There was a bright moon, however, and this undoubtedly interfered with seeing the spot on Mars. As a result of the moon's brilliancy it was necessary to take the observations before Mars got to its meridian.

"I was surprised that we saw the satellites," said Prof. Swift this evening; "we didn't expect to see them, as Mars does not reach its nearest proximity to the earth until about Aug. 4. I think I could have seen them ten days ago had I looked. They are difficult little objects to see, and we had to look a long time before we found them. They will be visible through my big telescope for a fortnight yet, and after that they will not be seen again for about sixteen years.

"I am quite confident that within the next two weeks new revelations will be made concerning Mars. I presume that some of the [illegible] will be shattered and they will be proved not to exist. There are almost too many of them."

FOUND A BABY ON THE BED.

It Was Thrown Through a Second-Story Window from the Street.

Mary Sipeler keeps a candy store at No. 106 Market street, and occupies the floor above the store as sleeping apartments.

She was in the store about 11 o'clock last night when she heard a noise overhead, and on going upstairs found a two-weeks' old baby on her bed. It had been tossed in through the open window from the street.

It was a girl baby and Mrs. Sipeler says it purse, tumbled down their backs and drenched their hands much, with matted hair, they looked like men who would not only abolish all governmental law, but both-licks, too. A few were well dressed, yet they showed they were as rabid as the most unkempt. About twenty-five women were present.

---

The publicity given to the meeting warned the leaders that it would be unwise to give too free vent to their incendiary ideas. The police doubtless realized this, for only three officers in uniform were on duty at the hall, of whom but one understood German.

Anarchists don't have chairmen to preside at their meetings. They carry their opposition to existing forms even to the conduct of their assemblages, and parliamentary law is as hateful to them as the laws of property. There were no red flags to rouse the Autonomists' enthusiasm and there were no inscriptions on the walls. A few strips of the National colors left over from a Grand Army gathering were the decorations in the hall, and the Anarchists tried not to see them.

Dyer D. Lum, who has been arrested a score of times in Philadelphia on various charges, and who edited the Alarm, Anarchist Parson's paper, in Chicago when that worthy, now canonized by the Reds, was put in prison for the Haymarket bomb-throwing, got up and begged the audience to keep quiet.

"I am here as an American," he said, "and I am not afraid to speak my sentiments. It is time that we should abolish the system of slavery now dominating this country. When my friends were executed in Chicago the cry was, 'Let's run the Anarchists into their holes.' Well, if they prefer underground work let's give it to them."

This was greeted with loud applause by the few who could understand English.

"We do not meet here," he continued, "to subscribe with the poor workingmen of Homestead, but to glorify the hero who sold his life for the cause."

Joseph Peukert, the leader of the Autonomists, who is as violent as a rabid dog in the confusion of a guarded beer-cellar, arose and began a disjointed harangue. His declamation was remarkable for the rapid translation from yells to whispers. Peukert has a short, black mustache and chin whiskers and a shifty eye. He is no Demosthenes unless the famous old Greek was something like Peukert before he put the pebbles in his mouth. Peukert seemed to please his fellow-Anarchists, though. He would creep up in a low voice and suddenly explode with a yell that tickled the reds immensely. Mr. Peukert sustained his reputation for caution—in the open. He harped on the wrongs of the workingman. He spoke in German.

"This immense audience," he began, "is proof of the great interest the American workingmen take in the battle of labor against capital."

With this little feeler he went on to say that under our system of government the few are given the power to starve the many. He spoke of the tyranny of the money power, and said it was ridiculous to talk of conspiracies. There was now no conspiracy; it was a rebellion of the people against capital. Thousands of heroes, he declared, were ready to jump into the breach and sacrifice their lives for the cause.

"Berkman a heart," he exclaimed, "was in the right spot. His example will be followed by hundreds. It was a noble example, well worthy of imitation. We fully indorse his deed. They say that Anarchists are bloodthirsty. We are not. It is the bloody barbarism of capital that we fight."

Peukert sat down, and Emma Goldman, the toothless queen of the Reds, got up. She was dressed in a cheap blue and white striped dress, wore her glasses, and her hair was as much awry as it is at 2 o'clock in the morning, when she holds court in "Tough Michel's" beer cellar.

"I hope you will all be quiet," she said. "There are detectives here and spies of the police, ready to kill the speakers."

She didn't look a bit frightened. She seemed rather to court being slaughtered, and the way she clinched her left fist and pounded the hot air was enough to make any policeman think twice before he arrested her. Standing up there on the platform her figure appeared squatty, but that may have been due to the dress she wore, which would have fitted a woman twice her girth. Every once in a while she would take a sip out of the same glass of water that had moistened the lips of the other speakers. That glass of water wasn't drained at the finish. Here are some of the things this Anarchist Cleopatra said:

"America is no better than Russia—it is worse, cloaked as it is with its sham republicanism. The report of Berkman's shot will be heard all over the world and echo down the ages. Other deeds like his will follow until capital is dead. His bullets did not kill, but others are being moulded and they will fly with surer aim."

She spoke in German and was the best speaker of the evening. She lauded her lover to the skies and seemed disappointed at not receiving more applause. After she finished many of the audience left.

Dr. Merlino, an Italian, who edits Solidarità, spoke in the same vein in broken English. Then a man named Kotz, somewhat better dressed than the others, closed the speechmaking with a harangue in German, which seemed to fall rather flat. Some one said that was all, and everybody left the hall.

But all was not over yet. Fritz Oerter, who shared the tiny apartments of her majesty on Fifth street, and one other had stood at the door shaking their hats at those who came in and went out. After her speech Miss Goldman circulated among the audience, nodding to one and smiling to another. She continued this until all went out, when she beckoned to Oerter. The other doorkeeper had stepped out and into Oerter's. They counted the money—48 cents—and Miss Goldman went away. Oerter put it into his pocket. Later Tough Michel put it into his.

The Same Kind of Talk in Newark.

NEWARK, Aug. 1.—There are about five hundred Anarchists in this city, of whom one Spielmeyer is the chief local leader. After a period of seeming inactivity these Anarchists have lately grown active. They held a meeting at No. 103 Prince street last night. Ulenmus Katz, of New York City, made a speech. In his harangue he said:

"May the spirit of Alexander Berkman serve Frick-h. He is a noble man, indeed, to imitate the doings of our Chicago martyrs. I trust that in the near future we [illegible] had been awaiting for many months upon the hill just above. In his enthusiasm at home, overlooking the sea, his mind had turned to religious subjects, to the reclusion of his soul to the world and to God, and he said this course seemed to offer him rest and peace and contentment in his last days.

---

BARON HIRSCH TO VISIT US.

The Philanthropist Plans a Tour of This Country.

Baron Hirsch is coming to America. He is now completely restored to health, and, according to a Paris letter in one of the local Hebrew newspapers, the famous philanthropist intends spending several months here.

It is expected he will cross the ocean in another month or six weeks, accompanied by two prominent New Yorkers now in Europe—J. Seligman and James Hoffman—who are members of the Hirsch Relief Fund of America.

"Yes, I recently heard of Baron Hirsch's proposed visit to this country," said Manager Solomon yesterday at the Hirsch Fund headquarters, No. 38 Broadway. "Just before the Baron's illness, about three weeks ago, I received information from an authoritative source that he was planning an extended trip to the United States and Canada.

"I have received no official communication on the subject at all. It was from a letter I received from a person who is kept well informed as to the Baron's movements. The Baron's interests are so great and he is such a prodigious worker that he finds little time for pleasure trips. But he has set his heart on paying us a visit."

Several prominent Hebrews when seen yesterday said that the Baron would receive a tremendous ovation from his brethren in this city, who have long solicited him to cross the ocean. It is more than likely also that the Baron will be received by New York society, as he is a warm personal friend of the Prince of Wales.

VITRIOL IN HER RIVAL'S FACE.

A Jealous Girl's Atrocious Act at a Southern Methodist Camp-Meeting.

[SPECIAL TO THE WORLD.]

DEATUR, Ga., Aug. 1.—Daisy Johnson, a prepossessing young lady, was sitting in one of the tents at the Methodist camp-meeting at Lothair, Montgomery County, to-day, conversing with several friends, when Winnie Davis, another good-looking young woman, appeared, and, without any warning, dashed the contents of a bottle containing vitriol in Miss Johnson's face. Miss Johnson gave a piercing scream and began running around the crowded camp grounds. Miss Davis stood by watching her victim suffer until a large crowd gathered.

Four doctors are doing everything possible to lessen the young woman's suffering. Her features are horribly disfigured.

Both girls claimed the same admirer, and because the young lover paid his attentions more frequently to Miss Johnson Miss Davis became offended. Sam Jones, the revivalist, is expected to-night and no doubt will handle the affair in his off-hand manner. Miss Davis has disappeared, but will be arrested to-night. Both girls belong to rich families.

SAYS SHE IS TOO GIDDY AT FIFTY.

Mrs. Oliver Elopes for the Second Time with the Same Lover.

[SPECIAL TO THE WORLD.]

KINGSTON, N. Y., Aug. 1.—Mrs. Everett Oliver, the wife of a prominent farmer living near Slingerland's, has deserted her husband for the second time within a year. Mrs. Oliver is about fifty years of age, and is the mother of eleven children. It is believed that she has eloped for the second time with a man named John F. Jones, who is fully fifteen years her junior. When Mrs. Oliver eloped with Jones before they went to Susquehanna, Pa., whither the wronged husband followed them, and after earnest pleading and promises forgave his wife and took her back home with him.

Since Mrs. Oliver's last disappearance it has been learned that she went to Albany and drew from a bank nearly $100 that she had deposited. It was also discovered that a few days before she left home she sent a letter to Jones at Jersey City. The inference is that the latter contained instructions for him to meet her. Mr. Oliver says she is too giddy for him and he will forgive her no more.

MADE HIM RUN TILL HE DROPPED.

Two West Point Cadets Punished for Hazing a Plebe.

[SPECIAL TO THE WORLD.]

NEWBURG, Aug. 1.—Cadets Elting and Langdon, both of New York State, have been disciplined at West Point for hazing plebes. Cadet Canfield, of the new class, one day recently reported at the hospital in a state of exhaustion and told the surgeon he had been "double-stepped" until he was ill. Investigation showed that Elting and Langdon, who are members of the third class, were Canfield's persecutors.

Elting was sentenced to suspension for six months and will join the fourth or plebe class, and Capt. Langdon [illegible] is confined to the camp limits for the summer and will forfeit two weeks of his furlough next year. Canfield was unable to do duty for a week after reporting at hospital.

Senator Hill to Go Yachting.

Senator David B. Hill arrived at the Hoffman House last night from Arverne-by-the-Sea and spent the evening at a theatre. Quite a crowd of politicians and newspaper men awaited his return, but he refused to talk politics. He will start [illegible] days' cruise up the Sound on [illegible] Bayard as the guest of [illegible] will be accompanied by Col. [illegible] road Commissioner Samuel A. [illegible] Utica, James W. Hinkley, of [illegible]

Persians fury to the highest pitch.

Five thousand Sarts suddenly invaded the Russian quarter and wrecked the residence of Deputy Governor Poutiatseff, who fled on the approach of the howling mob. His flight was discovered and he was overtaken in the street by an infuriated crowd, and was shockingly maltreated. He pleaded for mercy, but in vain.

Finally he was flung to the ground, and after being trampled upon was stoned to death, his features being mutilated beyond recognition.

The authorities took immediate steps to suppress disorder and protect other officials. A body of troops was hurried to the scene under orders to adopt most rigorous measures in dealing with rioters.

Arriving where the defiant Sarts were assembled the troops opened fire, killing several.

The Sarts, armed with pistols and daggers and undaunted by the deadly fire, made a desperate resistance.

The two forces closed in on each other and a furious hand-to-hand fight ensued, the maddened Sarts, when their pistols were emptied, slashing savagely with their daggers and doing much execution with those weapons.

The drilled and better armed soldiers were unable to overcome their fanatical opponents, but after being reinforced by a body of Cossacks they succeeded in quelling the riot.

The Sarts, not disheartened by repulse, soon prepared to resume the attack. They took possession of the mosques, converted them into temporary forts and defied the authorities.

A large number of soldiers were despatched to dislodge them, but this was no easy task, as the Sarts were ensconced behind protecting walls and could shoot down the soldiers while they themselves were in a practically safe position. The Sarts made a sturdy resistance, firing [illegible] with telling effect.

The troops at last concentrated and, making a grand assault, carried the mosques. A scene of carnage ensued. Although the Sarts found they could not cope with their military opponents, no quarter was asked or given, and, defiant to the end, they fell by scores before the soldiers.

Sixty Sarts were killed and hundreds wounded, many most grievously. The soldiers suffered heavily, fifteen being killed and many wounded.

So great was the excitement the authorities found it necessary to strongly patrol the town day and night.

Many arrests have been made, and there is no doubt that an example will be made of all convicted.

It is feared that there may be a renewal of the troubles, and precautions have been taken accordingly. The troops were largely reinforced and everything done to put a summary and effectual end to further uprisings.

Tashkend, the capital of Russian Turkestan, has a population now estimated at 100,000. It is one of the largest and most important cities in Central Asia. Like all old cities in Asia, it is subdivided into sections, characterized by the special trades carried on in each. Asiatic Tashkend in 1871 had 78,190 inhabitants, mostly Sarts, with a few Uzbegs, Kirghizes, Hebrews, Russians and Germans. A depression in the southeast is occupied by Russian Tashkend, dating from 1865, which has clean, broad streets lined with poplars, the low, pleasant-looking houses being surrounded by gardens. In 1875 its population, exclusive of military, was 4,800, mostly Russians.

The Uzbegs, who played a predominant political part in Turkestan before the Russian conquest, are of Turco-Tartar origin and speak a pure Jagatai dialect, but they are mixed to a great extent with Persians, Kirghizes and Mongols. They are sub-divided into clans and lead a semi-nomadic life.

When settled they are mostly designated as Sarts—a name which has reference to mode of life rather than anthropological classification, although a much stronger admixture of Iranian blood is evident in the Sarts. Tardanchi ("laborer" in Chinese) is the name given to the Sarts who settled in Kolja, where, as elsewhere, they are usually the laboring and lowest part of the population.

CHOLERA APPEARS AT TOMSK.

The Epidemic Abating at Baku and People Returning Home.

ST. PETERSBURG, Aug. 1.—Cholera has made its appearance in the prison at Tomsk, capital of the government of that name in West Siberia. Already ten cases of the disease and eight deaths have been reported by the prison authorities.

The cholera epidemic is abating in Baku and the people who had fled from the place in alarm are now returning to their homes.

NAPLES, Aug. 1.—The British steamer Albany, from Tagaroy, which was reported to have sailed from Malta on Saturday with two cases of cholera on board, arrived at Torre Annunziata, in this province, to-day. She reported two deaths from cholera during the voyage. She has been sent to Asinara, a small island off Sardinia, where she will be quarantined.

WRECK ON THE "BIG FOUR."

An East-Bound Passenger Train in Collision—Five Cars Burned.

ST. LOUIS, Aug. 1.—It is reported here that the limited east-bound passenger train on the "Big Four," which left here at 4 P. M., collided with a freight train at Edwardsville Junction, Ill.

The engineer and fireman were killed and a large number of passengers injured, several fatally.

Despatches have been sent to this city and to Alton for physicians.

"Deacon" White's Birthday Rehearsal.

[SPECIAL TO THE WORLD.]

ROCKLAND, Aug. 1.—A. V. White, of York, [illegible] Lighting Club Monday

The Emma Goldman Papers
900625006
[Attention! Comrades and Friends! In German] Aufruf! Genossen und Freunde! / Emma Goldman. — p. 1 ; 32 cm. In Der Anarchist [New York]. — (Aug. 13, 1892).
Obtained from the Columbia University Libraries.

Der Anarchist.

ANARCHISTISCH-COMMUNISTISCHES ORGAN

Abonnementspreis: Ganzjährlich $1.60. | Erscheint woechentlich. | Abonnementspreis. Ganzjährlich $1.60.

JAHRGANG IV. — No. 31 | NEW YORK, 13. August 1892. | Preis 3 Cents.

Aufruf!

Genossen und Freunde!

Der heldenmüthige Versuch des Genossen Berkmann, die menschliche Gesellschaft von einer Bestie zu befreien, hat in allen hoch und edelfühlenden Menschen ein sympathisches Echo gefunden, und gewiss sind Viele, wenn nicht Alle bereit, diese ihre Sympathie dadurch auszudrücken, für die Erleichterung des in den Klauen kapitalistischen Schergenthumes befindlichen Opfers ihr Scherflein beizutragen.

Genosse Berkmann ist ebenso wie wir gesonnen, die bodenlosen Säckel der herrschenden Gerechtigkeitshüter und ihrer Zuhälter nicht mit sauer verdienten Arbeitergroschen zu füllen. Aber Berkmann ist gänzlich mittellos im Kerker und daher ausser Stande, die nothwendigsten Lebensbedürfnisse — ausser mit ungemessbarer Gefängnisskost — zu befriedigen. Eine Anzahl Genossen hat es daher übernommen, den Genossen Berkmann durch Collecten mit Mitteln zu versehen, sich mit menschliche Nahrung versehen zu können. Zu diesem Zwecke sind Sammellisten angefertigt worden, welche allen Genossen zur Verfügung gestellt worden, die Gelder zu sammeln bereit sind.

Die Eingänge und Verwendung der Gelder wird im „Anarchist" quittirt.

Gelder und Nachfragen nach Sammellisten sind entweder an die Adresse des „Anarchist" zu richten.

Für die Unterstützungs Gruppe
E. GOLDMANN.

Lehrreiche Erscheinungen.

Die Wirkung der Berkmann'schen Schüsse auf Monsieur Vampyr Frick, ist so vielseitig und mannigfaltig, dass wir noch niemals unseren eigenen Mangel an den nöthigen Fähigkeiten, um der bestehenden Gesellschaft voll und ganz die Maske abzureissen, so bitter empfunden haben, als gerade jetzt, wo thatsächlich der ganze Mist von Wahn und Vorurtheilen, welche die bestehende Gesellschaft zusammenhalten aufgewühlt, zu den Sternen aufstinken.

Geniestreiche vermöchten zur Stunde, wo der ganze Mist von Wahn und Vorurtheilen so offen zu Tage liegt, denselben aus den Volksmassen hinwegzufegen und die Schmach der Sklaverei würde für immer ein Ende nehmen. Allein was wir vermögen, ist eben nur Lilliputaner-Arbeit.

Wir sind ein Proletarier, d. h. gesellschaftliche Paria, Ausgestossene von der herrschenden Klasse um alle Antheile an den geistigen und kulturellen Schätze der Menschheit beraubt und von frühester Jugend gezwungen in den harten Existenzkampfe um das kärgliche Stückchen Brod, in harten Frohndienste für die herrschenden Parasitenbrut, weder Zeit, Gelegenheit noch Mittel fanden, uns die Fähigkeiten anzueignen in klaren treffenden Worten all das wiederzugeben was wir sehen, beobachten, fühlen und empfinden.

Doch, wir dürfen deshalb doch nicht verzagen! Wenn wir wenigstens zu dicken Seilen zusammengewundenen, einzeln schwachen Drähte, die Riesenlast der Wunder moderner Baukunst — wie die Brooklyn Brücke etc. — tragen und besser tragen, als wären die Seile aus einem massiven Stück, so können auch viele „Lilliputaner" wenn zu einem Ganzen verbunden, diese Titanenarbeit bewältigen.

Noch niemals ist die ganze Absurdität und Ungeheuerlichkeit der bestehenden Gesellschaftsorganisation so drastisch, für jeden nur halbwegs denkenden Menschen so greifbar zu Tage getreten, als in allen den Wirkungen und Erscheinungen, welche der Kampf der Carnegi'schen Lohnsklaven mit ihren Ausbeutern hervorgebracht.

Während auf der einen Seite jede heuchlerische Maske fiel und sich die von uns längst erkannte Thatsache mit aller Brutalität enthüllte, dass der gesammte Machtapparat der Gesellschaft (Staat, Gesetze, Armee etc.) nur den Zweck hat, die Volksblutsauger und Unterdrücker zu beschützen und das Volk in deren Abhängigkeit und Knechtschaft zu erhalten; enthüllte sich auf der anderen Seite aber auch die ganze eisige Gletschermasse von Unverstand, Wahn und Vorurtheilen, von welchen die Volksmassen befangen sind und von den herrschenden Klassen systematisch erhalten werden.

Der natürliche, einfache gesunde Menschenverstand der Volksmasse wird fortwährend durch eine Legion bezahlter oder freiwilliger Demagogenknechte erstickt; wenn immer sich derselbe auf einen Augenblick durch die überwältigende Logik der Thatsachen Bahn bricht. Und hier ist für jeden aufrichtigen Menschen- und Freiheitsfreund die grösste und wichtigste Arbeit; den Pesthauch sophistischer Verdummungskunst der Demagogen unschädlich zu machen und dem gesunden Menschenverstande zum Siege zu verhelfen.

Wer sich einigermassen die Vorgänge und Erscheinungen der Lohnsklavenkämpfe der letzten Wochen objectiv vor Augen führt; der wird gleich uns von der eminenten Nothwendigkeit überzeugt werden, dass alle Kräfte und Mittel dazu aufgeboten werden müssen die Volksmassen von dem wahren Wesen des bestehenden Gesellschaftssystemes, sowie über seine natürlichen Menschenrechte aufzuklären und in ihnen die Gefühle wahrer Menschenwürde zu erwecken. Nur dann, wenn wir diese unsere Pflicht voll und ganz erfüllen, können wir Anspruch auf das Prädikat „Revolutionäre" erheben! Nur dann wird das Demagogenthum mit seinen Pesthauche den gesunden Menschenverstand nicht mehr zu ersticken vermögen.

Man betrachte sich das Bild, das sich da in den letzten Wochen vor aller Blicken entrollt, genau:

Eine zu Tausenden zählende Bevölkerung theilsiger Menschen, welche fast von allen Genüssen der Cultur und des Fortschrittes beraubt. Millionenfache Reichthum durch ihre Arbeit hervorgebracht, ist mit ihren, ihrer Kinder und Familien Existenz der Willkür einer Bande gesetzlich privilegirter, aller menschlichen Gefühle barer Blutsauger preisgegeben. Diese Bevölkerung lebt jedoch in dem Wahne, dass sie im Staate, — diesen „freien Staaten" — mit dem Millionär gleiche „gesetzliche" Rechte haben und sie setzt der Gewalt ihrer Ausbeuter die Gewalt gegenüber. Sie siegte! Darauf kommt der Staat als Repräsentat aller gesetzlichen Rechte mit seinen mächtigen Machtmitteln, nimmt Partei für die Ausbeuter und zeigt den Arbeitern mit brutalster Gewalt, dass sie im Staate kein anderes Recht haben, als zu jeder, von den Ausbeutern diktirten Bedingung zu arbeiten, oder — ohne Murren zu verhungern!

Sie werden von den Dienern des Staates „gesetzlich" als „Mörder" in die Kerker geschleppt, die „gesetzlichen" Mörder machen sich zum Sprunge bereit, ihre Opfer zu erwürgen; und trotzalledem ist der Wahn von ihrer „gesetzlichen" Rechten noch nicht verschwunden.... Es gelingt dem Demagogenthum, das schändlich genarrte Volk aufs neu zu täuschen und es will absolut sein Recht, sein natürliches Recht — nur auf gesetzlichem Wege erringen. Es klagt auch seine Peiniger und Tyrannen bei den Gerichten des Mordes an. Mehr braucht die herrschende Raubgesellschaft nicht. Mit Vergnügen wird sie diese Komödie inscenirt und ein Prozess-Gaukelspiel aufführen, in welchen die tausendfachen Mörder Frick und seine Helfer und Helfershelfer, als des Mordes Angeklagte figuriren um der ganzen Arbeiterschaft den „gesetzlichen" Beweiss zu liefern, dass die Frick unschuldig, und einzig und allein die Arbeiter die „Schuldigen" sind! — —

Welch ein entsetzliches Bild! Welch ein Abgrund von Unwissenheit, Wahn und geistiger Verkrüppelung spiegelt sich aus diesen Erscheinungen!?

Aus allen Herzen der Ausgebeuteten erschallten Jubelrufe über den kühnen Kampf mit der herrschenden Gewalt am 6 Juli. Ein gleicher Jubelruf ertönte nach den Schüssen Berkmann's auf das Scheusal Frick. Aber das waren nur Augenblicke in welcher der einfache gesunde Menschenverstand in den Arbeitermassen zum Ausdruck zu kommen vermochte. Nur zu bald wird derselbe von dem Pesthauche des Demagogenthumes erstickt; und die Massen singen wieder das alte Trapezpara von den „gesetzlichen" Mitteln und Rechten.

Das ganze Schmarotzerthum sucht den betrogenen Volk jetzt schon auf der ganzen Linie weiss zu machen: lass die Gesetze gut, aber nur schlecht gehandhabt wurden, weil diese oder jene Partei am Ruder sei. Die beste Waffe sei der „Stimmzettel" um diese oder jene Partei an's Ruder zu bringen, die es „besser machen will".

Bei der derzeitigen geistigen Verfassung der Arbeitermassen hierzulande helfen keine bombastische Schlagworte, für die Kalauer, oder humorist Kraftausdrücke die Arbeitermassen zu einer besseren Einsicht zugelangen, hier kann nur ernste gründlich aufklärende Belehrung zum Ziele führen.

Aus uns Allen, die wir die volle Befreiung, die Menschwerdung aller Menschen auf unserer Fahne geschrieben, ist es, ungeachtet aller Schwierigkeiten und Gefahren durch Wort und That diese Belehrung zu geben und damit den verpestesten, aller des Abscheulichsten Demagogenthumes [illegible] brechen.

Jener der von der Richtigkeit dieser Ansicht überzeugt, verwende seine ganze Kraft und Energie zu diesen Zwecke und so werden Lilliputaner Titanenarbeit verrichten.

A. S.

890110001

The Emma Goldman Papers

[Excerpt from Lecture] The Demonstration of the Unemployed / Emma Goldman. – pp. 1-2 ; 28 cm. In The World. –(Aug. 20, 1893).

Obtained from the University of California, Berkeley. Institutional Location: Doe Library.

VE CENTS. NEW YORK, SUNDAY, AUGUST 20, 1893. PRICE FIVE CENTS. 36 PAGES.

GALLAGHER AND THE EXPERTS.

ay His Knowledge of Medicine Helped Him Simulate Insanity.

DON, Aug. 19.—The false report that homas Gallagher, the Irish-American, een released from Portland Prison in quence of mental derangement has the publication of considerable al literature concerning his condition onduct since convicted. He has been ned repeatedly by experts since 1888. Blandford, Sir J. R. Bennett and Dr. after making examinations, agreed Dr. Gallagher was merely simulating l and physical illness. The prisoner's edge of medicine, they said, enabled do this with exceptional cleverness. James Bennett's private report, made 9, stated that he found Gallagher off chicken and potatoes, for he had stomach trouble so well that the officials had concluded he was unable st ordinary prison fare.

latest report made by Dr. Tuke says last Gallagher has been induced to his simulation of insanity and go to ith the other prisoners. He is now, . Tuke, healthy and industrious.

A COMMERCIAL CONFEDERACY.

Lewelling's Movement to Call a Convention Commended.

KA, Kan., Aug. 19.—The mail to-day t a great many letters to Gov. ng commending the movement to call ention of the West and South for the ing of organizing "A Commercial eracy."

of the letters request that copies of ition to Gov. Stone, of Missouri, be ited throughout the State in order ey may be read by all the people and n additional impetus be given to the ent.

DROWNED IN A SEWER.

End of Charles Wiltsie, a Newburg Laborer.

SPECIAL TO THE WORLD.

BURG, N. Y., Aug. 19. Charles , for years past employed on works here, met a terrible death ternoon during the storm several days a gang of workmen, ing of Charles Wiltsie, Frank r, Peter Brickland, William n and Ralph Reilly have been re the main trunk sewer. When orm came on Reilly, who was on at the manhole, called to the men hey must come out at once. n was already outside. He and raised Hunter and Brickland to rface. Wiltsie declined to come till he had finished a section of ular.

ad scarcely announced his deter- on when the volume of water g into the main from every sec- the city broke away the tem- bulkhead that had been con- d for their protection and swept r, to the river.

body was recovered half an hour the outlet of the sewer, where been caught by a gate. The skull ractured and the body badly d. He was sixty years old and

COULDN'T MAKE RAIN.

Connecticut's Ruralists Send Up Big Dynamite Balloons in Vain.

SHOWERS FALL ALMOST EVERYWHERE ELSE IN THE STATE.

One of Five Flimsy Bags Pauses Over the Heads of Scared Farmers.

The Tobacco Growers Especially Had Great Hopes for the Success of the Experiments — The Exploding Cartridges Seemed to Frighten the Clouds Away—It Was as Good as Fourth of July So Far as Noise Went —The Balloons Were Made of the Flimsiest Material, and if One Had Fallen the Consequences Might Have Been Awful—The Combination of Burning Sponges, Dynamite and Tissue Paper Isn't the Safest Thing in the World.

NORTH BLOOMFIELD, Conn., Aug. 19. The effort of the Connecticut Valley tobacco-growers to dynamite a rain-storm out of the dry and coppery August sky began about 10 o'clock this morning, and continued after a desultory fashion until midday. Mr. Jerome E. Fuller and Mr. Eugene Clark, of Hartford, were the leading spirits in the enterprise although all the tobacco-raising farmers for miles around were interested both from curiosity and financially.

Neither in the condition nor the position was the experiment to-day a success. Of the fifty thirty-inch balloons each bearing a half-pound charge of dynamite that were to be sent up only five were sent, and of the ten dynamite cartridges that were to be fired only six were exploded. The result, so far as there was a result, was the entire dissipation of some clouds that had looked rainy promising during the forenoon and the appearance of a very flushed and florid looking sun that seemed to be roughly demanding what all the rumpus was about.

The first balloon that was sent up was merely a fizz to test the air currents and to test the capacity of the little airship to carry the requisite load of dynamite and exploding tackle. This was a very pretty and satisfactory event. The balloon was sent up from near the field hands' boarding-house of Mr. Charles Tarry, and it soared straight skyward, shot into a low, watery looking cloud that was sailing over and

THE DEMONSTRATION OF THE UNEMPLOYED.

Scenes and Incidents at the Meeting of the Workingmen in Union Square Last Night.

BARONDESS ADDRESSES THE CROWD NEAR THE CLOSE OF THE MEETING.

The police of this fair city were ready for trouble yesterday, and they expected a great deal of it. The workingmen out of work were to parade and meet in Union Square, and the earthly Providence of her own ability is accurate. It is a fact that the great police arrangements made yesterday were in her honor exclusively. It is a fact that two detectives spent the day following her about. It is a fact that the District Attorney's office was represented by [illegible] thing up on the fire escapes should her name out prominently and all things conspired to make the young lady [illegible] she was a personage. She did [illegible] very much set up by it all. [illegible]

BEST COPY AVAILABLE

890110001

The Emma Goldman Papers

[Excerpt from Lecture] The Demonstration of the Unemployed / Emma Goldman.— pp. 1-2 ; 28 cm. In The World. —(Aug. 20, 1893).

Obtained from the University of California, Berkeley. Institutional Location: Doe Library.

...ing into the main from every acc... of the city broke away the tem... bulkhead that had been con... for their protection and swept ... on to the river.

body was recovered half an hour at the outlet of the sewer, where ... been caught by a gat... fractured and the body badly ed. He was sixty years old, and s a widow and four grown children ... but twenty-five years ago, a young while making repairs on the same ... was swept away during a storm, ... made the passage in safety and rescued.

...tsie was noted for his habit of al... having one little piece of work to ... and invariably worked long after ...lay was ended in completing it.

...KNOWN, ALONE AND INSANE.

...ell-Dressed Woman Found in a ...ttiable Condition in the Park.

...k Policeman J. F. Ryan found a ...g woman in the thick shrubbery the bridle road at the Seventh ave... bridge yesterday afternoon. She ...n the ground in a half-stupefied ...ion.' When the policeman ap... ...sed her she went into hysterics, ...sobbed and wrung her hands. She ...d give no explanation of her strange ...ns, nor would she tell where she ..., although she said that her name ...Matilda Kullen and her age thirty ... The officer thought her insane ...ook her to the Arsenal.

...was well dressed and apparently ... table. She spoke of some trouble— ...y affair. John Somebody had de... her, there was no place to which ...uld go and she had no friends. ...ppearance contradicted this state... At one moment she acted ration... and the next she behaved like an ... She was taken to Roosevelt Hos... where the doctors said that her ...was a bad one and that she had ...cholia, bordering on insanity. From ...velt Hospital she was sent to Bel... A thorough examination into her ...will be made on Monday.

...L THE WOMEN VOTE FOR HER?

...sition to Overcome a Big Majority with a Woman Candidate.

SPECIAL TO THE WORLD.

...GHAMTON, Aug. 19.—By a law ...ed at the last session of the Legis... women are allowed to vote for ...l Commissioners in the city and ...y. For the first time in the his... of Broome County a woman will be ...d on the State ticket and voted for ...e coming fall election.

...law provides that women shall ...er in the same manner as men, ...the ballots cast for School Com... ...oners shall be kept in a separate ...

...me County is strongly Republican ...here are plenty of male candidates. ...Democrats, however, have planned ...ster stroke, and will place in nomi... ...Miss Roxie Eldredge, principal of ...ew street school.

...Eldredge is prominent in educa... ...matters, and the straight Demo... ...vote, combined with the ballots ...by the women, cannot fail to place ...office. Republicans are much ex... ...d over the situation.

Weather Indications.

For Eastern New York, Eastern Pennsylvania and New Jersey, cooler; south winds and fair weather on Sunday; winds becoming east on ...

$18 to Chicago and Return via Pittsburgh, Fort Wayne & Chicago R'y.

...and to test the capacity of the little air-ship to carry the requisite load of dynamite and exploding tackle. This was a very pretty and satisfactory event. The balloon was sent up from near the field hands' boarding-house on Mr. Clark's farm, and it soared straight skyward, shot into a low, watery-looking cloud that was sailing over and disappeared. It carried a weight of about twelve ounces.

Then the real business of dynamiting for rain began. A man had come up from a New York pyrotechnic factory to take charge of the ballooning, and another man had come from Meriden to superintend the sky-blasting. He had blown out the rocks to make the Hoosic tunnel and it was calculated that he could blow a rain shower out of the heavens. He had left Meriden at 3 o'clock in the morning with 100 cartridges of dynamite, weighing fifty pounds in the aggregate, and lived to reach Clark's farm in an unfragmentary condition, which was considered a triumph, but he looked haggard and his temper was explosive. He tinkered with the fuses and the cartridges while the New York man let hot air into a red and yellow balloon through a section of stove pipe.

He had reached Hartford at midnight and had had a good sleep, so his temper was all right, only he was somewhat saddened and misanthropic from the really manful struggle he was making with a tendency to cholera morbus. The fact, however, that the two operators were thus handicapped in no way interfered with their efforts. The New Yurk man got his balloon filled and the Meriden man tied a half-pound dynamite cartridge to it with ten feet of slowly-burning fuse dangling behind the cartridge. The balloon soared skyward as the unloaded pioneer had done, only just before it got to the cloud in which the first one had disappeared, there was a sudden burst of dirty yellow smoke, and a few secunds later there came down to earth the noise of a sharp, ringing explosion, which was heard by the farmers for five or six miles around.

The balloon drifted off on the light wind a mere mass of tattered paper shreds, which circled slowly down into a neighboring field. This was counted a great success, and the farmers scanned the horizon to see if the rain was in sight. There were fifty or more of them there, and yet not an umbrella in the crowd. When the second, the third and the fourth balloon went up, at intervals of about twenty minutes apart, and were all successfully exploded close up under the clouds, both the balloon man and the dynamiter relaxed and became quite cheerful. They set to work on the fifth with confidence, but with it they came so perilously close to a disaster that the ballooning for the day was stopped.

The balloons were of the flimsiest tissue paper, and when the fifth, with its half pound of dynamite attached had lifted from the ground about ten feet, its dome split partially apart. There was still enough hot air contained in its folds to keep it afloat, but not enough to carry it aloft. It hung just over the heads of the crowd with the fuse spluttering merrily on towards the half pound of dynamite. Probably no man living ever saw a group of Connecticut farmers make such good sprinting time as the ground under that balloon.

The dynamiter and the balloon man both manifested a roving disposition for a moment but the dynamiter recovered himself and ran and dragged the balloon down by the fuse which trailed behind it toward the ground. That ended the ballooning for the day. Farmer Fuller the most enthusiastic of the rain-makers, emphatically said he had had enough. If somebody would take the responsibility and wanted to proceed with the fireworks there were the balloons forty-five of them still left, and the cartridges, and the field was open. As for him, he would go over into Pequonock and wait for the shower.

This was the sense of the entire gathering, so it was arranged that the

BARONDESS ADDRESSES THE CROWD NEAR THE CLOSE OF THE MEETING.

The police of this fair city were ready for trouble yesterday, and they expected a great deal of it. The workingmen out of work were to parade and meet in Union Square, and the earthly Providence which watches over us in blue coats was full of fatherly forebodings. Supt. Byrnes, to whom we turn as an infant to its mother in times of trouble, was watching his melons grow at Red Bank, and the policemen wearing his mantle temporarily were full of high ambition and determined to distinguish themselves. Inspector Conlin got up early and sat in his office all day, plotting and scheming. When the evening came and the parade was to begin, everything was ready. Policemen had been selected to walk with the procession. Policemen in uniform had been stationed at intervals along the route, and lashings of policemen in unobtrusive citizens' clothes lined the way from Rivington street to Union Square, ready for any disaster. In his office at Headquarters, Inspector Conlin sat. All over the city the reserves were ready in the various stationhouses, and beneath Inspector Conlin's fingers were buttons which, obedient to his touch, would have called those reserves out by electricity to send them wherever they might be needed. Along the line of march arrangements had been made for wiring dread news to Headquarters. Inspector McAvoy, in whose relentless grasp each criminal and Anarchist must fear the worst spent the hours dancing up and down the line, ready to report trouble at the slightest sign.

NO CALL FOR NIGHT-STICKS.

Though all these preparations had been made, there was no call upon police resources. The workingmen apparently had no desire to tear up the Constitution by the roots, and they did not want to fight any policemen. Besides that, it rained, and as all the world knows, rain, the gentle persuader, will stifle strife and calm passions upon which clubs and steel would have no effect.

The widely advertised gathering in Union Square was a quiet one, and it was orderly, though the crowd was an immense one. What was said by the speakers sounded reasonable enough. There was little desire expressed for blood, and the repeated requests for work and for bread could not well be criticised. Almost every face in the densely packed listening audience was the face of a patient, hard-working, ill-fed creature. There was scarcely a man in the parade who weighed more than half as much as the average policeman. Yet each had he been well fed, well clothed, well housed and well rested from his cradle, might have been big enough for the force. The policemen, in honor of this workingman's parade, had been armed with their big, old-fashioned clubs—the clubs which were replaced by small, modest little sticks when Mr. Byrnes decided that every man on the force must be a gentleman. The big policemen, with these long clubs, escorting the narrow-chested, thin-legged workers from the east side, of her own ability is accurate. It is a fact that the great police arrangements made yesterday were in her honor exclusively; it is a fact that two detectives spent the day following her about; it is a fact that the District-Attorney's office has paid her marked attention, and it is a fact that she has managed to impress herself very strongly on this town of two million inhabitants.

Such facts make the young woman interesting without making her alarming to those who really believe in the edifice erected by such gentlemen as Washington and Lincoln. The demonstration of yesterday made it possible to study the young woman to advantage, and so it was a useful demonstration, from the news point of view.

START OF THE PARADE.

The demonstration was born in Rivington street opposite No. 125, a place of meeting called the Golden Rule Hall. The Golden Rule Hall fails to explain its title. The only sign of the Golden Rule thereabouts is a bar, at which an inordinately large glass of beer may be had for a very small price. The parade of workers started from that spot.

If the prosperous American who thinks this money panic makes him suffer could have been in Rivington street yesterday he would have discovered that he does not know what suffering means. Incidentally he would, perhaps, have lost temporarily his taste for self indulgence. In Rivington street every one is poor; so poor that it is hard to understand why they care to go on living. The street is dirty, the air is foul, the babies are so thick that they do not cry when their feet are stepped on, they have got used to it. The crowds seeking fresh air on the sidewalk make one wonder how they all sleep in the houses around them, yet ling up on the fire escapes, shouting her name out proudly, and all things conspired to make the young lady feel that she was a personage. She did not seem very much set-up by it all. She put on a pair of smoked glasses to protect her eyes, hich are weak, and when she had tired of the attentions of the crowd, sprang upon a passing car, without asking the conductor to check his speed. Miss Goldman is steady of arm and foot. She was accompanied by an interesting young woman in black, also a friend of the workingman, and able to get on a moving car. A short time, perhaps an hour and a half, after the boarding of the car, they both appeared at the little cottage in Union Square.

The Rivington street crowd by that time had eaten all the peaches which a peddler was selling at five for a cent, and having thus dined had marched four abreast to the workmens' tryst, opposite Tiffany's and various other plutocratic institutions of Union Square.

From this point on the one interesting is Emma Goldman. A reporter who has had the privilege of studying the great and good of various lands for some years back paid particular attention to her, and will describe her thus. At first all that could be seen of her was a good-sized head, not very far above the ground, struggling in the crowd around the speaker's platform. The head was decorated with a well-worn hat of black straw, of no particular shape, and the hat was made attractive and suitable by some red artificial flowers. One of these was pulled off and worn as a boutonniere later by an ardent and playful admirer.

SHE TAKES THE PLATFORM.

It was at first decided not to let Miss made up a countenance for some determined effort and had had that countenance petrified and made permanent. She looks, if one may approach her with a comparison bordering on levity, like a woman with housecleaning perpetually on her mind.

AN EARNEST WOMAN.

The lower part of her face has a most determined look. Her chin is strong and protruding. Her lower lip is large. Her mouth is strong. It indicates decided character. Her nose is a good nose, with meaning. Below the eyes, however, her face indicates strength rather than refinement, but her eyes and forehead are not at all such as the finest police force in the world need dread. Her eyes are light gray, a very good color. They are large, and they look sincere. There is a tired look about them which comes partly from the fact that her sight is very weak and partly from her speech-making exertions. She made five speeches on Friday. Her forehead is well built up. There is room in it. It has some bumps which may mean temper. Her hair is light brown, very wavy and decidedly pretty, and her head is well shaped, while her hands are small, white and fairly well cared for. She wore no jacket and took her hat off at intervals when she got tired of wearing it. Altogether, she impresses an unbiased observer as a rather reckless but quite sincere young woman. Her eyes and forehead are intellectual, the lower part of her face indicates impulsiveness and energy too great, perhaps, for the controlling influence of the good side reflected in the eyes.

Miss Goldman looks like a woman who would jump overboard to save a friend, or who might stab a gentleman in the abdomen if she got to thinking about it and decided that she ought to do so. She is probably between twenty-five and twenty-eight years old. She will do something worth while if she get a chance. She thinks she is doing the best thing on earth in calling attention to the wrongs of her friends and encouraging them to strike for their rights. The young woman's friends, who know her, point out that she has not the talent as queerly as Joan of Arc had and that Joan was more violently hissed and more thoroughly despised when she started out than Miss Goldman has been. These statements of fact are accurate.

MISS GOLDMAN'S LIEUTENANT.

Miss Goldman is interesting, she is beautiful. She has a friend, however, who is beautiful. This friend is a young German girl who thinks that she ... and truly launched in the mid... ...ary reform. She rather ex... ...with the help of Miss Goldman, ... captains in Time's sands is ... Miss Goldman's lieutenant. ... dark, mysterious and ... that she won't give her name ... says she says the press is a ... and that the reporters are ... ends. She was eventu... Miss Goldman for show... ...interested in a very ... and wore yellow shoes ... insane of a pluto... ... girl's name was said to ... others Maria ... Miss Goldman called ... and the gloomy ... was leading and ... while a speech to the ... them that their wives ... dread. In fact, she ... said that ... What she ... with serious in... ...$15 a week, ...realize that ... great so it ... for the her as ... described. It is ... dark hat was ... eyes are un... that her figure

BEST COPY AVAILABLE

18

890110001

The Emma Goldman Papers

[Excerpt from Lecture] The Demonstration of the Unemployed / Emma Goldman. – pp. 1-2 ; 28 cm. In The World. –(Aug. 20, 1893).

Obtained from the University of California, Berkeley. Institutional Location: Doe Library.

...Policeman C. F. ... found a ... young woman in the thick shrubbery near the bridle road at the Seventh avenue bridge yesterday afternoon. She was on the ground in a half-stupefied condition. When the policeman approached her she went into hysterics, cried, sobbed and wrung her hands. She could give no explanation of her strange actions, nor would she tell where she lived, although she said that her name was Matilda Kulien and her age thirty years. The officer thought her insane and took her to the Arsenal.

She was well dressed and apparently respectable. She spoke of some trouble—love affair. John Somebody had deserted her, there was no place to which she could go and she had no friends. Her appearance contradicted this statement. At one moment she acted rationally and the next she behaved like an idiot. She was taken to Roosevelt Hospital, where the doctors said that her case was a bad one and that she had melancholia, bordering on insanity. From Roosevelt Hospital she was sent to Bellevue. A thorough examination into her case will be made on Monday.

WILL THE WOMEN VOTE FOR HER?

Proposition to Overcome a Big Majority with a Woman Candidate.

[SPECIAL TO THE WORLD.]

BINGHAMTON, Aug. 19.—By a law enacted at the last session of the Legislature women are allowed to vote for School Commissioners in the city and county. For the first time in the history of Broome County a woman will be placed on the State ticket and voted for at the coming fall election.

The law provides that women shall register in the same manner as men, and the ballots cast for School Commissioners shall be kept in a separate box.

Broome County is strongly Republican and there are plenty of male candidates, the Democrats, however, have planned a masterstroke, and will place in nomination Miss Roxie Eldredge, principal of the New street school.

Miss Eldredge is prominent in educational matters, and the straight Democratic vote, combined with the ballots cast by the women, cannot fail to place her in office. Republicans are much excited over the situation.

Weather Indications.

FAIR

For Eastern New York, Eastern Pennsylvania and New Jersey, cooler north winds and fair weather on Sunday; winds becoming east on Monday.

July $18 to Chicago and Return via Picturesque Erie Lines.

Next personally conducted excursion train leaves New York, Chambers street, 10.15 A. M. Monday, Aug. 21; arrives Chicago 4.15 P. M. next day. Tickets good ten days, with privilege of returning via Niagara Falls. Similar excursions on Sept. 2, 6 and 12.

Wall Street Is Not in It.

Put RIKER is on prices; 40 to 50 per cent. off on your doctor's prescription. RIKER'S reputation for pure drugs is never questioned. 42d st. and 4th ave.

THE MADISON AVENUE HOTEL, 58th st. and Madison ave.; delightfully situated; cuisine perfect; moderate terms. E. M. CLARK, Manager, formerly of Murray Hill.

W. A. S. Wolfe's Schnapps. Best beverage obtainable. Sold by druggists, grocers.

his temper was explosive. He tinkered with the fuses and the cartridges while the New York man let hot air into a red and yellow balloon through a section of stove pipe.

He had reached Hartford at midnight and had had a good sleep, so his temper was all right, only he was somewhat saddened and misanthropic from the really manful struggle he was making with a tendency to cholera morbus. The fact, however, that the two operators were thus handicapped in no way interfered with their efforts. The New York man got his balloon filled and the Meriden man tied a half-pound dynamite cartridge to it with ten feet of slowly-burning fuse dangling behind the cartridge. The balloon soared skyward as the unloaded pioneer had done, only lost before it got to the cloud in which the first one had disappeared, there was a sudden burst of dirty yellow smoke, and a few seconds later there came down to earth the noise of a sharp, ringing explosion, which was heard by the farmers for five or six miles around.

The balloon drifted off on the light wind a mere mass of tattered paper shreds, which circled slowly down into a neighboring field. This was counted a great success, and the farmers scanned the horizon to see if the rain was in sight. There were fifty or more of them there, and yet not an umbrella in the crowd. When the second, the third and the fourth balloon went up, at intervals of about twenty minutes apart, and were all successfully exploded close up under the clouds, both the balloon man and the dynamiter relaxed and became quite cheerful. They set to work on the fifth with confidence, but with it they came so perilously close to a disaster that the ballooning for the day was stopped.

The balloons were of the flimsiest tissue paper, and when the fifth, with its half pound of dynamite attached had lifted from the ground about ten feet, its dome split partially apart. There was still enough hot air contained in its folds to keep it afloat, but not enough to carry it aloft. It hung just over the heads of the crowd with the fuse sputtering merrily on towards the half pound of dynamite. Probably no man living ever saw a group of Connecticut farmers make such good sprinting time as the group under that balloon.

The dynamiter and the balloon man both manifested a roving disposition for a moment but the dynamiter recovered himself and ran and dragged the balloon down by the fuse which trailed behind it toward the ground. That ended the ballooning for the day. Farmer Fuller, the most enthusiastic of the rain-makers, emphatically said he had had enough. If somebody would take the responsibility and wanted to proceed with the fireworks there were the balloons, forty-five of them still left, and the cartridges, and the field was open. As for him, he would go over into Pequonock and wait for the shower.

This was the sense of the entire gathering, so it was arranged that the balloon man should bring up his bombs and sky-rockets next Wednesday and try the aerial explosions over again. In order that the day should not pass without at least one earnest appeal for wet, it was decided to blow up a stump and a stump was blown up. Then the dynamiter was sent to the top of the hill west of Clark's tobacco field, and set to firing dynamite cartridges on the ground, which he did, keeping it up until there was not a cloud left in the sky and the sun was out, really bright and blazing for the first time during the day.

Then the dinner-horn blew, and the show was over. In nearly every other locality in Northern Connecticut, save where the dynamiting took place, they had nice, refreshing showers during the day.

walk with the procession. Policemen in uniform had been stationed at intervals along the route, and flashings of policemen in unobtrusive citizens' clothes lined the way from Rivington street to Union Square, ready for any disaster. In his office at Headquarters, Inspector Conlin sat. All over the city the reserves were ready in the various stationhouses, and beneath Inspector Conlin's fingers were buttons which, obedient to his touch, would have called those reserves out by electricity to send them wherever they might be needed. Along the line of march arrangements had been made for wiring dread news to Headquarters. Inspector McAvoy, in whose relentless grasp each criminal and Anarchist must fear the worst, spent the hours dancing up and down the line, ready to report trouble at the slightest sign.

NO CALL FOR NIGHT-STICKS.

Though all these preparations had been made, there was no call upon police resources. The workingmen apparently had no desire to tear up the Constitution by the roots, and they did not want to fight any policemen. Besides that, it rained, and, as all the world knows, rain, the gentle persuader, will stifle strife and calm passions upon which clubs and steel would have no effect.

The widely advertised gathering in Union Square was a quiet one, and it was orderly, though the crowd was an immense one. What was said by the speakers sounded reasonable enough. There was little desire expressed for blood, and the repeated requests for work and for bread could not well be criticised. Almost every face in the densely packed listening audience was the face of a patient, hard-working, ill-fed creature. There was scarcely a man in the parade who weighed more than half as much as the average policeman. Yet each, had he been well fed, well clothed, well housed and well rested from his cradle, might have been big enough for the force. The policemen, in honor of this workingman's parade, had been armed with their big, old-fashioned clubs—the clubs which were replaced by small, modest little sticks when Mr. Byrnes decided that every man on the force must be a gentleman. The big policemen, with these long clubs, escorting the narrow-chested, thin-legged workers from the east side, did not look very heroic. They looked like mastiffs chaperoning a parade of gentle rabbits.

IT WAS NOT A BIG CROWD.

The much advertised Union Square demonstration amounted to a parade of about a thousand men, most of them belonging to the clothing trade, a gathering of about three thousand around the little cottage in Union Square, and some speeches of various complexions. The affair was saved from being an absolute fizzle by the presence of an interesting woman, Miss Emma Goldman. That young person, who comes to us from a foreign shore, has some sort of an idea that she can stand this noble land on its head, and she wants to do it. The funny part of it is that she has made some folks think that her estimate of the Golden Rule Hall fails to explain its title. The only sign of the Golden Rule therenbouts is a bar, at which an inordinately large gauss of beer may be had for a very small price. The parade of workers started from that spot.

If the prosperous American who thinks this money panic makes him suffer could have been in Rivington street yesterday he would have discovered that he does not know what suffering means. Incidentally he would, perhaps, have lost temporarily his taste for self indulgence. In Rivington street every one is poor; so poor that it is hard to understand why they care to go on living. The street is dirty, the air is foul, the babies are so thick that they do not cry when their feet are stepped on; they have got used to it. The crowds seeking fresh air on the sidewalk make one wonder how they all sleep in the houses around them, yet all the windows and littered-up fire-escapes of those houses are crowded with other human beings.

EMMA GOLDMAN LEADING THE PROCESSION.

In the early afternoon there had been a meeting in the Golden Rule Hall, and Emma Goldman had made a speech. She came out about 5 o'clock, elbowing her way through friends and policemen. The friends cheered her and the policemen studied her with that sort of professional interest which all policemen feel in anything that lights.

MISS GOLDMAN CHEERED.

The crowd followed Miss Goldman with most attering persistency. It crowded about her, crossed in front of her and cheered her when she stopped for breath. Men on the street who recognized her pointed her out to friends although the Golden Rule Hall fails to explain its title. The only sign of the Golden Rule therenbouts is a bar, at which an inordinately large gauss of beer may be had for a very small price. The parade of workers started from that spot.

If the prosperous American who thinks this money panic makes him suffer could have been in Rivington street yesterday he would have discovered that he does not know what suffering means. Incidentally he would, perhaps, have lost temporarily his taste for self indulgence. In Rivington street every one is poor; so poor that it is hard to understand why they care to go on living. The street is dirty, the air is foul, the babies are so thick that they do not cry when their feet are stepped on; they have got used to it. The crowds seeking fresh air on the sidewalk make one wonder how they all sleep in the houses around them, yet all the windows and littered-up fire-escapes of those houses are crowded with other human beings.

In the early afternoon there had been a meeting in the Golden Rule Hall, and Emma Goldman had made a speech. She came out about 5 o'clock, elbowing her way through friends and policemen. The friends cheered her and the policemen studied her with that sort of professional interest which all policemen feel in anything that lights.

MISS GOLDMAN CHEERED.

The crowd followed Miss Goldman with most attering persistency. It crowded about her, crossed in front of her and cheered her when she stopped for breath. Men on the street who recognized her pointed her out to friends although she had been in Rivington street yesterday he would have discovered that he does not know what suffering means. Incidentally he would, perhaps, have lost temporarily his taste for self indulgence. In Rivington street every one is poor; so poor that it is hard to understand why they care to go on living. The street is dirty, the air is foul, the babies are so thick that they do not cry when their feet are stepped on; they have got used to it. The crowds seeking fresh air on the sidewalk make one wonder how they all sleep in the houses around them, yet

Finally and various other philanthropic institutions of Union Square.

From this point on the one interesting is Emma Goldman. A reporter who has had the privilege of studying the great and good of various lands for some years back paid particular attention to her, and will describe her thus. At first all that could be seen of her was a good-sized head, not very far above the ground, struggling in the crowd around the speaker's platform. The head was decorated with a well-worn hat of black straw, of no particular shape, and the hat was made attractive and suitable by some red artificial flowers. One of these was pulled off and worn as a boutonniere later by an ardent and playful admirer.

SHE TAKES THE PLATFORM

It was at first decided not to let Miss Goldman get on the stand. The police, not quite recovered from their homemade scare, thought she ought to be kept out of sight. Miss Goldman, however, thought that was a bad idea, and after a few minutes, and a few breezy conversations with various police dignitaries, she stepped in triumph on to the stand.

Miss Goldman looks like a young woman able to convince the police or others. She is as tall as Miss Johnstone Bennett, who is made familiar to us by the bill boards. She stnops over about as the average mannish young woman of fashion does. She does it though with an intention of being fashionable or mannish, however. Her face is interesting. It has a very unusual expression. She looks as though she had made five speeches on Friday. Her forehead is well built up. There is room in it. It has some bumps which may mean temper. Her hair is light brown, very wavy and decidedly pretty, and her head is well shaped, while her hands are small, white and fairly well cared for. She wore no jacket and took her hat off at intervals when she got tired of wearing it. Altogether, she impresses an unbiased observer as a rather reckless but quite sincere young woman. Her eyes and forehead are intellectual; the lower part of her face indicates impulsiveness and energy too great, perhaps, for the controlling influence of the good side reflected in the eyes.

Miss Goldman looks like a woman who would jump overboard to save a friend, or who might stab a gentleman in the abdomen if she got to thinking about it and decided that she ought to do so. She is probably between twenty-five and twenty-eight years old. She could do something worth while if she had a chance. She thinks she is doing the best thing on earth in calling attention to the wrongs of her friends and in encouraging them to strike for their rights. The young woman's friends, who admire her, point out that she has not yet acted as queerly as Joan of Arc acted, and that Joan was more violently abused and more thoroughly despised when she started out than Miss Goldman has been. There statements of fact are accurate.

MISS GOLDMAN'S LIEUTENANT.

Miss Goldman is interesting, she is not beautiful. She has a friend, however, who is beautiful. This friend is a young German girl who thinks that she is really and truly launched in the middle of a great reform. She rather expects with the help of Miss Goldman, to leave deep footprints in Time's sands. She is called Miss Goldman's lieutenant, and she feels so dark, mysterious and gloomy that she won't give her name to the reporters. She says the press is a vile gross and that the reporters are plutocratic sleuthhounds. She was eventually rebuked by Miss Goldman for showing too many signs of interest in a very young reporter who wore yellow shoes and the usual other insignia of a plutocratic $6 a week existence.

This young girl's name was said to be Lena Sikler and by others Maria Pauline Sager. Miss Goldman called her Lena. She enjoyed the gloomy anarchistic life she was leading, and she actually made a speech to the crowd, reminding them that their wives and children needed bread. In fact, she spread out her hands and said that she wanted bread or bread. What she really wants is a beau with serious intentions and a steady job at $15 a week, but she is too young to realize that. She is never going to be great, so it is not worth while to describe her as Miss Goldman was described. It is enough to say that her sailor hat was becoming, that her brown eyes are unnecessarily large, and that her figure suggests the quail in fine condition.

While the first speeches were going on, Miss Goldman walked up and down the platform in a cage. It had been decided that she should not be allowed to talk for fear of irritating the police, who were so plentiful. As she walked, her little friend Lena walked after her, sympathizing and telling her how great a person she was. It was quite a pretty picture. Finally it was decided that she should be allowed to talk if she would not be too violent, and then she listened to the others.

THE FIRST SPEECHES.

The first man to speak was Adolph Dry, of the Cloakmakers' Union. He spoke well, that is to say, with genuine feeling. He is a short man, with a pointed, reddish beard, and appeared to run the meeting. His speech was tem-

BEST COPY AVAILABLE

890110001

The Emma Goldman Papers

[Excerpt from Lecture] The Demonstration of the Unemployed / Emma Goldman.—pp. 1-2 ; 28 cm. In The World. —(Aug. 20, 1893).

Obtained from the University of California, Berkeley. Institutional Location: Doe Library.

perate. The main point made by him was that while men who wanted to work, and who were honest were starving in the streets, criminals in Sing Sing were provided with work by the Government and had plenty of food. Later in the evening Mr. Ury offered a resolution that the authorities be urged to give to needy workmen the work that it is now found for criminals to do.

John Stewart, a young Scotchman, followed Mr. Ury. There was nothing Anarchistic about this young man. He urged his hearers to obey the laws and be patient. The laws of the United States were just, as he understood them. He said that all the trouble came from agitators, who had nothing at stake, and who tried to make the people dissatisfied. He expressed his belief that Emma Goldman ought to be in the Tombs. Miss Goldman, who heard him, smiled indulgently. Mr. Stewart had spent his first four months in America looking for work without success, now, he said, success had come. He thought others might be as lucky if they would wait.

From a few remarks made in an undertone, it was gathered that Miss Goldman despised Mr. Stewart.

Mr. Meyer Schoenfield, of the Trade Council of United Garment Workers, followed Mr. Stewart, and then came Miss Goldman's turn. It should be mentioned that the crowd had been howling for her at intervals ever since the talking began.

THE SPEECH OF THE EVENING.

Miss Goldman took off her hat with the red flowers and confided it to her friend Lena. She threw back her hair, pulled up her sleeves, stretched out her arms and began her talk in good German. She alone used good German, and she began in an effective way.

"Men and women," she began, "look at this crowd. Look at the thousands of faces and study those about you. You will find men asking for only one thing—a chance to work and to give to their wives and children the bread they need. This crowd is not a crowd of one class or of opinion. It is a gathering of working men of all sorts, German, American, French and other nationalities."

Her speech was similar to those which have been already published. It was greeted with enthusiasm, and proved that Miss Goldman has genuine ability as an orator. She has more real fire, for instance, than Chauncey Depew or Gen. Porter. She conveys more readily the conviction of absolute sincerity. Her words were well chosen, and she lashed herself into a fine fury when she told the men that everything had been taken away from them by the capitalistic classes, and urged them not to let their blood be taken also, and not to hear themselves called "Lumpen proletariat" by the overfed rich. She begged the men to use their muscles while they still had them, and strike for their rights.

The World's Fair at Chicago seemed to grieve Miss Goldman. She contrasted it and the millions that had been spent upon it with the condition of the crowd before her. She appealed at regular intervals to the stomachs of her listeners, reminding them that they and their families were hungry.

After her speech was done she said that it would be unwise to talk to them too seriously or try to explain their situation to them philosophically, as they had not education or reason enough to understand. The only thing to do was to appeal frequently to their sentiments. That, she said was why she alluded so often to their hungry wives and children. Repeatedly she told the crowd that all the pleasures of the rich, including their palaces and food, came from the workingmen. She was especially indignant that there should be a habit of saying that trouble came from immigrants. Immigrants, she said had made the country what it is and they proposed to have their share of it.

lesson to you. Learn to help yourselves."

ABOLISH CONVICT LABOR.

Mr. Cuno then proposed the following preamble and resolution:

"Whereas, Unemployed men have been going around hungry for weeks and months, with their families lacking food and shelter, and have been ill-treated by capitalists and by the landlords,

"Resolved, That we call on the State to abolish prison labor and give to us the work done by the convicts in order that we may earn money for bread."

The resolution was carried with a cheer. A man named Elken then made a short speech, in which he said that a piece of bread cast among the starving would be fought for like a crust thrown into a cage of monkeys. He added: "We come to declare to the people who get rich from our labor that some day they may be as badly off as we are. We come to declare to the world that we are hungry because we have worked for the benefit of other people and not for ourselves."

"The meeting is adjourned," said the Chairman. In spite of the rain the crowd did not feel like adjourning. There were cries of "No, no!" and calls for Barondess. A young man was explaining that Barondess was busy trying to get some prisoners released, when the leader of the cloakmakers himself came forward and was greeted with tremendous cheering.

BARONDESS IS HEARD.

Leader Barondess spoke in English. He said: "My friends and fellow-workers, we have come here to-night for the purpose of stating our condition to the world. We have assembled to let the dudes and monopolists, and our bosses, the manufacturers, know that we are starving. When we are asked why we are starving, let us answer that it is because of the present system of society. Let us answer that there is such a thing as sweating; that there is such a thing as prison work; that there is such a thing as white slavery because of the sweating system. That's why we are starving. (Cheers)

"Friends, this demonstration represents the many starving men, women and children of New York. It may be that not all the toilers of the city are present to-night, but when the agitation for the abolition of slavery began there were fewer people willing to make demonstrations for it than there are here to-night. Yet slavery was abolished and the American people live under the same American flag. (Cheers.)

"As the abolitionists had faith that slavery would be abolished, so let us believe that the sweating-system will sooner or later be done away with, and with it will disappear the misery of the toiling masses. As to the present crisis, let me say to you do not allow any politician to use you as a tool (Cheers.) When the Republican party was in power the Democratic party complained that the Republican party was the worst that ever existed. Now when the Democrats are in power the Republicans are clamoring. Let them clamor. The Democrats wanted to get into office for the sake of saving the people and the others, I suppose, wanted to save the people for the sake of getting into office. Let us tell these men that we know there is something surely unjust that there must be something surely unlawful in the present system of society when so many men, women and children are willing to sell their bodies and souls for a piece of bread and can get nobody to buy them.

EVICTIONS MUST STOP.

The men in Fifth avenue, the men in Wall street, have their champagne to-night and their pleasure-playing. Do they care for us? Let us tell them that we care whether you are starving to death or not. Let us tell the rich that we will not allow any more evictions. Let us tell the landlords that we will not allow them to throw the poor into the streets. Let us tell the rich that we will not allow them to live in luxury while we starve. Let us tell them that we will not allow them to live in their palaces while we are compelled to live in the cellars and garrets. Let us tell them that we will not allow them to ride in their carriages while we are compelled to walk. Let us tell them that we will not allow them to have their theatres and operas while we are compelled to have our tragedies in our own homes. Let us tell them that we will not allow them to have their banquets while we are starving. Let us tell them that we will not allow them to have their champagne while we are compelled to have our tears. Let us tell them that we will not allow them to have their diamonds while we are compelled to wear shoddy. Let us tell them that we will not allow them to have their fine clothes while we are compelled to wear rags. Let us tell them that we will not allow them to have their pleasures while we are compelled to have our pains. Let us tell them that we will not allow them to have their luxuries while we are compelled to have our necessities. Let us tell them that we will not allow them to have their leisure while we are compelled to have our labor. Let us tell them that we will not allow them to have their wealth while we are compelled to have our poverty. Let us tell them that we will not allow them to have their power while we are compelled to have our weakness. Let us tell them that we will not allow them to have their freedom while we are compelled to have our slavery. Let us tell them that we will not allow them to have their liberty while we are compelled to have our bondage. Let us tell them that we will not allow them to have their God while we are compelled to have our devil. Let us tell them that we will not allow them to have their heaven while we are compelled to have our hell. Let us tell them that we will not allow them to have their eternity while we are compelled to have our time. Let us tell them that we will not allow them to have their infinity while we are compelled to have our finite. Let us tell them that we will not allow them to have their perfection while we are compelled to have our imperfection. Let us tell them that we will not allow them to have their completeness while we are compelled to have our incompleteness. Let us tell them that we will not allow them to have their totality while we are compelled to have our partiality. Let us tell them that we will not allow them to have their universality while we are compelled to have our particularity. Let us tell them that we will not allow them to have their absolute while we are compelled to have our relative. Let us tell them that we will not allow them to have their unconditioned while we are compelled to have our conditioned. Let us tell them that we will not allow them to have their unlimited while we are compelled to have our limited. Let us tell them that we will not allow them to have their boundless while we are compelled to have our bounded. Let us tell them that we will not allow them to have their immeasurable while we are compelled to have our measurable. Let us tell them that we will not allow them to have their incomprehensible while we are compelled to have our comprehensible. Let us tell them that we will not allow them to have their unknowable while we are compelled to have our knowable. Let us tell them that we will not allow them to have their mystery while we are compelled to have our revelation. Let us tell them that we will not allow them to have their secret while we are compelled to have our publicity. Let us tell them that we will not allow them to have their hidden while we are compelled to have our manifest. Let us tell them that we will not allow them to have their latent while we are compelled to have our patent. Let us tell them that we will not allow them to have their potential while we are compelled to have our actual. Let us tell them that we will not allow them to have their possible while we are compelled to have our impossible. Let us tell them that we will not allow them to have their probable while we are compelled to have our improbable. Let us tell them that we will not allow them to have their certain while we are compelled to have our uncertain. Let us tell them that we will not allow them to have their sure while we are compelled to have our unsure. Let us tell them that we will not allow them to have their safe while we are compelled to have our unsafe. Let us tell them that we will not allow them to have their secure while we are compelled to have our insecure. Let us tell them that we will not allow them to have their stable while we are compelled to have our unstable. Let us tell them that we will not allow them to have their firm while we are compelled to have our shaky. Let us tell them that we will not allow them to have their solid while we are compelled to have our liquid. Let us tell them that we will not allow them to have their gas while we are compelled to have our vapor. Let us tell them that we will not allow them to have their ether while we are compelled to have our void. Let us tell them that we will not allow them to have their nothing while we are compelled to have our something. Let us tell them that we will not allow them to have their all while we are compelled to have our nothing. Let us tell them that we will not allow them to have their everything while we are compelled to have our anything. Let us tell them that we will not allow them to have their whole while we are compelled to have our part. Let us tell them that we will not allow them to have their unity while we are compelled to have our multiplicity. Let us tell them that we will not allow them to have their one while we are compelled to have our many. Let us tell them that we will not allow them to have their simple while we are compelled to have our complex. Let us tell them that we will not allow them to have their elementary while we are compelled to have our compound. Let us tell them that we will not allow them to have their primary while we are compelled to have our secondary. Let us tell them that we will not allow them to have their tertiary while we are compelled to have our quaternary. Let us tell them that we will not allow them to have their quinary while we are compelled to have our senary. Let us tell them that we will not allow them to have their septenary while we are compelled to have our octonary. Let us tell them that we will not allow them to have their nonary while we are compelled to have our denary. Let us tell them that we will not allow them to have their undenary while we are compelled to have our duodenary. Let us tell them that we will not allow them to have their tridenary while we are compelled to have our quadrodenary. Let us tell them that we will not allow them to have their quindenary while we are compelled to have our sexdenary. Let us tell them that we will not allow them to have their septendenary while we are compelled to have our octodenary. Let us tell them that we will not allow them to have their novemdenary while we are compelled to have our vigenary. Let us tell them that we will not allow them to have their unvigenary while we are compelled to have our duovigenary. Let us tell them that we will not allow them to have their trivigenary while we are compelled to have our quadrovigenary. Let us tell them that we will not allow them to have their quinvigenary while we are compelled to have our sexvigenary. Let us tell them that we will not allow them to have their septenvigenary while we are compelled to have our octovigenary. Let us tell them that we will not allow them to have their novemvigenary while we are compelled to have our trigenary. Let us tell them that we will not allow them to have their untrigenary while we are compelled to have our duotrigenary. Let us tell them that we will not allow them to have their tritrigenary while we are compelled to have our quadrotrigenary. Let us tell them that we will not allow them to have their quintrigenary while we are compelled to have our sextrigenary. Let us tell them that we will not allow them to have their septentrigenary while we are compelled to have our octotrigenary. Let us tell them that we will not allow them to have their novemtrigenary while we are compelled to have our quadragenary. Let us tell them that we will not allow them to have their unquadragenary while we are compelled to have our duoquadragenary. Let us tell them that we will not allow them to have their triquadragenary while we are compelled to have our quadroquadragenary. Let us tell them that we will not allow them to have their quinquadragenary while we are compelled to have our sexquadragenary. Let us tell them that we will not allow them to have their septenquadragenary while we are compelled to have our octoquadragenary. Let us tell them that we will not allow them to have their novemquadragenary while we are compelled to have our quinquagenary. Let us tell them that we will not allow them to have their unquinquagenary while we are compelled to have our duoquinquagenary. Let us tell them that we will not allow them to have their triquinquagenary while we are compelled to have our quadroquinquagenary. Let us tell them that we will not allow them to have their quinquinquagenary while we are compelled to have our sexquinquagenary. Let us tell them that we will not allow them to have their septenquinquagenary while we are compelled to have our octoquinquagenary. Let us tell them that we will not allow them to have their novemquinquagenary while we are compelled to have our sexagenary. Let us tell them that we will not allow them to have their unsexagenary while we are compelled to have our duosexagenary. Let us tell them that we will not allow them to have their trisexagenary while we are compelled to have our quadrosexagenary. Let us tell them that we will not allow them to have their quinsexagenary while we are compelled to have our sexsexagenary. Let us tell them that we will not allow them to have their septensexagenary while we are compelled to have our octosexagenary. Let us tell them that we will not allow them to have their novemsexagenary while we are compelled to have our septuagenary. Let us tell them that we will not allow them to have their unseptuagenary while we are compelled to have our duoseptuagenary. Let us tell them that we will not allow them to have their triseptuagenary while we are compelled to have our quadroseptuagenary. Let us tell them that we will not allow them to have their quinseptuagenary while we are compelled to have our sexseptuagenary. Let us tell them that we will not allow them to have their septenseptuagenary while we are compelled to have our octoseptuagenary. Let us tell them that we will not allow them to have their novemseptuagenary while we are compelled to have our octogenary. Let us tell them that we will not allow them to have their unoctogenary while we are compelled to have our duooctogenary. Let us tell them that we will not allow them to have their trioctogenary while we are compelled to have our quadrooctogenary. Let us tell them that we will not allow them to have their quinoctogenary while we are compelled to have our sexoctogenary. Let us tell them that we will not allow them to have their septenoctogenary while we are compelled to have our octooctogenary. Let us tell them that we will not allow them to have their novemoctogenary while we are compelled to have our nonagenary. Let us tell them that we will not allow them to have their unnonagenary while we are compelled to have our duononagenary. Let us tell them that we will not allow them to have their trinonagenary while we are compelled to have our quadrononagenary. Let us tell them that we will not allow them to have their quinonagenary while we are compelled to have our sexnonagenary. Let us tell them that we will not allow them to have their septennonagenary while we are compelled to have our octononagenary. Let us tell them that we will not allow them to have their novemnonagenary while we are compelled to have our centenary. Let us tell them that we will not allow them to have their uncentenary while we are compelled to have our duocentenary. Let us tell them that we will not allow them to have their tricentenary while we are compelled to have our quadrocentenary. Let us tell them that we will not allow them to have their quincentenary while we are compelled to have our sexcentenary. Let us tell them that we will not allow them to have their septencentenary while we are compelled to have our octocentenary. Let us tell them that we will not allow them to have their novemcentenary while we are compelled to have our millenary. Let us tell them that we will not allow them to have their unmillenary while we are compelled to have our duomillenary. Let us tell them that we will not allow them to have their trimillenary while we are compelled to have our quadromillenary. Let us tell them that we will not allow them to have their quinmillenary while we are compelled to have our sexmillenary. Let us tell them that we will not allow them to have their septenmillenary while we are compelled to have our octomillenary. Let us tell them that we will not allow them to have their novemmillenary while we are compelled to have our myriad. Let us tell them that we will not allow them to have their unmyriad while we are compelled to have our duomyriad. Let us tell them that we will not allow them to have their trimyriad while we are compelled to have our quadromyriad. Let us tell them that we will not allow them to have their quinmyriad while we are compelled to have our sexmyriad. Let us tell them that we will not allow them to have their septenmyriad while we are compelled to have our octomyriad. Let us tell them that we will not allow them to have their novemmyriad while we are compelled to have our infinite. Let us tell them that we will not allow them to have their uninfinite while we are compelled to have our duoinfinite. Let us tell them that we will not allow them to have their triinfinite while we are compelled to have our quadroinfinite. Let us tell them that we will not allow them to have their quininfinite while we are compelled to have our sexinfinite. Let us tell them that we will not allow them to have their septeninfinite while we are compelled to have our octoinfinite. Let us tell them that we will not allow them to have their noveminfinite while we are compelled to have our absolute. Let us tell them that we will not allow them to have their unabsolute while we are compelled to have our duoabsolute. Let us tell them that we will not allow them to have their triabsolute while we are compelled to have our quadroabsolute. Let us tell them that we will not allow them to have their quinabsolute while we are compelled to have our sexabsolute. Let us tell them that we will not allow them to have their septenabsolute while we are compelled to have our octoabsolute. Let us tell them that we will not allow them to have their novemabsolute while we are compelled to have our unconditioned. Let us tell them that we will not allow them to have their ununconditioned while we are compelled to have our duounconditioned. Let us tell them that we will not allow them to have their triunconditioned while we are compelled to have our quadrounconditioned. Let us tell them that we will not allow them to have their quinunconditioned while we are compelled to have our sexunconditioned. Let us tell them that we will not allow them to have their septenunconditioned while we are compelled to have our octounconditioned. Let us tell them that we will not allow them to have their novemunconditioned while we are compelled to have our unlimited. Let us tell them that we will not allow them to have their ununlimited while we are compelled to have our duounlimited. Let us tell them that we will not allow them to have their triunlimited while we are compelled to have our quadrounlimited. Let us tell them that we will not allow them to have their quinunlimited while we are compelled to have our sexunlimited. Let us tell them that we will not allow them to have their septenunlimited while we are compelled to have our octounlimited. Let us tell them that we will not allow them to have their novemunlimited while we are compelled to have our boundless. Let us tell them that we will not allow them to have their unboundless while we are compelled to have our duoboundless. Let us tell them that we will not allow them to have their triboundless while we are compelled to have our quadroboundless. Let us tell them that we will not allow them to have their quinboundless while we are compelled to have our sexboundless. Let us tell them that we will not allow them to have their septenboundless while we are compelled to have our octoboundless. Let us tell them that we will not allow them to have their novemboundless while we are compelled to have our immeasurable. Let us tell them that we will not allow them to have their unimmeasurable while we are compelled to have our duoimmeasurable. Let us tell them that we will not allow them to have their triimmeasurable while we are compelled to have our quadroimmeasurable. Let us tell them that we will not allow them to have their quinimmeasurable while we are compelled to have our seximmeasurable. Let us tell them that we will not allow them to have their septenimmeasurable while we are compelled to have our octoimmeasurable. Let us tell them that we will not allow them to have their novemimmeasurable while we are compelled to have our incomprehensible. Let us tell them that we will not allow them to have their unincomprehensible while we are compelled to have our duoincomprehensible. Let us tell them that we will not allow them to have their triincomprehensible while we are compelled to have our quadroincomprehensible. Let us tell them that we will not allow them to have their quinincomprehensible while we are compelled to have our sexincomprehensible. Let us tell them that we will not allow them to have their septenincomprehensible while we are compelled to have our octoincomprehensible. Let us tell them that we will not allow them to have their novemincomprehensible while we are compelled to have our unknowable. Let us tell them that we will not allow them to have their ununknowable while we are compelled to have our duounknowable. Let us tell them that we will not allow them to have their triunknowable while we are compelled to have our quadrounknowable. Let us tell them that we will not allow them to have their quinunknowable while we are compelled to have our sexunknowable. Let us tell them that we will not allow them to have their septenunknowable while we are compelled to have our octounknowable. Let us tell them that we will not allow them to have their novemunknowable while we are compelled to have our mystery. Let us tell them that we will not allow them to have their unmystery while we are compelled to have our duomystery. Let us tell them that we will not allow them to have their trimystery while we are compelled to have our quadromystery. Let us tell them that we will not allow them to have their quinmystery while we are compelled to have our sexmystery. Let us tell them that we will not allow them to have their septenmystery while we are compelled to have our octomystery. Let us tell them that we will not allow them to have their novemmystery while we are compelled to have our revelation. Let us tell them that we will not allow them to have their unrevelation while we are compelled to have our duorevelation. Let us tell them that we will not allow them to have their trirevelation while we are compelled to have our quadrorevelation. Let us tell them that we will not allow them to have their quinrevelation while we are compelled to have our sexrevelation. Let us tell them that we will not allow them to have their septenrevelation while we are compelled to have our octorevelation. Let us tell them that we will not allow them to have their novemrevelation while we are compelled to have our publicity. Let us tell them that we will not allow them to have their unpublicity while we are compelled to have our duopublicity. Let us tell them that we will not allow them to have their tripublicity while we are compelled to have our quadropublicity. Let us tell them that we will not allow them to have their quinpublicity while we are compelled to have our sexpublicity. Let us tell them that we will not allow them to have their septenpublicity while we are compelled to have our octopublicity. Let us tell them that we will not allow them to have their novempublicity while we are compelled to have our secret. Let us tell them that we will not allow them to have their unsecret while we are compelled to have our duosecret. Let us tell them that we will not allow them to have their trisecret while we are compelled to have our quadrosecret. Let us tell them that we will not allow them to have their quinsecret while we are compelled to have our sexsecret. Let us tell them that we will not allow them to have their septensecret while we are compelled to have our octosecret. Let us tell them that we will not allow them to have their novemsecret while we are compelled to have our latent. Let us tell them that we will not allow them to have their unlatent while we are compelled to have our duolatent. Let us tell them that we will not allow them to have their trilatent while we are compelled to have our quadrolatent. Let us tell them that we will not allow them to have their quinlatent while we are compelled to have our sexlatent. Let us tell them that we will not allow them to have their septenlatent while we are compelled to have our octolatent. Let us tell them that we will not allow them to have their novemlatent while we are compelled to have our potential. Let us tell them that we will not allow them to have their unpotential while we are compelled to have our duopotential. Let us tell them that we will not allow them to have their tripotential while we are compelled to have our quadropotential. Let us tell them that we will not allow them to have their quinpotential while we are compelled to have our sexpotential. Let us tell them that we will not allow them to have their septenpotential while we are compelled to have our octopotential. Let us tell them that we will not allow them to have their novempotential while we are compelled to have our actual. Let us tell them that we will not allow them to have their unactual while we are compelled to have our duoactual. Let us tell them that we will not allow them to have their triactual while we are compelled to have our quadroactual. Let us tell them that we will not allow them to have their quinactual while we are compelled to have our sexactual. Let us tell them that we will not allow them to have their septenactual while we are compelled to have our octoactual. Let us tell them that we will not allow them to have their novemactual while we are compelled to have our possible. Let us tell them that we will not allow them to have their unpossible while we are compelled to have our duopossible. Let us tell them that we will not allow them to have their tripossible while we are compelled to have our quadropossible. Let us tell them that we will not allow them to have their quinpossible while we are compelled to have our sexpossible. Let us tell them that we will not allow them to have their septenpossible while we are compelled to have our octopossible. Let us tell them that we will not allow them to have their novempossible while we are compelled to have our probable. Let us tell them that we will not allow them to have their unprobable while we are compelled to have our duoprobable. Let us tell them that we will not allow them to have their triprobable while we are compelled to have our quadroprobable. Let us tell them that we will not allow them to have their quinprobable while we are compelled to have our sexprobable. Let us tell them that we will not allow them to have their septenprobable while we are compelled to have our octoprobable. Let us tell them that we will not allow them to have their novemprobable while we are compelled to have our certain. Let us tell them that we will not allow them to have their uncertain while we are compelled to have our duocertain. Let us tell them that we will not allow them to have their tricertain while we are compelled to have our quadrocertain. Let us tell them that we will not allow them to have their quincertain while we are compelled to have our sexcertain. Let us tell them that we will not allow them to have their septencertain while we are compelled to have our octocertain. Let us tell them that we will not allow them to have their novemcertain while we are compelled to have our sure. Let us tell them that we will not allow them to have their unsure while we are compelled to have our duosure. Let us tell them that we will not allow them to have their trisure while we are compelled to have our quadrosure. Let us tell them that we will not allow them to have their quinsure while we are compelled to have our sexsure. Let us tell them that we will not allow them to have their septensure while we are compelled to have our octosure. Let us tell them that we will not allow them to have their novemsure while we are compelled to have our safe. Let us tell them that we will not allow them to have their unsafe while we are compelled to have our duosafe. Let us tell them that we will not allow them to have their trisafe while we are compelled to have our quadrosafe. Let us tell them that we will not allow them to have their quinsafe while we are compelled to have our sexsafe. Let us tell them that we will not allow them to have their septensafe while we are compelled to have our octosafe. Let us tell them that we will not allow them to have their novemsafe while we are compelled to have our secure. Let us tell them that we will not allow them to have their unsecure while we are compelled to have our duosecure. Let us tell them that we will not allow them to have their trisecure while we are compelled to have our quadrosecure. Let us tell them that we will not allow them to have their quinsecure while we are compelled to have our sexsecure. Let us tell them that we will not allow them to have their septensecure while we are compelled to have our octosecure. Let us tell them that we will not allow them to have their novemsecure while we are compelled to have our stable. Let us tell them that we will not allow them to have their unstable while we are compelled to have our duostable. Let us tell them that we will not allow them to have their tristable while we are compelled to have our quadrostable. Let us tell them that we will not allow them to have their quinstable while we are compelled to have our sexstable. Let us tell them that we will not allow them to have their septenstable while we are compelled to have our octostable. Let us tell them that we will not allow them to have their novemstable while we are compelled to have our firm. Let us tell them that we will not allow them to have their unfirm while we are compelled to have our duofirm. Let us tell them that we will not allow them to have their trifirm while we are compelled to have our quadrofirm. Let us tell them that we will not allow them to have their quinfirm while we are compelled to have our sexfirm. Let us tell them that we will not allow them to have their septenfirm while we are compelled to have our octofirm. Let us tell them that we will not allow them to have their novemfirm while we are compelled to have our solid. Let us tell them that we will not allow them to have their unsolid while we are compelled to have our duosolid. Let us tell them that we will not allow them to have their trisolid while we are compelled to have our quadrosolid. Let us tell them that we will not allow them to have their quinsolid while we are compelled to have our sexsolid. Let us tell them that we will not allow them to have their septensolid while we are compelled to have our octosolid. Let us tell them that we will not allow them to have their novemsolid while we are compelled to have our liquid. Let us tell them that we will not allow them to have their unliquid while we are compelled to have our duoliquid. Let us tell them that we will not allow them to have their triliquid while we are compelled to have our quadroliquid. Let us tell them that we will not allow them to have their quinliquid while we are compelled to have our sexliquid. Let us tell them that we will not allow them to have their septenliquid while we are compelled to have our octoliquid. Let us tell them that we will not allow them to have their novemliquid while we are compelled to have our gas. Let us tell them that we will not allow them to have their ungas while we are compelled to have our duogas. Let us tell them that we will not allow them to have their trigas while we are compelled to have our quadrogas. Let us tell them that we will not allow them to have their quingas while we are compelled to have our sexgas. Let us tell them that we will not allow them to have their septengas while we are compelled to have our octogas. Let us tell them that we will not allow them to have their novemgas while we are compelled to have our vapor. Let us tell them that we will not allow them to have their unvapor while we are compelled to have our duovapor. Let us tell them that we will not allow them to have their trivapor while we are compelled to have our quadrovapor. Let us tell them that we will not allow them to have their quinvapor while we are compelled to have our sexvapor. Let us tell them that we will not allow them to have their septenvapor while we are compelled to have our octovapor. Let us tell them that we will not allow them to have their novemvapor while we are compelled to have our ether. Let us tell them that we will not allow them to have their unether while we are compelled to have our duoether. Let us tell them that we will not allow them to have their triether while we are compelled to have our quadroether. Let us tell them that we will not allow them to have their quinether while we are compelled to have our sexether. Let us tell them that we will not allow them to have their septenether while we are compelled to have our octoether. Let us tell them that we will not allow them to have their novemether while we are compelled to have our void. Let us tell them that we will not allow them to have their unvoid while we are compelled to have our duovoid. Let us tell them that we will not allow them to have their trivoid while we are compelled to have our quadrovoid. Let us tell them that we will not allow them to have their quinvoid while we are compelled to have our sexvoid. Let us tell them that we will not allow them to have their septenvoid while we are compelled to have our octovoid. Let us tell them that we will not allow them to have their novemvoid while we are compelled to have our nothing. Let us tell them that we will not allow them to have their unnothing while we are compelled to have our duonothing. Let us tell them that we will not allow them to have their trinothing while we are compelled to have our quadrononothing. Let us tell them that we will not allow them to have their quinonothing while we are compelled to have our sexnonothing. Let us tell them that we will not allow them to have their septennonothing while we are compelled to have our octononothing. Let us tell them that we will not allow them to have their novemnonothing while we are compelled to have our something. Let us tell them that we will not allow them to have their unsomething while we are compelled to have our duosomething. Let us tell them that we will not allow them to have their trisomething while we are compelled to have our quadrosomething. Let us tell them that we will not allow them to have their quinsomething while we are compelled to have our sexsomething. Let us tell them that we will not allow them to have their septensomething while we are compelled to have our octosomething. Let us tell them that we will not allow them to have their novemsomething while we are compelled to have our all. Let us tell them that we will not allow them to have their unall while we are compelled to have our duoall. Let us tell them that we will not allow them to have their triall while we are compelled to have our quadroall. Let us tell them that we will not allow them to have their quinall while we are compelled to have our sexall. Let us tell them that we will not allow them to have their septenall while we are compelled to have our octoall. Let us tell them that we will not allow them to have their novemall while we are compelled to have our everything. Let us tell them that we will not allow them to have their uneverything while we are compelled to have our duoeverything. Let us tell them that we will not allow them to have their trieverything while we are compelled to have our quadroeverything. Let us tell them that we will not allow them to have their quineverything while we are compelled to have our sexeverything. Let us tell them that we will not allow them to have their septeneverything while we are compelled to have our octoeverything. Let us tell them that we will not allow them to have their noveneverything while we are compelled to have our anything. Let us tell them that we will not allow them to have their unanything while we are compelled to have our duoanything. Let us tell them that we will not allow them to have their trianything while we are compelled to have our quadroanything. Let us tell them that we will not allow them to have their quinanything while we are compelled to have our sexanything. Let us tell them that we will not allow them to have their septenanything while we are compelled to have our octoanything. Let us tell them that we will not allow them to have their novemanything while we are compelled to have our whole. Let us tell them that we will not allow them to have their unwhole while we are compelled to have our duowhole. Let us tell them that we will not allow them to have their triwhole while we are compelled to have our quadrowhole. Let us tell them that we will not allow them to have their quinwhole while we are compelled to have our sexwhole. Let us tell them that we will not allow them to have their septenwhole while we are compelled to have our octowhole. Let us tell them that we will not allow them to have their novemwhole while we are compelled to have our part. Let us tell them that we will not allow them to have their unpart while we are compelled to have our duopart. Let us tell them that we will not allow them to have their tripart while we are compelled to have our quadropart. Let us tell them that we will not allow them to have their quinpart while we are compelled to have our sexpart. Let us tell them that we will not allow them to have their septenpart while we are compelled to have our octopart. Let us tell them that we will not allow them to have their novempart while we are compelled to have our unity. Let us tell them that we will not allow them to have their ununity while we are compelled to have our duounity. Let us tell them that we will not allow them to have their triunity while we are compelled to have our quadrounity. Let us tell them that we will not allow them to have their quinunity while we are compelled to have our sexunity. Let us tell them that we will not allow them to have their septenunity while we are compelled to have our octounity. Let us tell them that we will not allow them to have their novemunity while we are compelled to have our multiplicity. Let us tell them that we will not allow them to have their unmultiplicity while we are compelled to have our duomultiplicity. Let us tell them that we will not allow them to have their trimultiplicity while we are compelled to have our quadromultiplicity. Let us tell them that we will not allow them to have their quinmultiplicity while we are compelled to have our sexmultiplicity. Let us tell them that we will not allow them to have their septenmultiplicity while we are compelled to have our octomultiplicity. Let us tell them that we will not allow them to have their novemmultiplicity while we are compelled to have our one. Let us tell them that we will not allow them to have their unone while we are compelled to have our duoone. Let us tell them that we will not allow them to have their trione while we are compelled to have our quadroone. Let us tell them that we will not allow them to have their quinone while we are compelled to have our sexone. Let us tell them that we will not allow them to have their septenone while we are compelled to have our octoone. Let us tell them that we will not allow them to have their novemone while we are compelled to have our many. Let us tell them that we will not allow them to have their unmany while we are compelled to have our duomany. Let us tell them that we will not allow them to have their trimany while we are compelled to have our quadromany. Let us tell them that we will not allow them to have their quinmany while we are compelled to have our sexmany. Let us tell them that we will not allow them to have their septenmany while we are compelled to have our octomany. Let us tell them that we will not allow them to have their novemmany while we are compelled to have our simple. Let us tell them that we will not allow them to have their unsimple while we are compelled to have our duosimple. Let us tell them that we will not allow them to have their trisimple while we are compelled to have our quadrosimple. Let us tell them that we will not allow them to have their quinsimple while we are compelled to have our sexsimple. Let us tell them that we will not allow them to have their septensimple while we are compelled to have our octosimple. Let us tell them that we will not allow them to have their novemsimple while we are compelled to have our complex. Let us tell them that we will not allow them to have their uncomplex while we are compelled to have our duocomplex. Let us tell them that we will not allow them to have their tricomplex while we are compelled to have our quadrocomplex. Let us tell them that we will not allow them to have their quincomplex while we are compelled to have our sexcomplex. Let us tell them that we will not allow them to have their septencomplex while we are compelled to have our octocomplex. Let us tell them that we will not allow them to have their novemcomplex while we are compelled to have our elementary. Let us tell them that we will not allow them to have their unelementary while we are compelled to have our duoelementary. Let us tell them that we will not allow them to have their trielementary while we are compelled to have our quadroelementary. Let us tell them that we will not allow them to have their quinelementary while we are compelled to have our sexelementary. Let us tell them that we will not allow them to have their septenelementary while we are compelled to have our octoelementary. Let us tell them that we will not allow them to have their novemelementary while we are compelled to have our compound. Let us tell them that we will not allow them to have their uncompound while we are compelled to have our duocompound. Let us tell them that we will not allow them to have their tricompound while we are compelled to have our quadrocompound. Let us tell them that we will not allow them to have their quincompound while we are compelled to have our sexcompound. Let us tell them that we will not allow them to have their septencompound while we are compelled to have our octocompound. Let us tell them that we will not allow them to have their novemcompound while we are compelled to have our primary. Let us tell them that we will not allow them to have their unprimary while we are compelled to have our duoprimary. Let us tell them that we will not allow them to have their triprimary while we are compelled to have our quadroprimary. Let us tell them that we will not allow them to have their quinprimary while we are compelled to have our sexprimary. Let us tell them that we will not allow them to have their septenprimary while we are compelled to have our octoprimary. Let us tell them that we will not allow them to have their novemprimary while we are compelled to have our secondary. Let us tell them that we will not allow them to have their unsecondary while we are compelled to have our duosecondary. Let us tell them that we will not allow them to have their trisecondary while we are compelled to have our quadrosecondary. Let us tell them that we will not allow them to have their quinsecondary while we are compelled to have our sexsecondary. Let us tell them that we will not allow them to have their septensecondary while we are compelled to have our octosecondary. Let us tell them that we will not allow them to have their novemsecondary while we are compelled to have our tertiary. Let us tell them that we will not allow them to have their untertiary while we are compelled to have our duotertiary. Let us tell them that we will not allow them to have their tritertiary while we are compelled to have our quadrotertiary. Let us tell them that we will not allow them to have their quintertiary while we are compelled to have our sextertiary. Let us tell them that we will not allow them to have their septentertiary while we are compelled to have our octotertiary. Let us tell them that we will not allow them to have their novemtertiary while we are compelled to have our quaternary. Let us tell them that we will not allow them to have their unquaternary while we are compelled to have our duoquaternary. Let us tell them that we will not allow them to have their triquaternary while we are compelled to have our quadroquaternary. Let us tell them that we will not allow them to have their quinquaternary while we are compelled to have our sexquaternary. Let us tell them that we will not allow them to have their septenquaternary while we are compelled to have our octoquaternary. Let us tell them that we will not allow them to have their novemquaternary while we are compelled to have our quinary. Let us tell them that we will not allow them to have their unquinary while we are compelled to have our duoquinary. Let us tell them that we will not allow them to have their triquinary while we are compelled to have our quadroquinary. Let us tell them that we will not allow them to have their quinquinary while we are compelled to have our sexquinary. Let us tell them that we will not allow them to have their septenquinary while we are compelled to have our octoquinary. Let us tell them that we will not allow them to have their novemquinary while we are compelled to have our senary. Let us tell them that we will not allow them to have their unsenary while we are compelled to have our duosenary. Let us tell them that we will not allow them to have their trisenary while we are compelled to have our quadrosenary. Let us tell them that we will not allow them to have their quinsenary while we are compelled to have our sexsenary. Let us tell them that we will not allow them to have their septensenary while we are compelled to have our octosenary. Let us tell them that we will not allow them to have their novemsenary while we are compelled to have our septenary. Let us tell them that we will not allow them to have their unseptenary while we are compelled to have our duoseptenary. Let us tell them that we will not allow them to have their triseptenary while we are compelled to have our quadroseptenary. Let us tell them that we will not allow them to have their quinseptenary while we are compelled to have our sexseptenary. Let us tell them that we will not allow them to have their septenseptenary while we are compelled to have our octoseptenary. Let us tell them that we will not allow them to have their novemseptenary while we are compelled to have our octonary. Let us tell them that we will not allow them to have their unoctonary while we are compelled to have our duooctonary. Let us tell them that we will not allow them to have their trioctonary while we are compelled to have our quadrooctonary. Let us tell them that we will not allow them to have their quinoctonary while we are compelled to have our sexoctonary. Let us tell them that we will not allow them to have their septenoctonary while we are compelled to have our octooctonary. Let us tell them that we will not allow them to have their novemoctonary while we are compelled to have our nonary. Let us tell them that we will not allow them to have their unnonary while we are compelled to have our duononary. Let us tell them that we will not allow them to have their trinonary while we are compelled to have our quadrononary. Let us tell them that we will not allow them to have their quinonary while we are compelled to have our sexnonary. Let us tell them that we will not allow them to have their septennonary while we are compelled to have our octononary. Let us tell them that we will not allow them to have their novemnonary while we are compelled to have our denary. Let us tell them that we will not allow them to have their undenary while we are compelled to have our duodenary. Let us tell them that we will not allow them to have their trid

890110001

The Emma Goldman Papers

[Excerpt from Lecture] The Demonstration of the Unemployed / Emma Goldman. – pp. 1-2 ; 28 cm. In The World. –(Aug. 20, 1893).

Obtained from the University of California, Berkeley. Institutional Location: Doe Library.

French and other nationalities."

Her speech was similar to those which have been already published. It was greeted with enthusiasm, and proved that Miss Goldman has genuine ability as an orator. She has more real fire, for instance, than Chauncey Depew or Gen. Porter. She conveys more readily the conviction of absolute sincerity. Her words were well chosen, and she lashed herself into a fine fury when she told the men that everything had been taken away from them by the capitalistic classes, and urged them not to let their blood be taken also, and not to hear themselves called "Lumpen proletariat" by the overfed rich. She begged the men to use their muscles while they still had them, and strike for their rights.

The World's Fair at Chicago seemed to grieve Miss Goldman. She contrasted it and the millions that had been spent upon it with the condition of the crowd before her. She apepaled at regular intervals to the stomachs of her listeners, reminding them that they and their families were hungry.

After her speech was done she said that it would be unwise to talk to them too seriously or try to explain their situation to them philosophically, as they had not education or reason enough to understand. The only thing to do was to appeal frequently to their sentiments. That, she said, was why she alluded so often to their hungry wives and children. Repeatedly she told the crowd that all the pleasures of the rich, including their palaces and food, came from the workingmen. She was especially indignant that there should be a habit of saying that trouble came form immigrants. Immigrants, she said, had made this country what it is, and they proposed to have their share of it.

THE RIGHT TO BE HAPPY.

In conclusion, Miss Goldman said that workman had more serious things to attend to than to get another job that would barely keep them alive. "You want work?" she said, "but do you call it happiness to have a task for seventeen hours a day? to live and bring your children into the world in dirty tenements to see your wives slaving and your children laboring as soon as they are six or seven years old? We want to work, but we do not want to work like slaves. We want nature; we want to work, but we want to be free."

She pitched into the rich, which she called "Die Herrschende Klasse," and into the press. She told the workingmen of their wrongs and wound up in a burst of passion telling them to go home and think of what she had said when they found themselves unable to give their children the food that they asked for.

The crowd cheered immensely. Miss Goldman sat on the railing of the platform and wept. Her lieutenant, Miss Lena, embraced her and wiped away her tears.

Miss Goldman asked for a glass of water. Word was sent by the policeman in charge of the faucet in the little cottage that she would find plenty of water otu in the park fountain. Her comment was, "That is an American." A World reporter suggested to the policeman in charge of the faucet that it would be as well to give a glass of water to the thirsty woman, just for the example, although she was an anarchist. The policeman consented, as a favor, he said, to the newspaper.

WHERE THE LAW FAILS

Benjamin Rosenthal, a cloakmaker, said, "Workingmen! You are workingmen, and yet you have no work, and have nothing to eat. Is there a law that says you must die for hunger? Is there a law that says you must work sixteen hours a day and then perish? Is there a law that allows you to pay a landlord rent for a year and then, when you fall behind for a month permits him to turn you into the street? Have the lawmakers done anything for you since you have been hungry? (Cries of 'No.')

"Do you want to die of hunger? (Cries of 'No.') The prisoners do not hunger. "Friends, this demonstration represents the many starving men, women and children of New York. It may be that not all the toilers of the city are present to-night, but when the agitation for the abolition of slavery began there were fewer people willing to make demonstrations for it than there are here to-night. Yet slavery was abolished and the American people live under the same American flag. (Cheers.)

"As the abolitionists had faith that slavery would be abolished, so let us believe that the sweating-system will sooner or later be done away with, and with it will disappear the misery of the toiling masses. As to the present crisis, let me say to you do not allow any politician to use you as a tool. (Cheers.) When the Republican party was in power the Democratic party complained that the Republican party was the worst that ever existed. Now, when the Democrats are in power, the Republicans are clamoring. Let them clamor. The Democrats wanted to get into office for the sake of saving the people and the others, I suppose, wanted to save the people for the sake of getting into office. Let us tell these men that we know there is something surely unjust—that there must be something surely unlawful in the present system of society, when so many men, women and children are willing to sell their bodies and souls for a piece of bread and can get nobody to buy them."

EVICTIONS MUST STOP.

"The men on Fifth avenue, the men in Wall street, have their champagne to-night and their pianos playing. Do they care for you? Do they care whether you are starving to death? Let us to-night say to the judges, let us tell the police justices and the police officers that if they want this present crisis to pass away in a quiet manner they must not throw out children on the streets. Don't evict us for non-payment of rent when we have not money to pay rent. (Great cheering.) Let us call upon the public to sympathize with us. Let us appeal to every one with a feeling heart. Let us appeal to every man and woman who believes in a common humanity. Let us appeal to them in a unanimous outcry. Let us say, give us work for the sake of preserving our lives and the lives of our wives and children.

"My friends, I am exceedingly happy that this meeting here to-night was not disturbed. I hope that you will assemble again. I hope that you will consider well your present situation. I hope that you will discuss the situation in a quiet, honorable and orderly manner, and you will gain the admiration and the sympathy, not only of all American workingmen, but of the workingmen of the world. Therefore, allow me to call for three cheers for the international fraternity of workingmen."

MISS SEGER SPEAKS.

The cheers were heartily given and then Miss Goldman's friend, Pauline Maria Seger, was introduced. She said: "We desire that labor should be taken away from prisoners and given to you. Would you be satisfied then?"

Some people in the crowd cried "No," and the Chairman angrily exclaimed "Keep quiet!"

Continuing, the woman said: "Can you expect anything from the capitalists? No. It is now the fifth day since some of you have eaten a meal. I myself have scarcely eaten for the last few days. Some of us are going around without shoes and without a place to sleep to-night. We want bread. We want the right to labor. We want the fruits of our toil. Do not forget that this is not the first demonstration of workingmen, and it is not the last. As long as we cannot get bread and butter and clothing we will not keep silent. Go out and assert your rights. Go out with your flags and the motto shall be 'Bread or Blood.'" (Great cheering.)

THE MEETING ADJOURNED.

The Chairman for the second time announced the adjournment of the meeting, and again there were cries of 'No.'

On the corner of Stanton street a crowd was waiting to cheer the paraders. Emma Goldman saw them. The smiles left her face, she threw her head back and fixed her colored eye-glasses upon her nose. The interest of the crowd was entirely in the two women. They gathered in front of them and pressed from the sides and rear.

Emma Goldman walked with a stately tread, as if she wished to create a deep impression. Miss Seger seemed to be abused to such notoriety, and tried to screen herself behind Miss Goldman. In her right hand she carried a roll of parchment pressed against her breast.

Another crowd was awaiting the procession at East Houston street. A car going east came along as the two women reached the crossing.

With a quick look at the crowd pressing around her, Emma Goldman whispered to her companion and stepped upon the car. Miss Seger followed her example, and the two had disappeared before the crowd realized what had happened. A halt in the procession followed, and then the unemployed workingmen learned that the start had been premature.

Until 5:45 a half dozen policemen had charge of the crowd at the corner of Rivington and Essex streets. At that hour Capt. Devery with two squads of policemen, thirty-two men to each, marched to the front of Golden Rule Hall.

The men were stationed at short intervals and ordered to make no interference with the forming of the procession unless there was danger of a riot. At exactly 6 o'clock Capt. Devery gave permission for the procession to move forward. Six policemen walked at the head of the line to see that the streets were clear.

As the signal for the advance was given the line, which a moment before seemed to contain at least three thousand people, gradually grew thinner. Men slunk away into the crowds on the sidewalks, and whole companies of men who were supposed to be ready to start quietly disbanded. The procession as it left the hall did not seem to number more than one thousand people.

It took exactly five minutes for it to pass around the corner into Essex street, and when it had disappeared up the street there seemed to be as large a crowd as ever at the intersection of Essex and Rivington streets.

Capt. Devery waited with his two squads of policemen ten minutes and then ordered them to march to the station-house. The saloons in the vicinity of Golden Rule Hall were crowded both before and after the line was formed.

The procession moved up Essex street to Third street, across to Second avenue, up Second avenue to Thirteenth street, then across to Fourth avenue, and up that street to the north side of Union Square. There was no demonstration along the line of march. At the different street corners small crowds gathered to watch the parade out of curiosity, and once there was a slight clapping of hands to applause.

The workingmen carried no banners, no torches, and they did not cheer. No band led the procession, consequently there was no attempt to keep step. The men walked as if they were simply going to work, but all the time kept as nearly six abreast as possible.

When the policemen heading the procession entered Union Square a flash of lightning sent its reflection across the street. A thousand or more people stood near the Cottage, where the speaking was to take place. They made no demonstration as the procession approached, and in a few minutes the workingmen from Golden Rule Hall had broken their line of march and were mingling with the crowd in front of the cottage.

IT WAS A FEVERISH DAY.

There Were Exciting Meetings, but Incendiary Speeches Were Stopped.

Edward Ury and Joseph Lowenstein the committee appointed to get a permit for the parade of the unemployed, visited Police Headquarters early yesterday and saw Acting Superintendent Conlin. The Inspector was satisfied by the representations of the men that their destitute situation would be materially benefited by the parade, and granted the permit. The Church at No. 89 Rivington street in the afternoon. The Rev. Arno C. Gaebelein preached. Not more than one hundred and fifty of the congregation were Christians by creed. Dominie Gaebelein chose for his text: "He shall speak peace to the nations."

A ROW IN A CHURCH.

Mr. Gaebelein's effort to speak peace was not happy in its results. "It's a poor way to get bread," said he, "by breaking into saloons." A big, black-bearded man jumped up and accused the pastor of speaking libelously.

Mr. Gaebelein told the interrupter to be quiet. A hundred other men sprang to their feet and hurled denunciations at the pulpit. The regular attendants at the church services tried to soothe the angry crowd, but in vain, and a policeman was called in. At sight of him the disturbers fled.

HIS PARENTS STARVING.

A gaunt man approached a group of reporters near Walhalla Hall. "Come with me," he said, "and I will show you something terrible. My father and mother are dying of hunger. My name is Julius Bodansky and I am out of work."

He took the reporters to the third floor of the rear tenement at No. 150 Delancey street. His mother, Golda Bodansky, was lying on a sofa and his father, Jacob, was pacing up and down like a wolf in a cage. The old woman appeared to be in the last stages of consumption. The scanty coverlets did not altogether conceal her limbs, which were as thin as a starveling child's, and her hands were like sparrow's claws.

"Look at that," said Julius, "and I can get no money and no food. A doctor from the Board of Health came here the other day. He simply opened the door, looked in, wrote a prescription, threw it on the table and went away. I took the prescription to a druggist and he wanted a dollar. I couldn't get it and he refused to give me the medicine. What can we do? Behold us! And there are many others in our plight."

The reporters subscribed a few dollars for the poor people and Bodansky hurried away to get medicine and food for his parents.

POLICE VACATIONS STOPPED.

Inspector Conlin So Orders as a Measure of Precaution.

Acting Superintendent Conlin issued an order yesterday morning stopping all vacations in the police force until further orders. This is in view of the possible trouble growing out of the recent labor demonstrations. Although Inspector Conlin declared that he does not think any serious complications will result, he deems it advisable to be ready for any emergency, and will hold the whole police force in readiness to respond at a moment's notice.

Those of the force who are now away on their vacation will be allowed to stay their full time, but no more applications will be granted, and the vacations already granted, where the men have not yet left the city, will be revoked. The order applies to all the superiors, captains, sergeants, roundsmen and patrolmen. About 150 hundred men are now away leaving upward of 1,000 ready for active duty.

Inspectors Conlin, Mc Av[illegible] and Superintendent of the Police Telegraph System had a [illegible] yesterday afternoon perfecting arrangements for [illegible] all from among the reserves [illegible] at hand by station [illegible] the first sign of trouble, and to keep a [illegible] reserves under [illegible] the [illegible] of the men.

MOST AND EMMA GOLDMAN.

The Prophetess of Disorder Frowned on [illegible]

[illegible] Church at No. 89 Rivington street in the [illegible] ling is over and the permit has expired."

THE MOVE ON WASHINGTON.

Authorities Ready to Deal with Any Anarchistic Demonstration.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 19.—Speaking of the movement said to have been inaugurated in St. Louis of urging all the unemployed of the West to move on Washington, Herman J. Schulteis, of the local Federation of Labor, a member of the Immigration Committee sent to Europe not long ago by the Government, says:

"I knew of this movement some ten days ago. I did not then and do not now approve of the scheme, and my most earnest endeavors were exerted to discourage it. It was originally projected to muster at least 20,000 and, if possible, a half a million unemployed men, to force Congress by means of a tremendous demonstration, to provide relief for the needy classes. I do not believe that the Federation of Labor is at the bottom of this movement. It is the direct result of the agitation of a lot of cranks, Socialists and Anarchists—some of whom are in this city to-day strenuously endeavoring to create trouble.

"It may be added that if any movement such as that foreshadowed is attempted on a large scale there is no city on the continent where such prompt and vigorous measures could be taken to repress any Anarchical demonstration. There would be no red tape, no intervention of Mayor or Governor, from whom action must be had before the strong arm of the National Government could intervene. A move of Anarchists in Washington would be a move against the Government of the United States, and there are abundant National forces at hand to promptly repress it."

WORKMEN WANT MONEY OR BLOOD.

Alderman Molloy, of New Rochelle, Belaborad by His Employees.

SPECIAL TO THE WORLD.

MOUNT VERNON, N. Y., Aug. 19.—Charles Yaker, William E. Walkley and James Farell, stone-pavers, of New York, were held in the New Rochelle Police Court to-day on a charge of feloniously assaulting Alderman Molloy, of Molloy Brothers, contractors. The men had finished paving Mechanic street and demanded their pay. It was not forthcoming and they started in search of some member of the firm. They met Alderman Molloy and his brother Dillie. Loud words were exchanged, and soon the Alderman and his brother had thrown off their coats and were fighting with their employees. Dillie Molloy drew a revolver, but was prevented from using it by a bystander. Both the defendants were severely punished.

One Arrest Was Made.

Robert Johnson, twenty-six years old, of No. 211 East Twenty-eighth street, a blacksmith, who attended the meeting at Union Square last night, was arrested by one of Inspector McAvoy's detectives at Broadway and Seventeenth street after the crowd had dispersed, for refusing [illegible] when asked to do so.

When arrested he [illegible] his friends for help, which they [illegible] him. He was locked up in the West Thirty-second street station.

FOUND DEAD IN HIS ROOM

Herman Ulke's Sudden End Due to Asthma and Consumption.

When [illegible] today at [illegible] house, [illegible] yesterday forenoon, [illegible]

[illegible] Private Scott Gets the [illegible]
Score of 138 [illegible]

SEABIRT, N. J., Aug. [illegible] bledon Cup match, the [illegible] of matches of the N[illegible] sociation of America, [illegible] the range here, attract[illegible] large crowd of spectators both military and civ[illegible] the interested spectators number of ladies who [illegible] glasses with them with [illegible] the target 3,600 feet away.

Private Scott, of the [illegible] team, won the Wimbledon [illegible] was 138; Major Harris [illegible] a score of 125. Last year's winner, Gens, was 123. [illegible] tered in the competition.

In the members' match [illegible] lers of the New Jer[illegible] Team only five shots a[illegible] A. B. Kaiser, 24, was [illegible] Van Valen 23, second, [illegible] re, 20.

The Kaiser match, 2[illegible] yards, three highest s[illegible] 1. A. Kirk, of Washi[illegible] ng; Lieut. Roebling, [illegible] 99; Major Pollard, of [illegible] Highest possible, 105.

The military match, [illegible] was won by Major Pol[illegible] 21 at each range, a to[illegible] Roebling was a close [illegible] and 24 or 47 in all.

NO DANGER OF [illegible]

A False Cholera Alarm [illegible] Buffalo

BUFFALO, Aug. 19.—[illegible] Marine Hospital Surg[illegible] tonsil at Suspension B[illegible] cholera suspects, has [illegible] York. Thursday two [illegible] from Canada and while [illegible] examining one the cond[illegible] other. There were [illegible] grants from cholera d[illegible] they escaped. Dr. Ring[illegible] yesterday and swore o[illegible] the arrest of the conduc[illegible]

WASHINGTON, Aug. [illegible] rad Wyman, of the [illegible] Service, when shown t[illegible] Buffalo anent immigra[illegible] infected ports said: "[illegible] Canada from abroad [illegible] Quebec, and there they [illegible] Dr. Montizambert, and [illegible] E. Hanks, of the [illegible] Service who is station[illegible] Superintendent of the Canad[illegible] Every immigrant pass[illegible] he is inspected and [illegible] fected. He is not [illegible] through unless he [illegible] signed to both physici[illegible] larger whatever [illegible] grants.

BERLIN'S PRIGH[illegible]

Reported Cases of Ch[illegible] as Due to Und[illegible]

BERLIN, Aug. 19. [illegible] cholera here [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] matter [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible]

890110001

The Emma Goldman Papers

[Excerpt from Lecture] The Demonstration of the Unemployed / Emma Goldman. — pp. 1-2 ; 28 cm. In The World. —(Aug. 20, 1893).

Obtained from the University of California, Berkeley. Institutional Location: Doe Library.

example, although she was an anarchist. The policeman consented, as a favor, he said, to the newspaper.

WHERE THE LAW FAILS.

Benjamin Rosenthal, a cloakmaker, said: "Workingmen! You are workingmen, and yet you have no work, and have nothing to eat. Is there a law that says you must die for hunger? Is there a law that says you must work sixteen hours a day and then perish? Is there a law that allows you to pay a landlord rent for a year, and then, when you fall behind for a month, permits him to turn you into the street? Have the lawmakers done anything for you since you have been hungry?" (Cries of 'No.')

"Do you want to die of hunger? (Cries of 'No.') The prisoners do not hunger, and they are allowed to work. We should stop this. Let convict labor cease, so that you may have a chance to earn bread for your wives and children. (Cheers.) I am an American citizen, and I am hungry and out of work, but the Government is doing nothing for me. Do you remember that time in Homestead, when people died fur hunger's sake?"

There was some jostling in front of the platform, and the speaker exclaimed: "Keep quiet! Behave yourselves!" He then continued: "I would like you to be still until I speak what is in my heart. Congress is meeting, but is doing nothing for the laborers. Congressmen have never felt hunger. Who knows better than we what hunger is, what it is to have no place to lay our heads? Our wives and children are sleeping in the streets.

"They say that we should keep the law. Well, let them arrest me. In prison I would, at any rate, have something to eat. What have you got to lose? There is nothing worse than to die from hunger. It is better to die as a brave man than to die as a slave. The capitalistic press say we are hot-heads and not laborers, yet we have only been talking of our hunger. Our cry is for bread or labor. Do not lose your courage, hungry as you are. Protest against the condition of affairs. Ask others why they keep quiet. Don't they want to eat as well as we? Politicians make promises and ask you to vote for them. Where were they when our wives and children were dying of hunger? They will have no answer. At that time they were sitting at home eating abundantly and drinking choice wines. Again I say, don't lose courage. Call for your rights, fight for your rights and you will get them."

RAIN THINS THE CROWD.

The rain began to pour down on the crowd, and there was a thinning out at the outskirts. Although many of the people had umbrellas, there were signs of impatience during the address of the next speaker, a cigarmaker named Radischowski, and he was interrupted several times. The audience pressed up towards the platform, and there were shouts of "Keep still!" and "Don't push!" The police lined up before the platform and bore back the swaying multitude until a clear lane several feet wide was made.

Radischowski said: "In spite of the rain, stay here and listen to your brothers who are talking of your interests. This shows that you are in earnest. What matters a little rain to starving men? We are not speaking for ourselves; we are speaking for you. Why should men willing to work be without work? Help lies with yourselves. All the promises of smooth-tongued capitalists are worth nothing. Why have we not been united? God knows where we would be now if we had only kept together. Let this crisis be a

No. It is now the fifth day since some of you have eaten a meal. I myself have scarcely eaten for the last few days. Some of us are going around without shoes and without a place to sleep to-night. We want bread. We want the right to labor. We want the fruits of our toil. Do not forget that this is not the first demonstration of workingmen, and it is not the last. So long as we cannot get bread and butter and clothing we will not keep silent. Go out and assert your rights. Go out with your flags and the motto shall be 'Bread or Blood.'" (Great cheering.)

THE MEETING ADJOURNED.

The Chairman for the second time announced the adjournment of the meeting, and again there were cries of "No, No." Barondess hustled to the front and shouted: "The last speaker has spoken. There will be no more here to-night. The meeting is geschlossen."

"No, no," cried the crowd.

"I tell you it is," Barondess decided. "You cannot have any more speaking to-night, and that is all there is about it. Three cheers for liberty!"

The cheers were given and still the meeting did not disperse. The policemen on duty were wet and cross, and began to show signs of impatience. A young man approached the front of the platform and waved his arms. "See here," said the Sergeant, "what are you up to? Do you think you have two permits for meetings here to-night or what?"

"I only want to make an announcement," said the man. Then he shouted, "Men, in the names of your hungry wives and children, I beg you to go home quietly. Come to-morrow morning at 10 o'clock to No. 257 East Tenth street and we will have a meeting there. Now please go home."

The crowd reluctantly moved away. Barondess and a few other speakers lingered at the cottage. "Gentlemen," said the Sergeant, "this platform is no longer yours. You must clear out. Take your ladies," he added, pointing to a group of women, "and go."

"I guess I can take care of my own family," said Barondess, and taking the arm of one of the women he went away.

MOST MAKES A TEMPERANCE SPEECH.

Two hundred Anarchists met at Paul Wilzig's saloon, No. 85 East Fourth street, last night to discuss what methods should be taken to aid the unemployed. John Most presided, and made a short speech, guardedly saying, in substance, that the unemployed workingmen were hungry, starving, and that something must be done. After his speech Most suggested that the meeting be adjourned until 2 P. M. to-day, in the same place. The suggestion was adopted, after a resolution had been passed that the Anarchists join in the parade on Labor Day.

DAILY MEETINGS ARRANGED.

At a meeting of the United Trades Union last night, at No. 91 Delancey street, President Uhlemann, presiding, it was decided to arrange every day peaceable public meetings of the unemployed men, in order to keep them from confliction with the police in either act or word. The men were also to confer about wages and means for helping the unemployed in a lawful manner.

EAGER TO SEE EMMA GOLDMAN.

Her Appearance Caused a Fake Start Of The Procession.

Three or four thousand people were at the intersection of Rivington and Essex streets at 5 P. M. yesterday. The centre of the crowd broke their line of march and were mingling with the crowd in front of the cottage.

IT WAS A FEVERISH DAY.

There Were Exciting Meetings, but Incendiary Speeches Were Stopped.

Edward Ury and Joseph Levenstein, the committee appointed to get a permit for the parade of the unemployed, visited Police Headquarters early yesterday and saw Acting Supt. Conlin. The Inspector was satisfied by the representations of the men that their demonstration would be conducted decently and in order, and he granted the desired permit. Nevertheless, he made elaborate preparations to suppress any disorder or rioting, and he told the committee that any incendiary speaking by Emma Goldman or others would not be tolerated.

The committeemen hurried to Golden Rule Hall, where the unemployed were holding an all-day meeting, and found Miss Goldman there, making a fiery address. Mr. Ury interrupted, and said that Inspector Conlin had ordered that kind of thing to be stopped.

EMMA GOLDMAN DEFIANT.

"Isn't this a free meeting?" asked Miss Goldman, tossing her head.

"Yes," said Ury, "but you must not make any Anarchistic speeches."

"We'll see about that," said the defiant Emma. Then she left the hall, followed by a few admirers, and went to a store in Grand street and did some shopping. Then she looked into Walhalla Hall for a minute, but everything was quiet there. She went on to No. 4 Canal street, where she had her picture taken by Photographer Zog. The "Queen of the Anarchists" had not had a very satisfactory day so far.

Later she heard that there was a meeting of Socialists at Military Hall, at No. 193 Bowery. The speakers were A. Fagenbaum, Roman Lewis and Morris Nelkewitch. They had paid $5 rent for the hall, and they recommended their people to keep away from all street demonstrations.

THEY WOULDN'T HEAR HER.

Miss Goldman literally sailed into the hall. She wore a white dirt waist, a black skirt and a black hat, with red roses. "Ziep," she said, "I come to address you."

"Get out of here" was the response. "We don't want you or any of your kind."

Emma snorted with wrath and departed. When she was gone the Socialists made arrangements for daily meetings of the unemployed. The first will be held at 2 P. M. to-day. They also decided to engage Cooper Union at least once a month for mass-meetings, and appointed August Waldinger, Harry Glen and Isaac Bennett as a Relief Committee to collect money, food and clothes for the needy. The committee's headquarters will be at No. 64 East Fourth street, and the rooms will be open from 8 A. M. until midnight daily.

BARONDESS A PEACEMAKER.

Joseph Barondess visited the meeting at Golden Rule Hall and stated that he had held a conference with Inspector Conlin and Capt. Devery at the Eldridge Street station-house Friday evening, and had given assurances that the majority of the unemployed who wished to parade and meet at Union Square were American citizens and peaceable men. "The Acting Superintendent told me," he added, "that he thought the assemblages had been for the purpose of assaulting spectors, captains, sergeants roundsmen and patrolmen. About two hundred men are now away, leaving upward of 3,400 ready for active duty.

Inspectors Conlin, McAvoy, and Supt. Brennan, of the Police Telegraph System, had a protracted conference in the Superintendent's room yesterday afternoon, perfecting arrangements for summoning aid from among the reserves quartered at near-by station-houses in the event of trouble, and to keep Acting Superintendent Conlin fully informed of the progress of the meeting.

MOST AND EMMA GOLDMAN.

The Propheteess of Disorder Frowned on by Die Freiheit.

Anarchist John Most and Emma Goldman were sweethearts five years ago. Then Most and Emma could be seen often promenading through Tompkins Park. They parted though, Most alleging that she had tried to make a fool of him, and she took up with Berkman, who shot Frick. Since then Most has been saving uncomplimentary things in his organ, Die Freiheit, about Emma. She had no newspaper to answer back, but every one who knows her knows she can talk. She has said that Most was mean and cowardly, and a traitor to the Anarchist cause, and that was why Most and Emma did not speak from the same platform last night.

Capt. Devery is blamed in some quarters for failing to arrest Emma for her incendiary speech in urging the people in Tobias's Hall to riot. The Captain believes that her arrest at that time would have gained her much sympathy, and, besides, she was very careful not to say anything that could be construed into the sort of misdemeanor for which Most served two terms of one year each in the penitentiary. Capt. Devery had two men following Emma all day yesterday, and everything said by her was carefully noted down and will be submitted to the District-Attorney.

Herr Most's Freiheit, which appeared yesterday, said nothing complimentary about Emma, but expressed the belief that the rioters were behaving like fools. Most attacks the United Hebrew Trades editorially. "The United Hebrew Trades," he writes, "is composed of Socialists, every one of whom is compelled to vote for the Socialist Democratic party, otherwise he is treated and considered as a 'scab.' Union No. 11 had 1,500 members two years ago, but since they joined the Central Labor Federation the union has become crippled. Only a few fanatics are left at the head of the organization.

"The cloakmakers, with their 8,000 members, could have fought the capitalists. Since their defeat many cloakmakers have inhaled the poison of social democracy. Their entire work has become a failure. The result has been that the cloakmakers left the Central Labor Federation and the United Hebrew Trades, to join the I. C. W. The United Tailors and other organizations have done the same. A few demagogues are still keeping up the Central Labor Federation for selfish interest and for personal gain."

PICKED UP IN THE CROWD.

Incidents Noted by World Reporters at the Union Square Meeting.

"If the police were any good," thundered Joseph Barondess, after his speech spector McAvoy's detectives at Broadway and Seventeenth street after the crowd had dispersed, for refusing to move on when asked to do so.

When arrested he called upon his friends for help, which they declined to give. He was locked up in the West Thirtieth street station.

FOUND DEAD IN HIS ROOM.

Herman Litke's Sudden End Due to Asthma and Consumption.

When Day Clerk Lindsay at the Morton House sent up to Herman Litke's room yesterday forenoon to learn why he had not yet come downstairs the occupant, who came to the hotel on July 28 from Chicago, was found dead in bed.

Later in the day the Coroner found that death had resulted from asthma and consumption and the body was removed to H. A. Taggart's undertaking establishment, No. 4 Spring street.

Litke was thirty-five years old and appeared to have no employment. The Public Administrator will open his trunk to-day and endeavor to communicate with his friends in Chicago.

MANY CHILDREN WILL SING.

An Open-Air Concert to Be Given Wednesday in Abingdon Square.

The Abingdon Square concerts given by Rampono's Old Guard Band every Wednesday evening are becoming more interesting as they progress.

Tammany Leader James W. Boyle intends to have at least two hundred children seated around the musicians' stand singing patriotic songs next Wednesday night, and they will meet in the large rooms of Tammany Headquarters, at the corner of Park and Hudson streets, to-morrow for rehearsal.

Hunting Water in Railroad St cks.

[SPECIAL TO THE WORLD.]

OMAHA, Neb., Aug. 19.—The State Board of Transportation has filed its answers in the cases brought by the railroads to restrain the board from putting into effect the law which makes the maximum rates depend on dividends. It is understood that figures will be produced to show that some of the roads, notably the Chicago, Burlington and Quincy, have watered their stock until the actual stock is more than three-fifths fluid, yet they have paid from 8 to 10 per cent. dividends on the fictitious valuation, while if the stock had not been watered for the purpose of blinding the public, the dividends paid would have amounted to 20 or 25 per cent.

A New Bridge Over the St. Lawrence.

MONTREAL, Aug. 19.—The Grand Trunk Railway has decided to build a new bridge across the St. Lawrence River at Montreal, the old single-track bridge being too limited for the accommodation of the traffic. The new bridge will be built alongside the old one, and on the old piers, which will be extended. It will be a double-track open bridge. Work will be begun at once.

Burglars Secure $900 in Ready Cash.

PROVIDENCE, R. I., Aug. 19.—Walter Clapp's residence was robbed last night of cash and valuables representing $2,800. The burglars also stole jewelry from three other houses.

Hundred Cases of ... as Due to ...

BERLIN, Aug. ... cases of cholera ... to a single source — ... Russian Poles—the ... dismissed the matter ... theirs. Each case ... the person affected ... food imported from ... Russia.

The police are ... ing Russian emigrants ... arrive from cholera ... migration was ... checked.

WASHINGTON ... Wyman has received ... Consul-Gen. Edwards ... that there are no ... cholera there.

A Business Insurance ...

NEWARK, N. J., ... States Credit System ... for $40,000 by M. Levy ... of New Orleans. The ... for $20,000 a year ... Company, which insures ... bess losses of all kinds ... two years ago they ... now sub for $40,000, ... the two years. The ... failed to report their ... their certificate requires ...

Uncle Sam Still ...

WASHINGTON, Aug. ... the United States Treasury ... date amount to $1 ... ceipts for the ... $46,545,770. The ... to date are $22,207,0... to date $61,882,88... circulation outstanding ... 368, an increase during ... 000.

Warner's $35,000 ...

CLAYTON, N. Y., ... Sleeper, the beautiful ... to H. H. Warner, ... Rochester, was sold ... Bay to-day to John ... exact amount of cash ... $35,000. Mr. Warner ... Islands. He is in Europe ...

Antwerp Gives Cholera ...

ANTWERP, Aug. ... the reports that cholera ... the various consuls ... to vessels leaving ... to the Asiatic cholera ... been choleraine caused ... of fruit.

Death Looked ...

Abraham Littler, ... 405 West Fifty-second ... despondency yesterday ... throat with a razor ... Roosevelt Hospital. ... will recover. He is ... married.

Both Legs Cut ...

James Barghardt, ... legs cut off by a motor ... son County Railway ... ably die. The motor ...

Rerouse breakfast Beer ...
Aids as a brace—...

BEST COPY AVAILABLE

890110002

The Emma Goldman Papers

[Excerpt from Lecture] Urging Men to Riot / Emma Goldman. — p. 8 ; 28 cm. In The World. —(Aug. 22, 1893).

Obtained from the University of California, Berkeley. Institutional Location: Doe Library.

URGING MEN TO RIOT.

Emma Goldman Makes an Incendiary Speech in Union Square.

SHE DEFIES THE POLICE AND ADVISES HER HEARERS TO ARM.

Mid Cheers of the Crowd She Boards a Car and Detectives Follow Her.

Hungry and Unemployed Men Are Told that It Is Their Right to Seize Food and Property Wherever They Can Find It—Several Thousand Men Applaud the Cry "Hurrah for Anarchy!" but There Is No Outbreak—Other Speeches in the Same Vein — The Police Are on the Alert, but Are Not Called to Act — Mr. Klinkowstein Feeds Sixteen Hundred People at His Place on East Broadway—A Relief Committee of Wealthy Citizens Organized to Assist Him.

Emma Goldman made an incendiary speech to a mass-meeting of the unemployed in Union Square last night. To make sure that no one would have any doubt as to her meaning, the spitfire spoke first in English and then in German. About three thousand men listened and cheered her. Inspector McLaughlin and Detective-Sergeants Jacobs, Heidelberg, Von Gerichten, Trainer, Kush and Murphy also heard her, but did not applaud. The detectives stood among the throng on the speakers' platform at the cottage. Jacobs was right behind Miss Goldman while she was speaking.

In everything except the speechmaking the meeting was orderly. A line of park policemen fringed the crowd, many in plain clothes were mingled with it and five hundred bluecoats were in the side streets near the square ready to answer quickly to any call from Inspector McAvoy, who was in command.

About a thousand men marched in procession from Covenant Hall to Union Square.

Fifty policemen escorted the paraders out of the Tenth Ward, and when the Seventeenth Ward line was reached Capt. Doherty's men took charge. Inspector Williams viewed the marchers from Tenth street and Second avenue. The Inspector was in plain clothes.

The route of the procession was from forming in a sort of line marched to Second avenue, shouting "Hurrah for Anarchy! Down with capitalists!"

HE FED SIXTEEN HUNDRED.

Mr. Klinkowstein's Practical Charity to the Unemployed.

Morris Klinkowstein, the big-bodied and big-hearted saloon-keeper at Rutgers street and East Broadway, announced again yesterday that he would give soup, bread and meat to all hungry persons who came to his place between 11 A. M. and 1 P. M. As early as 10 o'clock a crowd of ragged men, women and children had gathered in the Rutgers square triangle and on East Broadway. When Mr. Klinkowstein saw the multitude he sent around to the Madison street police station for help. His free meal experiment of Sunday had cost him more than he had bargained for, because the crowd had surged upstairs, and in their anxiety to reach the dining-room had broken part of the balustrades of the stairway.

MR. KLINKOWSTEIN, WHO FED THE UNEMPLOYED.

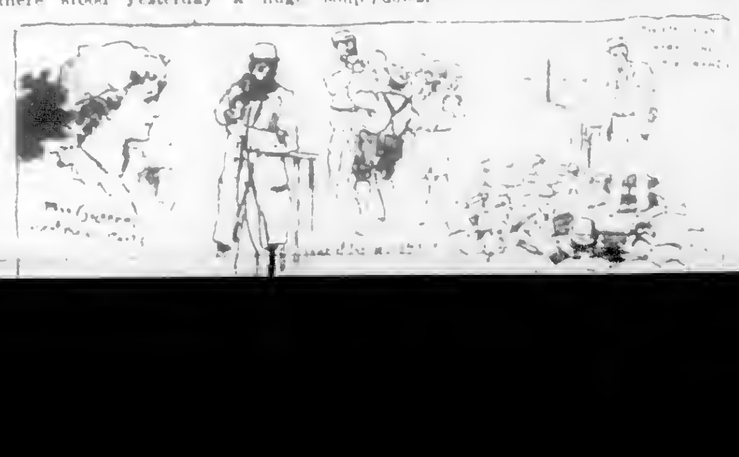
Roundsman Murtha, with Patrolmen Gilmartin, Murphy, Moran and Curry, came, and formed the hungry people in a long column on the sidewalk. Above the liquor store is a room used for lodge meetings. It is long and narrow, running the full length of the building. Beside the dais, at one end, there stood yesterday a huge soup big boiler had been replenished repeatedly, and three other boilers in different parts of the building had been kept going. "Send out for herrings! Send out for more bread!" cried Mr. Klinkowstein. The waiting line on the sidewalk did not seem to have thinned out at all. It was constantly being reinforced. "Send more men in," said Mr. Klinkowstein. "We'll give them bread and herring."

Several hundred men and boys were fed on this fare.

When finally the door had to be closed the unfortunates who were too late turned wearily away without a murmur. Mr. Klinkowstein shouted to them not to be disheartened, but to come back to-day, when he will have provisions for twice the number fed yesterday.

Mr. Klinkowstein's guests consumed 150 gallons of soup, 500 loaves of bread and 200 pounds of meat. In addition to this food, the open-hearted host gave away a good many dollars in dimes and quarters.

WORKMEN URGED TO GET ARMS.



Emma Goldman's Incendiary Speech at Covenant Hall.

Several minor meetings of the unemployed were held yesterday. The Anarchists rallied at Covenant Hall, No. 58 Orchard street, and the Socialists met at Pythagoras Hall. There was a great deal of fiery talk at the Anarchists' meeting. Covenant Hall is almost next door to Walhalla Hall. The proprietor is Joseph Batt. Emma Goldman's friend, Pauline Seger, had been wandering around all the morning endeavoring in vain to get a meeting place. At last Miss Seger, followed by a crowd of men, went to Covenant Hall. Mr. Batt had seen the Walhalla Hall riot and did not dare to refuse the use of his place. "Come in," he said. "Are you hungry?"

"Yes!" came an answering shout.

"If you will be quiet I'll give you some food," he said. In a few minutes the crowd was ravenously eating up a generous free lunch and drinking beer at Mr. Batt's expense. While they were eating Mr. Batt sent word of the invasion to the Eldridge street station-house, and half a dozen officers were soon stationed at his door, and two in plain clothes went into the hall.

Pauline Seger, clad all in black and with a diamond ring sparkling on her finger, sat at a table smoking cigarettes, while a dozen Anarchists abused the police, the reporters and the prevailing conditions of society. One speaker said: "The police have no right to interfere with us. Anything you want you ought to take. One day we'll march out by hundreds of thousands and assert our rights. That beautiful day is coming. If any policeman interfered with me I'd knock him down."

executive officers may select the men, and no doubt they will be approved by the unions."

The Relief Committee will meet to-morrow and afterwards at No. 385 Bowery from 10 A. M. until 10 P. M.

Mr. Gompers received a letter from Walter S. Hair yesterday inclosing $25 for the relief fund.

The committee appointed to call on the municipal authorities will probably visit the Mayor at the City Hall to-day.

PULLED DOWN THE BLACK FLAGS.

Newark's Mayor Suppresses an Incipient Outbreak.

There were two demonstrations by the unemployed in Newark yesterday. [illegible] persons gathered at the others are in need of the necessaries of life. We therefore call upon the Mayor and the Board of Aldermen of the City of New York to convene in special session and devise ways and means to alleviate the present distress in the same manner and to the same intent as they would were it caused by fire or pestilence. We ask the city authorities to provide ways and means for the commencement and continuance of public works for the employment of those who are now unemployed, the employment to be direct and not by contract. We call on the Governor of this State and the President of the United States to call a convention by public proclamation and take such legislative action as will tend to relieve the present distress."

The committee appointed to send an appeal to the different labor organizations issued an address last evening which concluded as follows:

"The central organizations are so peculiarly circumstanced that a conference between them would have resulted in squabbles and mutual distrust. We therefore invite every individual trade-union in New York to select three representatives to attend a conference Sunday, Aug. 27, at 2 P. M., at the International Labor Exchange, No. 257 East Tenth street. If your unions do not hold meetings between now and Aug. 27, your

THE PARADE ON BROAD STREET.

tion, who feasted and made merry until midnight.

LONGSHOREMEN'S TROUBLES.

Three Coastwise Steamer Lines Cut Wages and One Withholds Them.

From one hundred to one hundred and fifty longshoremen lounged about on the west side of South street, between Wall street and Maiden lane, all of yesterday and last evening, and jeered the men who went to work for the Ward line of steamers plying between New York and Mexican and Cuban ports. As a result but few did go to work for the line, and they did so at their own peril, a squad of policemen from the Old Slip Police Station being their only protection.

The trouble began about 6 A. M. yesterday. C. H. Gibbs, superintendent of piers for the line, which occupies piers Nos. 16, 17 and 18 on South street, announced to the men Saturday that, beginning yesterday, their wages would be reduced from 30 to 25 cents an hour on the day shift. At the same time the Mallory line, at piers Nos. 20 and 21, and the Clyde line, at piers Nos. [illegible] 20, 21 and 4 similarly lowered their wages [illegible].

At Pier No. 16, of the Ward line, the steamer Saratoga, which leaves for Havana at 3 P. M. on Wednesday, was [illegible] the other vessels of the [illegible] the Ward line [illegible] knew this and [illegible] up and some [illegible] would be [illegible] [illegible] were available [illegible] the [illegible] [illegible] at work [illegible] and stowed away the

CRIPPLED FOR L

Condition of Many of Broc Elmira Reformatory Victi

WITNESSES WHOM INVEST CRAIG CAN QUESTION.

Some Blinded Some Have Broke All Permanently Hurt.

One Man's Eye Knocked Out Cheek, Also Her Jumped f Third Tier to Avoid Blows a His Legs Are Ruined in Con — All Tell of Flogging for formance of Impossible Cheaper to Bury an Inmate Feed Him, Brockway Says Men Rendered Forever Depe Injuries Received at the R Brockway and His Assista dence Accumulates of the Practised at Elmira and the tee Can Get All of I.

There are scores of men throughout the country to-day w been marked for life by the brut ment they received at the Elm formatory. Some of them ha their eyesight destroyed, othe scars on their heads and ba faces and not a few have h bodies drawn out of shape or and seared with the scars from the red-hot irons used Among the victims is [illegible] who was known at formatory as No. 4004. He now [illegible] Here is [illegible]

BEST COPY AVAILABLE

890110002

The Emma Goldman Papers

[Excerpt from Lecture] Urging Men to Riot / Emma Goldman. — p. 8 ; 28 cm. In The World. — (Aug. 22, 1893).

Obtained from the University of California, Berkeley. Institutional Location: Doe Library.

be one would have any doubt as to her meaning, the spitfire spoke first in English and then in German. About three thousand men listened and cheered her. Inspector McLaughlin and Detective-Sergeants Jacobs, Heidelberg, Von Gerichten, Trainer, Kush and Murphy also heard her, but did not applaud. The detectives stood among the throng on the speakers' platform at the cottage. Jacobs was right behind Miss Goldman while she was speaking.

In everything except the speechmaking the meeting was orderly. A line of park policemen ringed the crowd, many in plain clothes were mingled with it and five hundred bluecoats were in the side streets near the square ready to answer quickly to any call from Inspector McAvoy, who was in command.

About a thousand men marched in procession from Covenant Hall to Union Square.

Fifty policemen escorted the paraders out of the Tenth Ward, and when the Seventeenth Ward line was reached Capt. Doherty's men took charge. Inspector Williams viewed the marchers from Tenth street and Second avenue. The Inspector was in plain clothes.

The route of the procession was from Orchard street to Houston, to Avenue A, to Second street, to Second avenue, to Fourteenth street, and thence to the Square.

Emma Goldman was accompanied to the cottage by her friend, Pauline Seger, and Alexander Timmerman. Timmerman's name came before the public in association with Miss Goldman's when Berkman was arrested for attempting to assassinate H. C. Frick. Speeches were made from two trucks as well as from the central platform. At the cottage David Levy presided. When he introduced Emma Goldman there was tremendous cheering, and the speakers on the trucks were deserted while she spoke.

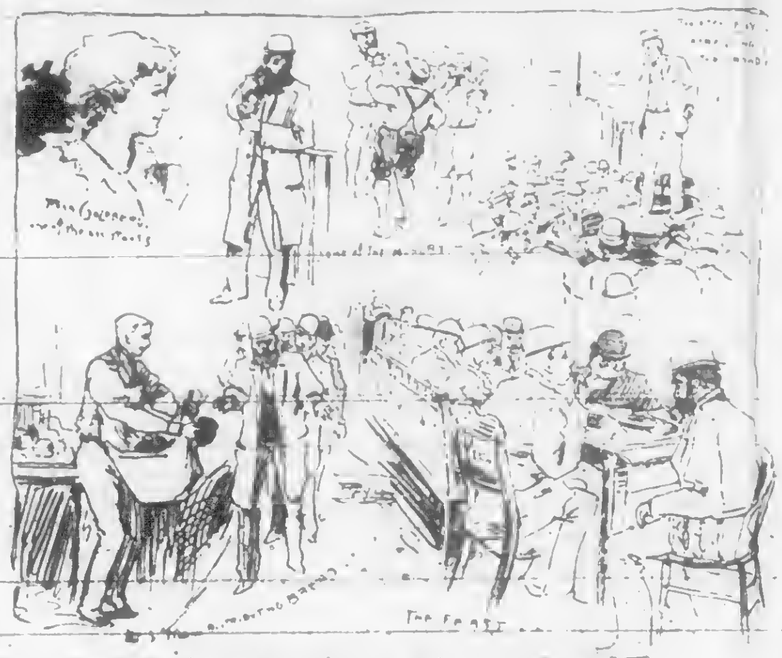
EMMA GOLDMAN'S SPEECH.

She said: "I would first like to appeal in English to the American workingmen. If Jefferson and Paine, who fought for freedom; Wendell Phillips and John Brown were here to see your misery they would be ashamed of their country. You have Senators and Congressmen who live in luxury while you have nothing to eat. Their children live in grand style. Their wives and daughters wear silks and diamonds. You have thought that the liberty of America gives you freedom and bread. Now you know how very much mistaken you have been. You are not free citizens. You are worse than black slaves.

"Americans! If you really want to be free citizens, take your rights into your own hands. Go and fight with your brothers, no matter if they are foreigners. You are starving as well as they. Don't be prejudiced against these poor people who have come to this country. They are not responsible for the prevailing conditions. The capitalist class is responsible. The capitalist system is bear its ruin.

"Unite and go from street to street. Go among the capitalists and rich people and ask for bread, and if they do not give it to you peaceably, then take it by force. Do as the North did against the South: You will find your John Brown and your Wendell Phillips as the North did.

"If you do not get bread and freedom peaceably, take it by force. As long as you are slaves, with nothing to eat; as long as you are dragged down, you cannot be human beings, respected by any nation. Unite with others. Go out in the street and fight for your bread, and take it if they will not give it to you."



SHE DEFIES THE POLICE.

Continuing in German, Miss Goldman said: "Do not be afraid of the clubs of the police. The advice the Anarchists have given you is good. What they told you a few years ago would happen is now taking place. We are street police station for help. His free meal experiment of Sunday had cost him more than he had bargained for, because the crowd had surged upstairs, and in their anxiety to reach the dining-room had broken part of the balustrades of the stairway.

MR. KLINKOWSTEIN, WHO FED THE UNEMPLOYED.

Roundsman Murtha, with Patrolmen Gilmartin, Murphy, Moran and Curry, came, and formed the hungry people in a long column on the sidewalk. Above the liquor store in a room used for lodge meetings. It is long and narrow, running the full length of the building. Beside the desk, at one end, there stood yesterday a huge soup boiler, set on a gas stove. Mrs. Klinkowstein presided over the boiler, and stirred and skimmed the soup. She is bright, plump and motherly looking. She wore a big white apron over her black skirt, and in a cheery voice gave directions to half a dozen volunteer assistants while she cooked.

FEEDING THE HUNGRY AT KLINKOWSTEIN'S SALOON.

Benches were ranged along the walls, besides a large number of chairs and improvised tables, which filled the centre space.

At 10.30 the crowd had increased so that the line of the hungry extended around the corner down into East Broadway. Mr. Klinkowstein is very emotional, and as he saw the crowd outside he jumped up and down with excitement.

The doors had not yet been opened when Register Levy came. Mr. Klinkowstein," he said, "you are doing a noble work, and I came, not only to congratulate you, but to offer co-operation." The Register then proposed the organization of a Committee of Relief, to assist Mr. Klinkowstein in providing daily meals. The suggestion was acted on immediately. Mr. Levy was appointed Chairman of the committee, and the following members were selected: Morris Klinkowstein, Alexander Haft, Morris Levy, Joseph Solomon, Joseph Jacobs, Jacob Katz, Jacob L. Lissner, Daniel Rathstein. The committee got down to business at once by starting a subscription. Register Levy gave $50, Morris Levy, $5; Katz & Co., $25, Jacob Lissner $25, Alexander Haft, $25, Joseph Solomon, $25, and A. S. Friedland, $10. Mr. Klinkowstein also received $5 and a sympathetic letter from Lawyer Abrafood," he said. In a few minutes the crowd was ravenously eating up a generous free lunch and drinking beer at Mr. Katz's expense. While they were eating Mr. Katz sent word of the invasion to the Eldridge street station-house, and half a dozen officers were soon stationed at his door, and two in plain clothes went into the hall.

Pauline Seger, clad all in black and with a diamond ring sparkling on her finger, sat at a table smoking cigarettes, while a dozen anarchists abused the police, the reporters and the prevailing conditions of society. One speaker said: "The police have no right to interfere with us. Anything you want you ought to take. One day we'll march out by hundreds of thousands and assert our rights. That beautiful day is coming. If any policeman interfered with me I'd knock him down."

The names of the speakers were withheld. One black-bearded individual objected to the presence of reporters in the hall.

"These minions of the capitalistic press are spying on us!" he yelled. "Down with reporters. Kill reporters."

A third speaker said: "We have to go and beg beer and ask permission to eat free lunches. Some day we'll go to Fifth avenue and shake up the sleek, fat millionaires who are living in the houses we have built. Down with priests and rabbis! Don't listen to them or to any of those who tell you to have patience! Fight for bread and butter! Fight! fight! fight! I shan't tell you how. You'll know how yourselves when the time comes."

Miss Seger had had her say, which did not amount to much, and then a person named Bodansky, for the relief of whose suffering mother several reporters on Saturday subscribed a small sum, arose and exclaimed: "The New York World has said that I received $10 from the capitalistic reporters."

The World said nothing of the sort. "It is a lie," howled Bodansky. "I received only a paltry dollar and twenty cents."

The man caught sight of John H. McLean, one of the top dogs who had contributed to the fund. "Come up here!" he cried. "You can tell them all." came up and told these people that I only got $1.10."

Mr. McLean said he did not care to make a speech, but Bodansky and some other men grabbed him and lifted him up on the table, which was used as a platform. Just then Emma Goldman, who had been making a speech at Newark, arrived. She inquired what the trouble was and advised the people not to make fools of themselves. Somebody ran out of the hall and cried: "For God's sake call the police! They're going to lynch a reporter."

THE PARADE ON BROAD STREET

executive officers may select the men, and no doubt they will be approved by the unions."

The Relief Committee will meet to-morrow and afterwards at No. 385 Bowery from 10 A. M. until 10 P. M.

Mr. Gompers received a letter from Walter N. Hair yesterday inclosing $25 for the relief fund.

The committee appointed to call on the municipal authorities will probably visit the Mayor at the City Hall to-day.

PULLED DOWN THE BLACK FLAGS.

Newark's Mayor Suppresses an Ineffectual Anarchism.

There were two demonstrations by idle workingmen in Newark yesterday. Fully 10,000 persons gathered at the junction of Wallace place and Bank street before 9 A. M., and 100 formed in an irregular line, with black flags and banners, and moved on their prearranged line of march. One plain black flag was raised. A second bore the inscription, on one side "Bread," on the other "Work," in white letters. Two black banners bore the words "We Suffer in the Midst of Plenty" and "The Signs of the Times: I am Starving Because He is Fat." On the opposite side were caricatures, intended to represent a fat capitalist and a hungry workingman. Several "pullers-in" left the line to induce spectators to join the procession, with the result that at one time there might have been nearly 300 marching. As the head of the column approached the City Hall Mayor Haynes descended the steps and demanded:

"Who are these men? What country do they hail from? What colors are they carrying? Here, officer, take down those flags! We acknowledge but one emblem here—the Stars and Stripes. If these men want to march let them carry the American banner—our red, white and blue. These things are outrageous!"

The policeman obeyed the Mayor's order. The men made no resistance. Their column was broken and Supt. Brown ran from Police Headquarters and ordered them to move on, which they did. The crowd cheered the Mayor. The paraders were without exception, foreigners.

The police had prepared for any emergency, but no occasion arose for their services. The route of the parade was changed so that the men could assemble at Paleochia Park. There, unannounced, Emma Goldman appeared on the platform. She was to have delivered the first address, but Capt. Glori changed the programme, and came very near refusing to let her speak at all.

Herr Woelksel was first to speak, and began by condemning the Anarchists. "Anarchy is necessary," shouted a voice their wages would be reduced from 30 to 25 cents an hour on the day shift. At the same time the Mallory line, at piers Nos. 20 and 21, and the Clyde line, at piers Nos. 15, 28, 29, 33 and 34, similarly lowered their wage rates.

At Pier No. 16, of the Ward line, the steamer Saratoga, which leaves for Havana at 3 P. M. on Wednesday, was tying up. Like all the other vessels of the line, she carries the United States mail. The longshoremen knew this and thought that by refusing to go to work at the reduction they could tie her up and so cripple the line that its managers would be forced to restore the former scale of wages. They were mistaken. Supt. Gibbs soon succeeded in securing about sixty regular workmen, and stowed away all the freight that arrived yesterday. His chief trouble was with the men who load the coal. They struck in sympathy with the other longshoremen, the consequence being that the Saratoga has yet to get her fuel on board. This, according to Supt. Gibbs, will be done to-day and to-night without difficulty.

A GROUP OF STRIKING LONGSHOREMEN.

At Pier No. 13 of the Clyde Line the George W. Clyde is scheduled to sail Saturday. No men were at work on her yesterday. The men in charge of the dock say that this was because the vessel is not ready for loading; the longshoremen, because they went go to work at the reduction.

Capt. A. B. Connor, General Superintendent of the Mallory line, found no difficulty in securing men to finish unloading the Rio Grande, from Fernandina, Fla., yesterday. To-day two more vessels of this line are expected to arrive from Texas, however, and the longshoremen say that no man will be found to unload them.

When the longshoremen employed by the Morgan Line Steamship Company at piers Nos. 25 and 37 North River, assembled at the dock at 6 P. M. yesterday to be paid their weekly wages, they were informed that the company would be unable to meet their demands until to-night, when they would be paid in full. No reason was given for the delay, but it is supposed to be due to an inability to collect outstanding accounts. About one hundred of the head clerks, bosses and other employes received their checks, however.

BEST COPY AVAILABLE

890110002

The Emma Goldman Papers

[Excerpt from Lecture] Urging Men to Riot / Emma Goldman. — p. 8 ; 28 cm. In The World. — (Aug. 22, 1893).

Obtained from the University of California, Berkeley. Institutional Location: Doe Library.

you peaceably, then take it by force. Do as the North did against the South! You will find your John Brown and your Wendell Phillips as the North did.

"If you do not get bread and freedom peaceably, take it by force. As long as you are slaves, with nothing to eat; as long as you are dragged down, you cannot be human beings, respected by any nation. Unite with others. Go out in the street and fight for your bread, and take it if they will not give it to you."

SHE DEFIES THE POLICE.

Continuing in German, Miss Goldman said: "Do not be afraid of the clubs of the police. The advice the Anarchists have given you is good. What they told you a few years ago would happen is now taking place. Do not be afraid of such creatures as the Pinkertons, the police and the reporters. They are all blood suckers. (Cheers.

"You have as much right to arm yourselves as the police. (Cheers.) You have as much right to use arms as the police. (Cheers, and we know where to get the weapons, and you know; and what will the fat policeman do then? (Tremendous cheering.)

"Long live anarchy!

"Hurrah for revolution." (Cheers.)

HER EYE ON THE OFFICERS.

Miss Goldman remained on the platform until the close of the meeting. She chatted with Pauline Seger and looked askance at the detectives.

Dr. Theodore R. Kinget, a friend of George Francis Train, denounced the Government for selling thousands of acres of the best soil in America to English and French capitalists. "The soil belongs to you," he said. "It is because you are landless that you are out of employment. I would be your worst enemy if I incited you to riot, because you would go against men equipped with cannon and rifles and bayonets, while you would only have all ks and stones. But arouse public opinion, and by and by nothing will resist your appeal. I have those lands opened to you.

"Anarchism only means that you should have an honest livelihood. Anarchy is a science. If the time comes, we will be ready to go to war for you all, as the North did against the South for the black men."

Alexander Timmerman said that capitalists were worse than murderers. Benjamin Rosenthal said the capitalists would rather allow laborers to starve than lose a cent. Arthur Morton read a poem calling on workingmen to strike under the red flag for the freedom of the world. Alexander Hershoorer complained that millionaires sent their daughters abroad to marry titled Europeans, while the wives and daughters of hungry laborers were selling their bodies and souls for bread. Michael Lovine said that capital had got all the riches that should belong to the laborer and urged the audience not to be afraid of the police.

Barnett Braun, a cloakmaker, said, "We want bread and if bread is not given to us we will take it ourselves. Somebody behind me is pulling my coat and saying I'll be arrested if I speak that way, but I don't care."

DENOUNCES AMERICANS.

William Tooer, a blacksmith, said: "People talking proudly about being Americans. To allow the workingmen to starve—that's American. It is American to build a monument to policemen for shooting poor people."

Resolutions were adopted calling on workingmen of all nationalities to organize together, and the meeting was adjourned. Some of the people marched across Fourteenth street shouting and singing. Emma Goldman and Miss Seger walked to Nineteenth street and Fourth avenue, whither a big crowd followed them. Miss Goldman suddenly turned and walked back to Fourteenth street and crossed to Third avenue, and, with Miss Seger and Mr. Timmerman, boarded a blue car. Two detectives also jumped on the car.

The crowd that had been following Miss Goldman gave a cheer as she departed, and organization of a Committee of Relief, to assist Mr. Klikowstein in providing daily meals. The suggestion was acted on immediately. Mr. Levy was appointed Chairman of the committee, and the following members were selected: Morris Klinkowstein, Alexander Haft, Morris Levy, Joseph Solomon, Joseph Jacobs, Jacob Katz, Jacob L. Lissner, Daniel Rathstein. The committee got down to business at once by starting a subscription. Register Levy gave $50, Morris Levy, $52; Katz & Co., $25, Jacob Lissner $25; Alexander Haft, $25, Joseph Solomon, $25, and A. S. Friedland, $10. Mr. Klinkowstein also received $5 and a sympathetic letter from Lawyer Abraham H. Sarasohn.

After he had set the committee agoing Register Levy went out. He was recognized and there were loud cries of "Speech, speech!" He got a chair from a barber's shop and jumped in it, and said: "People, be patient, and you will be supplied with food. Do not be induced to make any disorderly demonstrations. Avoid all appearance of anarchy or riot. Anything of that nature is detrimental to your interests."

"All's ready," said Mrs. Klinkowstein, at 11 o'clock. "Wait a minute," said her husband. "We must have the women and children in first."

By his direction the officers picked out the women and children along the line and put them in front. Then it was decided to admit the crowd in batches of forty or fifty. The first batch was made up entirely of women, boys and girls and babies. As the poor creatures, haggard and tattered, hurried upstairs Mr. Klinkowstein broke down and cried.

Mrs. Klinkowstein and her assistants first saw that the guests were all comfortably seated. Then there was a merry rattle of dishes. The cover was lifted off the big soup boiler, and a glorious steam ascended.

Among Mrs. Klinkowstein's helpers were two physicians, Dr. Monsky and Dr. Lawinski; A. Harris, Mr. Bojarski, Oscar Sherman, Louis Klene, Solomon Rosenstein, Mr. Bojansky, A. B. Goldberg and Rosa Goldberg. Mr. Klinkowstein's little daughter, Lily, a bright, black-eyed girl, also helped her mother.

The volunteers handed around plates of beef soup and big pieces of bread, and everybody got a generous share so long as the supply lasted. The starving women and children fell on the food ravenously. It was a very silent feast. There was no time for words. Loaves of bread and portions of soup disappeared in short order, and when the first portion was gone, many asked for more and it was not refused. Some of the women had brought baskets and were allowed to fill them with bread and meat.

When the men's turn came, the police had hard work to prevent more than the required number from entering the hall at one time. The men did not bring baskets, but they had appalling appetites. Sixteen hundred men of all creeds and callings were fed. Most of them had been out of work for weeks, some for months. Some had been evicted from their homes, and had been living on scraps, snatches of "free lunch," and odds and ends of stale food picked from garbage barrels and gutters. Among the men came boys whose parents had no food for them at home. Side by side with barefooted, scantily clad youngsters sat broken-down old men, unfit by reason of age to work, but the most melancholy feature was the presence of hundreds of young men, and men in the prime of life, willing to work but unable to get employment.

At 1 o'clock the soup was gone. The pattydollar and ten cents."

The man caught sight of John H. McLean, one of the reporters who had contributed to the fund. "Come up here!" he cried; "you can back me up." Come up and tell these people that I only got $1.10."

Mr. McLean said he did not care to make a speech, but Rodansky and some other men grabbed him and tried to pull him up on the table, which was used as a platform. Just then Emma Goldman, who had been making a speech at Newark, arrived. She inquired what the trouble was and advised the people not to make fools of themselves. Somebody ran out of the hall and cried: "For God's sake call the police! They're going to lynch a reporter."

Five policemen with drawn clubs and two detectives in plain clothes pushed through the crowd and escorted Mr. McLean from the hall.

When the excitement was over Miss Goldman went to the upper floor of Covenant Hall, where a great throng packed in a small meeting-room awaited her. Some of the people from the main hall followed her. Among them was a detective, who took notes while she said:

"I bring you tidings from your brethren in Newark, who, notwithstanding the cowardly Mayor of that city, marched under the black flag. Go you and do likewise. The brutal police will be all about you at Union Square to-night, only awaiting the opportunity to assault you. Take my advice and do not go to Union square to-night without weapons; go armed, I say, armed!"

The detective hastened with a report of the speech to Capt. Devery, of the Eldridge street station.

The Socialist meeting at Pythagoras Hall was orderly. The audience, was composed of members of the Hebrew trades, and their first action was to appoint a committee of thirteen, six unemployed and five employed men to keep out Anarchists. Several Anarchists struggled in during the speech-making and tried to interrupt, but they were hustled to the door without ceremony.

DEVISING PLANS FOR RELIEF.

A General Trades-Union Call Upon the Government Suggested.

The committee appointed at the conference of delegates at the International Labor Exchange Sunday to make a draft of a new economic gospel issued it in the form of an address yesterday. It begins by stating that 100,000 men, women and children are nearing the verge of starvation in New York. "Hundreds of thousands of others," it goes on, "are only within a short distance from want. From all the manufacturing and commercial centres there comes an anxious demand for work. Soon we expect it to be followed by a despairing cry for bread."

The address goes on to say that the tendency of the present times is towards the concentration of wealth and corporations and individuals. "A few men and women," it continues, "enjoy the opulence of Eastern potentates, while abject millions grovel in the dust, begging for work and bread. We call upon all citizens and all religious and political faiths to give most careful consideration to our appeal and to the methods and measures here set forth. The trades-unions are the surest guarantee of a peaceful solution of the world-wide problem of the abolition of poverty. We believe in times of great distress, from whatever cause, it is the duty of all men to give relief to the suffering. We call upon all to contribute funds to those whose wives and children are starving. As a city is a co-operative corporation in which the people are shareholders, no one citizen has the right to live in extravagant luxury while the first address, but Sigismund changed the programme, and came very near refusing to let her speak at all.

Herr Weiksel was first to speak, and began by condemning the Anarchists. "Anarchy is necessary," shouted a voice from the audience. "I deny it," the speaker answered. "Anarchists are making all this trouble—the capitalistic Anarchist who defies law and order and humanity." He advised people who were starving to state their grievances boldly and said they would get redress.

THE MAYOR SEIZES THE BLACK FLAG.

Another man, Joe Rotter, had this to say about the Mayor: "Who was that fresh fellow who took our flags and robbed an American citizen of his rights? The Stars and Stripes that he calls the flag of freedom are no more than rags. He tells us to vote the Democratic ticket and elect a Democratic Mayor, and then we can carry the red or the black flag if we will; but when we do so he takes our black flags away, although we were not disorderly."

Emma Goldman was received with loud applause and said:

"People all over this broad land are starving for bread, are pleading for work, and it is denied you. They'd kill you, too, now that you are useless to them, those champagne-drinking rich men. And will you stand it? Did you come here with well-filled stomachs from restaurants and well-filled tables? No, the hearth-stone is cold, the cupboard empty, the children starving. Send to Washington and tell them there your condition, hold meetings, do and dare, and, if need be, die, for then you will not always be hungry. (Applause.) Look at this city, full of bread and clothing, and it should be yours, it can be yours. If you can't find bread search for ammunition, and get it that way. We are human and we want bread. (Applause.) The police and military try to stop us, but they cannot withstand thousands of starving men. Give us what we want or we will band together and repeat here the story of Trafalgar Square. There are thousands here who have nothing to lose, and much to gain, by action. Look at our President and our police. They are fat on the things that should be, but are not, yours. Demand your rights. Demand, don't ask, for bread; and if you wish to march to-morrow, I will be in the van."

Resolutions condemning anarchy were then read, and the audience dispersed and gave the park over to an associa-pected to arrive from Texas, however, and the longshoremen say that no men will be found to unload them.

When the 200 longshoremen employed by the Morgan Line Steamship Company, at piers Nos. 25 and 37 North River, assembled at the dock at 6 P. M. yesterday to be paid their weekly wages, they were informed that the company would be unable to meet their demands until to-night, when they would be paid in full. No reason was given for the delay, but it is supposed to be due to an inability to collect outstanding accounts. About one hundred of the head clerks, bosses and other employees received their checks, however.

FEWER BEGGARS FOR FOOD.

Not So Many Applications as Usual at Hotels and Fixed Charities.

The restaurants and hotels of this city usually have a good many applications for food from people who say they are penniless. Curiously enough, the demand upon Delmonico's is smaller now than usually at this season of the year. Ordinarily not a day passes without somebody coming to the door and begging for food. All applicants are sent to the front entrance, where they are scrutinized, and, if sober, and apparently respectable, they are seldom refused. For ten days now not a soul has made such an application.

At the Brunswick, the Hoffman and other uptown hotels there is substantially the same story. None of them reports any unusual demand for food from people unable to pay for it. There are surprisingly few tramps in the city, and those who are abroad in the streets at night notice an uncommon freedom from street beggars, with the further fact that more of the applications for alms have the ring of genuineness.

The Salvation Army, in proportion to its size and resources, probably does as much real charitable work as any organization in the city. Its soldiers have the census of the city divided into three districts, and in each district there is a Salvation Army outpost, where two or three members of the army actually live, to be as close to the suffering they wish to relieve as possible. These workers, besides visiting the sick and caring for the helpless, distribute food, clothing and even money now and then where it is deemed advisable. Mrs. Bown, who is at the head of this branch of the service, said yesterday that there was an increase in the application for relief, as well as in the number of cases deserving relief which are unearthed by the constant efforts of the army.

Among its other charities the Salvation Army conducts a creche, where the children of the poor are "minded" while their mothers are out at work during the day. Mrs. Bown estimates that fully half of these women are out of employment. She bases her calculations on the fact that the creche now cares for just about half as many children each day as it did before the stress of the hard times set in.

Hotel Arrivals.

Astor—Ex-Congressman W. E. Simonds, of Connecticut.

Grand—Gen. Austin Lathrop, of Corning, N. Y.

Fifth Avenue—Congressman Joseph H. Walker, of Massachusetts.

Hoffman—Gov. Nathan O. Murphy, of Arizona, and Henry Hitchcock, of St. Louis.

I was in this weak
Brockway would of
I frequently asked lieve me from my suffering. They eve light to such a man against my eyes unt lie with my face do more pain. Since my been able to earn a is justice in the la think I am entitled tion from a State th in such a position."

PUNCHED BY

Another man who blinded by Brockw who was sent to E Judge Moore, of since been transferre
the twenty-four ser World began its exp abuses. "My record
first," he said to a
was sent to the s Rushmore, my teach education. He sent heard to figure one was a little slow i he asked me how m
cost. I told him 25
how much would e
four cents apiece,
him. I thought he fool of me, and I
that the monitor,
me nine reports, an
the shop the next
That was about Ma
the bathroom San were there. As soo read. Sample gave eye. Then I was hands against the struck me seven b
neys and five across
When he was thr hung down on my so ashamed of the
that they covered coat while I was put me into my c injured as I was the solitary for fi
Dr. Wey came to the solitary only my eye, and when
could not see out was all right. Eve jov had very ind
it before my face."

BOTH LEG

Another man, cr
Parks, who now l street. His injury
yet, but he was
that former jeopa peated. "When I said to a World
signed to the four is very heavy. "T
the work too hard by the doctor. I t weak back, and cell, with two chai which meant that
The next day I wa
way. He asked m
I told him I want said 'I will fix y dragged into the padded me himself
moved to the di
of bread and wat
and they would n
to kill me.'

"The fourth da
the foundry. Afte of having tobacco was struck in the down. When I wa day I saw the pr
for me at the do

BEST COPY AVAILABLE

880721002

The Emma Goldman Papers

[Interview] Nellie Bly Again. She Interviews Emma Goldman and Other Anarchists / Emma Goldman. – pp. 1, 3 ; 42 cm. In The World. –(Sept. 17, 1893).

Obtained from the University of California, Berkeley. Institutional Location: Doe Library.

VOL. XXXIV. NO. 11,716. PRICE FIVE CENTS. NEW YORK

NELLIE BLY AGAIN.

She Interviews Emma Goldman and Other Anarchists.

WHAT JUSTUS H. SCHWAB AND JOHN MOST SAY OF CAPITAL.

Their Ideas o' Marriage Do Away with All Ceremony.

SCHWAB'S WEDDING SERVICE READS, "HERE'S TO YOU."

Perfect Freedom in Everything Is Their Motto—Emma Goldman's Opinion of the Woman Who Is Married to a Man She Does Not Love—What She Says About the Wealthy and the Lazy—Why There Are Criminals—If Everything Were Free, She Says, There Would Be No Criminals—Emma Goldman Speaks Russian, German, French and English, and Reads and Writes Spanish and Italian—Schwab Talks About His Wife and Smart Children.

Will the United States ever again suffer from a civil war?

All the causes upon which that premonition has been founded seem to have vanished.

EMMA GOLDMAN.

The religious war so frequently suggested is an impossibility to-day, when all denominations meet in peaceful and harmonious conference.

Race prejudices on which was hinged another thought of war, are rapidly disappearing, and those remaining are not strong enough to-day to make a man get or give a black eye.

As for a war between the East and West, we are far too level-headed for that. The West is our brother and we may have our little spat, but the one that strikes him a blow must fight us.

What remains?

The greatest of all causes, the cause most to be feared.

[illegible] forth in thundering tones from time to time.

Does it mean anything serious?

Ask the capitalist. Ask the [illegible] Ask the labor unions.

anarchical leaders and authorities, as the representatives of the people, if labor goes to war with capital, it is not amiss to give a little sketch of them, their personality and their daily lives. This I have attempted to do.

The number of Anarchists in America it is impossible to give. The body is growing larger and stronger every day. Fathers are educating sons to follow in their footsteps and mothers are implanting the seeds of Anarchy in the minds of their daughters.

JUSTUS H. SCHWAB.

What effect this teaching has upon the home life and children you can judge from the little I saw at Mr. Schwab's.

It has been said that the Anarchistic party is composed of Germans and beer. The following extract from a letter I received refutes this.

"I see you are to write about Anarchists. Will you not say that America is founded upon Anarchy? What were we but Anarchists when we threw the tea overboard? I wish to state, as it is claimed all Anarchists are foreigners, that in New York City there is an Anarchist club, composed of 160 members, every one of whom is a descendant of a Revolutionary ancestor. No man can be a member who is not. And we are Anarchists."

Through an acquaintance who saw Parsons just before he was hanged I have obtained his (Parsons's) definition of Anarchy.

It is as follows:

"Anarchy is a speculative philosophy. It is antagonistic to centralized power. It proposes the abolition of all authority, compulsion or force government."

Webster's definition of anarchy is this:

"Anarchy. Want of government; the state of society where there is no law or supreme power, or where the laws are not efficient, and individuals do what they please with impunity; political confusion."

I stood at the heavy iron gate that keeps out those who wish to go into the tombs and keeps in those who wish to go out.

Just within a man, fat, uniformed and expressionless, sat upon a chair which, by tilting against the wall, he had transformed from a quadruped into a biped.

The man looked at me without the faintest expression of any kind. Two poorly clad mouse-colored men upon the other side looked wonderingly at me and then on beyond into the long, dark passage. A schoolboy, with his books under his arm, ran up the steps and after one hasty glance through the iron bars and another at me, ran on. A shapeless girl in plain black garments came timidly up to my side and looked longingly through the door, as if inside was someone for whom she cared.

"I want to come in," I said to the [illegible]

"It's too late," he replied in a voice that matched his lack of expression.

"But I have a note from Mr. Blake for the Warden," I urged.

"He's out, but his deputy's here if he'll do," he informed me.

"He will do as well," I answered.

The chair became a quadruped again. The gate swung slowly open and then clanged behind me.

"Wants to see the Warden," the man called to a Grover Cleveland-looking official who sat behind an inner gate.

BEST COPY AVAILABLE

26

880721002

The Emma Goldman Papers

[Interview] Nellie Bly Again: She Interviews Emma Goldman and Other Anarchists / Emma Goldman. – pp. 1, 3 ; 42 cm. In The World. – (Sept. 17, 1893).

Obtained from the University of California, Berkeley. Institutional Location: Doe Library.

from civil war.

All the causes upon which that premonition has been founded seem to have vanished.

EMMA GOLDMAN

The religious war so frequently suggested is an impossibility to-day, when all denominations meet in peaceful and harmonious conference.

Race prejudices on which was hinged another thought of war, are rapidly disappearing, and those remaining are not strong enough to-day to make a man get or give a black eye.

As for a war between the East and West, we are far too level-headed for that. The West is our brother and we may have our little spats, but the one that strikes him a blow must fight [illegible]

What remains?

The great [illegible] causes, the cause most to be feared.

You hear its [illegible] as it breaks forth in the [illegible] time to time.

Does it mean anything serious?

Ask the capitalist. Ask [illegible] Ask the labor unions.

[illegible]

There [illegible] brewing between capital and labor, between the masses and the classes, between the rich man and the poor.

Who can [illegible] when it will be, when it will come.

If it is war, who will lead the masses? Those who are to-day recognized as sympathizers, promoters and agitators.

And first among these are John Most, Justus H. Schwab and Emma Goldman.

They are devoting their lives to the solution of the social problem. They are earnest, sincere and tireless. They are ready to give liberty and life, if necessary, for this cause. John Most has already spent nine years of his life in prison for preaching his theories and he preaches as earnestly to-day as he did before his first term.

This means more than a mere fad, more than a desire for notoriety, and I can positively assert that there is no money in it.

There is no doubt, then, as to their honesty and sincerity, be they right or wrong; and as following extract from a letter I received refutes this.

"I see you are to write about Anarchists. Will you not say that America is founded upon Anarchy? What were we but Anarchists when we threw the tea overboard? I wish to state, as it is claimed all Anarchists are foreigners, that in New York City there is an Anarchist club, composed of 100 members, every one of whom is a descendant of a Revolutionary ancestor. No man can be a member who is not. And we are Anarchists."

Through an acquaintance who saw Parsons just before he was hanged I have obtained his (Parsons's) definition of Anarchy.

It is as follows:

"Anarchy is a speculative philosophy. It is antagonistic to centralized power. It proposes the abolition of all authority, compulsion or force government."

Webster's definition of anarchy is this:

"Anarchy: Want of government; the state of society where there is no law or supreme power, or where the laws are not efficient, and individuals do what they please with impunity; political confusion."

I stood at the heavy iron gate that keeps out those who wish to go into the tombs and keeps in those who wish to go out.

Just within a man, fat, uniformed and expressionless, sat upon a chair which, by tilting against the wall, he had transformed from a quadruped into a biped.

The man looked at me without the faintest expression of any kind. Two poorly clad mouse-colored men upon the curb looked wonderingly at me and then on beyond into the long, dark passage. A schoolboy, with his books under his arm, run up the steps, and after one hasty glance through the iron bars and another at me, ran on. A shapeless girl in plain black garments came timidly up to my side and looked longingly through the door, as if inside was some one for whom she cared.

"I want to come in," I said to the man.

"It's too late," he replied, in a voice that matched its lack of expression.

"But I have a note from Mr. Blake for the Warden," I urged.

"He's out, but his deputy's here if he'll do," he informed me.

"He will do as well," I answered.

The chair became a quadruped again. The gate swung slowly open and then clanged behind me.

"Wants to see the Warden," the man called to a Grover Cleveland-looking official who sat behind an inner gate.

The official asked for my pass, looked it over lazily, handed it back and told me to sit down, that the deputy was at lunch.

I sat down and watched a man at work on a ledger, saw the girl I had left on the steps outside talking earnestly to the man at the gate, heard it clang twice more to admit a man prisoner and the next time to admit a girl.

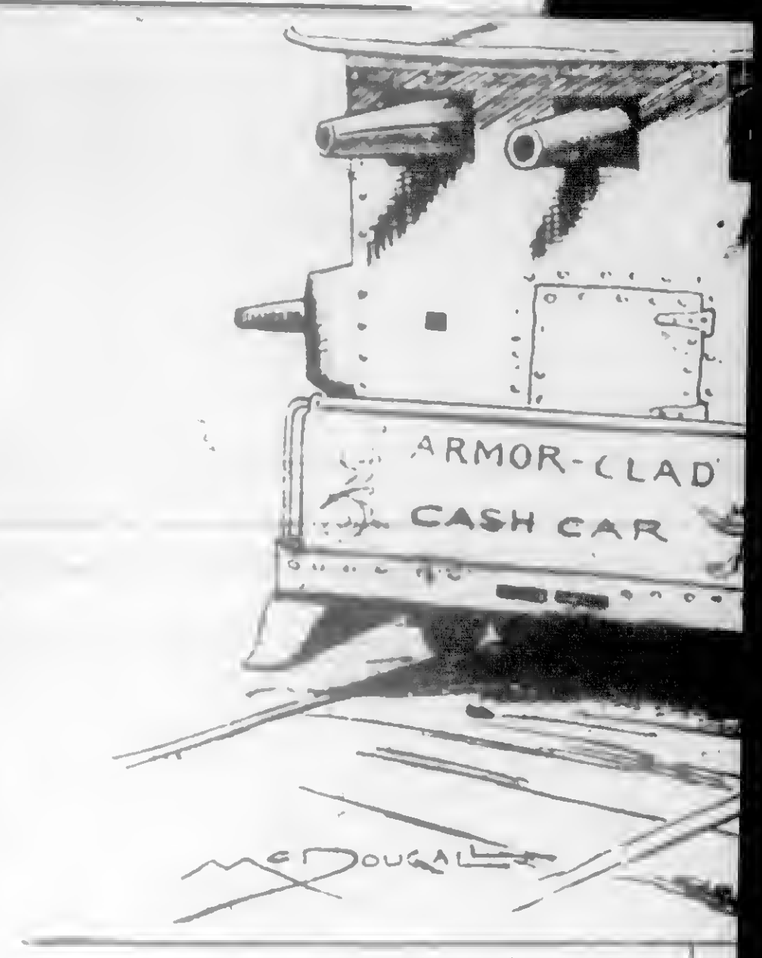
When I was almost tired out with waiting the deputy warden came and instantly took me back to the women's prison.

"This young lady wishes to see Emma Goldman," he explained to the assistant matron.

"Do you want her brought here or will you talk to her through the gate?" she asked me.

"If I can go to her, I prefer it; if not please bring her to me."

"It is against the rules to let any one in among the prisoners," she said, and giving me a chair she went to bring Emma Goldman.



EMMA GOLDMAN

Do you need an introduction to Emma Goldman? You have seen supposed pictures of her. You have read of her as a property-destroying, capitalist-killing, riot-promoting agitator. You see her in your mind a great raw-boned creature with short hair and bloomers, a red flag in one hand, a burning torch in the other, both feet constantly off of the ground and "murder" continually upon her lips.

That was my ideal of her, I confess, and when the matron stood before me saying, "This is Emma Goldman," I gasped with surprise and then laughed.

A little bit of a girl, [illegible] 5 feet high,

(Continued on Third Page.)

THE CANDY BOY

MORE BIDDERS HEARD FROM.

Capitalists Will Compete for the Underground Road Franchise.

The exclusive news printed in The World yesterday that Ryan & McDonald, the Baltimore tunnel contractors, are prepared to guarantee the construction of the proposed New York Underground Rapid Transit road within three years, can raise the requisite capital and are ready to begin the tunnel as soon as the franchise is awarded to them, was discussed with interest yesterday.

It had the effect of bringing out another important piece of good news for those who have the cause of rapid transit at heart. This piece of news is that the live capitalists who recently approached a member of the Rapid Transit Commission through a New York firm will make a definite proposition within a very few days. They are entirely responsible and reliable and they are bona fide competitors for the franchise.

William Steinway, Chairman of the Rapid Transit Commission, expressed his gratification that the underground system first favored by him has appealed so powerfully to practical capitalists that there will probably be two competitors in the field for the franchise, a condition of affairs which takes the Rapid Transit Commission and New York City out of the humiliating position of begging somebody to accept the franchise.

Though Mr. Steinway said that the Rapid Transit Commission has not yet received a proposition from Ryan & McDonald, the interview with Mr. McDonald, printed in yesterday's World, showed that the firm was confident of its ability to do the work and anxious to get the franchise. Mr Steinway said that he knew of Ryan & McDonald as reputable and successful contractors who had done tunnel work on an extensive scale, and that he thought that their statement, as printed in The World, was very reasonable.

"I only doubt," said Mr. Steinway,

"whether Mr. McDonald [illegible] be expected to raise the [illegible] carrying on the work [illegible] the entire estimated cost [illegible] possible. You can't, as a [illegible] on much more than half [illegible] such operations. However, [illegible] heard from them, and [illegible] ter wait till they send us [illegible] sition.

"Now, about the other [illegible] proached one of the members [illegible] sion, as already printed [illegible] not tell you the names of [illegible] because, as I have told [illegible] know who they are myself. [illegible] name of the New York firm [illegible] municated with the members [illegible] sion, and as this firm has [illegible] name secret of course I will [illegible]

"I can tell The World [illegible] expect to get a definite [illegible] them in a very few days. [illegible] sponsible and reliable in the [illegible] the word, and their action [illegible] fide. They mean business [illegible] the commission through [illegible] to see whether we would [illegible] fications."

Weather Indications.

FAIR [illegible] For Eastern [illegible] slight changes [illegible], high winds [illegible] For Western [illegible] northwest winds and [illegible]

For New England, [illegible] day morning, rain by [illegible] in Massachusetts, [illegible] nesday, high winds [illegible] northwest.

For New Jersey, [illegible]

Perry's record yesterday [illegible]

	1892.	1893.
8 A. M.	60	65
[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]
4 P. M.	64	66
12 M.	69	69

Average temperature [illegible] corresponding date last year, 6[illegible]

Average for the week.....

Only $17 to the [illegible]

Through cars to Chi[illegible] Railroad, Thursday, [illegible] See full particulars and [illegible] under "Excursions."

BEST COPY AVAILABLE

27

880721002

The Emma Goldman Papers

[Interview] Nellie Bly Again: She Interviews Emma Goldman and Other Anarchists / Emma Goldman. – pp. 1, 3 ; 42 cm. In The World. – (Sept. 17, 1893).

Obtained from the University of California, Berkeley. Institutional Location: Doe Library.

URN BURGLARS.

sidences Robbed by the a Rakish Craft.

UCCANEERS ALL, NOT LOCKBREAKERS.

lver from Plated Ware ice Show—High Taste—Low and Black. Is Seen e Offing — Mrs. F. F. F. Proctor and Thomas ang Those Robbed.

raft has been seen in Long essel that so far as known rt in any of the yacht races listed in any of the mari- offices. She is said to be of the Country Club, who ything in Cordage and who three bottles, have seen her. ght Cuo men have sighted is a sloop and that she looks has from time to time hov- as piratical craft invaria- e has been near enough to not her decks are stooped in nly has been viewed by citi- ter senses, and that there is d that she is not engaged in certain.

at Larchmont have been ng, low, rakish craft is sus- dren who go to bed at 8 P. M. stly nurseries of those big nsions dream of the Spanish r men with striped under- ariably carry wicked-looking n their teeth.

s that have been robbed are E. B. Crocker, widow of the naire; Frederick F. Proctor, roctor's Theatre, and Thomas ated at Larchmont and near pirates visited them between ay break Thursday morning e so much as know's written to inform the victims that on perpetrated for r-r-r-re-residence was first visited. ork, she had packed up all the e house preparatory to a r- The pirates probably do not it solid silver in their hasti- ted ware was found strewn about the dining-room, each su tested with acid to prove trinkets were also taken, and t doubt ornamenting the fair Rover rescued just as she ak for the third time, having that friendly spar to which, et can tell you, she is a lady ocker and lost some Paris r whole loss will amount to d dollars.

house was apparently pirated ew, and the freebooters took

NELLIE BLY AGAIN.

(Continued from First Page.)

including her bootheels, not showing her 13½ spands, with a saucy, turned-up nose and very expressive blue-gray eyes that gazed inquiringly at me through shell-rimmed glasses was Emma Goldman!

Her quiet little hands held rolled a recent copy of the Illustrated American. The modest blue serge Eton suit, with a blue muslin shirtwaist and scarf, had no suggestion of bloomers, and the light brown hair, not banged but falling loosely over the forehead and gathered in a little knot behind, was very pretty and girlish.

The little feet were decorously upon the floor, and when the rather full lips parted, showing strong, white teeth within, a mild, pleasant voice, with a very fetching accent, said not "murder," but—

"What is it youwish, madam?"

I told her. I sat down beside her, and we talked for two hours.

"I do not want anything published about me," she said, "because people misjudge and exaggerate, and, besides, I do not think it looks well for me to say anything while I am in jail."

"But I want to know something about your former life; how you became an Anarchist, what your theories are, and how you mean to establish them."

SHE TELLS HER AGE.

She smiled at me, rather amused, but the smile was a very becoming one, lighting up the gravity of her face and making her look more girlish than ever.

"How old are you?" I asked as a beginning.

"Twenty-five last June," she replied without the faintest hesitancy.

What greater proof do I need that she is an unusual and extraordinary woman?

"But the month of roses has not brought many into my life," she added, with a little smile.

"When did you become an Anarchist, and what made you one?"

"Oh, I have been one all my life, but I never really entered into the work until after the Chicago riot, seven years ago."

"Why are you one?" I asked. "What is your object? What did you hope to gain?"

She smiled again, and slowly smoothed her book upon her knee.

"We are all egotists," she answered. "There are some that, if asked why they are Anarchists, will say, 'for the good of the people.' It is not true, and I do not say it. I am an Anarchist because I am an egotist. It pains me to see others suffer. I cannot bear it. I never hurt a man in my life, and I don't think I dollar upon your backs! Can you not testify to this woman's earnestness of purpose when she voluntarily sacrifices her looks for books?

Miss Goldman speaks Russian, German, French and English, and reads and writes Spanish and Italian.

HER IDEAS OF MARRIAGE.

"There is something else I must ask you. We look upon marriage as the foundation of everything that is good. We base everything upon it. You do not believe in marriage. What do you propose shall take its place?"

"I was married," she said, with a little sigh, "when I was scarcely seventeen. I suffered—let me say no more about that. I believe in the marriage of affection. That is the only true marriage. If two people care for each other they have a right to live together so long as that love exists. When it is dead what base immorality for them still to keep together! Oh, I tell you the marriage ceremony is a terrible thing!

CHAS. ZIMMERMAN.

"Tell me," she added very seriously, "how can a woman go before a minister and take an oath to love 'this man' all her life? How can she tell but to-morrow, next week, she may get to know this man and hate him. Love is founded on respect, and a woman cannot tell what a man is until she lives with him. Instead of being free to end the relation when her feelings change, she lives on in thing a dozen times before I reached 206 and double that afterwards.

The house is one of a row of red brick, high-stooped houses. In the basement of 206 was a cobbler, and I had a weak intention of inquiring therein for Most, but thought better of it.

So I mounted the high stoop and rang the bell, above which a small bit of paper bore the information that a furnished room was to let within.

In answer to my ring a head appeared at the window, and as I drew back in the shadow of the door the possessor of that head was forced to appear entire at the door.

Entire? Not quite. The door was opened just far enough to give me a half view of a woman with very sharp black eyes and straight black hair and a determined clear-cut face.

"Does Mr. Most live here?" I asked in my pleasantest manner.

"Yes," she replied shortly, her black eyes looking me over. "What do you want with him?"

I smiled in as conciliating a way as I could.

"I wish to see him personally," I answered.

"What about?" she demanded, shortly.

"That I can only tell to him." I assured her pleasantly, but firmly.

"Do you know him?"

"I have not that pleasure."

"You are a reporter?" auspiciously.

"I assure you, no!" (I am called a special writer, correspondent, journalist, but in the strict sense of the word am not a reporter.)

"He won't see reporters and he won't see strangers," she assured me positively, "so it will be no use to try."

"Is he in now?" I asked.

"No," crossly.

"Can you tell me where he is?"

"No!"

"I am so sorry. I am so anxious to see him. He has an office, do you suppose he is there?"

"I don't know."

"Is he usually there at this hour?"

"I don't know."

"Where is his office?"

"I don't know."

"Has he occupied the one office long?"

"Ever since he came to America."

"And you don't know where it is?" I laughed.

She was caught. She looked angrier than ever.

"I know it's in the next block, that's all I know."

"Do you know where there is a directory so I may learn his number?"

"No," she answered, "and I am busy. I've got to go in."

She stepped back as if to close the little opening, so I was forced to make a final plunge.

HE DOESN'T LIKE GOLDMAN NOW.

"I have been here to see Mr. Schwab and Miss Goldman," I began hastily. "I am anxious to see Mr. Most."

"He won't have anything to do with that Goldman woman," she cried angrily, opening the door wider than she had yet done.

"You don't need to see him about her for he will only give you a saucy answer."

"I do not wish to see him about her. I am anxious to see him about other matters."

and I wondered if Mr. Most, should he come at all, would throw me down the stairs.

Then I was astonished to see a girl come in.

She never glanced at me any more than if I had been invisible, but straightway took off her hat and set to work to arrange some papers she had brought in with her.

"Have I your place?" I asked at last.

She looked up at the sound of my voice—not at me, but out into the other room, as if the voice came from there.

"It was if that spoke," I said.

"Oh, yes, I work here," she said aimlessly, never pausing.

"I asked if I had your place?" I repeated.

"No," she said wearily.

"Do you wish the chair?"

"No; I would rather stand."

At that moment there was a step without; a hush of expectancy seemed instantly to settle on the place. I glance up and know that John Most stands before me.

I knew it, although he did not look in the least as the newspaper cuts represent him.

There was no bristling mane and flying hair, but a grayish beard, well trimmed, and such as you see most business men wear, and when he removed his soft felt hat I saw that his hair was closely cut.

In addition, I noticed that he wore a well-fitting business suit of gray cheviot and a blue-striped shirt.

He did not impress me as a large man, being not more than five feet seven and of a comfortable build for a man of forty-four years.

"Are you Mr. Most?" I asked quietly, fearing still the manner of my reception.

"Yes," he answered in a firm, decided voice. "What do you wish?"

"Let me tell you"—— I began, but he cut me short.

"You are Nellie Bly," he asserted. "You are come to write something for The World."

"I cannot deny that I am Nellie Bly," I said quickly, "but do not be prejudiced. I shall write nothing but the truth. I want to write something about you as a leader."

He laughed softly, and I saw that his teeth were strong and white, and the laugh lighted up his pleasant blue eyes and chased away the sternness of expression.

I was not afraid of him after that.

"Help me, won't you? I don't understand the subject, but I mean to do the best I can," I said, at which he melted altogether.

"Certainly, I shall help you. What is first?"

"Tell me what made you an Anarchist?"

"It was born in me. My father was an officer and a rebel for two years prior to and at the time of my birth. I could not help being an Anarchist."

"Have you written much on the subject besides that which you write for your paper?"

"I have written and published in German over twenty pamphlets. I am now having some translated into English. I will give you these—'The Social Monster,' 'The Free Society,' 'God, Heaven, Hell.' An appeal to Those Most and Infidels.'"

"Tell me about your life."

"It is too long a story."

"You are married?"

"Yes."

"Any children?"

"No. I am most thankful to say."

"Why?" I don't you like children?"

A shadow passed over his face.

"It is not that. I have spent nine said. "He was up until 4 o'clock, and so had to sleep this morning."

"Were you studying?" I asked, taking up the book that lay before me.

"Yes," he said, "I start to school tomorrow, and I was reviewing my studies."

"Your are Mr. Schwab's son?" I questioned, feeling sure that marvellous pink-and-white complexion and yellow hair was inherited from a father who, a few years since, was said to bear a striking resemblance to Vinci's famous painting of Christ.

"I am," he answered, proudly. "Do you think I look like my father?"

I assured him that he did, and then we talked about his school until a merry whistling and light, quick step announced the coming of Justus H. Schwab.

He entered the low door, that almost touched his blond head, and, with a frank, fearless smile, stood before me.

"You have forgotten me," I said. "It is seven years since I met you."

"I remember your eyes," he said, taking the hand I held out to him, and giving it a friendly grasp. "But your name"——

"Nellie Bly."

"Ah, yes; sit down. You had not done your noted work when I met you."

"No; and I am only starting in again after three years' rest," I added.

Then I opened up my heart to him and told him what I wanted. He offered to help me all he could.

Up to this he has stood before me without coat or vest, a picture of manly beauty.

"Sit down," he urges, and he sits down on the opposite side of the table. "What comes first?"

HE DISCLAIMS BEING A LEADER.

"Tell me about yourself. You are a leader, and we want to know all about you."

"I am not a leader," he replies, quickly. "I don't believe in leaders. When there are leaders men are not free. I want to do away with leaders and leadership. We have to do with facts. Science in itself is authority enough."

"But first about yourself. You are a German?"

"Yes, born in Frankfort on the Main, forty-seven years ago. I was born in a Republic note that, reared and brought up a republican, and an inhabitant of the United States for twenty-five years. In fact, my wife is an out and out American from the bluffs of the Mississippi. Her ancestors have been in America so long that I think they must have come over in the Jamestown or Mayflower," with a merry laugh. "everybody couldn't have come in the Mayflower."

"Do you believe in marriage?" I asked, thinking this a good time to obtain his views on the subject.

HERE'S WHAT AND THEY'RE MARRIED.

Marriage! [illegible] eyebrows. I [illegible] what I mean by marriage. I believe [illegible] a man and woman [illegible] the presence of their friends. [illegible] my husband. This is my wife. [illegible] a glass of water. [illegible] drinking.

[illegible] He smoked a [illegible] his mouth. With [illegible] [illegible] [illegible]

880721002

The Emma Goldman Papers

[Interview] Nellie Bly Again: She Interviews Emma Goldman and Other Anarchists / Emma Goldman. – pp. 1, 3 ; 42 cm. In The World. – (Sept. 17, 1893).

Obtained from the University of California, Berkeley. Institutional Location: Doe Library.

in the house preparatory to a rn. The pirates probably do not ng but solid silver in their hast-he plated ware was found strewn ously about the dining-room, each g been tested with acid to prove r.
gold trinkets were also taken, and ithout doubt ornamenting the fair n the rover rested just as she to sink for the third time, having p on that friendly spar to which, ssenger can tell you, she lovingly
s. Crocker also lost some Paris d her whole loss will amount to ousand dollars.
ain's house was apparently pirated bottom, and the freebooters took ilver and jewelry, evening dress hat would be very bad form if worn ate ship. Mr. Proctor's home ted likewise, and at none houses did the buccaneers slightest clue as to the
which they had sailed in and ob-things. Windows were all se-secure, locks had not been tampered he servants in all three houses imported variety and of unassailater.
re no footprints in kitchen gar-uilasses dropped in the adjacen-ur the long, low, rakish craft has within the last two days in Echo Larchmont people regard the s really and truly of the sea.
dren, who are more familiar with rrences than their elders, are not archmont people who are alarmed.
ers are sending their silver and safe-deposit vaults in town by
.
New Rochelle think that the bold ave been in their neighborhood.
ve that the rover and his rascal he ones who recently entered the R. T. Emmett, at New Rochelle, g a pistol to the head of Mrs. Em-off with her jewelry.
rates were seen going towards the d it is thought more than probable boarded the long, low, rakish craft ay.
e have been notified, and, though probable that any cruisers or will be fitted out, everything pos-ble done to catch the rover and his d crew. Some old residents of t were seen in front of the grocery tling reflectively and humming:

ame is Captain Kidd, as I sailed.
As I sailed,
y name is Captain Kidd and I sailed.

ore was in great demand, and it was t that possibly some of the redoubt-
's descendants had come in search easure, which many believe to be somewhere on the shore of the

NOT ENTITLED TO STAY.

hat Ordered to Be Deported by Commissioner Peacock.

RANCISCO, Sept. 16.—United States ioner Peacock yesterday decided considered to be a Chinese test case.
Mat, a member of the firm of Bow-
., of San Jose, Cal., was landed in ed States last June. Before that was employed at menial labor for
. It was contended that he being ied he was entitled to remain. The ner held otherwise and ordered rted. The case will be appealed.

TO ADVERTISEMENTS.	PAGE.	COL.	PAGE.	COL.
ENTS	6	4
SALES	41	6
AND FINANCIAL	15	7
N WANTED	35	2
AMILIES	35	6
S WANTED—COUNTRY	35	8
ARIED—CITY	35	8
NOTICES	6	3
OPPORTUNITIES	41	6
PROPERTY TO LET	32	8
ANTS	41	8
N RAMBLES	40	7
, SCHOOLS, &c	42	1
ACADEMIES	44	5
ES	41	8
	6	2

"Why are you ugly? I asked. What is your object? What did you hope to gain?"

She smiled again, and slowly smoothed her book upon her knee.

"We are all egotists," she answered. "There are some that, if asked why they are Anarchists, will say, 'for the good of the people.' It is not true, and I do not say it. I am an Anarchist because I am an egotist. It pains me to see others suffer. I cannot bear it. I never hurt a man in my life, and I don't think I could. So, because what others suffer makes me suffer, I am an Anarchist and give my life to the cause, for only through it can be ended all suffering and want and unhappiness.

A WORD ABOUT CAPITALISTS.

"Everything wrong, crime and sickness and all that, is the result of the system under which we live," she continued earnestly. "Were there no money and, as a result, no capitalists, people would not be over-worked, starved and illy housed, all of which makes them old before their time, diseases them and makes them criminals. To save a dollar the capitalists build their railroads poorly, and along comes a train, and loads of people are killed. What are their lives to him if by their sacrifice he has saved money? But those deaths mean misery, want and crime in many, many families. According to Anarchistic principles, we build the best of railroads, so there shall be no accidents. There is the Broadway cable, for instance. Instead of running a few cars at a frightful speed, in order to save a larger expense, we should run many cars at slow speed, and so have no accidents."

"If you do away with money and employers, who will work upon your railroads?" I asked.

"Those that care for that kind of work. Then every one shall do that which he likes best, not merely a thing he is compelled to do to earn his daily bread."

"What would you do with the lazy ones, who would not work?"

"No one is lazy. They grow hopeless from the misery of their present existence, and give up. Under our order of things, every man would do the work he liked, and would have as much as his neighbor, so could not be unhappy and discouraged."

"What will you do with your criminals if every one is free and prisons unheard of?"

WHY ARE THERE CRIMINALS?

She smiled, sadly.

"The subject takes a lifetime of study," she answered, "but we believe that we would not have a criminal. Why are there criminals to-day. Because some have everything, others nothing. Under our system it would be every man equal. The Bible says, 'Thou shalt not steal.' Now, to steal, it is granted, there must be something to steal. We do not grant there is anything to steal, for everything should be free."

"Do you believe in God, Miss Goldman?"

"Once I did. Until I was seventeen I was very devout, and all my people are

CHAS. ZIMMERMAN.

"Tell me," she added very seriously, "how can a woman go before a minister and take an oath to love 'this man' all her life? How can she tell but to-morrow, next week, she may get to know this man and hate him. Love is founded on respect, and a woman cannot tell what a man is until she lives with him. Instead of being free to end the relation when her feelings change, she lives on in a state that is the most depraved of all.

"Take the woman who marries for a home and for fine clothes. She goes to the man with a lie on her lips and in her heart. Still"—with a little uplifting of the hands—"she will not let her skirts touch the poor unfortunate upon the street who deceives no man, but is to him just what she appears. Do away with marriage. Let there be nothing but voluntary affection and there ceases to exist the prostitute wife and the prostitute street woman."

"But the children? What would you do with them? Men would desert; women and children would be left uncared for and destitute," I protested.

"On the contrary, then men would never desert, and if a couple decided to separate there would be public homes and schools for the children. Mothers who would rather do something else than care for their children could put them in the schools, where they would be cared for by women who preferred taking care of children to any other work. In this way we would never have diseased or disabled children from careless and incompetent mothers.

"Besides this," she went on, "in our free schools every child would have a chance to learn and pursue that for which it has ability. Can you imagine the number of children to-day, children of poor parents, who are born with ability for music or painting, or letters, whose abilities lie dormant for the lack of means and the necessity to work for their daily bread as soon as they are out of their cradles."

HER RELATIVES.

"Have you any brothers or sisters, Miss Goldman?"

"Yes; a married brother, who does not bother about anything, and only reads the papers when there is something in them about me. My sister is also married, and, while not actively engaged in our cause, is bringing up her children to our principles. My father and mother are also living, near Rochester, and, while not Anarchists, sympathize with me and do not interfere with my work."

"What is your future?"

"I cannot say. I shall live to agitate to promote our ideas. I am willing to give my liberty and my life, if necessary, to further my cause. It is my mission and I shall not falter."

"Do you think that murder is going to help your cause?"

She looked grave; she shook her head slowly.

"That is a long subject to discuss. I don't believe that through murder we shall gain, but by war, labor against

She stepped back as if to close the little opening, so I was forced to make a final plunge.

HE DOESN'T LIKE GOLDMAN NOW.

"I have been here to see Mr. Schwab and Miss Goldman," I began hastily. "I am anxious to see Mr. Most."

"He won't have anything to do with that Goldman woman," she cried angrily, opening the door wider than she had yet done.

"You don't need to see him about her, for he will only give you a sassy answer."

"I do not wish to see him about her. I am anxious to see him about other matters."

"I can't help you," she said, "and I must go."

With that she closed the door and I was left to look out for Mr. Most as best I could.

I knew where his office was, but for some unknown reason I had felt that he was at his home and not at the office, but still, having nothing better to do, I decided to go to his office, which is at 167 William street.

I suppose that without doubt John Most is the best known and most feared of all Anarchists in America.

Certainly I thought I had more reason than ever to dread a personal encounter.

If those at his house are so fierce and unbending, what must he not be?

I stopped at the door of his office building, a run-down two-story frame structure, with a worn brick front, and looked for his name.

It was not to be found.

A modest brown tin card bore in yellow letters, outlined with red, this inscription:

FREIHEIT,

Second Floor.

Walking up one flight of stairs I found myself looking through an open door into a low, dingy room, containing a counter filled with shoes, a cobbler's bench, a cobbler at work, a boy grown to man's size, and a man.

"Can you tell me where I can find Mr. Most?" I asked.

"Certainly," the cobbler replied, in a friendly, cheerful voice that won me at once. "Here's the very lad that can take you right to him."

The boy spoke to me in German and I replied in English that I wished to see Mr. Most personally.

Thanking the happy cobbler, I followed the boy up a second and shorter stairway straight into a printing office, where the men were at work setting type.

They looked surprised at seeing me, and left their cases and came forward to the boy, who explained to them in German the object, so far as he knew, of my visit.

Then one man spoke to me in German, saying that Mr. Most had gone home to his dinner.

I knew this, but it is not always well to tell everything one knows, even if it doesn't amount to much, so I replied, in English, that I had just come from his house, where I had been told that he was at the office.

Had I seen the wife, the man asked in German, and I said Yes, I supposed I had.

So the other printer, speaking in English, said Mr. Most often stopped on his way home and doubtless I had passed him.

Then he said I might step into the inner office and wait, if I wished.

I most certainly wished. I stepped into the adjoining office, sat down at a table and made up my mind to stay there until Mr. Most came.

The office was as picturesque, in its way, as Mr. Schwab's saloon.

There were in the room three desks, one lounge and one chair. The one desk before which I sat, and from which I could see everything that occurred in the other room, was flat-topped, and covered with dark oil-cloth.

Each of the other desks was high, and your paper?"

"I have written and published in German over twenty pamphlets. I am now having some translated into English. I will give you these—'The Social Monster,' 'The Free Society,' 'God, Heaven, Hell: An appeal to Pious Men and Infidels.'"

"Tell me about your life?"

"It is too long a story."

"You are married?"

"Yes."

"Any children?"

"No, I am most thankful to say."

"Why? Don't you like children?"

A shadow passed over his face.

"It is not that. I have spent nine years of my life in jail for expressing my opinions. I may some day be electrocuted or hanged, and I do not wish to leave any children to bear that."

"What amusements do you like?"

"I used to be devoted to the theatre. Now, it takes a very good play to attract me. I am fond of music and opera."

"Do you work hard?"

"I work from 8 o'clock every day. I do all my own newspaper work, as you see, and my pamphlets besides. Here is something that I have just finished and which you may take away with you; sell it if you wish."

He took down a big pack of manuscript from a shelf.

I looked at the title page. It was as follows:

NINE YEARS BEHIND THE BARS

FOR OPINION'S SAKE.

A BIOGRAPHICAL SKETCH OF

JOHN MOST.

I took the manuscript home, sat down to read it and read all night.

Can you imagine John Most being stage-struck and his whole life and hope being centred upon becoming an actor? Such was the case, and he tells all about it in the story of his life.

Such a life! No romance was ever greater. It would take a volume to tell it, just as has been done, and I do not mean to spoil a good tale by attempting to do it here.

Now, if I make mistakes in writing about you, what will you do?" I asked, anxiously.

"I will forgive even your mistakes," he replied, pleasantly.

I went away regretting the shortness of my interview and wondering to what region had vanished the ideal I had feared so much.

I am sure I did not find anything except a pleasant, polite, kindly man in the most feared of all Anarchists, John Most!

JUSTUS H. SCHWAB.

"Do you know where Mr. Schwab's saloon is?" I asked a little girl in First street.

"It's there," she replied, pointing across the street.

I looked where she pointed and saw hanging over a basement window a modest sign bearing the name "Justus H. Schwab." Below it was a beer sign, and that was the only evidence in view that the basement was a saloon. No mysterious swinging doors, no suggestive stag-liquor marked "Ladies' Entrance." Just three steps down into a basement, the door almost hidden by the high stoop, and that was all.

"Is there no entrance for women?" I asked the girl.

"Oh, no," she answered. "Everybody goes in at the same door. No one minds."

So I went down the three steps and stood in the doorway.

The scene was an unusual one, and not without its picturesque features.

Nearest to the one window was a tall bar, innocent of glasses or tempting and alluring luncheon, not even a pretzel being in sight.

No beating the satanic one around the

"This is my husband," "This is my wife," and drink a glass of wine to it that nothing more is necessary."

"Is that binding?"

"Binding?" He laughed, although his voice was indignant. "Why, the root and foundation of Anarchy is freedom for man, woman and child. When you make things binding you make slaves. Binding? Voluntary association for any purpose in life is our doctrine. We would end compulsion of any kind, of every kind."

"Still, unless you bind men in some way how will you make them share the burden and responsibility of a family?"

"No man or woman should be compelled to live together when they wish to live apart," he said, indignantly. "When they part, if there are children, they must provide for them. If a man would not do this he would be ostracized. But this is not to be feared. Voluntary, free association of any kind removes the desire to separate."

"You have children?"

"Four lovely children," very proudly. "I suppose I should not say it, but my children are very clever. Two boys and two girls. My boy—my eldest born—holds the highest place in his classes in the New York College. He is as tall as I am, and yet, it seems strange, but in manner and thought, despite his learning, he is a child.

"I have," he added, with a sigh of deepest content, "the brightest of married lives. I am most happy, uninterruptedly happy with my wife and children."

While he was speaking a very pretty girl, as pretty as a perfect complexion and largest of blue eyes and whitest of white teeth and softest of yellow hair can make a girl, came in and stood with her hand on his shoulder.

When he paused she said in a very sweet voice:

"May I kiss you good-by, father? It is time for me to go to school."

"Certainly, my daughter," he said, and she slipped her arm around his neck and kissed him twice.

Not as if it was a duty she had to perform, or one that she did with half a heart, or occasionally, but as if she loved him with all her girlish heart, and liked to kiss him because she did love him so much.

"Good-by, my daughter," said this handsome Anarchist fondly, as he patted her on the shoulder. "Be a good girl."

"You know I can't be that, father." She laughed roguishly, and bowing to me she went skipping to the door and up those three steps and out of sight.

ANARCHY'S AUTHORS.

"Tell me what writers you think do the most good for your cause."

"The list is a long one," he said. "Among the best, in my opinion, is Benjamin R. Tucker, who wrote 'Instead of a Book.' Victor Yarros, author of 'Trial by Jury,' and I consider the greatest mind in the United States, Mackaye. Van Ornum, Loyd, Josiah Warren, Lysander Spooner, Bakowinine, Krapotkin and Elise Reclus, the great avocat of Anarchism. In the past generation Stephen Pearl Andrews was a great promoter."

"Are there many newspapers devoted to Anarchy?"

"Yes quite a number mostly German, but somehow they never seem to get on. In English there is The People, a weekly, 'Liberty and Solidarity.'"

"Have you a library?"

"A library," smiling. "I have over six hundred volumes."

"How are you educating your children?"

"As a good father should—to my own views."

"And you are devoting your life to Anarchy?"

"To the solution of the social problem I can preach, proselyte and agitate and hope."

"You believe in personal property, unlike some Anarchists?"

"Certainly. I believe what a man who cannot cure the Copeland and Gardner them because they ha lives to the work—beca

clusions in the t.un co
The best and most
s, their success is in been pronounced incu
dence to unanswerable
class of evidence tha Tubin, printed below,

THE GRATITUDE OF

A VENERABLE MA
DRS. COPELAND
CURED HIM O
ASTHMA.

The disease that Mr.
Haverstraw, N. Y., asthma. His was t ling form of bronchial pronounced incurable en many suffer for natural lives, drawing sympathy and pity of

It was on y the testi
he knew who had h
Mr. Tubin finally to and Gardner, who cu is speaking of his cur

"I can hardly put suffered, because, now and well, it seems could have endured of asthma. If I had Copeland and Gardn would have been spa

"Many a time hav
could die. The pare
the whooping, dimcult as though I were dr
was too heavy to b
my chest, the sorrows

parting, to that part denounces you?"

"Yes, say this:
free speech; let ther
If we are wrong,
ward and prove so.
them give us justice
We ask no more."

"May I come parting?"

"Always, and welc
dial reply.

"And if I do not get everything corr
the intended for the

"Would I believe laughed, "If I deni
ve to that of mak

That is Justus chist, preacher, ten
If you think he is to talk with you an convinced.

That is the glimp
his home and life.
ture is it?

ZI M GROB

While searching the other night I w
street—"Zum Grob school has lately be resort of Anarchist brief description. It and his two entran
long hall and one h

I walked through darkness, the only open doors, and s door to take a
There was absolut
of notice or comme
front of the windo very grand affair
tender was rapidly
filled with some bee

Across from the group, were a few playing upon such usually considered
ments of festivit

BEST COPY AVAILABLE

880721002

The Emma Goldman Papers

[Interview] Nellie Bly Again: She Interviews Emma Goldman and Other Anarchists / Emma Goldman. – pp. 1, 3 ; 42 cm. In The World. –(Sept. 17, 1893).

Obtained from the University of California, Berkeley. Institutional Location: Doe Library.

alled.
ad it was redoubt-la search e to be s of the rted by ed States decided test case.

t of Bow.
anded in ne that abor for as being
in. The ordered eased.

COL. | PAGE. | COL.

"Those that care for that kind of work. Then every one shall do that which he likes best, not merely a thing he is compelled to do to earn his daily bread."

"What would you do with the lazy ones, who would not work?"

"No one is lazy. They grow hopeless from the misery of their present existence, and give up. Under our order of things, every man would do the work he liked, and would have as much as his neighbor, so could not be unhappy and discouraged."

"What will you do with your criminals if every one is free and prisons unheard of?"

WHY ARE THERE CRIMINALS?

She smiled, sadly.

"The subject takes a lifetime of study," she answered, "but we believe that we would not have a criminal. Why are there criminals to-day. Because some have everything, others nothing. Under our system it would be every man equal. The Bible says, 'Thou shalt not steal.' Now, to steal, it is granted, there must be something to steal. We do not grant there is anything to steal, for everything should be free."

"Do you believe in God, Miss Goldman?"

"Once I did. Until I was seventeen I was very devout, and all my people are so, even to-day. But when I began to read and study, I lost that belief. I believe in nature, nothing else."

"Where were you born?"

"I was born in Russia and afterwards my family removed to Germany. Although my people were of a good family, I was always in deep sympathy with the poor. I did not think of being an Anarchist then, but I was always trying to see some way to benefit the working class. I was taught a trade. My father thought that no difference what one's position was, one should master a trade, so I learned dressmaking at a French school. I have worked at this for years, sometimes at my own rooms, and again in establishments."

SHE LIKES TO BATHE AND DRESS.

"Do you care for dress at all?"

"Oh, of course," she answered, laughing. "I like to look well, but I don't like very fussy dresses. I like my dresses to be plain and quiet, and, above all things," here she laughed as if recalling the oft-repeated declaration of Anarchists' hatred for soap, "I love my bath. I must be clean. Being a German, I was taught cleanliness with my youth, and I do not care how poor my room or my clothes are so long as they are clean."

"What did you do with the money you earned by sewing?"

"Spent it all for books," she said emphatically. "I kept myself in poverty buying books. I have a library of nearly three hundred volumes, and so long as I had something to read I did not mind hunger or shabby clothes."

Think of that, you girls who put every which it has ability. Can you imagine the number of children to-day, children of poor parents, who are born with ability for music or painting, or letters, whose abilities lie dormant for the lack of means and the necessity to work for their daily bread as soon as they are out of their cradles."

HER RELATIVES.

"Have you any brothers or sisters, Miss Goldman?"

"Yes; a married brother, who does not bother about anything, and only reads the papers when there is something in them about me. My sister is also married, and, while not actively engaged in our cause, is bringing up her children to our principles. My father and mother are also living, near Rochester, and, while not Anarchists, sympathize with me and do not interfere with my work."

"What is your future?"

"I cannot say. I shall live to agitate to promote our ideas. I am willing to give my liberty and my life, if necessary, to further my cause. It is my mission and I shall not falter."

"Do you think that murder is going to help your cause?"

She looked grave; she shook her head slowly.

"That is a long subject to discuss. I don't believe that through murder we shall gain, but by war, labor against capital, masses against classes, which will not come in twenty or twenty-five years. But some day, I firmly believe, we shall gain, and until then I am satisfied to agitate to teach, and I only ask justice and freedom of speech."

And so I left the little Anarchist, the modern Joan of Arc, waiting patiently in the Tombs until her friends could secure bail for her.

"I shall certainly get a year or a year and a half," she said to me in parting, "not because my offense deserves it, but because I am an Anarchist."

JOHN MOST.

When I walked through William street in search of 266, where lives John Most, I was not the happiest girl in the world.

As I walked along by idle groups on the corners and dirty doorsteps I recalled the impression I had formed of Most from newspaper accounts, and I wondered at myself for risking my life in order to see such a person.

His own description of the accepted idea of an Anarchist, copied from his pamphlet, The Social Monster, was about my own idea:

"A dagger in one hand, a torch in the other, and all his pockets brimful with dynamite bombs—that is the picture of the Anarchist, such as it has been drawn by his enemies. They look at him simply as a mixture of a fool and a knave, whose sole purpose is a universal topsy-turvy, and whose only means to that purpose is to slay any one and every one who differs from him."

I wished myself out of the whole friendly, cheerful thing that was at once. "Here's the very lad that can take you right to him."

The boy spoke to me in German and I replied in English that I wished to see Mr. Most personally.

Thanking the happy cobbler, I followed the boy up a second and shorter stairway straight into a printing office, where the men were at work setting type.

They looked surprised at seeing me, and left their cases and came forward to the boy, who explained to them in German the object, so far as he knew, of my visit.

Then one man spoke to me in German, saying that Mr. Most had gone home to his dinner.

I knew this, but it is not always well to tell everything one knows, even if it doesn't amount to much, so I replied, in English, that I had just come from his house, where I had been told that he was at the office.

Had I seen the wife, the man asked in German, and I said Yes, I supposed I had.

So the other printer, speaking in English, said Mr. Most often stopped on his way home and doubtless I had passed him.

Then he said I might step into the inner office and wait, if I wished.

I most certainly wished. I stepped into the adjoining office, sat down at a table and made up my mind to stay there until Mr. Most came.

The office was as picturesque, in its way, as Mr. Schwab's saloon.

There were in the room three desks, one lounge and one chair. The one desk before which I sat, and from which I could see everything that occurred in the other room, was flat-topped, and covered with dark oil-cloth.

Each of the other desks was high, and of antique style.

Upon the desk where I sat lay a dark-gray cat, with big yellow eyes, that followed my movements with a suspicious and mistrustful gaze.

There is no denying that the office is very poor. The unplastered boards have been whitewashed, but I judge that the roof cannot keep out the rain. It must be a cheerless place upon a cold or wet day.

I decided, after a thorough inspection, that the place was beyond improving. Its condition was not the fault of its tenant, but of its age.

But I soon forgot everything else in contemplation of the collection of prints that cover the partition and wall. They are numberless, and most interesting.

Pictures of riots, of noted Anarchists, of thinkers, of philosophers, clippings from newspapers, and caricature after caricature of Most himself, in every conceivable shape and form.

My eyes wandered from these to the cretonne curtains at the windows—curtains with gay roses on them and an equally gay Japanese guitarist, the guitar at his feet, holding in his arms a Japanese maiden in a smart kimono.

Time went by, and I even tired of this amorous Jap, and longed for something new.

It was getting late, the office-boy had disappeared, and I was afraid Mr. Most was not coming.

Presently the office-boy returned.

He went up to one printer and whispered something to him. The printer instantly turned and gave me a startled glance.

The boy went to the second printer, who did exactly as the first.

"Ah!" I thought, "I am known, and Mr. Most has sent word that he will not come. I'll wait until the office closes, and then I shall return to his house."

I put out my hand to touch the gray cat, but, eyeing me suspiciously, she evaded my touch, and, jumping upon the red lounge, proceeded to sharpen her nails upon the pillow.

"Even the cat suspects me," I thought,

"Now, if I make mistakes in writing about you, what will you do?" I asked, anxiously.

"I will forgive even your mistakes," he replied, pleasantly.

I went away regretting the shortness of my interview and wondering to what region had vanished the ideal I had feared so much.

I am sure I did not find anything except a pleasant, polite, kindly man in the most feared of all Anarchists, John Most.

JUSTUS H. SCHWAB.

"Do you know where Mr. Schwab's saloon is?" I asked a little girl in First street.

"It's there," she replied, pointing across the street.

I looked where she pointed and saw hanging over a basement window a modest sign bearing the name "Justus H. Schwab." Below it was a beer sign, and that was the only evidence in view that the basement was a saloon. No mysterious swinging doors, no suggestive stormdoor marked "Ladies' Entrance," just three steps down into a basement, the door almost hidden by the high stoop, and that was all.

"Is there no entrance for women?" I asked the girl.

"Oh, no," she answered. "Everybody goes in at the same door. No one minds."

So I went down the three steps and stood in the doorway.

The scene was an unusual one, and not without its picturesque features.

Nearest to the one window was a tall bar, innocent of glasses or tempting and alluring luncheon, not even a pretzel being in sight.

No beating the satanic one around the bush there. If you want a drink, well and good. If not, you are not tempted to drink in order to partake of a few cold bites.

Back of the bar, on two ordinary brackets, were about a dozen glasses, and near them some shelves filled with books.

The most interesting thing in this basement—that is, when the proprietor is out—is the blackboard.

It faces the bar and is filled with writing, newspaper clippings and telegrams. On either side of this board is painted a red flag, the flag of Anarchy.

But more about this famous blackboard later.

The basement extends the length of the house, having one window in the rear and a hall that leads to the yard.

Plain, ordinary round tables, with their accompanying four wooden chairs, fill the floor, and pictures and a second and larger case of books the wall.

This is Justus H. Schwab's place—an honest place, a place that seems to hide men behind door, until, incapable of drinking more, they are set upon and beaten and flung into the street.

Of one thing every observer must be convinced as soon as he enters. That is that Mr. Schwab, true to his doctrine, is not working to make a fortune, but merely for so much as will maintain life.

When I entered this interesting place there was but one person present.

That was a young boy who sat at a table intent upon a book. So absorbed, in fact, that he did not hear me until I spoke to him.

"Is Mr. Schwab here?" I asked.

He raised to me a handsome boyish face, his big china-blue eyes smiling in unison with his red lips.

"I shall call him," he answered, promptly. "He has not come down yet. Sit down, please."

I took his chair and he went out to the sidewalk, whistled a moment, and then spoke in German to some one in the house above.

Then he returned to me.

"He will be here in a moment," he love him so much.

"Good-by, my daughter," said this handsome Anarchist fondly, as he patted her on the shoulder. "Be a good girl."

"You know I can't be that, father," She laughed roguishly, and bowing to me she went skipping to the door and up those three steps and out of sight.

ANARCHY'S AUTHORS.

"Tell me what writers you think do the most good for your cause."

"The list is a long one," he said. "Among the best, in my opinion, is Benjamin R. Tucker, who wrote 'Instead of a Book;' Victor Yarros, author of 'Trial by Jury,' and I consider the greatest mind in the United States, Mackaye. Van Ornum, Loyl, Josiah Warren, Lysander Spooner, Bakownine, Kropotkin and Elise Reclus, the great advocate of Anarchism. In the past generation Steven Pearl Andrews was a great promoter."

"Are there many newspapers devoted to Anarchy?"

"Yes; quite a number, mostly German, but somehow they never seem to get on. In English there is 'The People, a weekly; Liberty and Solidarity.'"

"Have you a library?"

"A little one," smiling. "I have over six hundred volumes."

"How are you educating your children?"

"As a good father should—to my own views."

"And you are devoting your life to Anarchy?"

"Yes; to the solution of the social problem. I can preach, proselyte and agitate and hope."

"You believe in personal property, unlike some Anarchists?"

"Certainly. I believe what a man works for is his, but I do not believe in the hoarding or amassing of money, neither do I believe in employing labor. Every man for himself."

"Will you let me copy some of the things upon your blackboard?"

He laughed merrily.

"If I were to prevent you I could not advocate freedom in everything. Do as you wish. Copy all you wish; write of me as you please. I preach freedom, freedom of speech, of the press. I would not stop you if I could."

SCHWAB'S BLACKBOARD.

So I turned to that interesting blackboard and there I read, first of all, a telegram announcing the pardoning of the Anarchists by Gov. Altgeld.

These are what I copied:

"The bright sun rises in his course and salutes a race of slaves."

"All lanes the lead to hastening ills a prey,
Where wealth accumulates and men decay."

"Arrest every petticoat who endangers the welfare of the republic."

"Where more than one man speaks, beg her husband locked up."

"Where more than one man assembles, shoot him on the spot."

"Free speech is to thunder away in the hills of New Jersey where no man hears."

"What does Anarchy mean? The public thinks it means riot, murder and pillage."

"Anarchy is the highest potents of order," he said, emphatically. "It is seeking a form of society where war, crime and all things evil will become impossible. We are ending all compulsion. What we want is voluntary association without police clubs."

"Aside from Anarchy, what do you like? Do you drive or dance?"

"He sings," spoke up a man who had entered. "Splendid voice."

"Oh, no; I'm too old now," Mr. Schwab said, modestly, his deep, rich voice speaking for itself. "I am fond of music and the opera. I used to sing and play."

"Is there anything you would say, in

If we are wrong, let them come forward and prove so. If we are right, let them give us justice, freedom to speak. We ask no more."

"May I come back?" I asked in parting.

"Always, and welcome," was the cordial reply.

"And if I do, not, in my ignorance, get everything correct, will you accept the intention for the deed?"

"Would I believe in freedom," he laughed, "if I denied you every right, even to that of making mistakes?"

That is Justus H. Schwab, Anarchist, preacher, teacher and agitator. If you think he is wrong, he is ready to talk with you and to convince or be convinced.

That is the glimpse I had of him and his home and life. It is not a bad picture is it?

"ZUM GROBEN MICHEL."

While searching for Emma Goldman the other night I went to No. 209 Fifth street—"Zum Groben Michel." This saloon has lately become famous as the resort of Anarchists, and is worthy a brief description. It is in the basement and has two entrances, one through a long hall and one by a front door.

I waked through this hall of semi-darkness, the only light coming from the open doors, and stopped at the first door to take a view of the saloon. There was absolutely nothing worthy of notice or comment, in one corner, in front of the window, was a bar—not a very grand affair—over which a bartender was rapidly handing out glasses filled with some beer and much foam.

Across from the bar, seated in a little group, were a few grave-faced Germans playing upon such instruments as are usually considered "the thing" for moments of festivity.

A woman who was making herself very busy saw me in the doorway and came forward, waiting for me to speak. Her hair was sleek and scant, her face was fat and ruddy and her form was all there, being a living protest against the idea of not indulging in corsets.

She suspicious and uncommunicative. I knew by her eye that she thought I was after something, and did not intend to be the one to help me.

"Do you speak English?" I asked, and she said she did.

"Is Miss Goldman here?" I added.

The woman looked me over, glanced towards the bar, then towards the inner room, and finally replied to me in German:

"I am very anxious to see Miss Goldman," I said, "and not knowing her address, I thought I should find her here."

"No, she is not here," she answered very distinctly.

"Do you expect her here?"

She shook her head.

"Have you any idea where she has gone?"

Again she shook her head.

"I wanted to see her so much," I said, regretfully.

I wanted to be invited in as well, but I said nothing about that, and as she did not seem hospitably inclined, I remained where I was.

At last she said I might step inside and speak to the proprietor. He might tell me something.

"Inside" was a back room, brightly lighted.

A long table in the middle of it was surrounded by a number of persons intently engaged in folding and wrapping papers.

They were all men at work with one exception, a little brown-haired woman, who never glanced up.

Indeed, I was most impressed by the indifference and lack of curiosity with which they regarded me, a stranger. Very few of them seemed to notice me at all, and when they did it was not curiously.

As I advanced into the room, a dark,

BEST COPY AVAILABLE

880721002

The Emma Goldman Papers

[Interview] Nellie Bly Again: She Interviews Emma Goldman and Other Anarchists / Emma Goldman. – pp. 1, 3 ; 42 cm. In The World. –(Sept. 17, 1893).

Obtained from the University of California, Berkeley. Institutional Location: Doe Library.

…ntent mothers.
…esides this," she went on, "in our schools every child would have a …ce to learn and pursue that for …h it has ability. Can you imagine number of children to-day, children …oor parents, who are born with …ty for music or painting, or letters, …e abilities lie dormant for the lack …eans and the necessity to work for …daily bread as soon as they are out …eir cradles."

HER RELATIVES.

…ave you any brothers or sisters, …Goldman?"

…es; a married brother, who does not …er about anything, and only reads …papers when there is something in …n about me. My sister is also mar…and, while not actively engaged in our …e, is bringing up her children to our …ciples. My father and mother are …living, near Rochester, and, while …Anarchists, sympathize with me and …ot interfere with my work."

…What is your future?"

…cannot say. I shall live to agitate …romote our ideas. I am willing to …my liberty and my life, if necessary, …urther my cause. It is my mission …I shall not falter."

…o you think that murder is going to …your cause?"

…e looked grave; she shook her head …ly.

…hat is a long subject to discuss. I …t believe that through murder we …l gain, but by war, labor against …tal, masses against classes, which …not come in twenty or twenty-five …rs. But some day, I firmly believe, …shall gain, and until then I am satis…to agitate to teach, and I only ask …dee and freedom of speech."

…id so I left the little Anarchist, the …tern Joan of Arc, waiting patiently …he Tombs until her friends could se…bail for her.

…shall certainly get a year or a year …a half," she said to me in parting, …t because my offense deserves it, …because I am an Anarchist."

JOHN MOST.

…hen I walked through William …et in search of 206, where lives John …t. I was not the happiest girl in the …ld.

…s I walked along by idle groups …the corners and dirty doorsteps …scalled the impression I had formed …Most from newspaper accounts, and …ondered at myself for risking my …in order to see such a person.

…is own description of the accepted …e of an Anarchist, copied from his …phlet, The Social Monster, was …ut my own idea:

…A dagger in one hand, a torch in the …er, and all his pockets brimful …h dynamite bombs—that is the pic…e of the Anarchist, such as it has …n drawn by his enemies. They look …him simply as a mixture of a fool …a knave, whose sole purpose is a …versal topsy-turvy, and whose only …ns to that purpose is to slay any …and every one who differs from …."

…wished myself out of the whole …to man's size, and a man.

"Can you tell me where I can find Mr. Most?" I asked.

"Certainly," the cobbler replied, in a friendly, cheerful voice that won me at once. "Here's the very lad that can take you right to him."

The boy spoke to me in German and I replied in English that I wished to see Mr. Most personally.

Thanking the happy cobbler, I followed the boy up a second and shorter stair way straight into a printing office, where the men were at work setting type.

They looked surprised at seeing me, and left their cases and came forward to the boy, who explained to them in German the object, so far as he knew, of my visit.

Then one man spoke to me in German, saying that Mr. Most had gone home to his dinner.

I knew this, but it is not always well to tell everything one knows, even it it doesn't amount to much, so I replied, in English, that I had just come from his house, where I had been told that he was at the office.

Had I seen the wife, the man asked in German, and I said Yes, I supposed I had.

So the other printer, speaking in English, said Mr. Most often stopped on his way home and doubtless I had passed him.

Then he said I might step into the inner office and wait, if I wished.

I most certainly wished. I stepped into the adjoining office, sat down at a table and made up my mind to stay there until Mr. Most came.

The office was as picturesque, in its way, as Mr. Schwab's saloon.

There were in the room three desks, one lounge and one chair. The one desk before which I sat, and from which I could see everything that occurred in the other room, was flat-topped, and covered with dark oil-cloth.

Each of the other desks was high, and of antique style.

Upon the desk where I sat lay a dark-gray cat, with big yellow eyes, that followed my movements with a suspicious and mistrustful gaze.

There is no denying that the office is very poor. The unplastered boards have been whitewashed, but I judge that the roof cannot keep out the rain. It must be a cheerless place upon a cold or wet day.

I decided, after a thorough inspection, that the place was beyond improving. Its condition was not the fault of its tenant, but of its age.

But I soon forgot everything else in contemplation of the collection of prints that cover the partition and wall. They are numberless, and most interesting.

Pictures of riots, of noted Anarchists, of thinkers, of philosophers, clippings from newspapers, and caricature after caricature of Most himself, in every conceivable shape and form.

My eyes wandered from these to the cretonne curtains at the windows—curtains with gay roses on them and an equally gay Japanese guitarist, the guitar at his feet, holding in his arms a Japanese maiden in a smart kimono.

Time went by, and I even tired of this amorous Jap, and longed for something new.

If was getting late, the office-boy had disappeared, and I was afraid Mr. Most was not coming.

Presently the office-boy returned.

He went up to one printer and whispered something to him. The printer instantly turned and gave me a startled glance.

The boy went to the second printer, who did exactly as the first.

"Ah!" I thought, "I am known, and Mr. Most has sent word that he will not come. I'll wait until the office closes, and then I shall return to his house."

I put out my hand to touch the gray cat, but, eyeing me suspiciously, she evaded my touch, and, jumping upon the red lounge, proceeded to sharpen her nails upon the pillow.

"Even the cat suspects me," I thought, …Such a life! The audacity was …greater. It would take a volume to tell it, just as has been done, and I do not mean to spoil a good tale by attempting to do it here.

"Now, if I make mistakes in writing about you, what will you do?" I asked, anxiously.

"I will forgive even your mistakes," he replied, pleasantly.

I went away regretting the shortness of my interview and wondering to what region had vanished the ideal I had feared so much.

I am sure I did not find anything except a pleasant, polite, kindly man in the most feared of all Anarchists, John Most!

JUSTUS H. SCHWAB.

"Do you know where Mr. Schwab's saloon is?" I asked a little girl in First street.

"It's there," she replied, pointing across the street.

I looked where she pointed and saw hanging over a basement window a modest sign bearing the name "Justus H. Schwab." Below it was a beer sign, and that was the only evidence in view that the basement was a saloon. No mysterious swinging doors, no suggestive stormdoor marked "Ladies' Entrance," just three steps down into a basement, the door almost hidden by the high stoop, and that was all.

"Is there no entrance for women?" I asked the girl.

"Oh, no," she answered. "Everybody goes in at the same door. No one minds."

So I went down the three steps and stood in the doorway.

The scene was an unusual one, and not without its picturesque features.

Nearest to the one window was a tall bar, innocent of glasses or tempting and alluring luncheon, not even a pretzel being in sight.

No beating the satanic one around the bush there. If you want a drink, well and good. If not, you are not tempted to drink in order to partake of a few cold bites.

Back of the bar, on two ordinary brackets, were about a dozen glasses, and near them some shelves filled with books.

The most interesting thing in this basement—that is, when the proprietor is out—is the blackboard.

It faces the bar and is filled with writing, newspaper clippings and telegrams. On either side of this board is painted a red flag, the flag of Anarchy.

But more about this famous blackboard later.

The basement extends the length of the house, having one window in the rear and a hall that leads to the yard.

Plain, ordinary round tables, with their accompanying four wooden chairs, fill the floor, and pictures and a second and larger case of books the wall.

This is Justus H. Schwab's place—an honest place, a place that scorns to hide men behind door, until, incapable of drinking more, they are set upon and beaten and flung into the street.

Of one thing every observer must be convinced as soon as he enters. That is that Mr. Schwab, true to his doctrine, is not working to make a fortune, but merely for so much as will maintain life.

When I entered this interesting place there was but one person present.

That was a young boy who sat at a table intent upon a book. So absorbed, in fact, that he did not hear me until I spoke to him.

"Is Mr. Schwab here?" I asked.

He raised to me a handsome boyish face, his big china-blue eyes smiling in unison with his red lips.

"I shall call him," he answered, promptly. "He has not come down yet. Sit down, please."

I took his chair and he went out to the sidewalk, whistled a moment, and then spoke in German to some one in the house above.

Then he returned to me.

"He will be here in a moment," he …perform, or one that she did with half a heart, or occasionally, but as if she loved him with all her girlish heart, and liked to kiss him because she did love him so much.

"Good-by, my daughter," said this handsome Anarchist fondly, as he patted her on the shoulder. "Be a good girl."

"You know I can't be that, father." She laughed roguishly, and bowing to me she went skipping to the door and up those three steps and out of sight.

ANARCHY'S AUTHORS.

"Tell me what writers you think do the most good for your cause."

"The list is a long one," he said. "Among the best, in my opinion, is Benjamin R. Tucker, who wrote 'Instead of a Book;' Victor Yarros, author of 'Trial by Jury,' and I consider the greatest mind in the United States; Mackaye, Van Ornum, Loyd, Joshua Warren, Lysander Spooner, Rakownine, Krapotkin and Elise Reclus, the great avocate of Anarchism. In the past generation Steven Pearl Andrews was a great promoter."

"Are there many newspapers devoted to Anarchy?"

"Yes; quite a number, mostly German, but somehow they never seem to get on. In English there is The People, a weekly; Liberty and Solidarity."

"Have you a library?"

"A little one," smiling. "I have over six hundred volumes."

"How are you educating your children?"

"As a good father should—to my own views."

"And you are devoting your life to Anarchy?"

"Yes; to the solution of the social problem. I can preach, proselyte and agitate and hope."

"You believe in personal property, unlike some Anarchists?"

"Certainly. I believe what a man works for is his, but I do not believe in the hoarding or amassing of money, neither do I believe in employing labor. Every man for himself."

"Will you let me copy some of the things upon your blackboard?"

He laughed merrily.

"If I were to prevent you I could not advocate freedom in everything. Do as you wish. Copy all you wish, write of me as you please. I preach freedom, freedom of speech, of the press. I would not stop you if I could."

SCHWAB'S BLACKBOARD.

So I turned to that interesting blackboard and there I read, first of all, a telegram announcing the pardoning of the Anarchists by Gov. Altgeld.

These are what I copied:

"The bright sun rises in his course and salutes a race of slaves."

"Ill fares the land to hastening ills a prey,
Where wealth accumulates and men decay."

"Arrest every politician who endangers the welfare of the republic."

"Where more than one man speaks together they have him locked up."

"Where more than one man assembles, shoot him on the spot."

"The speech is in thunder away in the hills of New Jersey where no man hears."

"What does Anarchy mean? The public thinks it means riot, murder and pillage."

"Anarchy is the highest potente of order," he said, emphatically. "It is seeking a form of society where war, crime and all things evil will become impossible. We are ending all compulsion. What we want is voluntary association without police clubs."

"Aside from Anarchy, what do you like? Do you drive or dance?"

"He sings," spoke up a man who had entered. "Splendid voice."

"Oh, no; I'm too old now," Mr. Schwab said, modestly, his deep, rich voice speaking for itself. "I am fond of music and the opera. I used to sing and play."

"Is there anything you would say, in parting, to that part of the public that denounces you?"

"Yes, say this: Let them give us free speech; let them discuss with us. If we are wrong, let them come forward and prove so. If we are right, let them give us justice, freedom to speak. We ask no more."

"May I come back?" I asked in parting.

"Always, and welcome," was the cordial reply.

"And if I do not, in my ignorance, get everything correct, will you accept the intention for the deed?"

"Would I believe in freedom," he laughed, "if I denied you every right, even to that of making mistakes?"

That is Justus H. Schwab, Anarchist, preacher, teacher and agitator. If you think he is wrong, he is ready to talk with you and to convince or be convinced.

That is the glimpse I had of him and his home and life. It is not a bad picture is it?

"ZUM GROBEN MICHEL."

While searching for Emma Goldman the other night I went to No. 209 Fifth street—"Zum Groben Michel." This saloon has lately become famous as the resort of Anarchists, and is worthy a brief description. It is in the basement and has two entrances, one through a long hall and one by a front door.

I walked through this hall of semi-darkness, the only light coming from the open doors, and stopped at the first door to take a view of the saloon. There was absolutely nothing worthy of notice or comment, in one corner, in front of the window, was a bar—not a very grand affair—over which a bartender was rapidly handing out glasses filled with some beer and much foam.

Across from the bar, seated in a little group, were a few grave-faced Germans playing upon such instruments as are usually considered "the thing" for moments of festivity.

A woman who was making herself very busy saw me in the doorway and came forward, waiting for me to speak. Her hair was sleek and scant, her face was fat and ruddy and her form was all there, being a living protest against the idea of not indulging incorsets.

She suspicious and uncommunicative. I knew by her eye that she thought I was after something, and did not intend to be the one to help me.

"Do you speak English?" I asked, and she said she did.

"Is Miss Goldman here?" I added.

The woman looked me over, glanced towards the bar, then towards the inner room, and finally replied to me in German:

"I am very anxious to see Miss Goldman," I said, "and not knowing her address, I thought I should find her here."

"No, she is not here," she answered very distinctly.

"Do you expect her here?"

She shook her head.

"Have you any idea where she has gone?"

Again she shook her head.

"I wanted to see her so much," I said, regretfully.

I wanted to be invited in as well, but I said nothing about that and as she did not seem hospitably inclined, I remained where I was.

At last she said I might step inside and speak to the proprietor. He might tell me something.

"Inside" was a back room, brightly lighted.

A long table in the middle of it was surrounded by a number of persons intently engaged in folding and wrapping papers.

They were all men at work with one exception, a little brown-haired woman, who never glanced up.

Indeed, I was most impressed by the indifference and lack of curiosity with which they regarded me, a stranger. Very few of them seemed to notice me at all, and when they did it was not curiously.

As I advanced into the room, a dark, good-looking man arose from the end of the table and, with a very winning smile upon his face, waited for me to state my business. I wanted to say that I would like to sit down with them, but they were all speaking German, and in some way the whole atmosphere made me feel like an outsider.

I put to this smiling good-looking man all the questions I had asked the woman with the same result.

He knew nothing, or pretended he knew nothing, of Emma Goldman's whereabouts.

So this was Michel, the friend of Timmerman, who has just been sent to the island for six months; the friend of Emma Goldman, and this saloon, of which I have given so brief a description, is the noted resort of the Anarchists. Cheered by the music they sit here, planning and dreaming and discussing, and, amid it all, toasting in cool draughts of foaming beer every good thought, every brave utterance.

At Schwab's, No. 50 First street, I found a smaller number congregated. Mr. Schwab was away, and his handsome, fair-haired boy, was attending to the duties. Several men sat around talking very quietly in German, and the only English I heard spoken was that spoken by the boy and myself and a red-faced man, who call out to an acquaintance that entered:

"It has arrived to your pipe to be upside down."

NELLIE BLY.

THE STORM KING APPEASED.

But It Is Rumored that in His Fury Several Lives Were Lost.

The storm which ended early yesterday morning came from the lakes. It was followed by an area of high pressure, which chased all the rain clouds out to sea. In this city about three-quarters of an inch of rain fell, enough to wash away a part of the dirt that had escaped the "block system."

Capt. Edwards, of the Spermaceto Life-Saving Station, reported that half a dozen clam boats were said to have sunk during the gale of the night before. It was rumored several lives had been lost, and that one survivor was picked up by a passing schooner. Capt. Edwards cannot vouch for the truth of the report. At Fulton Market, where many of the boats tie up, no report of such a calamity had been received.

According to the Weather Bureau the rough weather is over for the time being, and there will be no need of an umbrella to-day, either in going to church or in returning therefrom.

Prophet Smith, in charge of the local bureau during Sergt. Dunn's vacation, says that it will be clear and cool, cool enough, he says, to make a wrap or overcoat comfortable towards the close of the day.

Another Brain-Racker Ready.

The Gold and Silver Puzzle Company, No. 21 Park place, will place upon the market to-morrow a financial problem in the form of the "Gold and Silver Puzzle." One hundred dollars reward is offered for the first correct solution of the puzzle sent to their office by mail.

The puzzle consists of two rings interesting each other. On one circle are twenty-one discs, marked silver, and on the other, twenty-two discs, with gold written upon them. The problem is to place the gold and silver dollars in free circulation, by exchanging or reversing the discs, which correspond to dollars.

Samples, costing 10 cents, will be mailed upon request, and the receipt of 8 cents in postage stamps.

BEST COPY AVAILABLE

880722000

The Emma Goldman Papers

[Excerpt from Lecture] "May Anarchy Live" / Emma Goldman.– p. 1 ; 43 cm. In The World. –(Oct. 5, 1893).

Obtained from the University of California, Berkeley. Institutional Location: Doe Library.

25 WANTED, APARTMENTS, TO LET. Advts. 10 Cents. ...k on page 16.

The World.

"Circulation Books Open to All."

ALL Situations Wanted Advts. 20 WORDS 10 CENTS. Every day in the week (Sundays included). Use blank on page 16.

V. NO. 11,734. PRICE TWO CENTS. NEW YORK, THURSDAY, OCTOBER 5, 1893. PRICE TWO CENTS. 16 PAGES.

...TICKET.

...oga Ready to ...nations.

...I-MACHINE.

... Will Be the ...irman.

...AST BRAVES.

...ominations That ...ation To-Day.

...IS PROBABLE.

...World.) ...This is the ticket ...

...ah, James E. Mayn...

...Ryan, Jr. ...ffy. ...hell. ...Rosendale. ...Surveyor, Martin ...

...ed on at a late ...e from Senator ...the office of the ...Meyer admitted ...ad he would be ...E. Kirk and ...rning candidates ...State Treasurer, ...by friends and ...by the decision ...nd Mr. Croker. ...There is little ...from this district ...t to come up to-...

...The Democratic state ...Croker and Murphy and ...to confer till noon ...at which meeting ...Governor Flower and ...Lieut.-Governor Sheehan ...Democratic State ticket ...

...Ellis will be temporary secretaries of the convention.

Col. George B. McClellan, who has been in the hands of his Tammany friends for the nomination for Secretary of State, has been laid on the shelf, it is said. Mr. Croker wants to use Col. McClellan in some other way. To-night C. Meyer, jr., is the man most likely to be nominated. This, the leaders think, would pacify the anti-machine people and produce that show of harmony which Senator Murphy and Messrs. Sheehan and Croker feel is necessary to elect Judge Maynard. Mr. Meyer, while he has been a consistent Cleveland man, has never been much out of line with the machine. Mr. Hill would much rather have some one else, but it looks to-night as if Meyer would be the man.

For State Treasurer Hugh Duffy, Col. Lamont's friend from Cortland County, is out of the race. Ex-Mayor Kirk, of Syracuse, will be much stronger in the convention than Duffy, and can win hands down if the nomination be left to the convention. It looks now as if this would be done.

FOR JUDGE MAYNARD.

The nomination of Judge Maynard is, of course, to go through. That will be insisted upon. Senator Murphy is willing to give any other concession. He saw Congressman Tracey to-night, and asked that the anti-machine men make no direct attack upon Mr. Maynard, and that they fall into line and make the nomination unanimous in the interests of Democratic harmony. The anti-machine men are thinking hard over this to-night. They will probably present the name of Judge Hand, of Essex, to-morrow.

SHERIFF JOHN J. GORMAN, THE SANTA CLAUS OF THE PARTY.

District Attorney James Ridgway, of Kings, who is on the ground for Hugh McLaughlin, was called in to-night and consulted with concerning the nomination of Thomas Fennell for a queen on the state ticket. He replied that Fennell was not to be considered. He is a candidate for Judge of the Supreme Court, and knows that Mr. McLaughlin has an option to name a man on the ticket. The fact of Fennell's being in that category is said to have ...

MURDERED IN ALASKA.

Missionary H. R. Thornton Shot at His Door with a Whaling Gun.

HIS YOUNG WIFE LEFT ALONE WITH THE BODY ALL NIGHT.

NATIVES LYNCH THE BOY SLAYERS.

(Special to The World.)

SAN FRANCISCO, Oct. 4.—The revenue cutter Corwin, which arrived from the Behring Sea yesterday, brought Mrs. Harrison R. Thornton, widow of the nephew of ex-Justice Thornton, of the Supreme Court of this State.

Mrs. Thornton's husband was a linguist, and in order to pursue his studies accepted eighteen months ago the post of teacher in the missionary school at Cape Prince of Wales. Mrs. Thornton, then a bride, accompanied him, and when last heard from both were content, though Mr. Harrison's letters were full of complaints concerning the difficulties in his way and the lack of aid he thought he was entitled to receive from the Government. In addition to teaching he set about protecting the parents of his pupils from the evil influences of ... traders, whose principal stock for barter was liquor.

In this work he became involved in a controversy with the commander of one of the revenue cutters, whom he charged with dereliction in not devoting more time to the suppression of the illegal traffic. This made him some enemies among the natives. Encouraged by their parents, some of Mr. Thornton's pupils rebelled, and early last month the conduct of three boys became so bad that they threatened to demoralize the school. To prevent thorough disruption Mr. Thornton expelled them.

At a council of some of the better Indians the boys were ordered punished, and out of revenge they murdered their teacher.

At the time Mr and Mrs. Thornton were the only white persons at the school settlement, W. T. Lapp, the assistant teacher, being absent for supplies and mail. The boys were from fourteen to seventeen years of age. The two eldest entered into a conspiracy, but the youngest refused to join.

The young conspirators decided to use an old whaling gun, left there by some hunters. It was of enormous calibre and had been used to fire harpoons and explosive bombs. After dark one of the boys summoned Thornton to his door. The other, ready with the gun, and when the teacher appeared he pulled the trigger, sending a whaling-iron entirely through his body.

Mrs. Thornton was to have been killed, but the boys were frightened away by her screams. The Thornton residence was ransacked and her cries were not heard. She passed the night alone with the dead body of her husband.

In the morning the entire village was aroused. A party of Indians, ... had made up their minds ... Columbus, O., where Cothem ... undergoing treatment in a hospital and Miss Brinkman was the nurse. They will make their home in St. Louis. The bridegroom still wears woman's clothes.

A committee called on the bridegroom last night for an explanation. It is reported that in answer to questions the bridegroom went up stairs and fainted.

BISMARCK DID NOT GO HOME.

For the Third Time the Date Fixed for His Departure from Kissingen Is Changed.

KISSINGEN, Oct. 4.—Prince Bismarck did not start for his home in Friedrichsruh to-day as had been arranged.

Dr. Schweninger, his physician, has left Kissingen, and is not expected back before Saturday. This is taken as an indication that the Prince's condition is not critical.

It is thought that the Prince will be compelled to make a prolonged sojourn here. Twice before has the day been set for his departure, but both times his condition was such it was deemed inexpedient to move him. The last arrangement made was for him to leave Kissingen at noon to-day. He was to travel by rail via Bebra and Hanover, thus avoiding passing through Berlin, as it was feared that the excitement of the reception sure to be given him there would have a bad effect upon him.

The Kreuz Zeitung to-day publishes the often-referred-to order sent by Emperor William to Dr. Schweninger. This order bears date of April 21, 1890, and contains the following:

"Not only the German nation, but all the nations of the civilized world have the deepest interest in Prince Bismarck's welfare. I personally heartily desire to see him, with God's help, long preserved. I wish you, therefore, to continue to attend him as his physician. I look forward to your reports from time to time."

BERLIN, Oct. 4.—Dr. Chrysander, the physician who attended Prince Bismarck during his recent illness, has been summoned to Kissingen.

EMMA GOLDMAN AND HER JURORS.

INSPECTION. INTERROGATION. APPREHENSION. SUSPENSION. SATISFACTION.

"MAY ANARCHY LIVE."

Emma Goldman's Alleged Speech in Evidence Against Her.

THE ANARCHIST QUEEN'S TRIAL BEGUN IN EARNEST.

DETECTIVE CHAS. JACOBS TESTIFIES.

The trial of Emma Goldman, the "Queen of the Anarchists," for incendiary speaking, began yesterday in Part I. of the Court of General Sessions before Judge Martine. The greater part of the day was occupied in jury picking. The following twelve men were selected:

Rudolph F. Emmerich, machinist, No. 191 Worth street; Emanuel Weisbergef, meat and vegetables, No. 563 Columbus avenue; Michael Wachtel, retired tobacconist, No. 247 East Fifty-fifth street; David Friedlander, real estate, No. 305 East Forty-second street; Charles G. O'Hara, jr., machinery salesman, No. 107 Liberty street; Judson Johnson, salesman, Thirty-first street and East River; James Hamilton, carpenter, No. 217 West Fifty-third street, Matthew Anderson, real estate, No. 1051 Third avenue; Cornelius McCarthy, liquors, No. 902 Eleventh avenue; Stephen D. Pitchett, real estate, No. 2 New Chambers street; Christian Hammel, retired sewing machine dealer, No. 180 East Eighty-first street, and Albert J. Wagner, wine importer, No. 1466 Third avenue.

Miss Goldman listened attentively to

ACCUSED BY DR. MARY WALKER.

A Syracuse Porter Held for Murdering Christie Warden and Throwing the Sage Bomb.

(Special to The World.)

SYRACUSE, N. Y., Oct. 4.—Dr. Mary Walker visited Police Headquarters to-day, and said she had come to have the real murderer of Christie Warden, who was killed at Hanover, N. H., July 17, 1891, taken into custody. At her request and on information given by her Chief of Police Wright sent for Arthur B. Snood, who has been a porter at the Windsor House.

When Snood appeared Dr. Walker declared he was not only guilty of the murder for which Almy was hanged, but was the man who threw the bomb in Russell Sage's office in New York. Then she pilled Snood with questions, and got him to contradict himself several times. Chief Wright will hold Snood until he can investigate the doctor's story. Dr. Walker was recently refused a warrant for Snood's arrest at Oswego.

Dr. Walker has just returned to her farm near Oswego from another trip of investigation in New Hampshire. She says Snood went to work for her on her farm in May, 1891. He left for a time, but returned July 18, 1891, the day after Christie Warden was murdered. He stayed on her farm for a time and then went away again. On the evening Snood returned she says she asked him to read from the New York World the account of the Warden murder. He was visibly affected, especially by the description of the murderer, and had to be urged to go on. After he had finished he went to his room, though it was only 6 o'clock.

He had told me, she said, that he had worked for a family of the name of ... Hampshire, that his grandfather was murdered, and that he had ... order that Mr. Cuming, who is still nearly helpless, may have an easy trip. It is now thought probable that Mr. Cuming will eventually recover, although it will require some time.

AFTER SANTA CRUZ.

Insurgent Warships Pouring Shot Into That Stubborn Fort.

THE BATTLE-SHIP BAHIA SAILS TO JOIN PELLO'S FLEET.

RIO AND SANTOS STILL BLOCKADED.

(Copyright, 1893, by the Press Publishing Company, New York World.)

(Special Cable Despatch to The World.)

BUENOS AYRES, Oct. 4.—The warships of the insurgent fleet in the Bay of Rio de Janeiro are still pouring shot into Fort Santa Cruz, near the entrance to the harbor.

The blockade of the ports of Rio de Janeiro and Santos, proclaimed by Admiral Mello, the commander-in-chief of the revolutionists, continues.

MONTEVIDEO, via Galveston, Oct. 4.—The bombardment at Rio de Janeiro continues.

The revolutionists do not seem to be gaining any advantage.

No details of to-day's firing have been received here.

Fort Santa Cruz is the only fortress on the bay that holds out against ... Mello. ...

NOW THE RACE

Vigilant and Valkyrie ... Perfect Trim for To-Day's Contest.

BOTH YACHTS MEASURE...

Valkyrie's Time Allowance Is 1 Minute 48 Seconds.

THIS MEANS GOOD LUCK FOR E...

But Greater Will Be the G... of the White Sheep That Defends the Cup!

HURRAH FOR VIGILANT AND ...

BEST COPY AVAILABLE

880722000

The Emma Goldman Papers

[Excerpt from Lecture] "May Anarchy Live" / Emma Goldman.— p. 1 ; 43 cm. In The World. —(Oct. 5, 1893).

Obtained from the University of California, Berkeley. Institutional Location: Doe Library.

…It looks now
…AYNARD.
…dge Maynard is, of
…that will be tendered
…is willing to give any
…w Congressman Tracey
…the anti-machine men
…on Mr. Maynard, and

…ORMAN, THE SANTA
…THE PARTY.
…and make the nomina-
…interests of Democratic
…chine men are think-
…night. They will prob-
…of Judge Hand, of Essex,

…ies Ridgway, of Kings,
…d for Hugh McLaughlin,
…and consulted with con-
…n of Thomas Postwell for …ticket. He replied that
…e considered. He is a
…of the Supreme Court.
…Washington has no district
…the ticket. To-night the
…s Maynard, Meyer and
…Rosendale and Schenck,
…will make the State
…will be finished

…Tracey, who figured as
…Administration element,
…nomination of Mr.
…able to all the Democrats
…ed: "While Mr. Meyer
…ng adherent of the State
…kindly regarded by the
…supposed to be antago-
…he is very friendly to the
…, and is regarded by
…and reliable man. His
…ceptable to all of us. I
…ith pleasure, and I am
…eral will."

…AY'S TRIP.

…500 men from the great
…the Grand Central Depot
…1 o'clock to-day and
…me for "supper." The
…and so the outside
…was unattended by any
…the first man that ap-
…New York was Timothy
…pped quietly about and
…special notice. Barney
…of the old Eighth District,
…Jacob A. Mittnacht, who
…embly until Mr. Croker
…fesio against all men who
…ey was trying to soothe
…im that oratory is easily
…months' practice would
…an orator as Mr. Croker

…thy walked about. He
…a senator, but Tammany
…spirit of gratifying him.
…lyman, walked heavily
…niform until he caught
…r, and then he stepped
…his hat frequently. The
…ently dressed in a shiny
…ino Albert coat.

…In answer to questions,
…ion to forecast any events,
…the entire ticket nomi-
…nga Convention will be
…ther ticket will be in it."
…k Farley added: "And
…d go solid. Just make a
…rman Clancy bit off the
…inked Mike Callahan,
…e Assembly, arrived with
…r, the King of the Cherry
…stice wore a cocktail that
…ame his cheeks and a silk
…r polish than his shoes.
…T. Brown, the shoe
…nt of the Justice, loitered
…tly of his chance to be
…Revenue Collector. At
…n the highest praise of
…. Timothy "Shay"
…Albert coat, a silk lined
…Jug hat, avoided his old
…grown uneasy receiving

…McClellan, who has been
…t every office within the
…his election as President
…, continually blushed
…l all knowledge of what
…re for him. His, round-
…h an admiring crowd of
…ple, appeared shortly be-

…N BUNCHES.

…Soldiers began coming in
…rman, John F. Carroll,
…lerman "Soler" Flynn,
…, Dan Donegan, Under-
… Commissioner Feitner,
… John C. Sheehan and
…k all came in a bunch
… popping in. Assembly-
…en, Webster, Southworth
… in as the advance guard
…Michael P. Kelly. The big
…he hum of voices and no
…stone anywhere without
…r.
…ilence fell and every eye
…hat ground inwardly down
…rd the train. This was
…d Croker. He kept his
…front of him and paid no
…ding heads and shaking
…her man than usual said
…nd his lips that made no

…eel assured that the first
…he ready and there was a
…Public Commissioner
…charge of the train. His
…fortunate who had no
…to be Governor's aide of those
…s. His first section arrived
…and the second section fol-
…ow later.
…he last section Mr. Croker
…d his cronies. The men in
…ast that the melting of a
…like breaking glass. A few
…ad got noisily drunk.

…Thornton, a blow of the nephew of ex-Justice Thornton, of the Supreme Court of this State.

Mrs. Thornton's husband was a linguist, and in order to pursue his studies accepted eighteen months ago the post of teacher in the missionary school at Cape Prince of Wales. Mrs. Thornton, then a bride, accompanied him, and when last heard from both were content, though Mr. Harrison's letters were full of complaints concerning the difficulties in his way and the lack of aid he thought he was entitled to receive from the Government. In addition to teaching he set about protecting the parents of his pupils from the evil influences of chance traders, whose principal stock for barter was liquor.

In this work he became involved in a controversy with the commander of one of the revenue cutters, whom he charged with dereliction in not devoting more time to the suppression of the illegal traffic. This made him some enemies among the natives. Encouraged by their parents, some of Mr. Thornton's pupils rebelled, and early last month the conduct of three boys became so bad that they threatened to demoralize the school. To prevent thorough disruption Mr. Thornton expelled them.

At a council of some of the better Indians the boys were ordered punished, and out of revenge they murdered their teacher.

At the time Mr. and Mrs. Thornton were the only white persons at the school settlement, W. T. Lapp, the assistant teacher, being absent for supplies and mail. The boys were from fourteen to seventeen years of age. The two eldest entered into a conspiracy, but the youngest refused to join.

The young conspirators decided to use an old whaling-gun, left there by some hunters. It was of enormous calibre and had been used to fire harpoons and explosive bombs. After dark one of the boys summoned Thornton to his door. The other stood ready with the gun, and when the teacher appeared he pulled the trigger, sending a whaling-iron entirely through his body.

Mrs. Thornton was to have been killed, but the boys were frightened away by her screams. The Thornton residence was somewhat isolated and her cries were not heard. She passed the night alone with the dead body of her husband.

In the morning the entire village was aroused. A party of Indians, appreciative of the efforts Thornton had made in their behalf, caught the boys and killed them with stones and spears. They did not wait for a trial.

Then the relatives and friends of the boy murderers organized to fight the vigilance committee, but, finding them strong and well armed, gave up that intention and went to the Thornton cottage to kill Mrs. Thornton. They argued that as two of their number had been killed two of their enemies should die.

The vigilance committee learned of the threat and stopped them on the way. This gave Mrs. Thornton time, and she was assisted to escape by a friendly Indian and his daughter, a girl of sixteen, who was passionately fond of her. The three embarked in a canoe, with scarcely a handful of provisions, for their long journey down the river.

It was three days before Mrs. Thornton was landed on the coast at the settlement where Mr. Lapp had gone. For a day or two it was feared she would lose her reason.

The revenue cutter Bear was due at the cape in about three weeks, but Mrs. Thornton could not wait, and gladly accepted the proposition of some of the settlers to escort her down the coast to board the Corwin at Unalaska. Mrs. Thornton is now very ill at Judge Thornton's residence here.

Rev. Dr. Strieby, Secretary of the American Missionary Association, received word Tuesday of the murder of Mr. Thornton. Cape Prince of Wales is 1,000 miles north of Sitka and only forty-six miles from East Cape, Siberia. Mr. Thornton and W. T. Lapp, of Indiana, were sent there three years ago.

A year ago Mr. Thornton returned and married Miss Ada Pratt, of New York, formerly of Auburn, Me. They returned to Alaska together, taking with them a friend who subsequently became the wife of Mr. Lapp.

The reports from the missionaries were discouraging. They then said their lives were in danger. In letters to friends Mr. Thornton said that the natives were peaceable when not under the influence of liquor. When intoxicated they were dangerous, and many of the murderous missionaries in that section were traceable to this. Natives had threatened to shoot him and his wife only a few days before the last letter was sent, pointing firearms at them. Mr. Thornton's age was thirty-six years and he was a native of Virginia, and he was a professor in the State University there when called to mission work.

JEWELL CAN'T GET IN.

Blackballed Once. His Name Withdrawn at the Loyal Legion Meeting.

The name of Commander Theodore F. Jewell, of the Brooklyn Navy-Yard, has been before the military order of the Loyal Legion, Commandery of the State of New York, as a candidate for original first-class membership ever since last year. He was blackballed once. The elections are held at the monthly meetings at Delmonico's.

Last night, at the first meeting of the fall season, the list was distributed, but Commander Jewell's name was scratched off. This was done at the request of the committee. It is said that his name will be put forward at a subsequent meeting.

Acting Assistant Paymaster George Wilson, also once blackballed, was last night admitted.

After the meeting a dinner took place, and the officers elected at the last meeting were installed. Over four hundred sat down. Commander Brevet Major-Gen. Wager Swayne presided, and speeches were made by Gen. F. S. Michl, of West Point; Gen. Horace Porter, Gen. H. W. Slocum and Gen. Horatio King.

BRIDEGROOM IN WOMAN'S CLOTHES.

For Years Everybody in Toronto Accepted Him as a Woman.

(Special to The World.)

TORONTO, O., Oct. 4.—Augustus Cothen, who has lived here for years as Sallie Stringer, wearing woman's clothes and being accepted by everybody as a woman, was married yesterday to Mary Brinkman, who came here three months ago from Quincy, Ill.

Cothen has delicate features and no beard. No unfavorable comment was ever passed on him save that he was unusually timid for a woman, of the society of girls. W. T. Stringer, Cothen's uncle, who took out the marriage license, said that he had known that Cothen was not a woman only a short while. He was on the church rolls as "Sallie Stringer," and for that reason the pastor, the Rev. Mr. Weir, refused to perform the marriage ceremony.

The bride and bridegroom met and loved as

INSPECTION INTERROGATION.

Columbia, O., where Cothen [illegible] undergoing treatment in a hospital and Miss Brinkman was the nurse. They will make their home in St. Louis. The bridegroom still wears woman's clothes.

A committee called on the bridegroom last night for an explanation. It is reported that in answer to questions the bridegroom went up stairs and fainted.

BISMARCK DID NOT GO HOME.

For the Third Time the Date Fixed for His Departure from Kissingen Is Changed.

KISSINGEN, Oct. 4.—Prince Bismarck did not start for his home in Friedrichsruh to-day noon, as had been arranged.

Dr. Schweninger, his physician, has left Kissingen, and is not expected back before Saturday. This is taken as an indication that the Prince's condition is not critical.

It is thought that the Prince will be compelled to make a prolonged sojourn here. Twice before has the day been set for his departure, but both times his condition was such it was deemed inexpedient to move him. The last arrangement made was for him to leave Kissingen at noon to-day. He was to travel by rail via Fulda and Hanover, thus avoiding passing through Berlin, as it was feared that the excitement of the reception sure to be given him there would have a bad effect upon him.

The Kreuz Zeitung to-day publishes the often-referred-to ordar sent by Emperor William to Dr. Schweninger. This order bears date of April 21, 1890, and contains the following:

"Not only the German nation, but all the nations of the civilized world have the deepest interest in Prince Bismarck's welfare. I personally heartily desire to see him, with God's help, long preserved. I wish you, therefore, to continue to attend him as his physician. I look forward to your reports from time to time."

BERLIN, Oct. 4.—Dr. Chrysander, the physician attending Prince Bismarck in the absence of Dr. Schweninger, replying to inquiries, telegraphs that the alarming statements regarding Prince Bismarck are unfounded and that the Prince's condition is appreciably better.

Attendants say that the Prince feels strong enough to travel and that he may leave at any moment, but that it is impossible to fix a time for his departure.

THROWN FROM HER CARRIAGE.

The Wife of Dr. W. T. Bull, Some Time Mrs. James G. Blaine, Jr., Sustains a Severe Shock.

Mrs. W. T. Bull, the wife of Dr. W. T. Bull, once Mrs. James G. Blaine, Jr., was severely injured yesterday afternoon as she was leaving her carriage opposite the Grand Central Depot. Accompanied by her husband and eight-year-old son, James G. Blaine, Jr., Mrs. Blaine drove to the New York Hospital for the Relief of the Ruptured and Crippled, at the corner of Lexington avenue and Forty-second street. Dr. Bull, who is visiting surgeon at the hospital, left her at 2.30 o'clock to perform an operation. Mrs. Blaine then ordered the coachman to drive to Central Park.

The horses became frightened in front of the Grand Central Depot, reared, plunged and threatened to overturn the carriage. In front of Joseph N. Galway's grocery store, at Vanderbilt avenue, the driver got the horses under control and brought them to a stop. Mrs. Blaine assisted her son out and then started to follow him. She has been suffering from rheumatism and before she could get her left foot from the step the horses plunged again and she was thrown violently to the sidewalk. Her forehead, her arm from the elbow to the shoulder and her left side were badly bruised, and she sustained a severe shock.

She was taken into Galway's store and revived in a few minutes, after which she was driven to her home, No. 35 West Thirty-fifth street.

It was said at the house last evening that the shock sustained was more severe than Mrs. Bull's other injuries.

THE WIDOW RODE A BICYCLE.

Her Conduct Caused a Church War at Binghamton, N. Y.

(Special to The World.)

BINGHAMTON, N. Y., Oct. 4.—The High Street Methodist Church is now in a turmoil over the propriety of women riding bicycles. The trouble began when Mrs. Burrows, a widow, purchased a bicycle. She is an active worker in the church.

At a prayer-meeting the other night Samuel Stanley arose and denounced the act of bicycle-riding as unladylike, unchristian and a disgrace to the church. The deacon edified the audience by an attempted illustration of a woman riding a bicycle. The pastor, Rev. John Bradshaw, took sides against the bicyclists.

Mrs. Burrows's friends threaten to carry the question before the next conference. The Young Women's Christian Association has established a wheel club in open defiance of those who disapprove of bicycles.

RICH MEN'S BIG MORTGAGE.

Property of the Millionaire Club Pledged for $700,000 of Bonds.

The largest mortgage filed in the Register's office since Judge Hilton mortgaged his Chambers street building to Mrs. Hetty Green was registered yesterday. The mortgage covers the northeast corner of Fifth avenue and Sixtieth street, and was given by Cornelius Vanderbilt and others, trustees, to D. O. Mills and another, trustee, on account of bonds for $700,000.

The Metropolitan Club on May 9, 1891, purchased from Lily W. Chu c'ill the plot of land on the corner, 100·8x100, and also on Sixtieth street, north side, 100 feet east of Fifth avenue, the plot 100x100.8.

None of those concerned in the transaction could be seen. but it is understood that the mortgage was given to indemnify the bondholders.

"MAY ANARCHY LIVE."

Emma Goldman's Alleged Speech in Evidence Against Her.

THE ANARCHIST QUEEN'S TRIAL BEGUN IN EARNEST.

DETECTIVE CHAS. JACOBS TESTIFIES.

The trial of Emma Goldman, the "Queen of the Anarchists," for incendiary speaking, began yesterday in Part I. of the Court of General Sessions before Judge Martine. The greater part of the day was occupied in jury picking. The following twelve men were selected:

Rudolph F. Emmerich, machinist, No. 131 Worth street; Emanuel Weisberger, meat and vegetables, No. 148 Columbus avenue; Michael Wachtel, retired tobacconist, No. 247 East Fifty-fifth street; David Friedlander, real estate, No. 206 East Forty-second street; Charles G. O'Hara, jr., machinery salesman, No. 107 Liberty street; Judson Johnson, salesman, Thirty-first street and East River; James Hamilton, carpenter, No. 217 West Fifty-third street; Matthew Anderson, real estate, No. 2662 Third avenue; Cornelius McCarthy, liquors, No. 902 Eleventh avenue; Stephen D. Pitchett, real estate, No. 2 New Chambers street; Christian Hammel, retired sewing machine dealer, No. 152 East Eighty-first street, and Albert J. Wagner, wine importer, No. 1405 Third avenue.

Miss Goldman listened attentively to the examination of the talesmen. She was dressed in black and wore a big yellow rose. In the court-room were Joseph Barondess, the leader of the cloakmakers; Justus Schwab, John Most and other "labor agitators." Emma was eminently self-satisfied.

If her counsel had allowed her she would have made a speech. Ex-Mayor A. Oakey Hall, with Bernard J. Douras and August G. Beyer, of the firm of Oakey Hall, Douras & Beyer, represented her. Assistant District-Attorney McIntyre is conducting the case for the people. Mr. Hall asked the talesmen if they had any prejudices against Anarchists or Athelate and Mr. McIntyre inquired whether they had any acquaintances in Anarchist or Socialist circles.

The speech she is alleged to have made is as follows:

"My friends and workmen, we have assembled here to speak of the improving of our condition, but with speeches only we can accomplish nothing. You must have courage. You want bread, but who will give it to you? No one will give it to you. If you want it you must take it. If you do not get it on your own demand, take it by force. Go out into the social revolution. Prepare yourselves. The capitalists have prepared themselves with the police, who are armed with pistols and clubs. You can defend yourselves with sticks and stones if attacked. (The crowd—'We will.')

"I tell you again: Organize and go and demand what you want, and, if it is not given, then take it by force. If you take bread alone it will not help you much. Take everything. (The crowd—'She's right; that we will do.' March to the palaces of the capitalists and demand your rights, and if they are not given to you take them by force. You will be attacked by the militia and the police. You must be prepared to defend yourselves with sticks and stones. Prepare yourselves. (The crowd—'That's right. We will. Hurrah for Emma Goldman!') Either you will have to do what I tell you, or you can go home quietly, lay yourselves down and die of hunger. You can't accomplish anything by making speeches. You must act, and if you want to act you must prepare yourselves, so that you will be able to defend yourselves. (The crowd—'She's right; we must prepare ourselves!') It is true you are not prepared, while we know that the police are, with weapons, but we also know where weapons are to be obtained. (The crowd—'You bet we do! We know where to go and get them!') We are living in a time when you must act. The law will not fill your empty stomachs. The laws are made for the rich and not for the poor. The rich are living in luxury. Their wives and children have the best, while your wives and children are starving and running about in rags. (The crowd—'You are right! We know it!') Now that you know what you have to do, prepare yourselves. May Anarchy live!"

Mr. McIntyre, in his opening speech, explained that the prisoner was charged with a misdemeanor, and that the language she used at the mass-meeting in Union Square was an offense against the law.

Detective Sergeant Charles Jacobs, who took notes of the speech, read it in German from his memoranda and translated it. Mr. Hall in his cross-examination made a point of the fact that Detective Jacobs's report was not a verbatim one, and was incomplete. He examined the witness closely on his knowledge of German.

The detective made several breaks on translating words and corrected himself to-day at 11 A. M. Miss Goldman spent last night in the Tombs, where she was taken by Deputy Sheriff Joe Burke. Her counsel pleaded for a continuation of her liberty on bail, but Mr. McIntyre objected.

To Bring Lawyer Cuming Home.

(Special to The World.)

MONTICELLO, N. Y., Oct. 4.—James R. Cuming, of the law firm of Vanderpool, Greene & Cuming, New York City, who, as reported in The World, was stricken with paralysis two weeks ago at the Hotel Rockwall, where he had been spending the summer, will be removed to his home to-morrow. Henry Thompson, one of his partners, arrived here this evening to assist Mr. Cuming on his journey. A special Pullman car has been chartered in

…rday that Mr. Cuming, who is still mostly helpless, may have an easy trip. It is now thought probable that Mr. Cuming will eventually recover, although it will require some time.

ACCUSED BY DR. MARY WALKER.

A Syracuse Porter Held for Murdering Christie Warden and Throwing the Sage Bomb.

(Special to The World.)

SYRACUSE, N. Y., Oct. 4.—Dr. Mary Walker visited Police Headquarters to-day, and said she had come to have the real murderer of Christie Warden, who was killed at Hanover, N. H., July 17, 1891, taken into custody. At her request and on information given by her Chief of Police Wright sent for Arthur B. Snood, who has been a porter at the Windsor House.

When Snood appeared Dr. Walker declared he was not only guilty of the murder for which Almy was hanged, but was the man who threw the bomb in Russell Sage's office in New York. Then she pried Snood with questions, and got him to contradict himself several times. Chief Wright will hold Snood until he can investigate the doctor's story. Dr. Walker was recently refused a warrant for Snood's arrest at Oswego.

Dr. Walker has just returned to her farm near Oswego from another trip of investigation in New Hampshire. She says Snood went to work for her on her farm in May, 1891. He left for a time, but returned July 13, 1891, the day after Christie Warden was murdered. He stayed on her farm for a time and then went away again. On the evening Snood returned she says she asked him to read from the New York World the account of the Warden murder. He was visibly affected, especially by the description of the murderer, and had to be urged to go on. After he had finished he went to his room, though it was only 8 o'clock.

He had told me, she said, that he had worked for a family of the name of Almy in New Hampshire, that his grandfather had died in an insane asylum and that his father was a clergyman. Under cross-questioning to-day, Snood denied that he had told her his father was a clergyman; he was a teacher, who occasionally preached.

Dr. Walker says that after killing Christie Warden Snood stole a horse, rode it as long as it would go, stole another and tired it out and then took a train and came to her farm. She says he told her he stayed at the Ringland Hotel, Oswego, the night of the murder, but she can now prove that he did not.

Dr. Walker says Almy and the Wardens went into a conspiracy to get the reward offered for the murderer's arrest, Almy thinking he could prove his innocence later. She says his lawyer went insane because he could not acquit him.

As to the Sage bomb-throwing, she says it was a companion of Norcross who was killed. Snood says he is willing to go to New Hampshire, where Norcross is known, to prove that he is not Norcross. Snood says he was born in Kent, England, and has never been in New Hampshire.

$40,000 SALVE FOR A WOUNDED HEART

Verdict in a Breach of Promise Suit Against a Wealthy Bank President.

(Special to The World.)

BOSTON, Oct. 4.—The breach of promise case of Mrs. Anna D. Van Houten vs. Asa P. Morse was given to the jury to-day and a verdict for $40,000 for the plaintiff was returned. This is the case of which Judge Barker ordered that no newspaper report should be made until the conclusion of the trial.

Asa P. Morse, the defendant, is seventy-five years of age. He is President of the Cambridgeport National Bank, has been for many terms a member of the School Board in Cambridge and served in both Houses of the Massachusetts Legislature. He is worth between $200,000 and $300,000, is a widower and has two daughters living.

Mrs. Anna Van Houten, the plaintiff, is thirty-three years of age and quite attractive of form and feature. She was divorced in 1889 from a Senator in the State of Washington.

The plaintiff claimed that the defendant proposed marriage and she accepted him May 14, 1891, that he bought her a $500 engagement ring and her wedding dress, that all relations were finally broken off by him suddenly early in 1892. She asserted that she told him truthfully that she was a divorced woman and why.

The defendant claimed that she concealed facts about her parentage and life.

MRS. LUKE BLACKBURN STILL ANGRY.

Promises to Testify Against Breckinridge in the Pollard Suit.

(Special to The World.)

LOUISVILLE, Oct. 4.—Mrs. Luke Blackburn, widow of Gov. Blackburn, confirms the story that she recently sent a letter to Geo. Basil Duke, of Louisville, reproving him for taking sides with Congressman Breckinridge in the scandal precipitated by Miss Madeline Pollard's damage suit. She also reiterates that Col. Breckinridge acted towards her in an ungentlemanly manner to that he introduced Miss Pollard to her as his affianced wife and asked her to introduce Miss Pollard into Washington society when he must have known that she knew nothing of the relations then existing between the two.

Mrs. Blackburn is to be a witness in the important one.

Cable vs. Stone Truck.

The cable cars continue to behave in a frisky manner at the Fourteenth-street curve. Car No. 33, bound north, struck a truck loaded with stone yesterday. The passengers were pretty well shaken up, but nobody was hurt. When the car proceeded its dashboard looked like a discarded wash-boiler.

No Interruption to Travel or through car service over the Shenandoah Valley route to New Orleans or Mobile caused by recent storms. Only route now to New Orleans without change of cars. Office 317a Broadway.

AFTER…

Insurgent … Into …

THE BAT…

RIO AND …

(Copyright, …

(Special …

BUENO…

ships of th… Rio de J… into Fort … to the … The bl… Janeiro … miral M… of the …

MONTE…

4.—The … neiro con… The … gaining a… No det… been rece…

Port Said … hay that h… previous d… The lar… was built … years ago … some mod… breech-l… bore. The … above the … war need … them. The … were repo… don Sept. …

MONTE… ret ship … ported … under o… The … license. H… 35 feet … placemen… with 5½-… plating. … ameot … Whitwort… has twin … knots.

BRI…

LINCO… State Co… coinage … to contr… dorsemen… bitterly … The Ac… nearly 3… anti-slav… Chairma… rejected … The … All of t… ministra… Bryan … intends … not say … It is … join, th… sent to t…

BOST… returnes… which … its trip … It was f… The thi… $1,000 … letter o…

FAIR

33

890210006

The Emma Goldman Papers

[Testimony] Here Is Oakey Hall / Emma Goldman.– p. 8 ; 41 cm. In The World. –(Oct. 6, 1893).

Obtained from the University of California, Berkeley. Institutional Location: Doe Library.

HERE IS OAKEY HALL.

Not Even Years of Absence Dim Miss Goldman's Counsel's Halo.

ANARCHY AS VIEWED BY BARONDESS AND THE PRISONER.

"IF" A LEGAL PHILOSOPHER'S STONE.

Abraham Oakey Hall, counsel for Emma Goldman, made a big point yesterday of the little interrogative particle "if."

"Isn't it a fact that every time Miss Goldman used any of the remarks that are called threatening she used the word 'if'?" he asked the witnesses. "Didn't she say that such and such should be done if such and such a contingency arose?"

The ex-Mayor of New York, the former chief magistrate and chief representative of law and order in the city, made a very vigorous fight for his little, black-robed, square-jawed client, the so-called Queen of the Anarchists. Part I. of General Sessions was crowded by an audience which took such a demonstrative interest in the proceedings that Judge Martine had to rebuke it for its laughter and applause.

The speech of Mr. Hall and the testimony of Emma Goldman and of Joseph Barondess, leader of the cloakmakers, gave ample opportunity for the demonstrations which led the Judge to remind the crowd that a court wasn't exactly like a public meeting, or an out-of-door one at least.

Roundsman Charles L. Schanwecker, who is drill instructor at Police Headquarters, was called by Assistant District-Attorney McIntyre. He testified that he understood German and had heard Miss Goldman's speeches in that language and in English at Union Square on Aug. 21. He made notes of the German speech, he said, and he read it from his memoranda and translated it.

If Detective-Sergeant Jacobs is an accurate [illegible] Schanwecker is, for the [illegible]'s notes of the alleged incendiary speech corroborated those of the detective.

Mr. Hall looked at the roundsman very incredulously and asked for his notebook.

"What's the German for 'if?'" said the ex-Mayor.

"Wenn," said the witness.

"Now, didn't Miss Goldman use that word every time when she made any of the remarks that are called threatening?"

The roundsman admitted that that was true. Detective John S. Krauch recited Emma's speech from memory.

"Ever go to school?" asked Mr. Hall.

"Yes, sir."

"Ever get a prize in school for memory?"

"No."

Mr. Hall pressed the witness so hard that Krauch declared that he had "only been corroborating Mr. Jacobs."

Detective-sergeant Charles Heidelberg said that he had attended the Union Square meeting and had heard Miss Goldman make the incendiary remarks attributed to her. Detective-sergeant Robert McNaught gave similar testimony, and Mr. McIntyre announced that the people rested.

Mr. Hall fumbled over a bundle of papers. Miss Goldman turned towards her tall, grizzled defender. The ex-Mayor cleared his throat and swept back his coat-tails with his long, thin right arm. John Swinton was sitting among the reporters. He bent forward to listen and Mr. Hall sent an "auld lang syne" smile across the room to him. Justus Schwab and a few of his friends, grouped on the back benches, were eager listeners to the address of Mr. Hall.

The ex-Mayor began in a very off-hand way. He looked at the jury in a quizzical fashion. The white goatee beneath his under lip came up to meet his long mustache, which didn't conceal the ripple of a smile at the corners of his mouth. He raised his eyebrows and said in that English accent of his that he was "very pleased" to meet twelve New Yorkers all of whom had said, before going into the jury box, that they did not know him.

The jurymen were [illegible]ckled, and No. 2, Emanuel Westerberg, who is a red checked, jolly looking little man, grinned a broad grin.

"It has been quite a graceful surprise to me that I'm unknown in New York to so many, after so many years of public life," smiled Mr. Hall. Then he sighed and said: "We're all detained to-day from witnessing the yacht race. Instead we're attending a police race."

That struck Mr. Hall as a good joke and he chuckled over it with satisfaction. Pausing long enough for the laughter to die out he took a breath and turning towards his client he exclaimed:

"I've come to speak a witness and until her [illegible] with enthusiasm."

Miss Goldman folded her hands and leaned back in her chair with a very well satisfied look. She appreciated keenly Mr. Hall's enjoyment in the [illegible].

She listened to what she thinks, even [illegible] Mr. Hall's masterly speech in her behalf, but like many of her race she has not failed to all that she says.

That [illegible] Emma [illegible].

The [illegible] to the defense in this case is [illegible] Mr. McIntyre's opening address he [illegible] Mr. Hall quoted from [illegible] Emma were called for the purpose [illegible] prejudice the jury against [illegible].

[illegible] to prevent the sparkling stream of [illegible] from the [illegible] Miss Goldman was [illegible].

[illegible] to [illegible] a [illegible] [illegible] [illegible]

890210006

The Emma Goldman Papers

[Testimony] Here Is Oakey Hall / Emma Goldman.– p. 8 ; 41 cm. In The World. –(Oct. 6, 1893).

Obtained from the University of California, Berkeley. Institutional Location: Doe Library.

Judge to remind the crowd that a court wasn't exactly like a public meeting, or an out-door one at least.

Roundsman Charles L. Schaerwecker, who is drill instructor at Police Headquarters, was called by Assistant District-Attorney McIntyre. He testified that he understood German and had heard Miss Goldman's speeches in that language and in English at Union Square on Aug. 21. He made notes of the German speech, he said, and he read it from his memoranda on the stand.

Detective-Sergeant Jacobs is an acquaintance of Roundsman Schaerwecker's, for the latter's notes of the alleged incendiary speech corroborated those of the detective.

Mr. Hall looked at the roundsman very incredulously and asked for his notebook.

"What's the German for 'if'?" said the ex-Mayor.

"Wenn," said the witness.

"Now, didn't Miss Goldman use that word every time when she made any of the remarks that are called threatening?"

The roundsman admitted that that was true.

Detective John A. Krauch recited Emma's speech from memory.

"Ever go to school?" asked Mr. Hall.

"Yes, sir."

"Ever get a prize in school for memory?"

"No."

Mr. Hall pressed the witness so hard that Krauch declared that he had "only been corroborating Mr. Jacobs."

Detective-Sergeant Charles Heidelberg said that he had attended the Union Square meeting and had heard Miss Goldman make the incendiary remarks attributed to her. Detective-Sergeant Robert McNaught gave similar testimony, and Mr. McIntyre announced that the people rested.

Mr. Hall fumbled over a bundle of papers. Miss Goldman turned towards her tall, grizzled defender. The ex-Mayor cleared his throat and swept back his coat-tails with his long, thin right arm. John Swinton was sitting among the reporters. He bent forward to listen and Mr. Hall sent an "auld lang syne" smile across the room to him. Justus Schwab and a few of his friends, grouped on the back benches, were eager listeners to the address of Mr. Hall.

The ex-Mayor began in a very off-hand way. He looked at the jury in a quizzical fashion. The while "goatee" beneath his under lip came up to meet his long mustache, which didn't conceal the ripple of a smile at the corners of his mouth. He raised his eyebrows and said in that English accent of his that he was "very proud" to meet twelve New Yorkers all of whom had said before going into the jury box that they did not know him.

The jurymen were tickled, and No. 2, Emanuel Weisberger, who is a red-cheeked, jolly looking little man, grinned a broad grin.

"It has been quite a graceful surprise to me that I'm unknown in New York so many, after so many years of public life," added Mr. Hall. Then he sighed and said: "We're all deserved to-day from witnessing the yacht race. Instead we're attending a police race."

That struck Mr. Hall as a good joke and he didn't resume his satisfied air. Exchanging his dilletante drawl for a bruiser tone and turning towards his client, he exclaimed:

"It's a race to convict a woman and send her to prison. She is an enthusiast."

Miss Goldman folded her hands and leaned back in her chair with a very self-satisfied look. She appreciated keenly Mr. Hall's euphemism for Anarchist.

"She believes in what she thinks," continued Mr. Hall, throwing down his papers and swinging his arms, "but, like many of her sex, she does not believe in all that she says."

That didn't please Emma so much.

"The keynote to the defense in this case is contained in Mr. McIntyre's opening address to you yesterday," said Mr. Hall quoted these words. "There was financial distress last August. Meetings were called for the purpose of protest." "This was simply a meeting of protest," he added.

Then he quoted the qualifying clause of section 451 of the Penal Code – the section under which Miss Goldman was indicted.

"This section shall not be construed so as to prevent a peaceable assemblage of persons for lawful purposes of protest or petition."

Then he said: "This meeting at Union Square was a peaceable meeting, solely and simply a meeting of protest. In the thirteen years that I occupied the office which it was so ably filled by my learned friend I never even heard of the offense which is called by him unlawful assemblage. The offense dates from the time of Wat Tyler, the early Radical. Even the notorious Judge Jeffries never dared to prosecute any one for exercising the privilege of free speech. In the reign of Henry VIII of England they hanged a man for treason. He was sitting under a tavern sign which bore a portrait of the king, and which was decorated with a deer's antlers. The man said, 'I wish these antlers were thrust in the King's belly.' They prosecuted and convicted him. I have no doubt he was an early Anarchist. He was not only hanged but drawn and quartered as an enemy of the state, as one guilty of treason.

Mr. Hall appealed to Judge Martine as a student of ancient history and said that no doubt His Honor knew that in the time of President John Adams seditious speaking was made a felony.

"It cost John Adams his re-election," said Mr. Hall. Incidentally he remarked that in Mr. Adams's reign Congress did as the President and them – which he added with a twinkle in Judge ——— is probably not now the case. The nation and seditious laws were passed by Congress at the instance of John Adams. Before that time there was no statute on the books prohibiting free speech. It has become the traditional idea of the American people that so long as a person keeps within the bounds of comment he has a right to criticise, it is well the acts of any part of the community.

"Now, what is an unlawful assemblage? Recently at Roanoke, Va., there was an assemblage of men for the purpose of lynching a poor negro. They drove the Mayor from town and not only threatened to lynch the negro but did. That was an unlawful assemblage. Not many years ago there were unlawful assemblages in London. I was there and saw them. Men, too, in Trafalgar square and talked about looting the shops but did not do them."

"Some of you, like myself, old city men, may remember an assemblage in Tompkins Square when a gentleman distinguished for personal appearance, which he sent within hearing of my wife, made a speech as a so-called Irish Republican and waved the old flag and all that sort of thing."

Old John Swinton flushed with conscious guilt, and Mr. Hall said in a matter of fact way: "Well, the Justice Attorney of this district [pointing at Mr. McIntyre] seems disposed to prosecute all those who, in the exercise of their constitutional rights, make a protest against the wrongs of the people as they see them. I have myself addressed meetings of the unemployed recently, saying that in such case did not bring the offense charged against Emma Goldman within the statute under which she was being tried."

After recess Mr. Hall called Joseph Barron, who has been a waiter at the Arion Hall restaurant, 57 Second street, for the last two years. Barron does looked sick and pale. After affirming the oath prescribed by Judge Martine by a hardly audible murmur, he said he was a bank [illegible] by trade or [illegible] before [illegible] he had been convicted of a misdemeanor [illegible]. "But I was pardoned," he [illegible] been instrumental in other friend, Zimmerman, who is serving a sentence on Blackwell's Island.

Edward J. Talmade, a reporter on the Staats Zeitung, said that Miss Goldman's speech at Union Square was not incendiary, but his testimony was knocked "sky high" when Mr. McIntyre had him translate his own published report of the speech.

Edward Brady, a compositor, said he heard the speech and could not remember anything in it that was incendiary. Brady said he was an American, in spite of his Irish name, and told Judge Martine that he had had trouble with his name already.

"So you don't agree with Shakespeare when he says, 'What's in a name?'" asked Mr. Hall. "If there is anything in Brady's name, it's more that can be said about his testimony. To Mr. McIntyre, after a lot of fencing, he acknowledged that he was an Anarchist and had only been in this country a year. He said that he didn't care much about laws, and when Mr. Hall, with a pained expression, strove to have him mend his answer, he made matters worse by saying that he believed in the observance of the laws of the land "to a certain degree."

"Emma Goldman?" called Mr. Hall, when the Anarchist compositor left the witness chair. The little woman took off her hat and bustled to the high seat and made affirmation that she would tell the truth. She enjoyed her position immensely. The air of satisfaction with which she plumped into the chair, gripped its arms and beamed on the jury was like Kalisha's elbow, worth going miles to see.

She said she had written out her German speech at Union Square and had committed it to memory. Mr. Hall handed her a roll of manuscript which she said contained the notes of the speech. The court interpreter, who is an Italian, and who looks exactly like ex-Commodore S. Nicholson Kane, the yachtsman, undertook to translate the speech if Emma would read it. Miss Goldman said she didn't feel capable of translating it herself.

Then there was hall an hour of pure, unadulterated fun in that court-room. Judge Martine's rebukes represed open merriment, but people who sat near the bench saw His Honor's head frequently shielding a judicial smile. The interpreter's English was wild, weird and uncanny.

Emma recited her speech—or what she said was her speech, for it was not at all like that which the witnesses testified they had heard. She rolled out sentence after sentence with almost as much oratorical vim as she expends on a shouting audience. At the close of each sentence, delivered gravely, majestically, and energetically by the "Anarchist Queen," the interpreter bobbled along with his English travesty.

"Die—What? What? What?" said the interpreter.

Emma repeated.

"That is—um—ah—sounds of dolur under the yoke of slavery," proclaimed the interpreter with a lung power that should have made breeze for the Valkyrie and Vigilant down the bay.

There was a roar of laughter. Judge Martine retired his gavel and pounded like a parer.

"You can't laugh in this court room if you want to stay," said he. "It is not a place for fun."

Emma read on.

"A small group of oppressors has asserted themselves on the marrow of the proletariat and to-day suck the blood from the veins," translated the interpreter.

Every now and if in Emma had a little row with the poor man about the exact meaning of a word.

"You sacrifice everything sacred to you to the despoilers," she said. "Your daughters and sons are like the —— like the ——"

"Why, wither," said Emma, turning up her nose.

"Well, your Honor," said the interpreter confidentially to the Judge, "they are like the ah flowers of—I lose their freshness."

"They wither," asserted Miss Goldman with a withering look and up went the Judge's hand to hide the smile he couldn't check.

"The daily said—to forth in the streets where the rich dwell—possessed the intelligence." "Go before the palaces of the plutocrats. Through your loud and energetic demands these heartless people will be compelled to provide work for you. Work! Demand it not on the words of the rad scholar—for there is a limit to the power of money. When the oppressed man can no more find right and justice and when the burden becomes insupportable, then he lifts up his hand with confident sadness to the stars. He insists—"

Alas, poor Schiller!

Many of the jurymen knew no more, and they looked as if they would like to have the unfortunate interpreter at the mercy of their box-stove grates. The court-room was in a roar. When he got to prose about the Emperor's head of a bloody relief and he finally freed Emma sadness in a tears world language. The case will probably go to the jury to-day.

DR. LEE WANTS HIS PICTURE.

It Is in the Rogues' Gallery and the Police Won't Give It Up.

(Special to The World.)

NEW HAVEN [illegible] Dr. [illegible] was acquitted Monday of the charge of causing the death of Margaret Schlegel by criminal [illegible]. I will supply to the courts [illegible] order to the [illegible] of his picture from the Rogues' gallery.

Dr. Lee's formal demand [illegible] Police Superintendent Smith for the picture yesterday, but the Superintendent refused. Dr. Lee threatens to take it out of the police's hands, taking the ground that the picture is a part of the records of the department and can be given in the discretion of the police, and he has decided to part with it.

[illegible] The [illegible] has been [illegible] to the city.

Godfather of the Telephone.

Prof. H. Helmholtz [illegible] University of Berlin, is [illegible]. He has been [illegible] the World's fair and is to visit [illegible] cities. He stands [illegible] among the scientists of the country. Yesterday [illegible] with Prof. Cross, [illegible] of Columbia College, Prof. Alexander Bell, Dr. Richard Koenig and Professor S. P. Rood, [illegible] of the Columbia University. Dr. Helmholtz [illegible] Prof. Bell [illegible] the telephone. [illegible] Bell [illegible] Helmholtz [illegible] perfection to which [illegible] has attained [illegible] Bell [illegible] Helmholtz [illegible] musical instruments. He expressed himself as delighted. He has [illegible] Bell [illegible] properties which may be used to [illegible] suggested the telephone.

Evicted While Looking for Work.

Edward Mallon, a [illegible] was evicted from his home at No. 251 East [illegible] street yesterday. Mallon was absent at the time looking for work. He owed [illegible] $5 and was unable to pay him, because one of the children has been sick and required expensive medical treatment.

No Name	65
Miriam Warant	60
S Family, Pittsfield, Mass	45
Francis Harbauer, Brooklyn	40
S. B. M., New York	40
Collected by J. B. Mickle	82
Daily American	30
From a family, Boiling Springs, N. J.	20
A. Cohen, New York	20
M. S. A., Patchogue	20
New Milford, Conn	20
John Holtum, Huber's Museum	20
David Kalish, No. 1077 Second avenue, on his tenth birthday	10
J. S. T., New York	10
C. B., New York	5
W. Freeman, New York	5
T. L.	5
Mrs. Skinner, Pittsfield, Mass	5
Bessie Keefe, Newark, N. J.	2
Total	$30,016

[All money received is acknowledged in loaves at five cents per loaf. Contributions should be addressed "Cashier, World." To insure the proper distribution of the fund The World has secured the co-operation of the following citizens, who will act as an Advisory Committee: Theodore W. Myers, Comptroller of New York City; Samuel Gompers, President of the American Federation of Labor; Henry Gaenon, author and political economist; Frederick S. Lamb, Register of the City and County of New York; Edward "Ed" Shibity, Commissioner of Charities and Correction; Henry Clews, banker and financier; Alexander B. Makin, ex-Commissioner of Records and member of the Produce Exchange; Dr. John T. Nagle, Register of Vital Statistics; Joseph Barondess, leader of the cloakmakers.

Two of the 4,080 loaves given out yesterday morning from the Free Bread Fund Headquarters, at No. 16 Delancey street, went to Mrs. Jennie Kadlitz, of No. 158 Attorney street, on the top floor. There is a family that needs the bread until the husband gets work. If he had work—oh, well, then things would go very well with the Kadlitzes, for they are young.

Joseph Kadlitz is twenty-four years old, big and broad-shouldered, and Jendie, his wife, is twenty years old. You see, they disregarded the maxim which you will often hear that a man ought never to get married until he has an assured income of $2,500 a year at the very least. That is where the whole trouble comes in. He was a big, strong fellow that weighed 170 pounds, and he had a job for three years and a half driving for a butcher, at No. 155 Attorney street, and that paid him $12 a week. That is pretty good wages, and Jendie is a handy woman. She used to work on children's caps, and she can rake all her own clothes, and do them nicely, too. She is a good cook and a good washer and ironer, neat and tidy and just the woman that a struggling hard-working man would want for a wife. So without taking much more thought about the Sherman law than the birds do they got married.

They lived nicely. They didn't have any Hudson-Fulton race on the potlatch floor, but they had oilcloth, and where other people have water colors and lithographs and perhaps a painting or two they had cardboard plaques. It looked fine.

WHEN A MAN MARRIES—

Then the bubble went out of business. His head troubled him. He said the shop to a man who had a son to [illegible] partnership [illegible] and [illegible] Kadlitz was out of it. That was seven [illegible] ago. Since then he has not been able to find work, though he has gone all around looking for it. He can't get a job. He [illegible] to the [illegible] is strong or anything of [illegible] to [illegible].

[illegible] the [illegible] what he wants of the two [illegible] comes home. He says he can't have to take it away from her.

He [illegible] to [illegible] he said simply. I can't [illegible] to [illegible] see her suffer. I [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] something to [illegible] [illegible] [illegible]

890112001

The Emma Goldman Papers

[Testimony] Emma Goldman Testifies / Emma Goldman.— p. 2 ; 43 cm. In The New York Times. —(Oct. 6, 1893).

Obtained from the University of California, Berkeley. Institutional Location: Doe Library.

ABSOLUTELY PURE

FREAKS OF A CRAZY CLERGYMAN.

The Police Court Commits Him for Mental Examination.

WASHINGTON, Oct. 5.—The Rev. John T. James, who got himself into notoriety by smashing liquor exhibits at the World's Fair, was brought up in the Washington Police Court this morning, charged with throwing a brick through a three-hundred-dollar plate glass window and destroying about $150 of stock in the wholesale and retail liquor establishment of Charles Kraemer, on Seventh Street.

"Why did you do this?" the court asked the prisoner.

"Because I am opposed to the rum traffic and I want to break it up if possible," was his response.

"But do you think this sort of business is going to stop it?" interrupted the Judge.

"Yes, Sir; it will stop it if it becomes a general business through the country."

"Well, it won't."

"I only obeyed the spirit of God in my heart," the prisoner said.

"But there is nothing in the spirit to show that you have a right to destroy property of others," said the court.

"I don't recognize whisky as property."

The court inquired if there was any one who knew the prisoner, and ascertaining that he had been in Loudoun County, Va., and that Mr. Ed Lake of this city knew him, the Judge sent for Mr. Lake, and after a conversation with him made an order committing the prisoner to the workhouse for mental examination.

DISTURBED THE ADVENTISTS.

Visitors to Their Tent in Jersey City Interrupt the Services.

JERSEY CITY, N. J., Oct. 5.—An exciting scene occurred last night at the tent of the Seventh Day Adventists at Bramhall and Ocean Avenues. E. E. Franke, an exhorter, was conducting revival services, when the Rev. M. D. Hancox, pastor of the Faith Cure Tabernacle, took exception to his remarks. Mr. Franke requested him not to interrupt the meeting.

Mr. Hancox continued his remarks, however, and Mr. Franke told him, if he desired, he could have the use of the pulpit on the following night. Mr. Hancox then stepped into the aisle, where he fell on his knees and prayed that God would open the eyes of the Seventh Day Adventist and show him the light.

Mr. Franke called upon the ushers to eject Mr. Hancox, but he said he would go quietly. He also remarked that he would "shake the dust from his feet as a testimony against them." As he passed out of the door he added: "God forgive them, for they know not what they do."

John O'Brien, a rich resident of the Hill, dropped in at the meeting later. After listening to Mr. Franke for a few minutes he arose and shouted: "Mr. Franke and all other Seventh Day Adventists can go to ——!" He was arrested, and this morning Justice Kimmerly, after lecturing him severely, fined him $10, which he paid.

DID NOT SELECT A CANDIDATE.

The Brooklyn Conference Committee Merely Met for Organization.

The Conference Committee of the Committee of One Hundred of Brooklyn held a meeting for organization last night at the home of Andrew D. Baird, 140 Hewes Street, in the Eastern District. Every member of the committee was present but one. The session was secret. At its conclusion Benjamin Estes, the Chairman, stated that nothing had been done beyond formally organizing.

There was an informal discussion of plans for conferences with similar committees from other political organizations, Mr. Estes said, but there was no talk looking to the selection of any one name to be presented or offered as an independent candidate for the Mayoralty.

The Committee of One Hundred will meet to-night at Conservatory Hall, Bedford Avenue and Fulton Street, Brooklyn. The Conference Committee will hold a preliminary meeting.

Definite action in respect to an independent campaign is looked for to-night on the part of the committee.

NEARLY A MILLION BROOKLYNITES.

Records of the Bureau of Vital Statistics Show 999,046 Inhabitants.

Brooklyn's population, according to the records of the Bureau of Vital Statistics, published yesterday, is 999,046, distributed among the wards as follows:

Ward.	Population.	Ward.	Population.
First	23,109	Fifteenth	31,178
Second	10,787	Sixteenth	51,049
Third	24,308	Seventeenth	41,593
Fourth	15,982	Eighteenth	22,907
Fifth	19,5[illegible]	Nineteenth	37,837
Sixth	19,8[illegible]	Twentieth	28,270

EMMA GOLDMAN TESTIFIES

DETECTIVES' REPORT OF HER SPEECH SHE DECLARES FALSE.

Jacobs's Testimony Corroborated by Four Other Detectives Who Were Also at the Union Square Meeting — Joseph Barondess a Witness for the Accused Anarchist—Prof. Morosi Gives a Fiery Translation of the Speech the Defendant Says She Prepared and Delivered.

To-day will probably decide whether Emma Goldman is to wear convict's garb.

Assistant District Attorney McIntyre finished his case against her shortly before 12 o'clock yesterday. Ex-Mayor A. Oakey Hall at once began his opening address, and at the afternoon session most of the witnesses for the defense gave their testimony.

The defendant herself was called at 4 o'clock, and kept the stand until court adjourned, three-quarters of an hour later. She had an opportunity to say little, as most of her time was consumed in reading and translating her version of the speech of Aug. 21, for delivering which she is on trial.

She read from a German manuscript which she said she had prepared on the afternoon of Aug. 21. The speech, as she read it, differed materially from the report of the detectives who attended the meetings under instructions from Inspector McLaughlin. The speech was translated, sentence by sentence, by Prof. Benedict Morosi, the court interpreter.

The professor is a born actor, and makes up in histrionic talents what he lacks in the knowledge of German. The translation, therefore, though it was very imperfect, was delivered with a dramatic force that was at times startling.

The defendant herself grew timid under the professor's fiery oratory and was embarrassed. But if she bowed before the interpreter's energy she was perfectly calm and unembarrassed at all other times.

To complete the prosecution's case, four detectives were called to corroborate Detective Jacobs's testimony delivered Wednesday. Roundsman Charles L. Schauwecker read from his notes, taken at the meeting, various extracts which were of the same character as those put in evidence by Detective Jacobs.

Detective John L. Krauch, in reply to questions from Mr. McIntyre, repeated almost verbatim the statements which he said Miss Goldman had made at the meeting. They were so much like the statements made by Detective Jacobs, which the latter had read from notes, that Mr. Hall asked in a cynical manner on cross-examination:

Q.—Didn't you take a prize at school for your wonderful memory? A.—No, Sir. I didn't.

He afterward admitted that he had taken no notes himself, but that he had relied on the notes taken by Detective Jacobs.

Q.—Oh, then you are not repeating from memory what Miss Goldman said? A.—No, Sir; I am corroborating Detective Jacobs.

This answer caused a general laugh in the courtroom. Even Judge Martine smiled. Detective Sergeant Charles Heidelberg and Charles McNorton came next, and Mr. McIntyre announced that the case rested.

Mr. Hall then made his opening address.

Then Joseph Barondess was called for the defense. He made by far the most interesting witness of the day. He said he was an organizer for the Cloakmakers' Union; that he had been convicted of a misdemeanor and imprisoned. Afterward he was pardoned, he said, and since his release he had worked in the cause of the cloakmakers. It was he who obtained the permit for the Union Square meeting at which Emma Goldman spoke.

He was present during the entire evening, and was positive, he said, that no such words as had been attributed to her had been uttered by the defendant. On cross-examination Mr. McIntyre asked:

Q.—How long is it since you have worked at your trade of cloakmaker? A.—Three years.

Q.—And what have you done since? A.—I have worked at the organization of labor unions that shall secure the abolition of the system of wage slavery.

Q.—You were paid a salary? A.—Yes, I get $7.50 a week.

Q.—How much could you earn if you worked at your trade? A.—About $18 a week.

Q.—And do you mean to tell this jury that you would rather work for $7.50 a week less as a labor organizer than you could make as a workingman? A.—I would rather work at my trade, but there is no one among the cloakmakers to take my position, and I simply keep it to prevent the cause from dying out.

Q.—You want the court to believe that there is nobody among all the cloakmakers in this city who could do the work that you are doing? A.—I don't want the court to believe anything. I simply state what is a fact.

This unexpected answer seemed to nonplus Mr. McIntyre for a few moments, but he soon went at the witness on another tack.

Q.—You were convicted and sentenced to imprisonment for the crime of extortion. A.—I never extorted a penny from any body.

their goods to three-fourths of the leading retail clothiers of New-York. They now deal with you direct and on the same terms: EVERY GARMENT AT STRICTLY WHOLESALE PRICE.

SALE AT THEIR WHOLESALE PREMISES, ON BLEECKER ST., CORNER GREENE, just west of Broadway.

If you don't save enough here to satisfy you, bring back the goods and get your money.

HAMMERSLOUGH BROS.,

Bleecker St., Corner Greene.

try, during five of which she had been lecturing. She prepared all her speeches before hand, wrote them out in manuscript, and committed them to memory. She had done this with the speech delivered on Aug. 21, and identified a copy which Mr. Hall handed her as the one she had written. She saw Detective Jacobs and the others at the meeting, but saw none of them take any notes.

Q.—What have you to say of the testimony which Detective Jacobs gave here yesterday? A.—I deny it, every word. I said no such things as he imputed to me.

The case will be resumed to-day at 11 o'clock. Miss Goldman was taken back to the Tombs.

THE NAVAL RESERVE.

Facilities Will Be Extended to It by the Navy Department.

WASHINGTON, Oct. 5.—The reports of the naval officers on the State naval militia organizations have stirred up the officers of the reserves by having criticised in some particulars the capacity for work of the militiamen. It is to such portions of these reports that officers of the reserve take exception. The naval officers were directed to report upon the condition of the reserve and its usefulness in case of emergency. In no instance has it been reported that the militia could be depended upon as a reserve from which the navy might draw. Those who take exception to the reports make the claim that the Navy Department has done little in behalf of the militia, and that such success as has attended the organizations has been despite the opposition of regular naval officers.

The Navy Department people say that such a statement is unjust, and assert that officers connected with the department during the past and present Administrations have aided the naval militia in every way. Ships have been placed at the disposal of the divisions, and there have been issues of stores and money from the Federal Treasury.

In most cases, while the militia is purely a State organization and controlled by State laws, the National Government has done more than the State. This year Secretary Herbert will send to the Treasury Department an estimate of $25,000 for the naval militia of the country. This recommendation should spare the Navy Department and its representatives from the imputation of jealousy. The officers who have been engaged in the inspection of the naval militia work say they followed the instructions of the department to give accurate reports of their observation, and in each case gave what was intended for a fair and honest estimate of the value of the reserve. Whatever may be said of the independence of the reserve, it will not be able to act on its own responsibility in time of war. It must be a part of the general service.

While no official statement is obtainable at this time in reply to the criticisms of the Navy Department, it is known that the officers do not look upon the interviews published and letters written as just and proper in their tone. The department has always stood ready to aid the Naval Reserve, they say, and there are plans which will be brought forth in a few weeks suggesting that the department furnish the Naval Reserve with increased facilities for drill and practice. The department had no better way of arriving at the needs of the Naval Militia than the sending of officers with the reserves on their Summer cruise, and the officers believe that where the militiamen are to be benefited by this observation and candid report they should be the last to subject the department to censure.

GEN. GRANT'S NEPHEW ASSAULTED.

Ulysses Grant Dent Thrown Into the Street and His Skull Fractured.

Ulysses Grant Dent of 358 West Twenty-890112001

The Emma Goldman Papers

[Testimony] Emma Goldman Testifies / Emma Goldman.— p. 2 ; 43 cm. In The New York Times. —(Oct. 6, 1893).

Obtained from the University of California, Berkeley. Institutional Location: Doe Library.

DID NOT SELECT A CANDIDATE.

The Brooklyn Conference Committee Merely Met for Organization.

The Conference Committee of the Committee of One Hundred of Brooklyn held a meeting for organization last night at the home of Andrew D. Baird, 140 Hewes Street, in the Eastern District. Every member of the committee was present but one. The session was secret. At its conclusion Benjamin Estes, the Chairman, stated that nothing had been done beyond formally organizing.

There was an informal discussion of plans for conferences with similar committees from other political organizations, Mr. Estes said, but there was no talk looking to the selection of any one name to be presented or offered as an independent candidate for the Mayoralty.

The Committee of One Hundred will meet to-night at Conservatory Hall, Bedford Avenue and Fulton Street, Brooklyn. The Conference Committee will hold a preliminary meeting.

Definite action in respect to an independent campaign is looked for to-night on the part of the committee.

NEARLY A MILLION BROOKLYNITES.

Records of the Bureau of Vital Statistics Show 999,046 Inhabitants.

Brooklyn's population, according to the records of the Bureau of Vital Statistics, published yesterday, is 999,046, distributed among the wards as follows:

Ward.	Population.	Ward.	Population.
First	23,109	Fifteenth	31,178
Second	10,727	Sixteenth	51,049
Third	24,368	Seventeenth	41,593
Fourth	15,982	Eighteenth	22,907
Fifth	19,522	Nineteenth	37,827
Sixth	48,859	Twentieth	28,270
Seventh	42,092	Twenty-first	58,444
Eighth	43,788	Twenty-second	52,405
Ninth	25,085	Twenty-third	59,863
Tenth	50,008	Twenty-fourth	21,379
Eleventh	28,162	Twenty-fifth	37,367
Twelfth	37,320	Twenty-sixth	42,342
Thirteenth	25,491	Twenty-seventh	33,427
Fourteenth	31,707	Twenty-eighth	43,705
Total			999,046

Debating the Elections Repeal Bill.

WASHINGTON, Oct 5. Interest in the debate on the Federal Elections bill does not increase, and empty benches on both sides of the chamber are the rule and not the exception. At no time to-day were more than 100 members present.

The speeches were made by Mr. Mutrie (Rep., N. C.) and Mr. Haines (Rep., Neb.,) in the negative and by Mr. Russell (Dem., Ga.,) and Mr. Money (Dem., Miss.,) in the affirmative. The fact having become known that the Democrats would hold a caucus to discuss the propriety of passing the bill before the Senate had agreed to the Wilson-Voorhees bill may have had something to do with the listlessness manifested. When the House adjourned at 5:35 o'clock there were not more than twenty members in attendance. Prior to the consideration of the Elections bill some routine business was transacted.

Largest Oil Tank Steamer Afloat.

The British tank steamer Batoom, commanded by Capt. Lockham, which came into port yesterday morning, will take away 2,700,000 gallons of oil in bulk. This is fully 800,000 gallons more than any other tank steamer in the world can carry. Her engines are amidship, this being different from other tank steamers, and she has a very complete electric-light plant. The pilot who boarded her at sea saw her electric masthead light twenty miles away. She was built this year in Sunderland and made the voyage hereto in twelve days and six hours. She is chartered by the Standard Oil Company to trade between this port and England. It required three of the largest tugs of the Mutual Company to tow her from Quarantine to Bayonne, and, when loaded, six tugs will be needed to take her to the anchorage off Staten Island.

ADERS AND FRIENDS.

New-York City, whenever they have been unable to procure The Times of any of the dealers.

Be particular to indicate if this occurs on a railroad train or steamboat, and to give sufficient information to facilitate the investigation which will be IMMEDIATELY undertaken of EVERY complaint that reaches the office of The New-York Times.

.....1893.

e had at.....o'clock to-day of the newsdealer

.....

.....

notes himself, but that he had relied on the notes taken by Detective Jacobs.

Q.—Oh, then you are not repeating from memory what Miss Goldman said! A.—No, Sir; I am corroborating Detective Jacobs.

This answer caused a general laugh in the courtroom. Even Judge Martine smiled. Detective Sergeant Charles Heidelberg and Charles McNorton came next, and Mr. McIntyre announced that the case rested.

Mr. Hall then made his opening address.

Then Joseph Barondess was called for the defense. He made by far the most interesting witness of the day. He said he was an organizer for the Clockmakers' Union; that he had been convicted of a misdemeanor and imprisoned. Afterward he was pardoned, he said, and since his release he had worked in the cause of the clockmakers. It was he who obtained the permit for the Union Square meeting at which Emma Goldman spoke.

He was present during the entire evening, and was positive, he said, that no such words as had been attributed to her had been uttered by the defendant. On cross-examination Mr. McIntyre asked:

Q.—How long is it since you have worked at your trade of cloakmaker? A.—Three years.

Q.—And what have you done since? A.—I have worked at the organization of labor unions that shall secure the abolition of the system of wage slavery.

Q.—You were paid a salary? A.—Yes. I get $7.50 a week.

Q.—How much could you earn if you worked at your trade? A.—About $15 a week.

Q.—And do you mean to tell this jury that you would rather work for $7.50 a week less as a labor organizer than you could make as a workingman? A.—I would rather work at my trade, but there is no one among the cloakmakers to take my position, and I simply keep it to prevent the cause from dying out.

Q.—You want the court to believe that there is nobody among all the cloakmakers in this city who could do the work that you are doing? A.—I don't want the court to believe anything. I simply state what is a fact.

This unexpected answer seemed to nonplus Mr. McIntyre for a few moments, but he soon went at the witness on another tack.

Q.—You were convicted and sentenced to imprisonment for the crime of extortion. A.—I never extorted a penny from any body.

Q.—Indeed! You were found guilty, however, and you stand convicted.

Barondess turned deliberately in his chair and, casting a cold glance at the District Attorney, he said in measured tones:

"Your colleague, the District Attorney of this county, said I was not guilty, and signed a petition on that ground asking the Governor for my pardon."

Q.—Are you an Anarchist? A.—I don't know what you mean by that. You will have to explain what you mean by the word "Anarchist."

Q.—Do you believe in living up to the laws in this State? A.—I do.

Q.—You didn't believe in these laws when you committed the crime of extortion, did you? A.—That you don't know anything about.

Q.—Are you a Socialist, and do you believe in Socialism? A.—You will have to explain to me what you mean by Socialists before I can reply.

Q.—You know very well what I mean. A.—You are not in a position to judge that.

Under further questions, Barondess said the Socialism that he believed in was "the organization of labor unions and the elevation of the masses."

After getting Barondess to state he had been six years in this country, and that he had declared his intention of becoming a citizen, the Assistant District Attorney excused the witness and called Edward John Thimme, a reporter for The Staats-Zeitung.

Thimme said he had attended the meeting Aug. 21 and had seen no detective there taking notes. He stood only four or five feet behind Emma Goldman all the time she spoke and heard her utter no such language as that reported by Detective Jacobs and the others, nor did he hear any responses from the audience of the character reported by the police authorities.

Mr. Thimme was considerably embarrassed by a series of questions put by the Assistant District Attorney regarding his political faith. After some hesitation and asking Mr. McIntyre to define the meaning of "Anarchist" and "Socialist," he finally admitted that he belonged to "one of the schools of Socialism," but he was not a member of any society.

The witness was excused, but afterward Mr. McIntyre recalled him and showed him a copy of The Staats-Zeitung in which was Thimme's report of the Tuesday's meeting. In a part of this report was a paragraph purporting to be an extract from Miss Goldman's speech. It read: "If they will not give you bread peaceably you will have to take it by force." Thimme admitted that he had written this, and that it was a correct report of the speech.

Edward Brady, a printer, who, despite his Irish name, had a most pronounced German accent, was the next witness.

Q.—What is your nationality? asked Mr. Hall. A.—I am an Austrian. I was born in Austria, and only left there twelve months ago.

Q.—But you have an Irish name. How is that? A.—I don't know. I got it from my parents, and I have had lots of trouble with it.

Brady was quite certain that Detective Jacobs and the other detectives had misconstrued Miss Goldman's speech. He said she had never advised the working men to go and take bread or anything else by force.

Brady was also asked if he were an Anarchist, and he, too, demanded that Mr. McIntyre explain what he meant by the word. "If," he said, "you mean by Anarchist the general public conception of that word that I am a robber and miscreant and murderer, I will say that I am not."

Q.—What kind of an Anarchist are you, then? A.—I did not say yet that I was any kind. If you will have it, I will say that I am an Anarchist.

Then came Emma Goldman herself, walking to the witness stand with a brisk, swinging step. She said she had been eight years in the coun-issues of stores and money from the Federal Treasury.

FLINT'S FINE FURNITURE.—Elegant side chairs for wedding presents are now being made to at the FLINT Co.'s, West 14th St., 4th.

In most cases, while the militia is purely a State organization and controlled by State laws, the National Government has done more than the State. This year Secretary Herbert will send to the Treasury Department an estimate of $25,000 for the naval militia of the country. This recommendation should spare the Navy Department and its representatives from the imputation of jealousy. The officers who have been engaged in the inspection of the naval militia work say they followed the instructions of the department to give accurate reports of their observation, and in each case gave what was intended for a fair and honest estimate of the value of the reserve. Whatever may be said of the independence of the reserve, it will not be able to act on its own responsibility in time of war. It must be a part of the general service.

While no official statement is obtainable at this time in reply to the criticisms of the Navy Department, it is known that the officers do not look upon the interviews published and letters written as just and proper in their tone. The department has always stood ready to aid the Naval Reserve, they say, and there are plans which will be brought forth in a few weeks suggesting that the department furnish the Naval Reserve with increased facilities for drill and practice. The department had no better way of arriving at the needs of the Naval Militia than the sending of officers with the reserves on their Summer cruise, and the officers believe that where the militiamen are to be benefited by this observation and candid report they should be the last to subject the department to censure.

GEN. GRANT'S NEPHEW ASSAULTED.

Ulysses Grant Dent Thrown Into the Street and His Skull Fractured.

Ulysses Grant Dent of 355 West Twenty-ninth Street was taken to Bellevue Hospital Wednesday afternoon suffering from a fractured skull, and last night he was still in a critical condition. Peter Tellerio, a peleter, who is charged with assaulting Mr. Dent, is a prisoner in the West Thirty-seventh Street Police Station.

While sitting in a chair on the stoop in front of a cigar store at 468 Eighth Avenue on Wednesday afternoon Dent fell asleep. Soon after, Tellerio came out from the tenement in the rear of the store and pitched Dent head foremost into the street. Dent fell directly upon his head and became unconscious. An ambulance was quickly called and Dent was taken to the hospital, where it was found that his skull was badly fractured.

After throwing Dent into the street Tellerio ran away and did not return to his home. Early yesterday morning detectives succeeded in finding him and he was locked up. In the Jefferson Market Police Court he was remanded until witnesses of the assault can be secured. No cause for the assault is known.

For the Brunswick Relief Fund.

Henry Hentz, E. S. Nash, and George W. Bolly, the committee appointed by the New-York Cotton Exchange to solicit subscriptions to the Brunswick Relief Fund, acknowledge the following contributions:

Petersen, Downing & Co., $100; Woodward & Stillman, $100; Hall Brothers, $100; R. T. Wilcox & Co., $100; Lehman Brothers, $100; Hopkins, Dwight & Co., $100; Henry Clews & Co., $100; Henry Hentz & Co., $100; Inman, Swann & Co., $100; Latham, Alexander & Co., $100; Gwathmey & Co., $50; H. Stedeanberg & Co., $50; Fatman, Swart & Co., $50; Hubbard, Price & Co., $50; Merebiess & Co., $50. S. Gruber & Co., $50; Stephen M. Weld & Co., $50; George W. Bolly & Co., $25; A. M. Seiter & Co., $25; Chapman & Allen, $25; J. C. Haskell, $25; Jones, Kure & Co., $25; Nierdan & Co., $25; J. H. Ziegler & Co., $25; Peter Mallett & Co., $25; Herman Hagerdorn, $25; J. Hart & Co., $25; Callender & Hughes, $25; A. Nerden & Co., $20; E. P. McDougall, $10; John C. McGuire, $10; George T. Dixon, $10; T. M. Robinson & Co., $10; William Tubbs, $10; total, $1,695.

SHOES

In the "race" of life it is fitting that all should be well shod. The "well" involves quality, fit, style, and price.

ALEXANDER,

6th Av. & 23d St.,

132 & 134 Fulton St.

37

891215014

The Emma Goldman Papers

[Testimony] Emma Goldman on the Stand / Emma Goldman.— 28 cm. In The Brooklyn Daily Eagle. —(Oct. 6, 1893).

Permission to reproduce or quote in any form must be obtained from The New York Public Library, Astor, Lenox and Tilden Foundations. Institutional Location: Rare Books and Manuscripts Division.

Men like President Ulhman of the Union Elevated road, Mr. Shaler and Mr. Rupert were interested in the project. It had been capitalized at $5,000,000, which was subsequently reduced to $2,500,000. Ten per cent. had actually been paid in and $50,000 was now in the treasury outside of what had been expended in expenses already incurred. Capital would come forward when all objections were removed and the work would be rapidly pushed to completion."

Judge Van Brunt reminded Mr. Lauterbach that his time had expired.

Counsel Fordham Morris, for the property owners, arose, and in addressing the court, said: "Because you appointed the commission it does not necessarily follow you should dictate their findings. You should not act as appellate judge. You should act as local judiciary. It rests with you whether the Bridge company shall be granted the franchise. Why should New York be gridironed for the benefit of Brooklyn? Why should our strength be sapped for another city? More our population belongs not in Brooklyn. I say New York for New Yorkers and Brooklyn for Brooklynites. He pointed out the almost unlimited power given the bridge company. It could sell itself to a grasping monopoly. The Manhattan Elevated railway might buy it out. He said it violated sections 14, 17, 18 of article III of the state constitution.

John A. Deering, counsel for several property owners on Spring street, then made a motion to deny the right to build the approaches, as it had not been shown that they would be only used for that purpose. The engineer of the bridge had informed him that the bridge might not be built for six years and the approaches might be used as elevated roads. He said it was premature to build the approaches.

Clarence G. Ferris, counsel for property owners on South street, said the bridge would drain New York city, and quoted statistics in defense of his argument. Since the opening of the Brooklyn bridge 200,000 persons who would have settled in New York have gone to Brooklyn.

George G. DeWitt, counsel for property owners, said $1,000,000 worth of property would have to be condemned. Woodbury G. Langdon, counsel for property owners, said 20,000 persons would want to move, causing great inconvenience.

The court took the papers and reserved decision.

THE Y. M. C. A. COLUMBIAN CONGRESS.

Delegates Present in Chicago Representing the Whole World.

CHICAGO, Ill., October 6—Delegates from all parts of this country and Canada, as well as from abroad, participated this morning in the opening of the Columbian congress of the Young Men's Christian associations of the world. The attendance was so large that the audience overflowed from the hall reserved for the congress, and it was found necessary to organize a second meeting in an adjoining room. Albert E. Monroe of New York was selected as presiding officer and appropriately responded to the address of welcome delivered on behalf of the congress auxiliary by C. C. Bonney. The morning programme included a paper on college work read by President John M. Coulter of Lake Forrest university, and another on athletics prepared by Dr. Luther Gulick of Springfield, Mass., and read by Professor A. A. Stagg, the noted athlete of the University of Chicago. F. L. Mabey of Dayton, O., also spoke briefly upon educational work.

At this evening's session, Lord Kinnaird of London, will present greetings of the association in Great Britain and M. Jules Seigfried of Paris will do the same thing for the Young Men's organization of the French republic.

WAS THE CHILD KIDNAPPED?

New York Police Requested to Send Out an Alarm.

Joseph Turner, a colored waiter, of 251 Seventh avenue, New York, called at police headquarters to-day and asked that an alarm be sent out for his 3 year old son, Willie.

Turner says that while the boy was playing in front of his home last Tuesday afternoon a colored woman came along and enticed him away. The woman was large and wore a red wrapper and a jockey cap.

She was seen later going through West Twenty-sixth street with the boy, and yesterday was said to have been on Third avenue, near Ninety-seventh street. The boy wears a plaid dress and has a scar on his cheek. The parents have sent out the alarm.

PRINCE BISMARCK'S CONDITION.

MUNICH, October 6—The Neueste Nachrichten says that Dr. Schweninger, Prince Bismarck's physician, returned to Kissingen last evening. The paper adds that Dr. Schweninger entertains the hope that he will be able shortly to remove Prince Bismarck to Friedrichsruhe.

A REAR END COLLISION.

NEWCASTLE, Pa., October 6—A rear end collision between two freight trains on the Pittsburg and Lake Erie railroad occurred near Edinburgh station early this morning. Eight cars of merchandise were badly wrecked. The

SAYS SHOT BABY HALL.

And Blythebourne Is Quite Indignant About It.

Baby Hall was a handsome, well bred Irish setter, with an ancient pedigree. She was as well known in Blythebourne as any one of the residents and a general favorite with everybody on account of her remarkably gentle disposition. Her owner, Mr. H. H. Pithian, told an Eagle reporter this afternoon:

"Baby Hall is dead. Her destruction was the most heartless and outrageous affair that could be imagined. She was shot by Frank A. Osten. Although she was the most gentle animal in the world I always chained her up at night. Last night she pulled the staple out of the kennel and broke away with the chain. Osten shot her early this morning over in the street, about one hundred and fifty feet distant from his place. He then dragged her corpse and buried her with her collar on. I did not know of it until after he and left for New York or he would have had to deal with me personally. I dug up the animal and removed the collar. I shall prosecute Osten to the fullest extent of the law."

The general sympathy of the people is with Mr. Pithian. Osten is superintendent of the Edgewood Reformed church, an active Christian endeavor man, a leader of church prayer meetings and Sunday school talkies. When questioned by the Eagle reporter he claimed that he did not know the dog belonged to Mr. Pithian, but he would not say why he did the shooting.

EMMA GOLDMAN ON THE STAND.

The New York Anarchist Explains Her Socialistic Views.

Emma Goldman was the first witness called to-day at her trial in Part II of the court of general sessions, New York. She was neat and collected and explained her peculiar views in answer to questions put by counsel.

Questioned by Mr. Hall, witness said she had heard some of the exclamations from the crowd which the detectives had testified to. She had spoken in English at the Union square meeting, she said, from notes. Those notes she had elaborated afterward for the purpose of having them published.

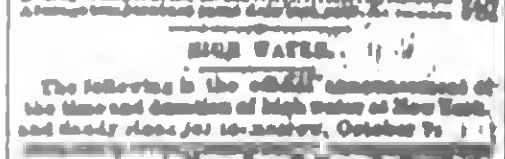
Cross examined by the assistant district attorney Miss Goldman said she did not believe in a Supreme Being; that she was 23 years old and was born in Russia. She said that she was a married woman, but refused to tell the name of her husband. She did not think it was necessary to make the same public. She separated from her husband five years ago. She had never lived with Bergman.

"Bergman is the man who shot Frick," said Mr. McIntyre.

"I know that," was the answer.

She was an anarchist, she said, and believed only in moral force. Witness said she knew John Most and thought him a great agitator and writer. She said she did not believe in the moral views of Most.

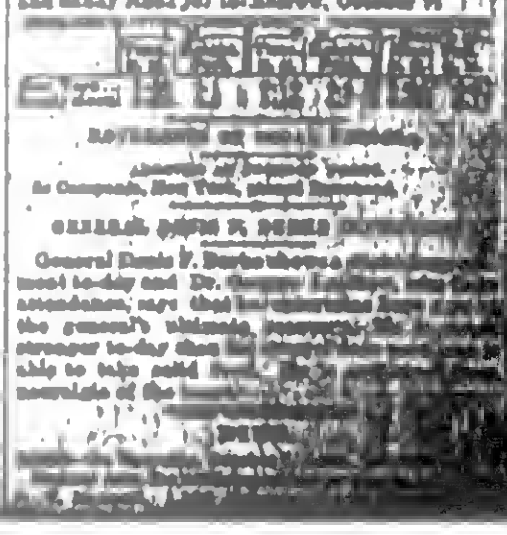
THE WEATHER.



WASHINGTON, D. C., October 6, 1893.

INDICATIONS FOR U. S. A. TO-MORROW.

For Eastern New York, fair; followed Saturday by rain; warmer to-night; cooler Saturday evening; southeasterly winds, increasing in force, Local Forecast Official.



Cloudy, followed by rain this evening or to-night; slight change in temperature; easterly winds, increasing in force; changing to southerly during Sunday.

The following is the record of the thermometer as kept at the Eagle office:

HIGH WATER.

The following is the official announcement of the time and duration of high water at New York and Sandy Hook for to-morrow, October 7:

BEST COPY AVAILABLE

890210007

The Emma Goldman Papers

[Testimony] Only the Moral Law / Emma Goldman.— p. 8 ; 43 cm. In The World —(Oct. 7, 1893).

Obtained from the University of California, Berkeley. Institutional Location: Doe Library.

LY THE MORAL LAW

Goldman Respects That, but Not God or the Government.

ADDRESSES THE JURY AND PLEADS FOR FREE SPEECH.

EY HALL IS ENTERTAINING.

"Why do Anarchists want dynamite bombs?" asked Assistant District-Attorney of Emma Goldman yesterday.

"They want them to use in the great social revolution," replied [illegible]. This was at the close of a cross-examination in which the jury and a highly interested crowd of lay listeners heard an elaborate discussion of the principles and practices of anarchy, illustrated by definitions of anarchy and the moral law.

The talk was varied by excursions into theological questions, social science and a consideration of the fundamental principles of the American Constitution. Miss Goldman never before had such an opportunity to expound her coda of ethics and her queer system of political and social economy.

She talked as if by the book, and gave the impression that that part of her cross-examination which investigated her motives in order to throw a side light of motive on the proof of her incendiary speaking had been anticipated and prepared for by her.

Webster defines anarchy as "absence of government; the state of society where there is no law; a supreme power; a state of lawlessness; political confusion."

Miss Goldman's definition was: "Anarchism is the establishment of a system without government of any kind where a perfect liberty to every individual to enjoy his or her life and to cultivate abilities as well as attain the highest knowledge."

Of the moral law the dictionary says: "The will of God is the rule for the disposition and conduct of all responsible beings toward him and toward each other; a rule of living conformable to righteousness; the rule of action as obligatory on the conscience or moral nature."

ONE LAW SHE RESPECTS.

Miss Goldman said that the moral law was the only kind of law she believes in. "I mean," said she, "that there is a moral law that indicates every one not to misuse the liberty of the next one, not to do any harm to him, not to hurt him; or at least not to do any harm whatever to the next person and to try all possible to love the next one and help as much as possible for the benefit of the other."

Disentangled from Miss Goldman's quaint English, this looks very like the Golden Rule. And yet the inconsistent little person was a few minutes later talking about stuffing bombs with dynamite in as calm and matter of fact a way as a housewife talks of stuffing a turkey.

Miss Goldman's freedom of speech on the witness stand was the most troublesome element that her counsel, ex-Mayor A. Oakey Hall, had to contend with. He worked heroically to smooth out impressions that might be made on the minds of the jurors by her words; but even William Ewart Gladstone, of whom it was once said by a friend to a gentleman who had the misfortune to have two wives, "Get Gladstone to explain one of them away," couldn't have explained away the testimony of Mr. Hall's "enthusiast."

The Goldman trial waited for an hour while Judge Martine meted out justice to a melancholy line of convicts. Miss Goldman eagerly listened while the Judge told one offender that "There's nothing in our laws that permits a person to take other people's property without their consent," and another, "Those who work for a living and are willing to work, as a general rule can get employment." Her surprised eyes and the uplifting of her brows showed that she was receiving new impressions of the fated machinery of the law. The Judge tempered justice with mercy, sending back into the world to take a new chance an intelligent-looking young man and a blubbering, repentant boy, whose counsel, by the way, was the tall, ariel turnstile-looking brother-in-law of Adelia Rives-Chanler.

In a third instance—that of a rough looking fellow, who cursed the Judge as he turned away after being sentenced to eighteen months' imprisonment His Honor recalled the man and said that in spite of his abusive language he would reduce his sentence to fourteen months as he found that under the longer sentence the prisoner would be discharged at a time of the year when it would be hard for him to get employment if he wanted to begin an honest life.

Mr. Hall ended the direct examination of his client with a few questions, the purport of the answers to which was that Emma had not gone to the Union Square meeting with the intention of inciting a riot.

Mr. McIntyre began his cross-examination with an inquiry into the antecedents of Miss Goldman. He found that she was born in Russia, some 25 years ago and had been speechmaking for five years. She had lived in the same house" with Bergman who shot H. C. Frick, and under the same roof" with Timmerman the young Anarchist who is serving out a sentence on Blackwell's Island.

"I am an unmarried lady," said Miss McIntyre.

"I am married to a gentleman," was the reply. "I can't give you his name as I separated from him six years ago. Goldman is my father's name."

She didn't approve Bergman's attempt to assassinate Frick she said, but she had sympathy for Bergman's courage.

Q. Are you an Anarchist? A. I consider I be one.

Q. Do you mean to say you are a member of the Anarchistic party? A. I am a member of the Anarchistic party.

Q. Do you believe in the use of force? A. I believe in force when it is used in self-defense.

Q. Do you believe in the use of force to overthrow the present government

890210007

The Emma Goldman Papers

[Testimony] Only the Moral Law / Emma Goldman.— p. 8 ; 43 cm. In The World —(Oct. 7, 1893).

Obtained from the University of California, Berkeley. Institutional Location: Doe Library.

examination which investigated selfish in order to throw a side of motive on the proof of her in-mary speaking had been anticipated prepared for by her.

Webster defines anarchy as "absence government, the state of society
there is no law; a supreme power;
state of lawlessness, political confu
."

Miss Goldman's definition was "Anhism is the establishment of a sys-without government of any kind a perfect liberty to every individual enjoy his or her life and to cultivate ities as well as attain the highest wledge."

For the moral law the dictionary says:
The will of God is the rule for the position and conduct of all responsible toward him and toward each
; a rule of living conformable to teousness; the rule of action as tained by the conscience or moral ure."

ONE LAW SHE RESPECTS.

Miss Goldman said that the moral w was the only kind of law she beves in. "I mean," said she, "that is a moral law that indicates very one not to misuse the liberty of next one, not to do any harm to m, not to hurt him, or at least not to do any harm whatever to the next rson and to try all possible to love the next one and help as much as possible for the benefit of the other."

Disentangled from Miss Goldman's quaint English, this looks very like the Golden Rule. And yet the inconsistent little person was a few minutes later talking about stuffing bombs with dynamite in as calm and matter of fact a way as a housewife talkes of stuffing
a turkey.

Miss Goldman's freedom of speech on the witness stand was the most troublesome element that her counsel, ex-Mayor A. Oakey Hall, had to contend with. He worked heroically to smooth out impressions that might be made on the minds of the jurors by her words; but even William Ewart Gladstone, of whom it was once said by a friend to a gentleman who had the misfortune to have two wives, "Get Gladstone to explain one of them away," couldn't have explained away the testimony of Mr. Hall's "enthusiast."

The Goldman trial waited for an hour while Judge Martine meted out justice to a melancholy line of convicts. Miss Goldman eagerly listened while the Judge told one offender that "There's nothing in our laws that permits a person to take other people's property without their consent," and another, "Those who work for a living and are willing to work, as a general rule can get employment." Her surprised eyes and the up-lifting of her brows showed that she was receiving new impressions of the hated machinery of the law. The Judge tempered justice with mercy, sending back into the world to take a new chance an intelligent-looking young man and a blubbering, repentant boy, whose counsel, by the way, was the tall, aristocratic-looking brother-in-law of Amelie Rives-Chanler.

In a third instance—that of a rough-looking fellow, who cursed the Judge as he turned away after being sentenced to eighteen months' imprisonment His Honor recalled the man and said that in spite of his abusive language he would reduce his sentence to fourteen months, as he found that under the longer sentence the prisoner would be discharged at a time of the year when it would be hard for him to get employment if he wanted to begin an honest life.

Mr. Hall ended the direct examination of his client with a few questions, the purport of the answers to which was that Emma had not gone to the Union Square meeting with the intention of inciting a riot.

Mr. McIntyre began his cross-examination with an inquiry into the antecedents of Miss Goldman. He found that she was born in Russia, came to the United States with her parents eight years ago and had been speechmaking for five years. She had lived "in the same house" with Bergman, who shot H. C. Frick, and "under the same roof" with Timmerman, the young Anarchist who is serving out a sentence on Blackwell's Island.

"You're an unmarried lady?" said Mr McIntyre.

"I am married to a gentleman," was the reply. "I can't give you his name.
I separated from him six years ago.
Goldman is my father's name."

She didn't approve Bergman's attempt to assassinate Frick, she said, but she had "sympathy for Bergman's courage."

Q. Are you an Anarchist? A. (Promptly) Yes sir.

Q. Do you believe in promoting disorder and revolution in the State? A. I don't understand Anarchist that way.

Then she gave her definition of Anarchy, or "Anarchism," and said she didn't believe in laws, because they were made to oppress the poor and benefit the rich; that she had no use for the State Legislature or Congress, but that she did believe in the moral law. She didn't believe exactly in what Herr Most teaches.

"Do you believe in his morals?" asked Mr. McIntyre.

"Not quite," said Emma, sharply. "I believe only in my own morals."

Q. Where do you reside now? A. In the Tombs.
Q. But where did you reside before going there? A. At Nos. 206 and 208 East Sixteenth street, with my relatives.

Q. What is your means of support? A. I am a dressmaker. I had an establishment in East Sixteenth street. My income was $15 and $20 a week; sometimes more, sometimes less.

Q. Are your father and mother Anarchists? A. No, sir; they don't believe as I do, but they don't interfere.

Emma said she had a brother and two sisters. One of the sisters is a Socialist. The brother lives at Rochester, N. Y. "He's an American citizen and not an Anarchist," said Miss Goldman.

Continuing, Miss Goldman said she was against the general form of the Government of the United States, and was displeased with all that any Government on earth did against the working people.

"Is there any Government under the sun that accords with the views you have expressed from time to time?"
asked Mr. McIntyre.

"There is not," was the reply.

"If you are displeased with our form of government, why don't you leave the country and go elsewhere?" he continued.

"I don't know where I could go," said
Miss Goldman.

Coming to the subject of the Union Square meeting, Mr. McIntyre put some searching questions as to the line of speech Miss Goldman had prepared the notes from which she said she her speech, and which she on Thursday
right along more "mem-heard to be those of Mr.

against the poor.

Emma then said that if she had her way she would abolish the State system entirely and abolish the police. She thought the policeman might make good workingmen.

"But," said the Assistant District Attorney, argumentatively, "how could society get along without the protection of law and of the police against thieves and other criminals?"

"If you'll get away the reasons why thieves and robbers become so," said Emma in her lecture voice, "you may take away the police."

Q. And so he easily makes criminals?
A. Yes.
Q. Is it necessarily that makes men like Ferdinand Ward and Fish who wrecked a bank, become criminals?

Emma was not posed. She gave it as her opinion that bad company or bad education had a great deal to do with the aberrations of such men.

Q. You know there is liberty in this country flowing from the institutions on which it is founded? A. There is no liberty in this country.
Q. You frequently have referred in your speeches to the early fathers of this country—you have named admiringly such men as Jefferson, Jackson and Abraham Lincoln? A. I have, and I know the principles of the rebels who fought for the liberty of this country have been trampled upon by those who administer government now.
Q. Don't you know that many of the ideas inculcated by Jackson this Government is following now? A. Oh, no, not following exactly.

Mr. McIntyre here read the report of Miss Goldman's speech in English published in The World of Aug. 22. The witness swore to its accuracy, sentence by sentence, with the exceptions of the expressions "Go among the capitalists and rich people and ask for bread, and if they do not give it to you peaceably, then take it by force. If you do not get bread and freedom peaceably, take it by force." She declares that she did not say "take it by force," though she had said everything else that was reported.

Mr. McIntyre then brought out the facts that Miss Goldman had gone from New York to Philadelphia, after the Union Square meeting, to organize a "group" of Anarchists, and that two of the men with whom she had associated there had since been arrested and sentenced to four months' imprisonment.

"Do you know that one of them was a dynamite bomb-maker?" asked Mr.
McIntyre.

"Well, he wasn't imprisoned on that charge, but on a trumped-up charge of stealing," said Miss Goldman.

It was then that Mr McIntyre asked—
"Why do Anarchists want dynamite bombs?" and that Miss Goldman said they were to be used in the great war,
the social revolution.

"And do you believe in dynamite?" he asked.

"I might believe in it if the time comes," she replied.

Q. Would you say it? A. I don't tell you what would happen then.

After recess Mr. Hall labored awhile at his smoothing-out process, getting Emma to define the moral law and to say she didn't believe in murder or theft or anything of that sort. By the social revolution she said she meant a war between workingmen and the capitalists. That explanation did not "smooth out" much, and Mr. Hall de-sisted in his efforts when she added "I mean a war as it has been between America and England, the Revolutionary War, or like the war among the French people in 1871, a war between the workingmen and the rich classes that will free the workingmen from every authority of any kind. I believe that such a war will come."

On re-cross-examination Miss Goldman said she approved the course taken by the French Communists in 1871.

"What do you understand led up to the War of the Revolution?" asked Mr McIntyre.

"I understand the Americans wanted to free themselves."

"For what purpose?" asked the Prosecutor.

"So as not to live under a monarchy," said the prisoner.

Miss Goldman asked and obtained permission to make a statement. She said:

HER SIDE OF THE CASE.

"Your Honor and gentlemen of the jury, I simply want to state here that my object for going to all those meetings and addressing the meetings since I ever did was simply to use my right of free speech, which I understand has been granted here in America to every man and woman, and I have had no other object as to make my right of free speech and I do not think it is an unlawful act to use the right of free speech and so I did, so I state here I have not done any unlawful act against the Constitution of America."

Morris Steinberg, who is out of employment and calls Mechanicsburg, a barber, who were among the audience at the Union square meeting, were the last witnesses for the defense. They testified that they had not heard Miss Goldman advising the use of force.

In rebuttal, Mr. McIntyre called The World reporter who took stenographic notes of Miss Goldman's English speech and had the German one translated for him by an interpreter who was with him at the meeting. The reporter stated that he heard Miss Goldman talk about force in her English address, and that, although he did not understand the German language, he remembered distinctly that she ended her German speech with the expression, "Hoch die Anarchie!"

Mr. Hall's closing address was woven around the following three points that he sought to establish: 1. That the meeting addressed by Miss Goldman was not an unlawful assemblage. 2. That the assemblage was lawful because it was for a sympathetic purpose though it may have been a misguided purpose.
3. That Miss Goldman's testimony entitled her to acquittal.

The case, he said, was pure and simple, a police prosecution. "You have seen Officer Jacobs—and, by the way, his name is not Jacobs, but Jacob," he continued, "sitting here, prompting the District-Attorney. It's come to a pretty pass when any policeman or detective shall usurp the function of the District Attorney and, seated within the bar, take the most prominent part in the prosecution. When a detective is set to work on a clue to ferret out crime I shan't quarrel with anything that he may do in the matter, nor when a detective is out to put words into the mouth of an accused charged with merely a misdemeanor, then I have reason to quarrel with it. There he sat throughout this trial.

"I was reminded of a line in Milton's
'Paradise Lost,' where the great poet spoke of Satan seated squat at the ear of Eve. My learned friend is not an Eve, nor is he given to deal with for-bidden fruit, as she did, but at the same time there may be a similarity between Jacob and Satan, who did the tempting."

Mr. Hall then said the police actually

HOW ABOUT INGERSOLL.

"Miss Goldman is an atheist. Probably Robert Ingersoll may be brought up some day, seeing he's an atheist, and prosecuted on some charge growing out of the speeches he makes."

Mr. Hall complimented Miss Goldman highly. "Your must have been struck by her appearance on the stand," he remarked, "she is a lady of refinement, indeed, what might under some circumstances even be called an elegant lady."

After a reference to her talk about the social revolution he said: "Speaking for myself, I believe the time will come—it must come when the fights which now exist between the laborer and the capitalist in the matter of strikes and lockouts will develop into a war of classes. I believe that as a publicist, and I believe that before long there will be a war of races in the South. It must come. Miss Goldman spoke of dynamite.
Well, very likely dynamite may be used in the war of classes. It is small wonder that a feeling is engendered between the laborer and the capitalist, and it exists in inverse proportion. The higher classes dislike the lower. We have no class distinctions by name here, as in England and other European countries, but they exist here in fact."

Mr. Hall read impressively a very lurid poem, the last verse of which was:

"Take heed, oh ye millionaire classes
Who have seized all the gifts of the gods,
For the slaves you have plundered and starved
May bind you and scourge you with rods."

He said the poem was a great deal stronger than Emma Goldman's speech.
It was published in an out-of-town newspaper, but neither the editor nor the author were molested. Why? Free press, of course. Then why not free speech? Why send a poor, persecuted woman to prison only for a speech? In closing, Mr. Hall urged the jury to dismiss all prejudice from their minds in considering the case.

THE JURY ENTERTAINED.

The jurymen were obviously interested and entertained by Mr. Hall's address.
Whether they were convinced will be seen on Monday, when, at 11 A. M., Assistant District-Attorney McIntyre will begin his summing up.

TWO TENEMENT-HOUSE PANICS.

Rose Goldberg Fatally Burned While Scared Tenants Blocked the Way to Her Rescue.

Mrs. Rose Goldberg while cooking supper last evening in her apartments on the third floor of No. 111 Hester street accidentally upset a coal stove. With her clothing in a blaze Mrs. Goldberg ran into the hallway shrieking. Fire. Thirty people in the house fled like sheep for the sidewalk, leaving the woman helpless. The janitor, F. Vollmer, finding the stairways blocked with tenants, entered the house by a ladder. Vollmer wrapped Mrs. Goldberg in a quilt. She was burned about the head, arms and body. Mrs. Goldberg was taken to Gouverneur Hospital. She cannot live, the surgeons say.

The fire caused by the overturned stove was extinguished by a pail of water and did no material damage to the house or furniture.

A fire which started during the afternoon in the apartments of Fannie Bernling on the second floor of No. 17 Forsyth street also caused a panic among the tenants for stairways and fire escapes. When Sarah Greenstein, who lives on the third floor heard the puffing engines of the fire trucks with their clanging bells, approaching the house, she lost her head and jumped from a window to the sidewalk. Sarah, to the surprise of firemen and policemen, who expected to pick her up with at least a dislocated leg or a fractured arm, landed on all fours and was not a bit hurt by her three-story experience.

The fire caused only trifling damage.

ACTORS SEE "IN MIZZOURA."

Mr. Goodwin Pats Dramatic Young America on the Head.

Nat Goodwin gave his thespian brothers and sisters a treat yesterday afternoon. He invited them to a strictly professional matinee performance of "In Mizzoura." The Fifth Avenue Theatre was filled with the men and women who "study to please." They came with pleasant anticipations and departed in that state of peace and good will which accompanies absolute contentment. Augustus Thomas's charming play of character has never been acted with such care. Every one on the stage showed the force of professional pride.

The audience's applause was bountiful. Part of it was personal and intended for the actor, and part of it was judicial and decided on the merits of the work done. The few bits of Continental claptrap which our Mr. Thomas's plays sometimes speaks and well received by the lay audiences were ignored by those professional critics. But they did not fail to recognize a single bit of clever detail work.

Mr. Goodwin made a couple of very Goodwin-like speeches. He is the enfant terrible of his profession. It is his own fault if the public has refused hitherto to consider him seriously. His friends know what he is capable of in serious work. He is on the right path now. In his remarks he asserted that the future of American stage art is a brilliant one. That the younger dramatic authors are doing good work, and it remains for the younger actors to give force and value to their plays.

Held the Baby, but the Mother Came Not.

(Special to The World.)

NORWICH, Conn., Oct. 6.—A richly dressed young woman asked Walter F. Talcott, of Philadelphia, to hold her baby for a few moments at the Union Station yesterday. He complied and when at the end of two hours she had not returned he concluded she did not intend to and turned the baby over to City Missionary Swan. It was also richly dressed and about two months old. Inquiry developed the fact that the mother boarded a train for New York ten minutes after giving the baby to Talcott. She wore a dark dress with cape, a black hat and frills.

Better use too much than too little Pearline

Beware of imitations

Had Their Chase for Nothing.

Thomas Kelly chased and caught by a mob in front of the Post Office on Thursday to Justice Meade in the Tombs Court yesterday denied that he had stolen a watch, saying he simply fled from the man with whom he had quarrelled. The police, on the prisoner's behalf, so he was discharged.

To Force Austin to Pay Water Rent.

(Special to The World.)

AUSTIN, Tex., Oct. 6.—The City is $7,000 or $8,000 in arrears on water rent. The Council having failed to act on a proposition from the receiver of the waterworks company, to-day served written notice on the Mayor that he will on next Tuesday direct that the water be cut off from all city public schools and the fire department buildings unless by that date his proposition shall have been accepted.

Most important to-day is the sale of Men's Suits and Overcoats at $15.00. Have you heard of it? Your own choice of the house. The better one you select the more we're pleased. The Boys' Clothes which we are driving on to-day are made to stand the toughest kind of wear.

Both stores open until 10 to-night.

A. H. KING & CO,

827-829 Broadway, near Bleecker st. — 124th st., Harlem.

SPECIAL MARK-DOWN SALE AT LONDON & LIVERPOOL, 86 and 88 Fowers, cor. Hester st.

H. C
THE MEN'S, B
W MA
SALE
We are the MONE
New Yor
Whe
622 & 624

BIERMAN
OLD HER BROADWA
The Largest
World of M
Overcoa
T
F
800 ELE
WINT OVERCO Made from cunos. Kerseys
in Black, Bl ond Mixtures;
$18 ond $20
sole.
ALL GO T
At $12
More than your money
You run n
for at the pr stock the mo
please must Don't wait assortment
Men's Out
BIERMA OLD HE BROAD THOS.
CARPE
The Lar
Parlor Vans
The largest America.
1554 Broadway at., 47th
Erie and 6th
150 J. C.
Three Months
Medford Ma

BEST COPY AVAILABL

880722001

The Emma Goldman Papers

[Testimony] Anarchy Her Only Faith / Emma Goldman.— p. 9 ; 43 cm. In The New York Times. —(Oct. 7, 1893).

Obtained from the University of California, Berkeley. Institutional Location: Doe Library.

PAGES 9—12. SATURDAY The New-York

celled in Every Department. passed by Any Other Paper.

H

Therefore the Paper for All to Buy
will be the

E

UNDAY EDITION

of the

EW-YORK TIMES.

S

will be a complete epit-e of a day's life in the rld of

LITICS, SPORTS, FINANCE, and the STAGE.

U

nts at Home and Abroad,
Choice Bits of Literature, and Talk of the Newest Works of Authors and Artists.

N

esides all these, The Times ill offer to its readers, for NLY FIVE CENTS,
e following features:

D

HE SECOND MRS. TANQUERAY—A critical analysis of the powerful new drama of modern English life which the Kendals will produce for the first time in this country Monday night.

ANARCHY HER ONLY FAITH

IN NEITHER GOD NOR LAW DOES EMMA GOLDMAN BELIEVE.

This She Boldly Avows on Her Cross-Examination Her Counsel Recognizes the Fact that There Is Little Hope for His Anarchist Client Unless on a Technical Point Police Persecution, the Burden of His Summing up The Defendant Makes a Speech.

It is still to be determined whether Emma Goldman is to act the Anarchist in or out of prison.

Her case was to have gone to the jury yesterday. The beginning of the hearing, however, was delayed until after 12 o'clock, and, though both the prosecution and defense put in all the evidence in the afternoon, it was impossible to finish the case before the usual hour of adjournment, and Judge Martine put it over until Monday.

Miss Goldman boldly flung into the teeth of the jury the statement that she was an Anarchist and an atheist; that she believed in no law of man or God. How far this will go toward convicting her it is easy to determine.

Her counsel, ex-Mayor A. Oakey Hall, has stated right along that the case for the defense was a most desperate one. He hoped, however, under a technical construction of the law regarding unlawful assemblages, to secure an acquittal.

Mr. Hall, in summing up, contended that the meeting at which Miss Goldman spoke had been held under a permit duly issued by the authorities, and that it was to all intents and purposes a lawful assemblage. The mere fact that Miss Goldman spoke or did not speak there could not, according to Mr. Hall, make the assemblage an unlawful one under a fair construction of the statute under which the defendant was on trial.

The ordeal which she has undergone during the past few days it was apparent when she came into the courtroom yesterday had had its effect on the defendant. There was a hectic flush on her usually pale cheeks. Her eyes were misty and restless, and there was a tremor in her hands that has not been remarked before. She put on a bold front, however, when she marched to the witness stand at the opening of court. Mr. Hall asked her but few questions to complete her direct testimony, begun on Thursday afternoon, and then she was handed over to Assistant District Attorney McIntyre for cross examination.

"Do you believe in a Supreme Being, Miss Goldman?" the Assistant District Attorney asked.

There were a few moments of hesitation while Judge, jury, counsel, and court audience pricked up their ears and leaned forward to receive the answer. It came shortly with fearless emphasis:

"No, Sir, I do not."

The Assistant District Attorney received this reply with evident satisfaction, and for some minutes he contented himself with questions regarding the birthplace and other matters concerning the personal history of the witness. She said she was born in Kovna, Russia, twenty-five years ago. She came over here with her parents in 1885.

Q. What was your object in coming? A.—I had no special object. I simply came because my parents came.

Q. You are a married woman? A. Yes, Sir, I was married six years ago.

Q. What is your husband's name. A.—I shall not tell his name here. He has nothing to do with my trial. I separated from him five years ago.

Q. He, too, was an Anarchist? A.—No, Sir.

Mr. McIntyre then wanted to know something about her relations with Alexander Berkmann, the man who shot Henry C. Frick in Pittsburg during the Homestead troubles. The witness denied that she had ever lived with Berkmann as his wife. She also denied that she went to Homestead or Pittsburg with him.

Q. You approved of Berkmann's attempt to kill Frick. A.—I never approved of it.

Q.—Then you approve of his action now? A.—I have sympathy for him, and I admire his courage in doing what he did, but that is all.

Q.—You do not believe in the laws of the State? A.—I am an Anarchist, and against all laws. My theory is that the Legislature and the courts are of no use to the mass of the people. The laws passed help the rich and grind the poor.

Q.—You don't believe in living up to these laws, then? A.—I do not believe in any laws except those of morality.

Q.—Do You believe in Moses and his teachings? A.—

to a redirect examination. Mr. Hall wanted to know what she meant by the social revolution of which she had spoken to Mr. McIntyre.

"I mean," she said, "a war between the classes and the masses such as was seen in France in 1871.

Q.—Are you the kind of an Anarchist that believes in murder and thievery? A. Most certainly not. We are misrepresented by the press until the people have come to look upon us as murderers and robbers, whereas we are the exact reverse.

Mr. McIntyre asked a few more questions in cross-examination on her last utterances, and then the witness was permitted to return to her seat beside her counsel.

Maurice Steinberg, a clothing cutter, and Julius Sachtmanzohn, a furrier, both of whom had attended the meeting of Aug. 21, were called to testify as to the pacific nature of Miss Goldman's utterances the night she delivered her speech, and then Mr. McIntyre called David G. Hallie, a reporter, in rebuttal. Hallie was present at the Union Square meeting. He testified that he had made a stenographic report of Miss Goldman's English speech which preceded her German address. In his opinion her remarks in English were fully as incendiary in their character as the remarks Detective Jacobs had testified she made in German. In fact, they were almost exactly identical. On cross-examination by Mr. Hall the witness was asked:

Q.—You heard Detective Jacobs testify that he had heard her say no thing of an incendiary nature in English? A.—I did.

Q.—Then you do not agree with him? A.—I do not.

Mr. Hallie was excused, and then Mr. Hall arose to begin his opening speech. Among other things he said:

"It is easy in a trial of this kind to deal with facts, but it is not easy to deal with prejudice such as we must be prepared in this instance to face. The story of this little lady's predicament is very simple. It is nothing more nor less than police persecution. From the first moment down to the present time this must have been apparent to every one. It was made evident when, after the first day of this trial she was committed to the Tombs at the District Attorney's request, who acted for the police, in spite of the fact that she had most excellent bail.

"All through the trial you have seen the head of the police guiding the prosecution. You saw Detective Jacobs, or rather Jacob for that is the way his name is really spelled, sitting on the left hand side of the District Attorney, prompting him at every step, whispering suggestions in his ear.

"Certainly it has come to a pretty pass in this community when a detective shall usurp the functions of the District Attorney. The spectacle of Jacob in this prosecution has reminded me of that line in Milton where he pictures Satan sitting 'squat at the ear of Eve.' Not that I mean to refer to the learned District Attorney as Eve, but Jacob is certainly a very good representation of Satan.

"The police conceived the idea that they must demonstrate to the people here that Anarchy could not thrive on New York soil. In this instance it is not, as the indictment relates, a prosecution for an unlawful assembly, but a prosecution of Anarchy, as the general public understands it. An attempt has been made to bring out here what Anarchy means. Miss Goldman has told you that an Anarchist did not believe in a government except in a government of the people such as existed in this country in the old colonial times. The modern Anarchist, like the modern Socialist, believes what the Shaker believes. He believes in co-operation and the common ownership of property. Anarchy dislikes the rich and the monopolist, but surely this is no crime. There are many of us who are not Anarchists who yet do not believe in monopoly.

"This meeting in Union Square was legally organized, and was in no sense an unlawful assembly. The people who spoke there expressed their convictions in a manner they had a perfect legal right to do, else we may soon see Col. Ingersoll brought up for having addressed an unlawful assembly when he speaks of his conviction, which is opposed to belief in a Deity."

Assistant District Attorney McIntyre will sum up as soon as court opens on Monday morning.

PEABODY FUND TRUSTEES MEET.

Joseph H. Choate and George W. Childs Elected to Fill Vacancies.

The Trustees of the Peabody Education Fund met at the Fifth Avenue Hotel yesterday, and will continue in session to-day. The Trustees present were the venerable President Robert C. Winthrop, William C. Endicott, and Samuel A. Green of Massachusetts, William M. Evarts and J. Pierpont Morgan of New-York, Chief Justice Melville Fuller of Washington, Bishop H. B. Whipple of Minnesota, Will Wirt Henry of Virginia, William A. Courtenay of South Carolina, Henderson M. Somerville of Alabama, and J. L. M. Curry, the General Agent, of Washington.

During the afternoon session President Winthrop addressed the Trustees at length. After stating that, despite his infirmities, he made an effort to be present in order that there might be a quorum, he alluded to the momentous events of the past year and called attention to the fact that death had carried away four members of the board: Ex-Senator Randall [illegible] President Rutherford B. Hayes of Ohio, Anthony J. Drexel of Pennsylvania, and Hamilton Fish of New York. He paid a high tribute to their worth.

Mr. Winthrop spoke at length of Hamilton Fish, and in the course of his eulogy said:

"He was one of our original board, appointed a trustee and named as our first Vice President with Bishop McIlvaine as the second, by Mr. Peabody himself in 1867. Only two of that original board are left—Mr. Evarts and myself—who have been witnesses to his fidelity as Chairman of our committee of finance from our first organization until the infirmities of old age compelled him to withdraw from any further active service. Those infirmities were serious, and likely at any time within the two years past to culminate, as they have done at last, in sudden death. He repeatedly tendered a resignation of his relations to this board, but the board refused to accept it."

DIED TO SAVE

A Brooklyn Boy Has the Trolley—A

While saving his brot morning, six-year-old Rush Street, Williamsb
a trolley car. John an brother Frank were pl
car. They were on th
John was drawing curve at Wythe Avenu
when Car No. 28 of th
Kalb Avenue line dash
at full speed. Motorm rang the gong. John s ling, but instead of dod bravely stuck to the across the track and o
he started to run, but
The trolley car str
him into the air. H unconscious upon the
but once took the boy
trict Hospital, where o'clock.
Fulger, the motorma
Justice Goetting place bond for trial on a Superintendent Helm
cuse line, furnished
ger wept in court
best to stop the car,
boys on the track unt
curve.
Herman Frederick was driving a wagon near Tompkins Aven
when he was struck
1,431) and thrown to severely injured and w ambulance. The wa
A trolley car on G hour later crashed in
by H. H. Interman o and hurled it from th escaped uninjured.

MRS. EDWARDS M

She Will Insist on Homele

When the case of M
the member of the Mercy" who was arr
for chloroforming
in the Harlem Police Mrs Edwards will b
for her right to put ence of homeless f
terday she was at
to testify in her beh of the "Midnight
individually and coll
most to secure effici suit for Mrs Edwar
to charge that the
to the work for whi
ed.
The full story of
and her subsequent Bergh society was York Times yesterda
the principal reason
time in publicly Bergh society does says, is the reason
"Midnight Band" of
soon as the Bergh s ought. The organiza
rangs will disband.
A reporter for The
on his visit to some Mrs Edwards said
half-wild cats were Cornelia Street the cited in her interest
rear of 32 is a co
the walls of four fe
of communication is 32. The courtyard square, but there w cats, which one of were quarrelsome, all one of the tenants s fect nuisance and th
set rid of them.
How the cats liv
the reporter was hu unhappy felines. A number of fish from neath the cart. He refuse that was dro
St Bright's chu
Street and Avenue
One hundred and
been taken from th months. But there left. The old sexto possible to get rid help of a dog. He cats' lives while

41

880722001

The Emma Goldman Papers

[Testimony] Anarchy Her Only Faith / Emma Goldman.— p. 9 ; 43 cm. In The New York Times. —(Oct. 7, 1893).

Obtained from the University of California, Berkeley. Institutional Location: Doe Library.

t offer to its readers, for NLY FIVE CENTS,
following features:

D

E SECOND MRS. TAN-QUERAY—A critical analysis of the powerful new drama of modern English life which the Kendals will produce for the first time in this country Monday night.

A

E WORK EQUALS THE HONOR—A glimpse at the members of President Cleveland's Cabinet during their office hours.

Y

ME OF CHICAGO ATHLETES—A clubhouse which, in architectural beauty, completeness of its arrangements, and perfection of its gymnasium rivals any such structure in the world

T

NEW POLITICAL MAP OF BROOKLN—How the city has been divided between the bosses.

I

The Times also offers an interesting Woman's Page, filled with choice matter for feminine eyes.

M

Illustrations will be used freely wherever they will add to the interest of the articles.

E

Therefore buy the

UNDAY TIMES,

ONLY 5 CENTS,

nd you will never regret it.

S

parents in Tobin.

Q. What was your object in coming? A.—I had no special object. I simply came because my parents came.

Q.—You are a married woman? A.—Yes, Sir; I was married six years ago.

Q.—What is your husband's name. A.—I shall not tell his name here. He has nothing to do with my trial. I separated from him five years ago.

Q. He, too, was an Anarchist? A.—No, Sir.

Mr. McIntyre then wanted to know something about her relations with Alexander Berkmann, the man who shot Henry C. Frick in Pittsburg during the Homestead troubles. The witness denied that she had ever lived with Berkmann as his wife. She also denied that she went to Homestead or Pittsburg with him.

Q.—You approved of Berkmann's attempt to kill Frick. A.—I never approved of it.

Q.—Then you approve of his action now? A.—I have sympathy for him, and I admire his courage in doing what he did, but that is all.

Q.—You do not believe in the laws of the State? A.—I am an Anarchist, and against all laws. My theory is that the Legislature and the courts are of no use to the mass of the people. The laws passed help the rich and grind the poor.

Q.—You don't believe in living up to these laws, then? A.—I do not believe in any laws except those of morality.

Q.—Do you believe in Most and his teachings? A.—Most is an Anarchist, and I am an Anarchist, but we do not agree in a great many particulars.

Q.—Did you hear Timmerman speak at the Union Square meeting? A.—I did, and approved all he said.

Q.—You know that he has been convicted of transgressing the laws of this State in that speech, and that he is now in prison for that offense? A.—I know that he is in prison, but I do not think that he was properly convicted.

Q.—You lived with him at the time of his arrest? A.—I lived under the same roof with him, but that is all. I support myself always have. I am a dressmaker and earn from $6 to $7 a week.

This came out with vicious emphasis. The witness glared at her questioner and then tossed her head defiantly in the direction where the reporters' table stood. After she had quieted down, Mr McIntyre asked her:

Q.—Is there any Government on earth whose laws you approve? A.—No, Sir, for they are all against the people.

Q.—Why don't you leave this country if you don't like its laws? A.—Where shall I go? Everywhere on earth the laws are against the poor, and they tell me I cannot go to Heaven, for do I want to go there.

Q.—Do you believe in the Constitution of the United States? A.—I think it is excellent in theory but it is not lived up to. It is distorted for the benefit of the rich.

The witness denied that she had uttered the incendiary statements attributed to her by Detective Jacobs and his associates. She said she knew of the presence of the detective on the platform at Union Square, and was careful to say nothing which would conflict with the laws. The prosecutor then took up the manuscript of her speech which he had read at Thursday's hearing.

Q. You speak of tyrants here? Whom do you mean by that? A. The Vanderbilts and the Jay Goulds and the representatives of the Government who deprive its working people of food.

Q. Why is it that you do not believe in any religion? A. Because I do not think that any church has ever done a single thing to ameliorate the condition of the poor.

Q. Didn't you tell your hearers to take bread by force if they couldn't get it peaceably? A. No. But I think the time will come, judging by what has happened, when they will be compelled to do so. That is what I told them on the night I spoke.

Q. You don't like the police and would abolish the entire force if you had your way? A.—I don't object to the police if they didn't bother me.

Q. Didn't you run away to Philadelphia to avoid arrest because you feared that your speech would make trouble for you? A. No, Sir, I went over there under a previous engagement.

Q. Where did you stay in that city? A.—I decline to state.

Q. Was it not at the house of an ex-convict who has since been sent back to prison? A. No, it was not.

Q. Isn't it a fact that the man you stopped with is serving a term for manufacturing dynamite bombs? A. No, sir, it is not.

Mr. McIntyre, having got on to the subject of dynamite, proceeded to find out something more of the peculiar affinity existing between this explosive and the average Anarchist. He asked:

Q. What do these Anarchists want with dynamite bombs, anyhow? A. Why they want to use them in the great war if the social revolution ever comes.

Q. Would you use dynamite? A. I do not know what I would do. The time may not come when it may be necessary to use it.

This answer seemed to satisfy Mr. McIntyre that he had made as much as he could against the little Anarchistic speeches on trial, as it was possible to go, and he made a bee line for further inquiry.

"May I make an address to the jury, your Honor?" asked the defendant, turning to the court.

"In good time," replied Judge Martine, "your turn will come. Just at present we will take a recess."

When the court reassembled, the defendant repeated her request for permission to speak. After cautioning her to be careful in what she said and to advise with her counsel, Judge Martine gave his consent. Miss Goldman gripped the rim of the witness chair which she sat firmly, pushed the dark rimmed eyeglasses which she habitually wears more firmly down on her nose, adjusted the elastic cord carefully over her ear and then, turning to the jury, began what she called her speech. It was surprisingly short and mild. Mr. Hall had evidently advised her to bridle her tongue. She said:

"My object in going to the Union Square meeting and addressing the people there was to use my right of free speech, and to assist, if possible, in easing the condition of the unemployed. It was not for any other purpose. I understand that the laws of this country give to every man and woman the right to speak their minds as I did, but I do not think I violated the Constitution of the State or any of its laws."

With this the young woman made a courtesy to the Judge, flashed a glance of hatred at the capitalistic reporters, and then turned her face resolutely towards Mr. Hall, in order to submit of Virginia, William A. Courtenay of South Carolina, Henderson M. Somerville of Alabama, and J. L. M. Curry, the General Agent, of Washington.

During the afternoon session President Winthrop addressed the Trustees at length. After stating that, despite his infirmities, he made an effort to be present in order that there might be a quorum, he alluded to the momentous events of the past year and called attention to the fact that death had carried away four members of the board: Ex-Senator Randall L. Gibson of Louisiana, ex-President Rutherford B. Hayes of Ohio, Anthony J. Drexel of Pennsylvania, and Hamilton Fish of New York. He paid a high tribute to their worth.

Mr. Winthrop spoke at length of Hamilton Fish, and in the course of his eulogy said:

"He was one of our original board, appointed a Trustee and named as our first Vice President with Bishop McIlvaine as the second by Mr Peabody himself in 1867. Only two of that original board are left. Mr. Everts and myself, who have been witnesses to his fidelity as Chairman of our Committee of Finance from our first organization until the infirmities of old age compelled him to withdraw from any further active service. These infirmities were serious and likely at any time within ten years past to culminate, as they have done at last, in sudden death. He repeatedly tendered a resignation of his relations to this board, but the board refused to accept it."

Messrs. Everts, Courtenay, Henri, and Bishop Whipple were appointed a committee to prepare formal minutes of the death of the four Trustees.

In concluding his address, Mr. Winthrop said popular education was gaining ground, and during the past year work had been vigorously pushed by the fund. He suggested that Sept. 17, the anniversary of the adoption of the Constitution of the United States, be set apart as a day of celebration in the schools.

General Agent Curry read his report, showing great progress had been made in school work since the last meeting of the Trustees.

Joseph H. Choate of New York was elected to succeed Hamilton Fish, President Gilman of Johns Hopkins University to succeed ex-President Hayes, George W. Childs to succeed A. J. Drexel, and Judge Fenner to succeed ex-Senator Gibson.

HOME TO FRIEDRICHSRUHE.

Prince Bismarck Will Make the Journey This Afternoon.

KISSINGEN, Oct. 6. Prince Bismarck drove out with Dr. Schweninger this afternoon. He looked somewhat stronger and responded to several salutations from pedestrians along the road. In the streets of the town he was cheered by all whom he passed.

Dr. Schweninger says that he is well satisfied with his patient's condition and would long since have taken him home had Bismarck not been so fearful that traveling would make his condition worse.

The special train on which Bismarck will start for home is timed to reach Friedrichsruhe at 10 o'clock to-morrow evening. It will pass through Gottingen, in Hanover, and it is the intention of the students of the university there to march in full dress to the station to salute Prince Bismarck as he passes. The railway station at Eisenach, in the Grand Duchy of Saxe-Weimar, will be decorated in his honor.

Mishaps on the Broadway Cable Road.

The breaking of a cable strand on the Broadway cable road yesterday afternoon caused a delay of several hours in the running of the cars, when Car 17, south bound and filled with passengers, ran away at Fourteenth Street. Its grip had caught in a loose strand of the cable, and the car ran as far as Fourth Street before it could be stopped. Two women jumped to the street, but were not injured. The cable strand was found to be curled up in a hull at Great Jones Street.

Another accident on the road happened about 4 o'clock in the afternoon, when a cable car (No. 170) crashed into the rear end of a Grand Street horse car going down town, near Thirtieth Street. The horses attached to the Grand Street car became frightened and started on a gallop down Broadway, but were stopped at Twenty-sixth Street. Two women in attempting to jump from the car were thrown to the ground, but they escaped injury.

Skirmishing in Mashonaland.

LONDON, Oct. 6. Cipher dispatches from Mashonaland, received to-day at the Colonial office, give details of a harmless skirmish between a police patrol and a band of Matabele warriors. White settlers and their families have sought shelter in the fort. Fort Victoria has been prepared for an attack by the natives. It contains a large supply of food and ammunition, and is believed to be in every way qualified to hold out against a long siege. It is the habit of the Matabeles to make their attacks at the new moon. That event is about due, and it [illegible] of their bloodthirsty warriors. They are well armed.

Indicted for Manslaughter.

BOSTON, Oct. 6. The Suffolk Grand Jury reported this afternoon an indictment against Edward J. Phinney of South Boston for manslaughter in causing the death of Edward M. Shine, a fireman, by shooting. This is a reduction of the original charge, which was murder. Phinney pleaded not guilty to manslaughter, and will be tried some time this month.

for his visited some Mrs. Edwards said n
half-wild cats were Cornelia Street the r lived in her interesting rear of 32 is a court
the walls of four tene
of communication is 32. The courtyard i square, but there we ash, which one of th
were owneriess, kitti
one of the tenants and feet nuisance and the
got rid of them.

How the cats live
the reporter was inve unhappy felines. A v
number of fish from heath the cart five
is sure that was brou
St. Brigid's Church Street and Avenue B
One hundred and two been taken from it d to-night. But there a left. The old sexton possible to get rid of help of a dog. He ca with legs while mos
churchyard.

One of the witnesse
Mrs. Edwards's favo
339 East Twelfth Str
day.

"I will be only too
Edwards's behalf, for say the officers of neglecting their work again and again, but to requests concerni
Some time ago there around this neighbo
them rat poison and half dead for week
again to the officers and even went to t
paid no attention
by one. They crawl ever they could find
"Over 150 cats ha
block in the past ye did not dispose of found there suff
should like to kno
good reason why t
Mercy' should cont
Another lady who bring forward to t
tale to tell of a ca
fourth story while w ith from falling, and was allowed to live
relieved its suffering society knew of the
all the while.

Mrs. Edwards says
looking. She says insisted that she shal
her dumb friends.
never stop until she
ject.

"It may seem st said, "why I work
about at night but people who criticise have seen the poor
in hunger, and ste
whether in man or brutes that appeal f are just as worthy lings."

A Real "Prof

The invitation mat
which Nat C. Goo wi
"professionals" at th
yesterday afternoon,
enjoyable entertainm
sented to this city
the seats in the h
actors and actresse
was given up to a tier
tion, and the balcony of ten lesser lights o
girls, and utility peop author of "In Missou
cupied one of the box
the others were Mr
and Jessie Bartlett
Henriette Crosman
"The Other Man" co
Empire. Agnes Wi
Signor Perugini, E
and, Sam Bothern
Annie Yeamans. Tom
well known artists o
chestra.

"In Missouri" wo and was never before on audience. Every was given a warm re
was obliged to make of the second act. A on for a speech, but rising and bowing a audience.

The Train W

St. Mary's, Ky., O occurred at Gethsem this city, on the L at 5 o'clock this mor men are reported to train No. 42 was mak
first section, comp
had reached the brid
when the second sec
of speed, crashed in section, throwing se
and causing the iron ing the engine and bed of the creek, th

880722003

The Emma Goldman Papers

[Testimony] Emma Goldman's Beliefs / Emma Goldman.– p. 4 ; 43 cm. In The New York Daily Tribune. –(Oct. 7, 1893).

Obtained from the University of California, Berkeley. Institutional Location: Doe Library.

AWANNA.

ADVANCE OF

AGEMENT DIS-
IN CASH
& CO'S TS.
d the quiet of ely advance in stern Railroad
, the same as
cession to 146½.
d by one of the
he stock, and it
148. The broker
ich on sales of 4,200 shares the d by that time
extravagant ru-riously bidding
he best price of nt irregular de-tion being 153½.
her coal stocks
sharp advances,
e affected and
ges.
in Lackawanna
V. White, who change on ac-been active in Sugar Refining.
sponsibility for
g-standing pre-
me day sell at Central of New-ntrol, and ine president of younger man town, but the t there was no stock on the
nge in control.
na stock on the
an 14,000 shares.
portance to the
stration against of the stock is
s controlling it
The bulls are
he condition of coal are main-has been com-
stocks at tide-
the last few output agreed

ial situation re-banks are ex-ent, an increase heavy gain in Clearing House
unted to $1,235,- utstanding. No-certificates for ere cancelled in
unt is $2,395,000.
Dun & Co., by
in the United 365 against 367
onding week of eek only three
ng $100,000 each,
for less than follows of the

of improvement.
the number of mber of hands at g painfully clear
keep employed present engaged.
that of last year
crease being 10.6
business, and in houses outside
t. Reports from business. There confidence regard-
.. and this is in ty regarding the ate causes. While circulation has in-September, and them it was
is now, as it has rence rather than that while the

WAITING FOR AN OFFER.

THE TRANSFER OF THE MADISON SQUARE BANK NOT YET COMPLETED.

COUNSEL FOR THE RECEIVERS HAVE LEARNED NOTHING DEFINITE ABOUT IT—SHERMAN BANK DIRECTORS AGREE WITH THEIR PRESIDENT.

The news of the absorption of the Madison Square Bank by the Sherman Bank, which was announced exclusively in The Tribune yesterday morning, caused much surprise and comment in business and banking circles, the more so because the arrangements therefor had been made with so much secrecy that scarcely any one except those directly concerned had a suspicion that the troubles of the Madison Square Bank would be ended in that way.

The idea of absorbing the business and assets and assuming the obligations of the Madison Square Bank originated with A. N. Howell, president of the Sherman Bank. The arrangements have not all been completed yet, but it is probable that they will be finished in a few days.

The directors of the Sherman Bank took formal action on the subject at a meeting yesterday, and fully concurred in the proposition of Mr. Howell, and authorized him to proceed with final arrangements. Mr. Howell yesterday said to a Tribune reporter who called upon him at his office in the bank, Eighteenth-st. and Broadway, "I have received further satisfactory assurances to-day from the Madison Square Bank people, and the absorption of that bank by the Sherman Bank will take place before long. The receivers in charge of the affairs of the Madison Square Bank have courteously offered to allow me to examine the assets of the bank. I shall make a thorough personal investigation. You may be sure that the Sherman Bank will not undertake anything without careful and accurate knowledge, but I believe that the affairs of the Madison Square Bank are in such a shape that we can safely take charge of them.

"I hope it will be distinctly understood that this union of the two banks is not a consolidation, the merging of two banks and two managements in one. The Madison Square Bank is to go out of existence, while we take its business and its assets, and assume its liabilities. There will be no change in the management or in the Board of Directors of the Sherman Bank, and no additions to the board. The capital will probably be increased from $200,000 to $500,000."

Mr. Howell has the choice of locations, either that at present occupied by the Sherman Bank, or the rooms of the Madison Square Bank. The directors of the Sherman Bank are William J. Arkell, Jacob D. Butler, William Crawford, George C. Flint, Louis C. Fuller, George B. Jaques, George P. Johnson, Ewen McIntyre, John McLoughlin, Ludwig Nissen, Henry D. Northrop, George P. Sheldon, William R. Smith, Benjamin B. Van Derveer.

Mr. Untermyer, of Guggenheimer & Untermyer, counsel for Messrs. O'Brien and Cannon, receivers of the Madison Square Bank, said:

"The receivers have not received any definite plan by which the proposed transfer of assets and assumption of liabilities of the bank can be carried out by the Sherman Bank. There has been some unofficial, irresponsible discussion of the subject, but nothing has yet been done looking toward a definite agreement. There is no truth in the statement that the transaction will be consummated next week as reported, except that if next week or at any other time any responsible person or corporation should come to the receivers of the Madison Square Bank and give them enough money to pay depositors and offer to assume the liabilities and take care of the stockholders, the receivers would feel very much relieved and would lose no time in accepting such an offer. In the mean time the receivers are making a very thorough investigation of the peculiar methods by which the directors and officers of the Madison Square Bank managed to borrow for their own purposes almost the entire assets of the bank, and I have no doubt the officers and directors will use every effort to get rid of the Madison Square Bank creditors and stockholders, as, from the revelations that have come to my knowledge recently, it would be very much to their advantage to do so without delay."

A BIG CLOCK CONCERN IN TROUBLE.

TEMPORARY RECEIVER APPOINTED FOR THE E. N. WELCH MANUFACTURING COMPANY.

Hartford, Conn., Oct. 6.—In the Superior Court late this afternoon Judge George W. Wheeler appointed E. A. Freeman, of Bristol, temporary receiver of the E. N. Welch Manufacturing Company, of Forestville. The hearing on the confirmation of Mr. Freeman will be held on Friday, October 13. The petition for the receivership was brought by the Bristol Brass and Clock Company, which is a creditor for $6000, with the consent of the stockholders of the E. N. Welch Company, who believed a receivership necessary to prevent waste by possible attachments and sales on execution.

The capital stock of the company is $600,000 and is largely held in the family of the late E. N. Welch, [illegible]

EMMA GOLDMAN'S BELIEFS.

SHE TELLS IN COURT THE PRINCIPLES SHE TEACHES.

HER CROSS-EXAMINATION BY ASSISTANT DISTRICT-ATTORNEY M'INTYRE—A. OAKEY HALL ADDRESSES THE JURY.

Emma Goldman told in General Sessions yesterday, at her trial on the charge of using seditious language at a public meeting, what she means by anarchy and what she believes. Ex-Mayor A. Oakey Hall made his closing address to the jury. The trial was adjourned until Monday, when it will probably be finished.

Not until shortly after noon did Judge Martine finish the routine business of the court, and then

EMMA GOLDMAN.

Miss Goldman was recalled to the witness chair. Her counsel asked her a few questions. She told him that the only reason she went to the Union Square meeting was that she wanted to tell the starving people how to get bread. "I told them," she went on "that if they had no bread, they had a right to take it wherever they could find it."

Assistant District-Attorney McIntyre then began his masterly cross-examination of the defendant, as follows:

Q.—Do you believe in a Supreme Being? A.—I do not.
Q.—You are an atheist, then? A.—Yes.
Q.—How old are you? A.—Twenty-five.
Q.—Where were you born? A.—In Russia.
Q.—Why did you leave Russia? A.—For no particular reason. I lived in Rochester until five years ago—until I came here.
Q.—Where did you live when you came to New-York? A.—It will be impossible to give you all my past addresses.
Q.—Did you live alone? A.—No; there were two ladies and an Anarchist.

JUDGE MARTINE.

Q.—What was the Anarchist's name? A.—Berkmann.
Q.—Are you married? A.—Yes.
Q.—What is your husband's name? A.—I refuse to answer.
Q.—Is it Berkmann? A.—No. I cannot tell you my name.
Q.—Did you approve of the attempt of Berkmann to kill Mr. Frick? A.—I have sympathy and respect for Mr. Berkmann.
Q.—Did you approve of his act? A.—No.
Q.—Are you an Anarchist? A.—Yes.
Q.—What do you understand about anarchy? A.—A total absence of law. I do not believe in any law which would oppress the poor. I believe only in moral law.

A PUBLIC OUTRAGE.

MR. DANA'S PROTEST AGAINST A SPEEDWAY PLAN.

HE DENOUNCES THE SINGLE SIDEWALK ON THE OPPOSITE SIDE OF THE DRIVE FROM THE RIVER, BUT IS OVERRULED—WORK TO BEGIN AT ONCE.

Plans for the construction of the Harlem River Speedway were settled by the Park Commissioners yesterday as far north as High Bridge. The Board decided to have only one sidewalk the whole length of the speedway, and that the walk shall be on the west side of the road. The advocates of two sidewalks argued that people who do not own fast horses will thus be deprived of the river view, and from One-hundred-and-Fifty-fifth-st. to the foot of the hill property holders will be cut off entirely on the east side of the road. Although that part of the speedway is a public street, it was shown that the owners of abutting property cannot use it when the street becomes a part of the speedway. But a majority of the board turned a deaf ear to these appeals.

During the board's tour of inspection of the land it decided at a meeting held at High Bridge on September 13, on Commissioner Straus's motion, to adopt the course finally settled yesterday. The necessary resolutions were ordered to be spread upon the minutes. Commissioner Dana was not present when the action was taken at High Bridge. At yesterday's meeting he protested against the action taken.

"After the commission had visited the site of the speedway on the date in question," he said, "I thought the meeting was over, as I supposed its object was to have an inspection only. That finished, I came downtown, not expecting anything more would be done there. Hearing of such action, I entered my protest."

Commissioner Straus proposed a reconsideration. Commissioner Clausen said that his understanding of the object of the September meeting was to do exactly what was done, and he supposed that Mr. Dana had the same understanding.

The vote of September 13 was then reconsidered, and President Tappen declared the resolutions again before the board. The president explained that it was the board's intention to have the engineer begin work on the speedway from One-hundred-and-fifty-fifth-st. to High Bridge at once. Mr. Dana asked Mr. Straus if he favored only one sidewalk from One-hundred-and-fifty-fifth-st. to the foot of the hill. Mr. Straus answered "Yes," adding that he thought Mr. Dana held the same view.

"That is entirely wrong," replied Mr. Dana. "I never held such a view. This is a public street, cut through the city, and I very much doubt whether the rights of the owners of adjoining property can be curtailed, and whether you can say to a man who builds a house there that he cannot come out of his front door and his front gate."

Mr. Straus replied that the law had set the street aside and made it exclusively a speedway.

"Would you, Mr. Straus, abolish the rights of the property owner along that line?" asked Mr. Dana.

Mr. Straus made no audible reply.

Mr. Tappen and Mr. Clausen thought there would be no objecting property owners.

Mr. Dana said that the road from One-hundred-and-fifty-fifth-st. to the foot of the hill should not be a part of the speedway proper. More properly it should be an approach to the speedway, because it was too steep for anybody to think of speeding horses down it.

President Tappen remarked that it would be much safer for pedestrians if there was a sidewalk only on one side of the street. Mr. Clausen argued that the speedway was especially laid out for the speeding of horses, and the first consideration, even at the expense of the popularity of the road, should be unrestricted speeding. A sidewalk on both sides would introduce an element of danger and would interfere with the main object of the road.

Mr. Dana said: "You, gentlemen, well know that I have no disposition to curtail the rights of horsemen or the unrestricted enjoyment of the object for which the road was projected. But I want to help its future by making it more popular. There should be a sidewalk on either side. I have no idea that the road shall be crossed on grade."

"How would you provide crossings, then?" asked Mr. Straus.

[illegible] answered Mr. Dana. He then asked Mr. Bonner, who was present, about speeding horses on another grade in the proposed road. Mr. Bonner replied that the grade was as steep as he considered safe to speed horses on.

"That grade," said Mr. Dana, "is one in 125. The grade on the hill is one in twenty-five."

The matter of the side on which a single walk should be placed was then taken up. Mr. Dana said that the walk should be on the right, or east side. The resolution placed it on the other side. The matter was discussed at great length. Mr. Dana said that it should be on the right side of the speedway because it is the river side, and by nature it belonged to the people. [illegible] was for the opposite side because it

43

880722003

The Emma Goldman Papers

[Testimony] Emma Goldman's Beliefs / Emma Goldman.— p. 4 ; 43 cm. In The New York Daily Tribune. —(Oct. 7, 1893).

Obtained from the University of California, Berkeley. Institutional Location: Doe Library.

...ng ... at improvement. ...e the number of ...number of loads of ...ing gainfully clear ... to keep employed ... present engaged. ...w that of last year ...crease being 10.0 ...s business, and in ...ng houses outside ...nt. Reports from ... business. There ... confidence regard... ago, and this is in ...ity regarding the ...state causes. While ...circulation has in... of September, and ...,000 than it was ... is now, as it has ...idence rather than ...ed that while the ...er $5,052,817, the ...ury has increased ...which took out sd... ...nd sold the bonds ...w-York banks has ... of Clearing House ...shows a great im... ...nd yet there is but ...idence upon which ... depend.

...ompanies in Sep...ing a total paid ... list of the com...neering and Min...y, is as follows.

...d in ...mber.	Paid since Jan. 1...
.....	$275,000
.....	60,000
.....	20,000
....	37,500
...,000	45,000
..	200,000
...,000	1,000,000
...,000	142,500
...,400	36,000
...,500	387,500
.....	27,300
.....	67,120
.....	10,000
.....	200,000
.....	187,500
.....	350,000
.....	115,000
...,875	175,000
.....	175,000
...,000	45,000
...,500	112,500
...,000	145,000
...,500	112,500
.....	150,000
...,000	187,500
...,750	77,500
...,000	60,000
.....	50,000
.....	150,000
...,000	90,000
.....	420,000
...,000	1,080,000
...,800	57,600
.....	60,000
.....	100,000
...,600	82,400
.....	50,000
.....	15,000
...,000	102,000
...,000	84,000
.....	20,367
.....	800,000
.....	10,000
.....	23,000
.....	15,343
.....	20,000
.....	200,000
...,600	22,000
.....	5,000
...,000	75,000
...,000	27,000
...,175	$7,419,900

...ONDITION.

...VENUE PROBBY- ...THAT IT IS ... TROUBLE.

...terday that the ...rch, the Rev. Dr. ...s in a bankrupt ...ffice at Madison- ... to be sold. This ...ave been brought ...of the so-called ... started by Dr. It was then pro- ...expenses of the ...and other work, ...contributions. ... a meeting last ...g statement for

...rian Church of... ...ng in one of the ...is so false that ...of reply, beyond ...encouraging; that ...heir property, and ...are going on with

... reporter that the ...ressed, that the ...that the members ...He added that he ... permanent.

...D VIA MIAMI

Sheldon William tt, Smith, Benjamin M. Van Hoevel.

Mr. Untermyer of Guggenheimer & Untermyer, counsel for Messrs O'Brien and Cannon, receivers of the Madison Square Bank, said:

"The receivers have not received any definite plan by which the proposed transfer of assets and assumption of liabilities of the bank can be carried out by the Sherman Bank. There has been some unofficial, irresponsible discussion of the subject, but nothing has yet been done looking toward a definite agreement. There is no truth in the statement that the transaction will be consummated next week as reported, except that if next week or at any other time any responsible person or corporation should come to the receivers of the Madison Square Bank, and give them enough money to pay depositors and offer to assume the liabilities and take care of the stockholders, the receivers would feel very much relieved and would lose no time in accepting such an offer. In the mean time the receivers are making a very thorough investigation of the peculiar methods by which the directors and officers of the Madison Square Bank managed to borrow for their own purposes almost the entire assets of the bank, and I have no doubt the officers and directors will use every effort to get rid of the Madison Square Bank creditors and stockholders, as, from the revelations that have come to my knowledge recently, it would be very much to their advantage to do so without delay."

A BIG CLOCK CONCERN IN TROUBLE.

TEMPORARY RECEIVER APPOINTED FOR THE E. N. WELCH MANUFACTURING COMPANY.

Hartford, Conn., Oct. 6.—In the Superior Court late this afternoon Judge George W. Wheeler appointed E. A. Freeman, of Bristol, temporary receiver of the E. N. Welch Manufacturing Company, of Forestville. The hearing on the confirmation of Mr. Freeman will be held on Friday, October 13, in this city. The petition for the receivership was brought by the Bristol Brass and Clock Company, which is a creditor for $50,000, with the consent of the stockholders of the E. N. Welch company, who believed a receivership necessary to prevent waste by possible attachments and sales on execution.

The capital stock of the company is $500,000 and is largely held in the family of the late E. N. Welch, of Bristol, and the late President Atkins, of the Bristol Brass and Clock Company. Since the death of Mr. Atkins the concern has been financially embarrassed and has stopped manufacturing. The company is the oldest and one of the largest clock concerns in the country, employing hundreds of hands. It did an immense business, and maintained salesrooms in New-York and Chicago, with branch houses in London, Glasgow, Shanghai, and Yokohama. The liabilities are something over $400,000 and the assets are estimated at $600,000. Other large creditors are banks in New-Haven, Bristol and Hartford. These are understood to be fairly secured by collaterals. Outside the banks and the Bristol company the liabilities will not exceed $15,000 and there are no New-York or Boston banks involved.

THE NEW-HAVEN TENNIS GAMES.

CHACE THE INTERCOLLEGIATE CHAMPION—A LONG STRUGGLE IN THE DOUBLES.

New-Haven, Conn., Oct. 6 (Special).—Malcolm Chace won the championship of the Intercollegiate Tennis Association to-day by defeating Foote, of Yale, 6—3, 6—2, 6—3. Chace took the lead from the start, and by his long cross-court drives steadily scored point after point. Foote's game was a careful one and every inch was hotly contested, but he lacked judgment in side-line drives and volleyed into the net frequently. The set between Budlong and Foote in the semi-finals, which was played off this morning, resulted in Foote's favor, 6—4. Budlong had the faster pace, but Foote used his head more and took advantage of every opportunity.

The finale in the doubles gave the championship to Budlong and Chace, of Brown, against Foote and Howland, of Yale. Brown won only after a long struggle, as the score proves. Following is the summary:

Semi-final round—Foote, Yale, beat Budlong, Brown, 6—4, 3—6, 6—4. Final round—Malcolm Chace, Brown, beat Foote, Yale, 6—3, 6—2, 6—3.

Doubles—Final round—Budlong and Chace, Brown, beat Foote and Howland, Yale, 6—1, 6—3, 2—6, 4—6, 6—4.

FIFTH ROUND IN THE CHESS MATCH.

A large crowd of spectators witnessed the games of the fifth round of the International tournament at the Manhattan Chess Club. Here is a summary of the results: Olly fell an easy victim to Lasker in a centre counter gambit after thirty-three moves; Schmidt lost a game, P—Q 4 opening, to Pillsbury, this contest being full of exciting incidents after sixty-two moves; Delmar beat the Parisian, Taubenhaus, in a Petcoff defence after forty-four moves; Ryan succeeded in beating Pollock in a Pouziani opening after thirty-six moves, although the latter had the best of the game at one time; Hanham lost a piece against Showalter in a counter centre gambit, and the game, after thirty-six moves, while Albin outplayed Gossip in a Giuoco Piano and scored after twenty-three moves. Jasnogrodsky excelled by beating Lee in a Zukertort opening after thirty-six moves. This game was the masterpiece of the tournament so far, the Pole deserving high praise for it.

A DOCTOR DIES FROM POISON.

Dr. Joseph Lee, a druggist at Hicksville, died Thursday morning at Franklin's Hotel, Oyster Bay, from the effects of poison, self-administered. It is

...and an Anarchist.

JUDGE MARTINE.

Q.—What was the Anarchist's name? A.—Berkmann.

Q.—Are you married? A.—Yes.

Q.—What is your husband's name? A.—I refuse to answer.

Q.—Is it Berkmann? A.—No. I cannot tell you my name.

Q.—Did you approve of the attempt of Berkmann to kill Mr. Frick? A.—I have sympathy and respect for Mr. Berkmann.

Q.—Did you approve of his act? A.—No.

Q.—Are you an Anarchist? A.—Yes.

Q.—What do you understand about anarchy? A.—A total absence of law. I do not believe in any law which would oppress the poor. I believe only in moral law.

OAKEY HALL.

I understand by anarchy the liberty to live and live unrestrained by any law.

Q.—Do you submit to and honor the laws passed by the Government? A.—I do not honor any law.

Q.—Do you know Herr Most? A.—Yes. I do not have exactly the same opinions as he has.

Q.—Do you know Timmerman? A.—Yes.

Q.—Do you remember his speech delivered on August 21? A.—Yes.

Q.—Did you approve of all that he said in that speech? A.—Yes. I do not believe that he spoke in violation of the law.

Q.—Did you ever live with Timmerman? A.—I once lived in the same house with him, at No. 550 East Sixteenth-st.

Q.—Where do you live now? A.—At the Tombs. (Laughter.)

Q.—Have you any means of support? A.—Yes. I am a dressmaker and work whenever I can. I make from $3 to $6 a week.

Q.—If you are displeased with the form of government in the United States, why don't you go elsewhere? A.—All countries on earth are alike. I don't care to go to Heaven at one jump.

Q.—Are you familiar with the Constitution of the United States? A.—Yes; and I believe that it if were carried out in the spirit and letter I would be satisfied. But it is not so. The laws are made in favor of the rich, and the poor are ignored and oppressed.

The woman said she merely wanted the unemployed to march past the houses of the rich, who would then give them bread.

"If the crowds became riotous, would you stop them?" Mr. McIntyre asked.

The reply, after some parrying, was in the negative.

"What do Anarchists want with dynamite bombs?"

"To use in the great social revolution which is impending."

"Would you use bombs?"

"I cannot say what I would do. I may not live to see the day of the battle."

In the afternoon ex-Mayor Hall summed up his side of the case. He declared that the meeting in Union Square on August 21 was a lawful one, a permit to hold it having been given by the proper authorities. The crowd was entirely peaceful, and his client's speech incited it to no disorder. The prosecution, Mr. Hall declared, was based only on a plot for the aggrandisement of one police official.

A PYROMANIAC IN JUSTICE HOGAN'S HOUSE.

An investigation of the five recent fires in the house of Police Justice Hogan, at No. 57 Seventh-ave., has been made by Fire Marshal Mitchell. The evidence obtained indicates that a nine-year-old son of Mrs. W. T. Shine, a sister-in-law of the Justice, living in the house, has been starting the

...ray to a man who builds a house there that he cannot come out of his front door and his front gate."

Mr. Straus replied that the law had set the street aside and made it exclusively a speedway.

"Would you," Mr. Straus, abolish the rights of the property owner along that line?" asked Mr. Dana.

Mr. Straus made no audible reply.

Mr. Tappen and Mr. Clausen thought there would be no objecting property owners.

Mr. Dana said that the road from One-hundred-and-fifty-fifth-st. to the foot of the hill should not be a part of the speedway proper. More properly it should be an approach to the speedway, because it was too steep for anybody to think of speeding horses down it.

President Tappen remarked that it would be much safer for pedestrians if there was a sidewalk only on one side of the street. Mr. Clausen argued that the speedway was especially laid out for the speeding of horses, and the first consideration, even at the expense of the popularity of the road, should be unrestricted speeding. A sidewalk on both sides would introduce an element of danger and would interfere with the main object of the road.

Mr. Dana said: "You, gentlemen, well know that I have no disposition to curtail the rights of horsemen or the unrestricted enjoyment of the object for which the road was projected. But I want to help its future by making it more popular. There should be a sidewalk on either side. I have no idea that the road shall be crossed on grade."

"How would you provide crossings, then?" asked Mr. Straus.

"By bridges," answered Mr. Dana. He then asked Mr. Bonner, who was present, about speeding horses on another grade in the proposed road. Mr. Bonner replied that the grade was as steep as he considered safe to speed horses on.

"That grade," said Mr. Dana, "is one in 125. The grade on the hill is one in twenty-five."

The matter of the side on which a single walk should be placed was then taken up. Mr. Dana said that the walk should be on the right, or east side. The resolution placed it on the other side. The matter was discussed at great length. Mr. Dana said that it should be on the right side of the speedway because it is the river side, and by nature it belonged to the people.

Mr. Straus was for the opposite side because it is the side from which people who visited the speedway would come, and to reach the walk if it were on the other side they would have to cross the roadway. Mr. Dana replied that to shut the public off from their right to the river side was not only untenable in principle, but also impracticable.

Mr. Straus said that there was not land enough for two walks. Mr. Dana was sure there was plenty of room to do all that was expected of the board. With one walk the crowds at the speedway would be positively unmanageable.

Before the vote was taken Mr. Dana said: "I want to repeat now that the proposition that the public shall be shut off in this way from the river side I regard as a public outrage. Not only that, but it is wholly unnecessary."

The vote stood three to one, Mr. Dana voting alone in the negative. Messrs. Tappen, Straus and Clausen voted "Aye." The resolution ordering that construction begin at once was passed by the same vote.

A committee from the Century Club, headed by ex-Minister John Bigelow, objected to the selection of Bryant Park for the monument of William Cullen Bryant, preferring Central Park instead. The club, however, is not unanimous on this point. Mr. Vaux, the landscape architect, selected Bryant Park. Mr. Bigelow said $18,000 or $19,000 was in the committee's hands to build the monument, subscribed on the understanding that the monument should be in Central Park.

On motion of Mr. Dana, the landscape architect was requested to report if there was a suitable place in Central Park for the monument.

"RUNNEL" SCHARF ON THE RACK.

HE FAILS TO SHAKE EVIDENCE THAT HE USED BAD LANGUAGE TO CHUNG AH HONG.

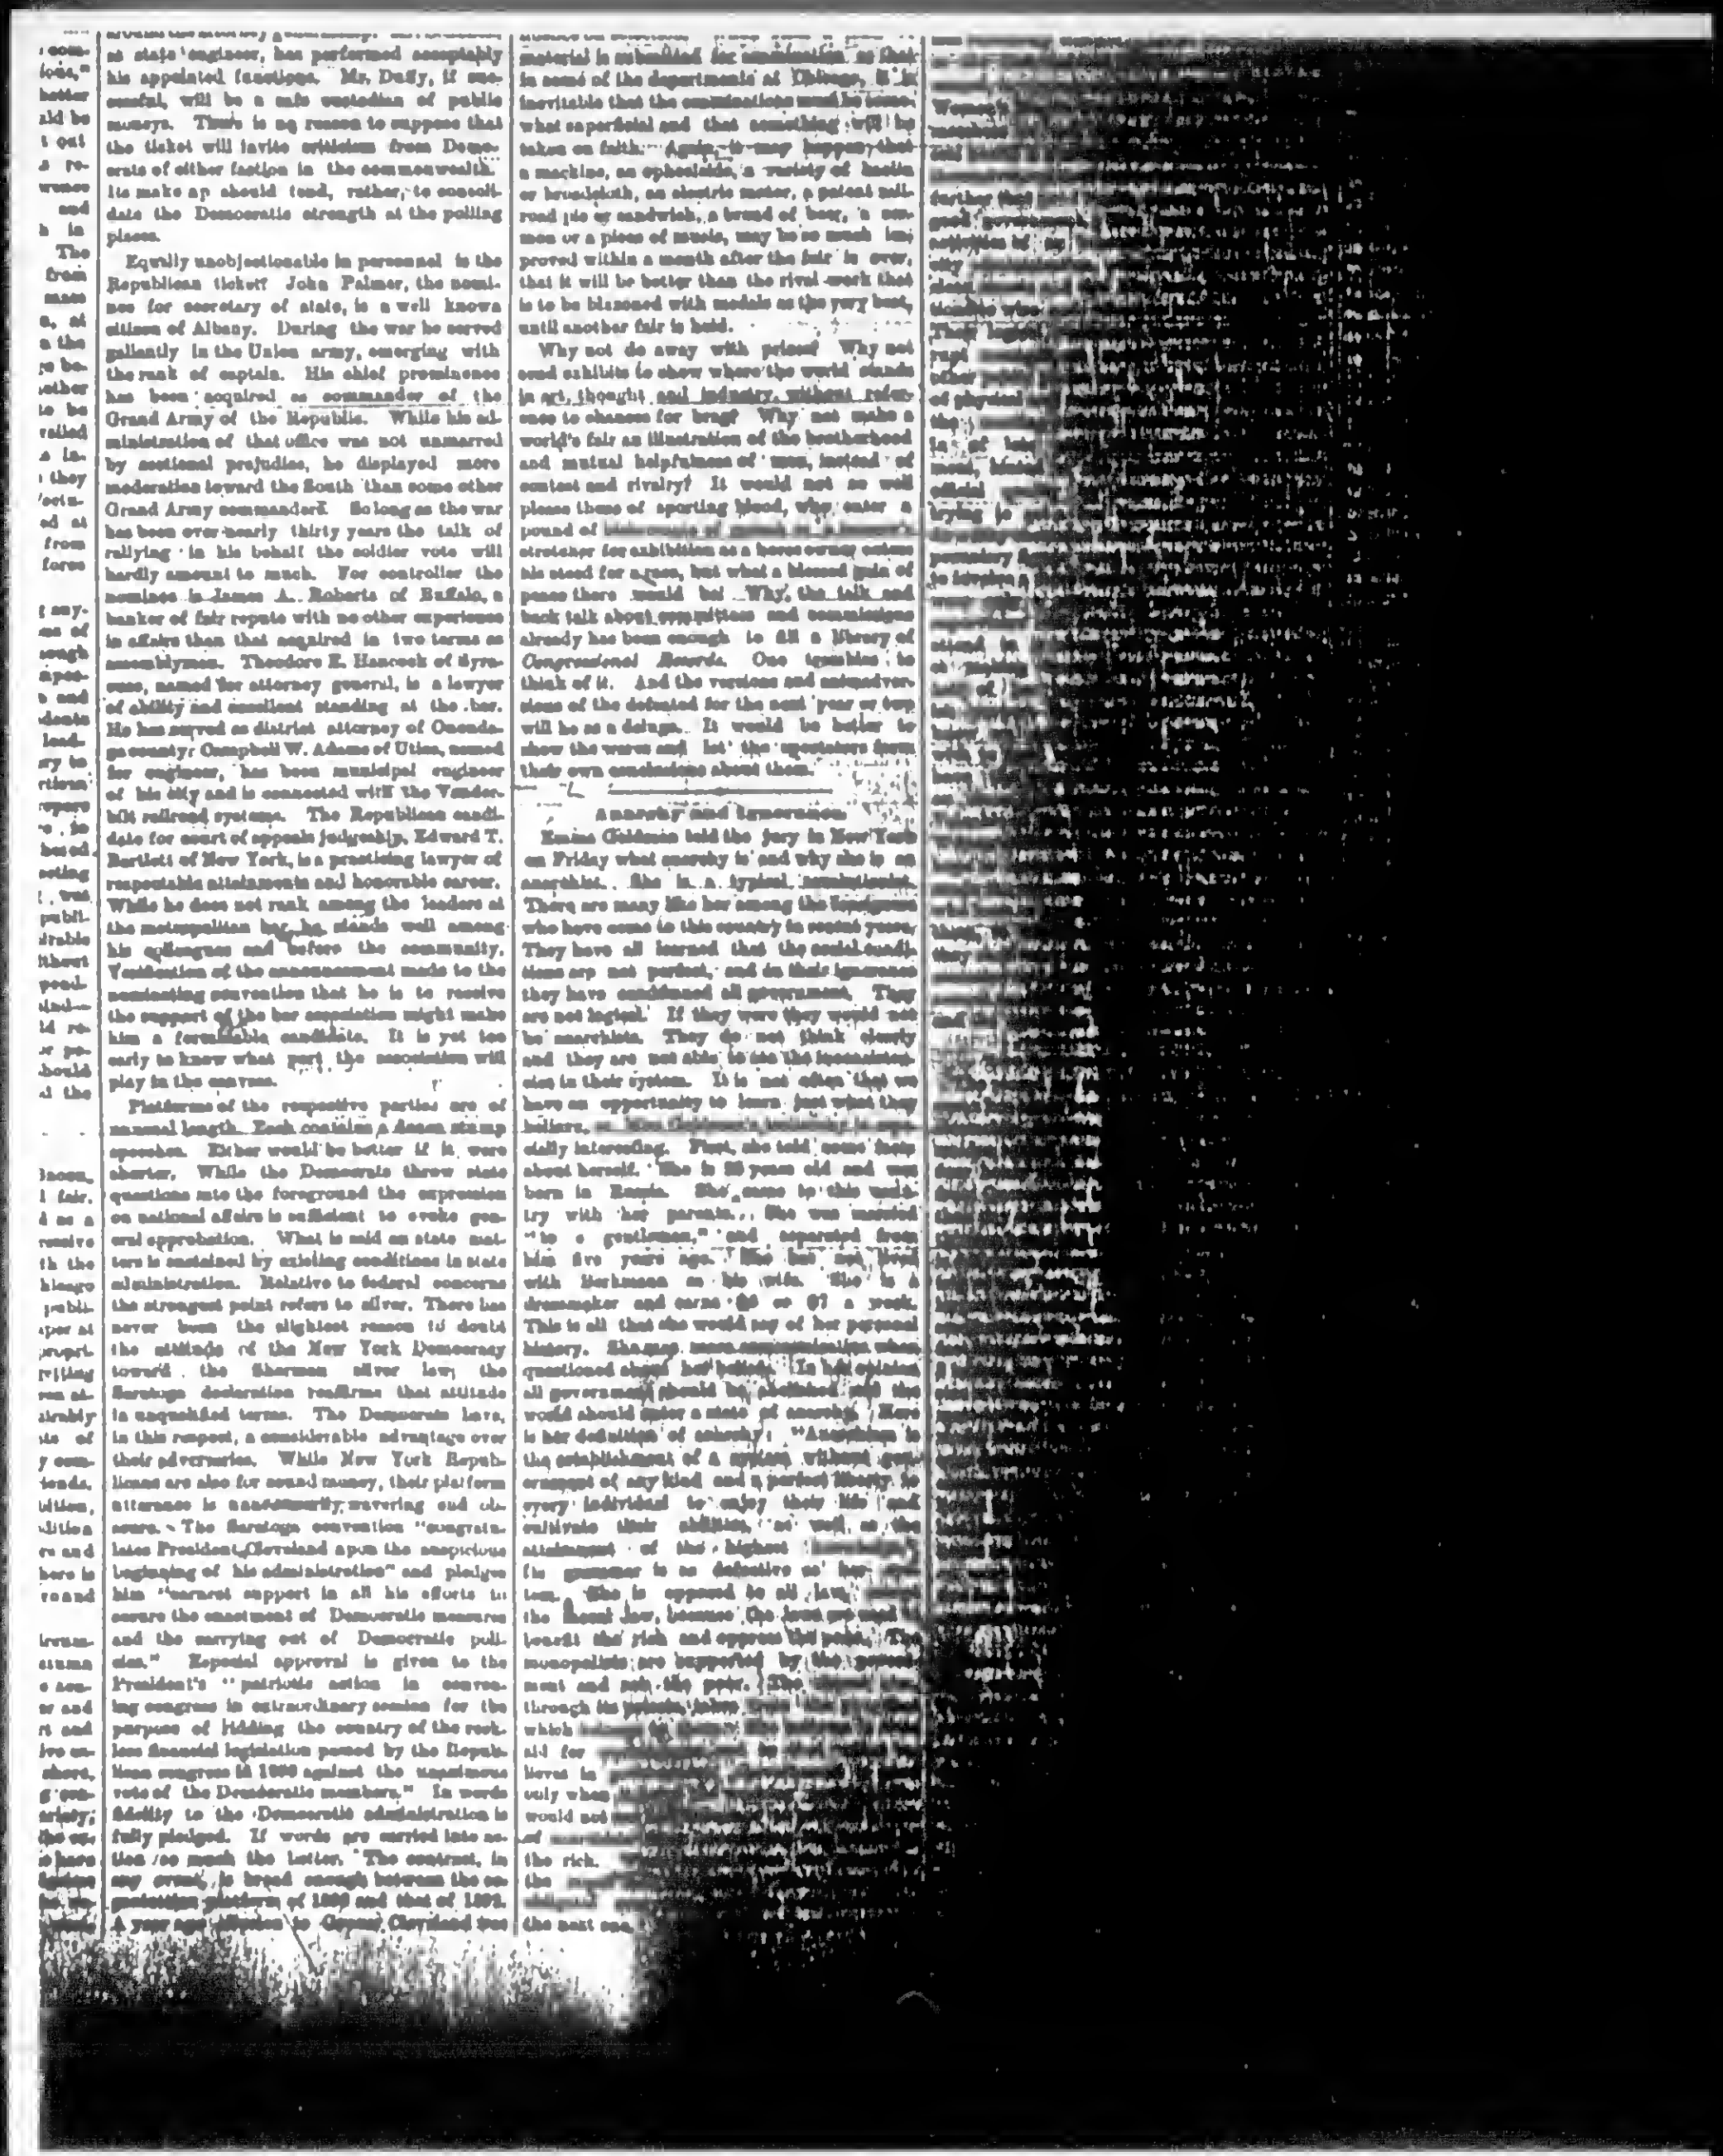
Thomas J. Cummings, who is temporarily in charge of the special agents at this port, began an investigation yesterday of the charges made by Chung Ah Hong, a Chinese merchant, at No. 117 Mott-st., against J. Thomas Scharf, Chinese Inspector. The Chinaman declared, in an affidavit which was sent to the Secretary of the Treasury, that Scharf had used indecent language to him, had threatened to throw him overboard and to "smash him in the face." Secretary Carlisle turned the case over to the special agents for investigation, and it fell to Mr. Cummings's lot to do it. Charles P. McClelland, of the law firm of Hess, Townsend & McClelland, represented the Chinaman. The investigation opened with a brush between Mr. McClelland and Scharf. Scharf objected to the method of examination pursued by the lawyer, and said:

"I want you to understand that I am a lawyer, too, and from what I have seen of New-York lawyers I think that I am as good a lawyer as any of them."

"As a rule, Colonel Scharf, New-York lawyers are able to make a living without becoming Chinese Inspectors," replied Mr. McClelland.

Hong, the man who made the complaint, was the first witness. He said that he went down to the steamship Yumuri, of the Ward line, to identify Fong Ye Chong, his partner. He was talking with the interpreter when Scharf came along and said to him:

"Shut up. Get out of my way, you —— Chinaman, or I'll throw you overboard." Then Scharf called to an officer of the ship, but Hong stepped away.



Dr. James B. Horton, of Brooklyn, Charles J. Kingston, the Chinese interpreter, and Miguel Atak, 891215012

The Emma Goldman Papers

[Testimony] Anarchy and Ignorance / Emma Goldman.– 28 cm. In The Brooklyn Daily Eagle. –(Oct. 7, 1893).

Permission to reproduce or quote in any form must be obtained from The New York Public Library, Astor, Lenox and Tilden Foundations. Institutional Location: Rare Books and Manuscripts Division.

as state engineer, has performed acceptably his appointed functions. Mr. Duffy, if successful, will be a safe custodian of public moneys. There is no reason to suppose that the ticket will invite criticism from Democrats of either faction in the commonwealth. Its make up should tend, rather, to consolidate the Democratic strength at the polling places.

Equally unobjectionable in personnel is the Republican ticket. John Palmer, the nominee for secretary of state, is a well known citizen of Albany. During the war he served gallantly in the Union army, emerging with the rank of captain. His chief prominence has been acquired as commander of the Grand Army of the Republic. While his administration of that office was not unmarred by sectional prejudice, he displayed more moderation toward the South than some other Grand Army commanders. So long as the war has been over nearly thirty years the talk of rallying in his behalf the soldier vote will hardly amount to much. For controller the nominee is James A. Roberts of Buffalo, a banker of fair repute with no other experience in affairs than that acquired in two terms as assemblyman. Theodore E. Hancock of Syracuse, named for attorney general, is a lawyer of ability and excellent standing at the bar. He has served as district attorney of Onondaga county. Campbell W. Adams of Utica, named for engineer, has been municipal engineer of his city and is connected with the Vanderbilt railroad systems. The Republican candidate for court of appeals judgeship, Edward T. Bartlett of New York, is a practicing lawyer of respectable attainments and honorable career. While he does not rank among the leaders at the metropolitan bar, he stands well among his colleagues and before the community. Ventilation of the announcement made to the nominating convention that he is to receive the support of the Tammany organization might make him a formidable candidate. It is yet too early to know what part the association will play in the canvass.

Platforms of the respective parties are of unusual length. Each contains a dozen stump speeches. Either would be better if it were shorter. While the Democrats throw state questions into the foreground the expression on national affairs is sufficient to evoke general approbation. What is said on state matters is sustained by existing conditions in state administration. Relative to federal concerns the strongest point refers to silver. There has never been the slightest reason to doubt the attitude of the New York Democracy toward the Sherman silver law; the Saratoga declaration reaffirms that attitude in unqualified terms. The Democrats have, in this respect, a considerable advantage over their adversaries. While New York Republicans are also for sound money, their platform utterance is assuredly wavering and obscure. The Saratoga convention "congratulates President Cleveland upon the auspicious beginning of his administration" and pledges him "earnest support in all his efforts to secure the enactment of Democratic measures and the carrying out of Democratic policies." Especial approval is given to the President's "patriotic action in convening congress in extraordinary session for the purpose of ridding the country of the reckless financial legislation passed by the Republican congress in 1890 against the unanimous vote of the Democratic members." In words fidelity to the Democratic administration is fully pledged. If words are carried into action so much the better. The contrast, in any event, is broad enough between the convention platform of 1892 and that of 1893. A year ago allusion to Grover Cleveland was material is embodied for consideration as that in some of the departments at Chicago, it is inevitable that the examination must be somewhat superficial and that something will be taken on faith. Again, it may happen that a machine, an ophthalmic, a variety of linotype or breadstuff, an electric motor, a patent railroad tie or sandwich, a brand of beer, a remedy or a piece of music, may be so much improved within a month after the fair is over, that it will be better than the rival work that is to be blazoned with medals as the very best, until another fair is held.

Why not do away with prizes? Why not send exhibits to show where the world stands in art, thought and industry, without reference to chances for brag? Why not make a world's fair an illustration of the brotherhood and mutual helpfulness of men, instead of contest and rivalry? It would not so well please those of sporting blood, who enter a pound of [illegible] stretcher for exhibition as a horse every entered his stead for a purse, but what a blessed gain of peace there would be! Why, the talk and back talk about competition and commissions already has been enough to fill a library of Congressional Records. One trembles to think of it. And the versions and misadventures of the defeated for the next year or two will be as a deluge. It would be better to show the wares and let the spectators form their own conclusions about them.

Anarchy and Ignorance

Emma Goldman told the jury in New York on Friday what anarchy is and why she is an anarchist. She is a typical nonrevolutionist. There are many like her among the foreigners who have come to this country in recent years. They have all learned that the social conditions are not perfect, and in their ignorance they have condemned all government. They are not logical. If they were they would not be anarchists. They do not think clearly and they are not able to see the inconsistencies in their system. It is not always that we have an opportunity to learn just what they believe.

[illegible] daily interesting. First, she told some facts about herself. She is 26 years old and was born in Russia. She came to this country with her parents. She was married "to a gentleman," and separated from him five years ago. She has not lived with the man as his wife. She is a dressmaker and earns $8 or $9 a week. This is all that she would say of her personal history. She was more communicative when questioned about her beliefs. In her opinion all government should be abolished and the world should enter a state of anarchy. Here is her definition of anarchy: "Anarchism is the establishment of a system without government of any kind and a perfect liberty to every individual to enjoy their life and cultivate their abilities, as well as the attainment of the highest [illegible] the government is so defective as to [illegible] tem. She is opposed to all laws, the worst law, because the laws are made to assist the rich and oppress the poor. The monopolists are supported by the government and rob the poor. The [illegible] through its priests, [illegible] which [illegible] aid for [illegible] believes in [illegible] only when [illegible] would not [illegible] of [illegible] the rich. [illegible] the next one

BEST COPY AVAILABLE

891215012

The Emma Goldman Papers

[Testimony] Anarchy and Ignorance / Emma Goldman.– 28 cm. In The Brooklyn Daily Eagle. –(Oct. 7, 1893).

Permission to reproduce or quote in any form must be obtained from The New York Public Library, Astor, Lenox and Tilden Foundations. Institutional Location: Rare Books and Manuscripts Division.

BROOKLYN DAILY EAGLE

...ve been ...They are ...columns. ...aning. of ...l return. ...ipment. ...Erie lines. ...this even... ...em. The ...a Chicago ...ntral will ...urdenists ...lenge on ...quartered. ...ted. Re... ...rnism in... ...grounds ...e basis of ...ale on the ...he resorts ...n this in... ...and to a ...crowning ...reception ...has been ...discursive ...on, given New York ...from 7 ...ists are ...cordially ...okiynites ...and even... ...s obtained ...ers build... ...ptions will ...bt seeing, ...to their ...ext week. ...atisfaction ...l fair en... ...fort and ...ments, at ...pecuniary ...wing the ...of notable

...fairly rep... ...ster of the ...ree no en... ...s the con... ...for secre... ...peculiarly ...ected, will ...sention is ...a business ...mproving. ...as neither ...tarnished ...is sturdy ...opposition ...rmance of ...s of resi... Living on ...lyn is an ...e virtually ...no reason ...us Demo... His asso... ...ll, Duffy, ...ment and ...erience in ...controller ...rity, diffi... ...has amply ...of cluster ...Schenck,

...ntemporaneously ...omitted. To ignore President Cleveland would be quite another matter.

National questions will play a subordinate part in the opening campaign. Discussion of state issues will be attended by the usual partisan demonstrations in opposing camps. The Democrats have not omitted to "arraign" the opposition, to the utter exhaustion of a very extensive vocabulary. The Republican platform makers have painted their rivals in deepest black. While the politicians are outstanding and the stampers are spouting, the people are not likely to plunge into frenzy over any phase of the situation. Unless an unexpected uprising is to occur in regard to the appeals judgeship the germs of a political revolution are not discernible in New York politics this year. Normally, the state is Democratic. While the Democratic machine management is not acceptable to all Democratic and independent citizens, its inferiority to the Republican machine remains to be demonstrated. There is no reason, in any event, for rational voters to lie awake o' nights. With fair state tickets and reasonably good candidates at large for the constitutional convention placed in nomination the parties are likely to concentrate their endeavors chiefly in the legislative districts. Under the new apportionment Republican chances of carrying the legislature are not assuring. The Republican leaders will, nevertheless, omit no exertion which promises them control of senate and assembly. They would undoubtedly prefer supremacy in either house to any other result that could be accomplished in the canvass.

Why Not Be Away with Medals?

For several years to come we shall have it forced on our attention that Dr. Ames's Liverwort and Bismuth Extract is superior to all other drugs for the treatment of paralysis, cancer, hydrophobia, smallpox and several hundred meaner disorders; also that Dougherty's Old Ginger Rum is the greatest and juiciest; likewise that Biff & Bangs's pianos are the only ones played by real artists; and, similarly, how can you expect to hold your stomach up if you don't wear Dr. [illegible]schola's Celebrated Tonic Worsted Suspenders? For the medals are going around at the world's fair and they will be flashed in the eyes of an impressed public until some other fellows get [illegible] fellows are waiting, what burning of the heart and bitterness of spirit!

The worth of an official indorsement by prize giving committees has never been accurately estimated. In spite of the eager scramble for it there are reasons for thinking that its value is not above rubies—that is, a good, big handful of rubies. There are, for example, exhibitors who decline to enter their goods in competition with others, being too well assured of public favor to make it needful. One of the best known piano makers in America sent none of his instruments to Chicago. He has a trunkful of medals, diplomas and honorable mentions and he probably was willing that some other house should have a show. And his prosperity will not be affected a dollar's worth by the award of the first class gold medal to one of his rivals. He approved the fair, as a fair, and made a liberal gift of money to it, but he did not care to use it as an advertisement.

If he can afford not to avail himself of a medal can not some other concerns afford to withdraw from competition, too? Without impeaching the intent or the veracity of the awarding committees, it must be seen that infallibility of judgment is too much to expect, and that personal tastes will have their influence on selection. When such a mass of all that to [illegible] lief in this doctrine is not [illegible] hatred for the rich would [illegible] may be that she believes that the love the poor and that the poor themselves. It is the last complaint that all there is left of sympathy. Hate predicted a war between the rich and beggars the laboring man could not [illegible] from their slavery in any other way.

So long as people are ignorant of fundamental economic principles there will be anarchists and men who will talk about us the poor man's money. There is no [illegible] about the conditions of which the complain. Society is not perfect and government is not without defects. The poor with hunger while the rich are gratified good things. But anarchy will not cure these evils. It will rather increase them. The truth of the maxim that that government best which governs the least is generally accepted, but it does not mean that [illegible] the ideal toward which the world is [illegible] A little more education would convert Emma Goldman from an anarchist to a law [illegible]

The Trolley Accidents.

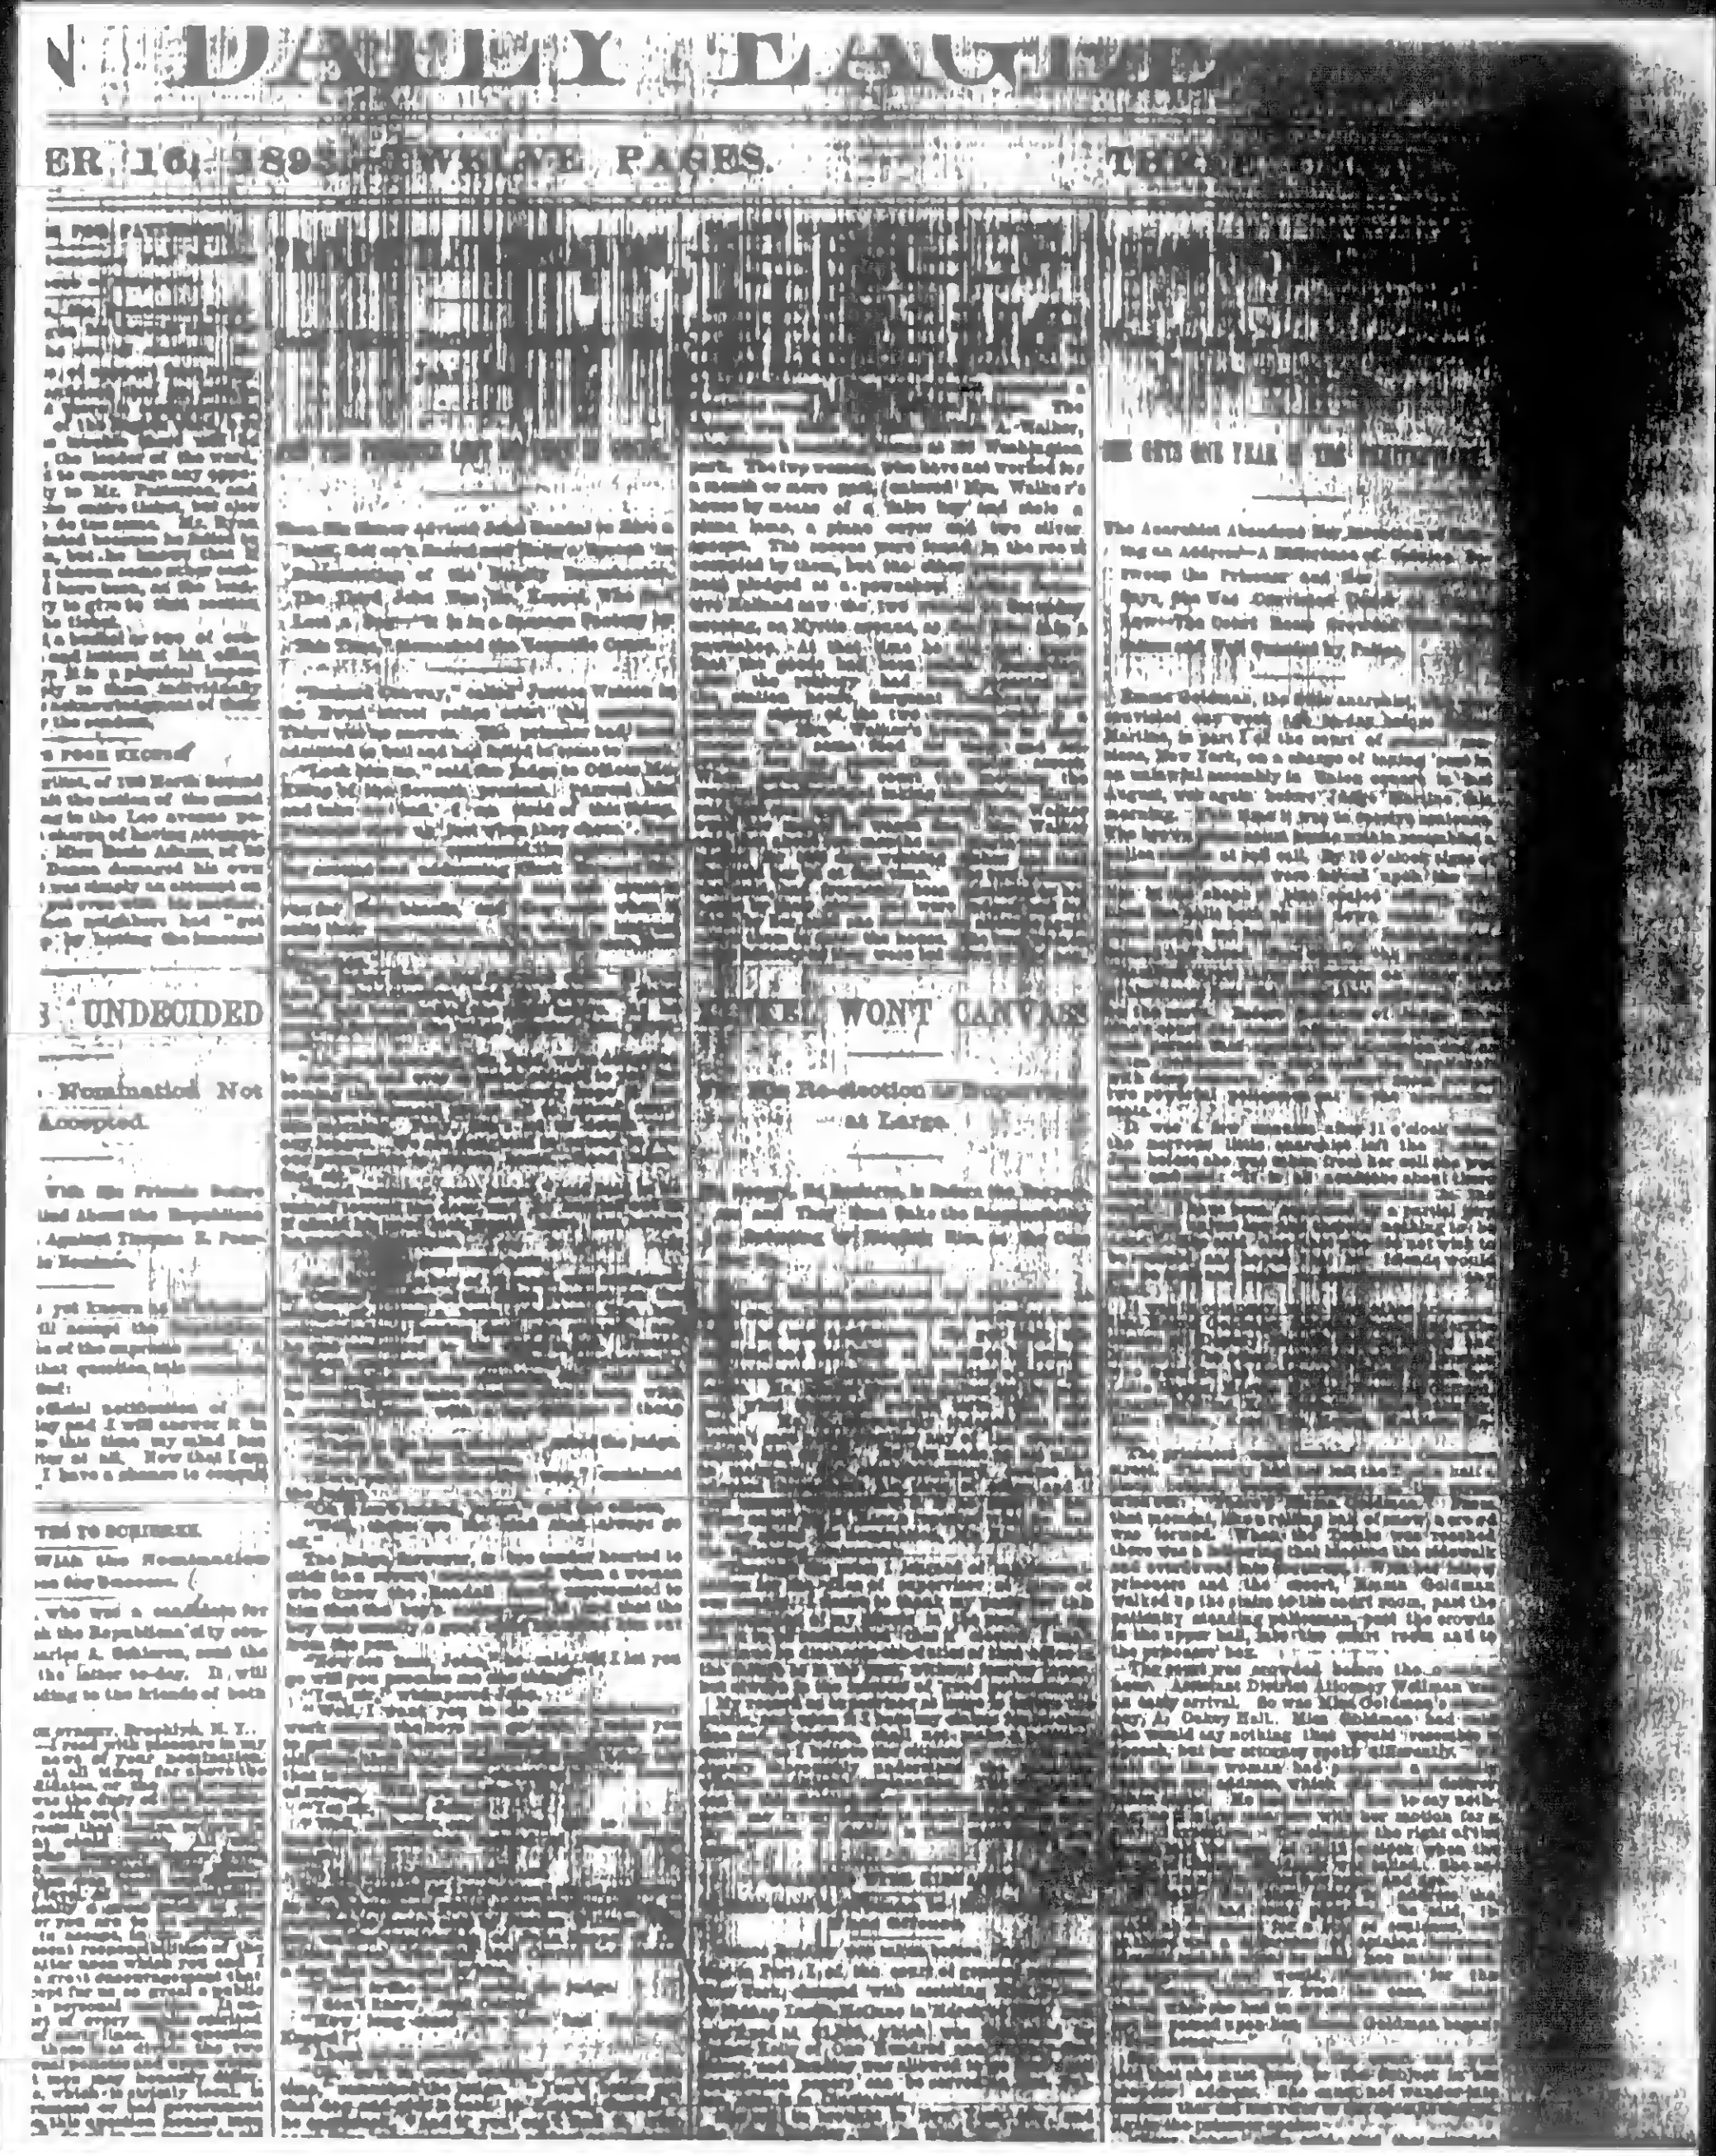
Hardly a day has passed since the introduction of the trolley system that has not witnessed an accident of a more or less serious nature. The list of casualties, if printed in the Extra, would fill up several columns. Yesterday there was an accident even more tragic than many of these, which resulted in a 6 year old boy having been cut to [illegible] while trying to rescue a brother.

It is of the highest importance, not only to the public, but to the companies operating the trolley, that greater precaution be taken for the protection of human life. No matter what the cost, or whatever the time and labor involved, the daily carnage of [illegible] alike should stop. For, however [illegible] to run the trolley may be as compared with other means of transportation, the city is paying [illegible] dearly. [illegible] To affirm, as the [illegible] a great proportion of the [illegible] the carelessness of pedestrians, does not adequately meet the case. The statement may be true so far as it goes, but it does not [illegible] by coroners' juries which have sifted the facts. It does explain why motormen, according to their own admission, have been running their cars at a greater rate of speed than that allowed by law at the time when accidents have occurred.

If, in order to diminish the danger, it be necessary not only to lower the rate of speed now prescribed by law, but to secure men of higher order of intelligence to operate [illegible] both of these matters should be [illegible] Moreover, it would seem that [illegible] inventive genius has not yet [illegible] that will mark at which it is unable to produce some mechanical contrivance which would [illegible] a sort of protection to those who get in trolley's way. It might prove costly to [illegible] the cars with such a [illegible] be cheap in the long run.

Indeed, any policy [illegible] seek first and foremost to avoid [illegible] of accidents. We have had [illegible] late.

[illegible] Feminine [illegible] ality, opposition movement, and [illegible] The women, though not able to vote, are viewed that their moral influence [illegible] less effectively wielded. [illegible]



BEST COPY AVAILABLE

891215007

The Emma Goldman Papers

[Testimony] No Room for Emma Goldman / Emma Goldman.— 28 cm. In The Brooklyn Daily Eagle. —(Oct. 16, 1893).

Permission to reproduce or quote in any form must be obtained from The New York Public Library, Astor, Lenox and Tilden Foundations. Institutional Location: Rare Books and Manuscripts Division.

THE DAILY EAGLE

ER 16, 1893. TWELVE PAGES. PRICE

UNDECIDED

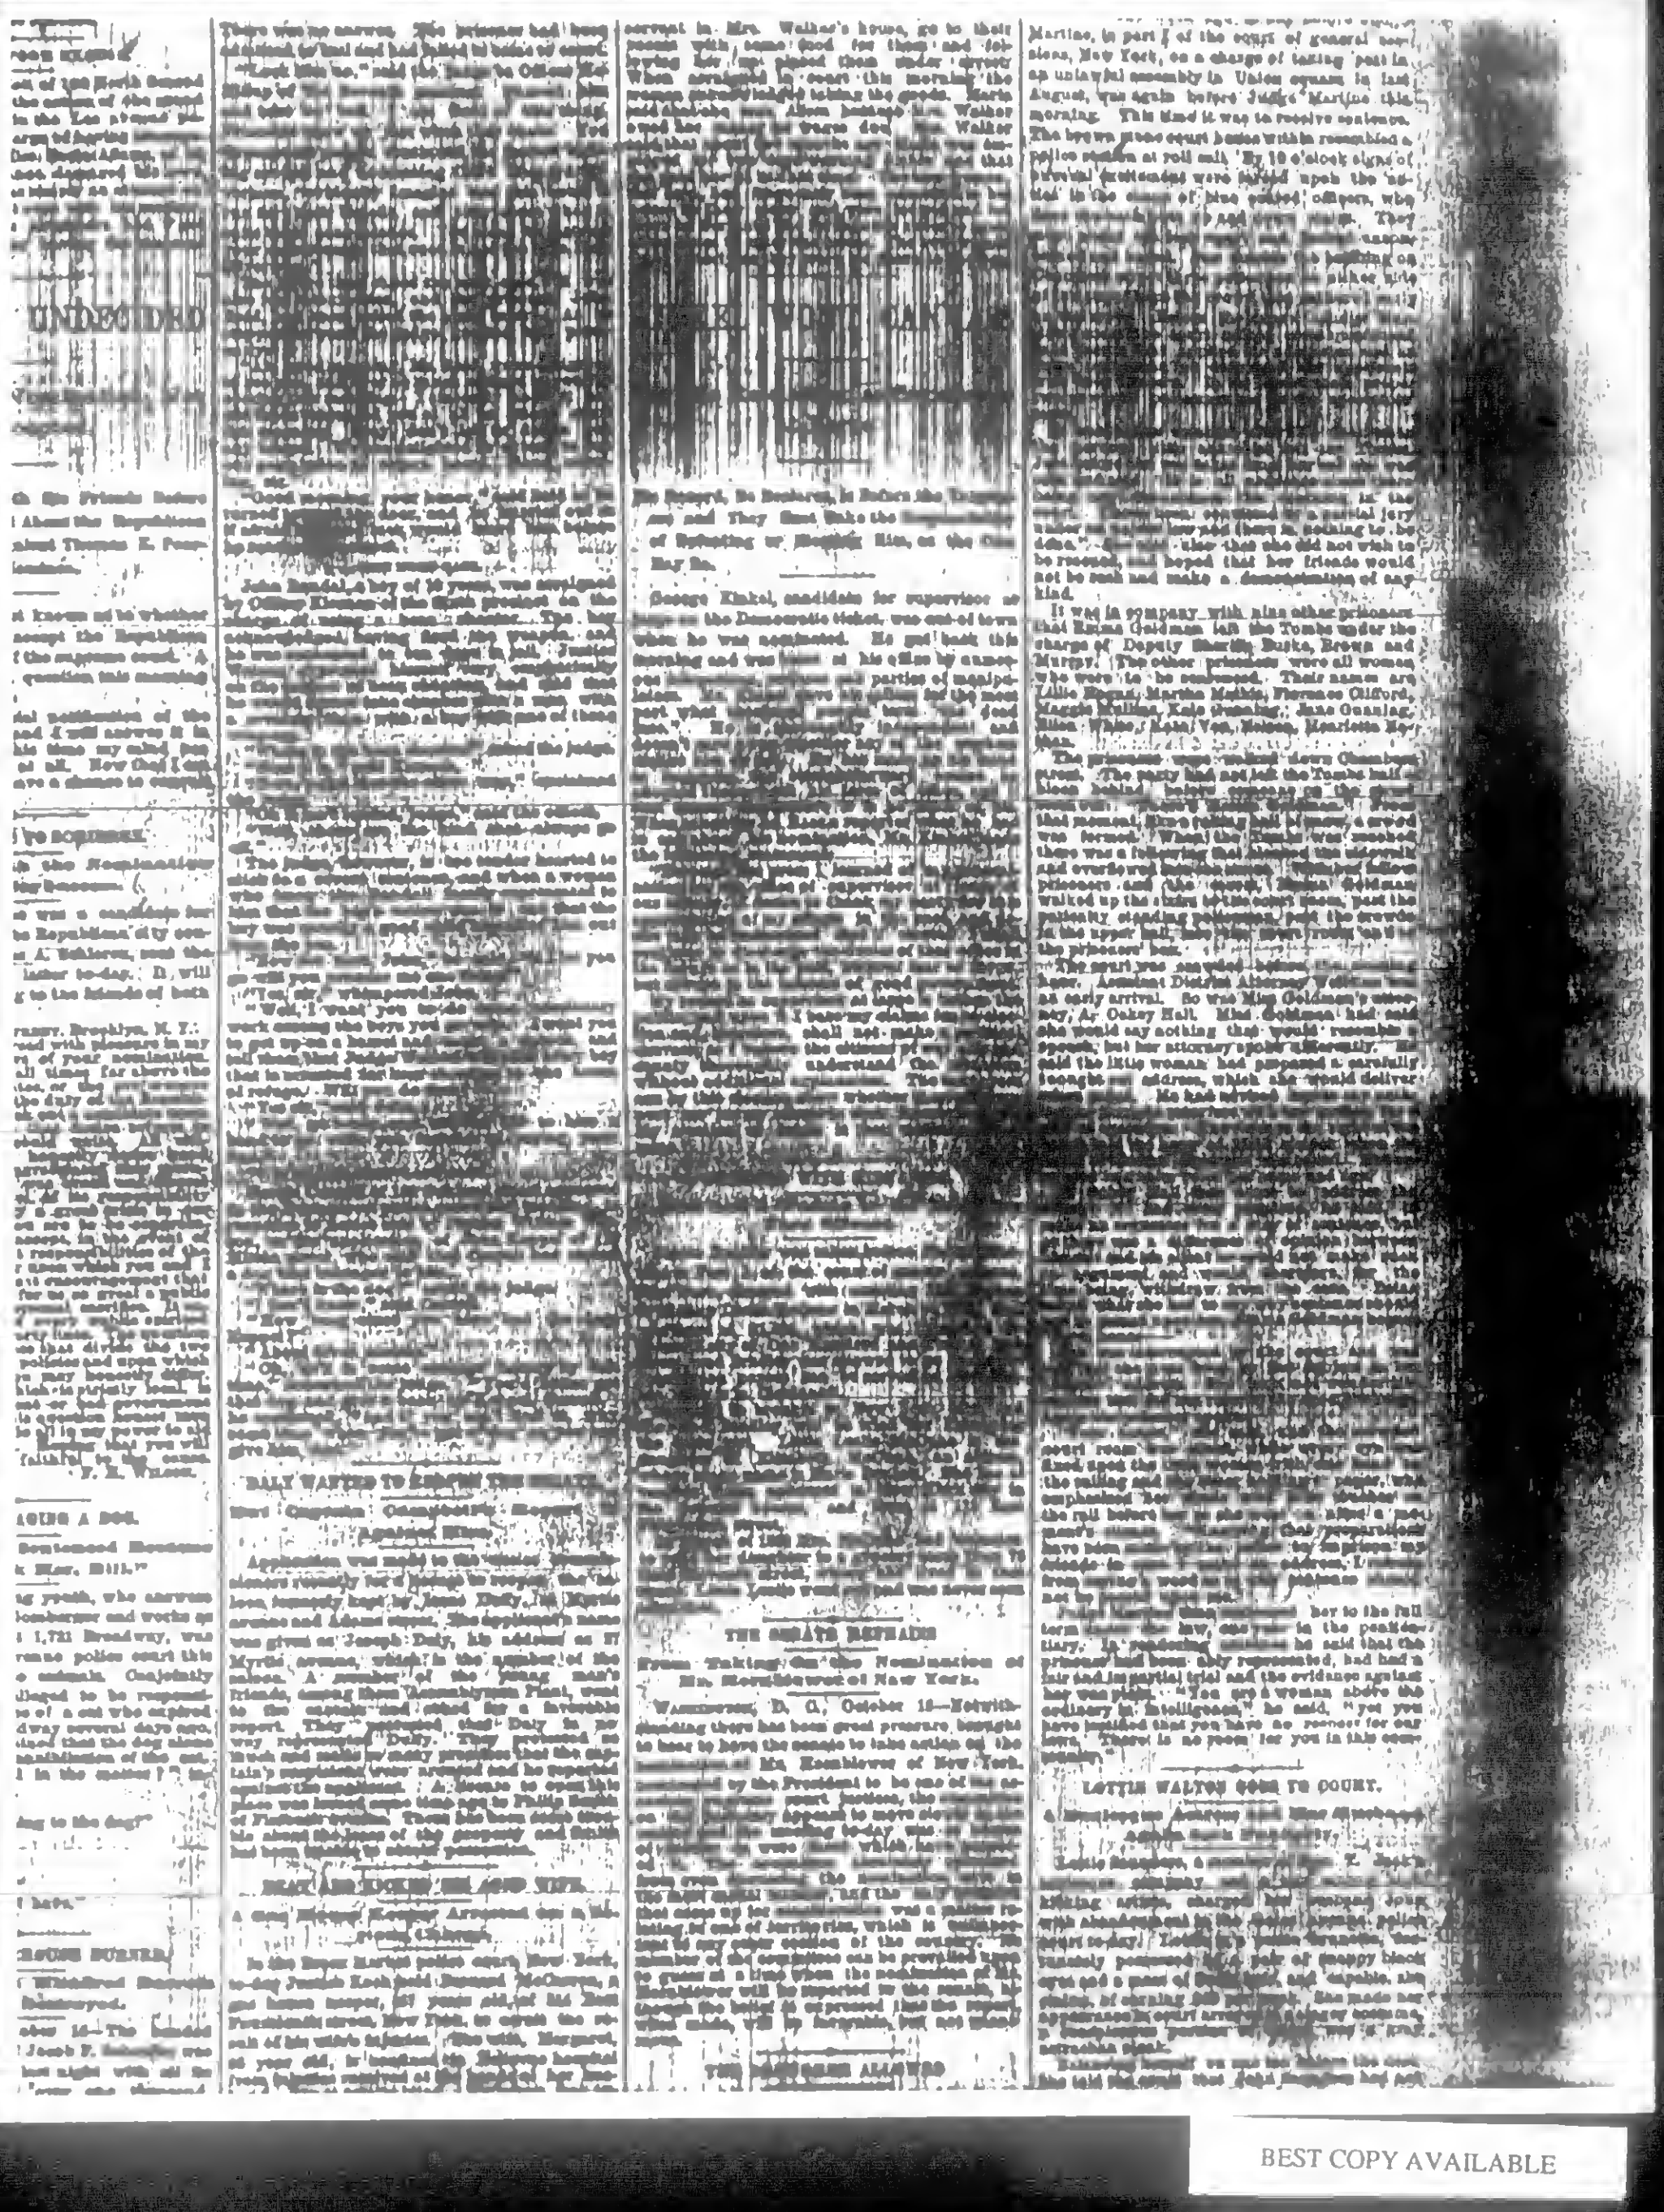
Nomination Not Accepted.

With the Friends Before and About the Republican Against Thomas E. Pres... in Brooklyn.

THE TO SCHIEREN.

With the Nomination ... for Treasurer.

... who was a candidate for ... the Republican city con... Marlor A. Schieren, and the ... the latter to-day. It will ... adding to the friends of both ...



... Brooklyn, N. Y.: ... read with pleasure in my ... of your nomination, ... all others for above the ... dation, or the ... was the duty of ... a solid one ... ...

891215007

The Emma Goldman Papers

[Testimony] No Room for Emma Goldman / Emma Goldman.— 28 cm. In The Brooklyn Daily Eagle. —(Oct. 16, 1893).

Permission to reproduce or quote in any form must be obtained from The New York Public Library, Astor, Lenox and Tilden Foundations. Institutional Location: Rare Books and Manuscripts Division.

NO ROOM FOR EMMA GOLDMAN.

THE SENATE REFUSES

LETTIE WALTON GOES TO COURT.

BEST COPY AVAILABLE

48

880722002

The Emma Goldman Papers

[Testimony] The Law's Limit / Emma Goldman. – p. 7 ; 44 cm. In The World. – (Oct. 17, 1893).

Obtained from the University of California, Berkeley. Institutional Location: Doe Library.

THE LAW'S LIMIT.

Emma Goldman Is Sentenced to a Year's Imprisonment.

ANARCHISTS ARE WARNED.

Judge Martine Says They Should Be Kept Out of the Country.

NO SPEECH FROM THE PRISONER.

But The World Presents in Full the Remarks That She Had Intended to Deliver.

SWORE SHE WOULD, BUT RELENTED.

Emma Goldman, the Anarchist, who was convicted of "uulawful assembly" in General Sessions last week, was yesterday sentenced by Judge Martine to one year's imprisonment in the penitentiary. In sentencing the woman, Judge Martine intimated that he was sorry the Penal Code prohibited him from giving her a heavier sentence. When he had concluded his remarks, the spectators applauded, some cheering, others stamping their feet. There was no demonstration by the woman's compatriots, as threatened.

Miss Goldman was brought to General Sessions in company with a dozen other female prisoners. She demurred to the crowds staring at her and asked permission to walk alone. Of course, this was denied, and that the woman reached the old brown court house, a crowd of fully four hundred people were at their heels. Emma was pointed out by the crowd and heard some very unpleasant remarks about herself.

OAKEY HALL GIVES UP

As soon as Judge Martine took his seat Clerk Hall called Emma to the bar. In answer to the Clerk's questions regarding her pedigree, the woman responded loudly. She said that she was twenty-five years old.

"Where do you live?" inquired the Clerk.

"Why, in the Tombs," replied Emma loudly.

"Before that, I mean," explained Mr. Hall.

"Oh! At No. 422 East Fortieth street."

In answer to the Clerk's question as to what she had to say why sentence should not be pronounced, Emma started to speak when ex-Mayor A. Oakey Hall, who defended her on her trial, arose. He surprised everybody by informing Judge Martine that, owing to a misunderstanding with his client, he would withdraw from the case. He said that he had advised her not to make a speech in court, for she had declared that she would.

Emma, who was standing then at the bar awaiting her sentence, nodded her head. She again started to say something, when Judge Martine warned her to confine her remarks to the case in hand. Her face flushed and she grasped the railing in front of her.

She spoke in a rasping voice, humble and meek.

NO SPEECH AFTER ALL.

"Your Honor," she said tersely, "in view of the fact that the jury have done everything they could to injure my friends, the Anarchists, in some demonstration, so that they could get them in jail also, I shall refrain from delivering any speech here."

That is all she said. When she had concluded she looked at her counsel and smiled. Mr. Hall was watching her intently. He colored slightly and motioned to her to sit down. She started to do so when Judge Martine began to talk, and a court officer yanked her around to face the bench.

Judge Martine lost no time in sentencing her. This is what he said:

"In this case the Court has given much consideration as to what would be a just disposition to make of this defendant after this conviction. You were represented in this case by one who is as able to present the facts as any lawyer now at the bar. His vast experience and his ability as counsel were called upon to their utmost extent in your behalf. The facts were submitted to the jury. There were witnesses deemed worthy of credence by the jury who stated that they heard the remarks which you made. There is no question but that those remarks brought you clearly within the statute. Your language was such as to incite disorder, to incite to riot, and the language as interpreted by those who heard it was such that a riot might have ensued.

ANARCHISTS SHOULD BE EXCLUDED.

"You are a woman beyond the a-certain class of the citizens appears right?

"Is free speech solely for the purpose and use of the Government and its officers, are individuals prohibited from saying that which is true, even though hardly to the taste of a certain class or portion of the public? Can I only say that in which I do not concur, and must I say it?

"I am positive that the men who shed their blood for the independence of this land, and who offered up their lives to secure the liberty and rights of the American people, must have had a very different understanding of the right of free speech than those who to-day represent the Government, and who so interpret the right as to permit the expression only of that which is conducive to their benefit.

"According to such an interpretation of the right of free speech I must call them despots, and as such, without the right to commemorate in celebrations the memory of those who fell in the fight for Independence, for the former deliberately trample under foot the principles of those heroes, and when decorating their graves commit blasphemy.

"Why don't the representatives of the State drop the so-called mantle of free speech, discard the mask of falsehood and admit that absolutism reigns here?

"Under such a condition of things the American citizen has no shadow of right in pointing the finger of contempt at European institutions and in speaking of the downtrodden hungry of the Old World.

"The sorrowful condition of the workingmen of the Old as well as the New World increases from day to day, and it reached a high point in its horizon this very year.

"Devoid of all means of sustenance, the workingmen assemble to consult, to devise means to remedy their need. Those who throughout the year utilize the people and gather riches at their cost perhaps feel that it would not go well with them should the workingmen become half conscious of their exigencies, and in their terror the latter seek the aid of government. Innumerable policemen and spies are sent into the meetings of the unemployed, to control all their deliberations, to control the speakers.

DEFENDING HER SPEECHES.

"I belonged to that class of speakers who endeavored to show the workingmen the real reason of their misfortune.

"The speeches made by me must have contained much that was unpleasant for the rich of the City of New York, because they set in motion whole hands of spies to cause my apprehension and confinement for the reason, as the indictment reads, that I had offended against the law and exhorted those present at my speeches to acts of violence.

"If what I said at Golden Rule Hall and at Union Square was a violation of the laws, then all those who were present at those meetings, and who by protracted and loud applause evinced their approval of what I said, were equally guilty with me. Why, then, did the city authorities proceed against me alone? Why? Because the authorities know that no danger lies in the workingman's ignorance of the true cause of his privations.

"From the moment that I, as an Anarchist, showed them that the workingman could never expect relief from his despoilers, from that moment I made the toiling masses uncomfortable, and had to be put out of the way.

"I do not acknowledge laws made to protect the rich and oppress the poor. Who are the law makers? Senators, the great of the land? Capitalists. Capitalists who torture thousands to slow death in their factories they are people who live in affluence, robbing the workingman of his strength to deprive him of the results of his labor; they are men whose fortunes have been built upon a foundation formed by pyramids of victims' corpses.

"The wealth the luxury the pomp and show of power are bought at the price of murdered and disfigured mankind.

"Ever rises the voice of the disinherited people, a voice growing in volume and to which the overbearing classes will not listen and to still which they devise new laws intended to silence the masses. Hands of priests are sent out to teach subjection to propagate submission and keep the people in ignorance.

"The demands of the workingmen are met with the Winchester rifle and the Gatling gun and I must confess that my brethren and myself will ever oppose such a state of 'order, an order' in which we cannot believe and which secretly it suits us well to see you continue in the struggle for advancement.

AIM OF THE ANARCHISTS.

"I can fully understand that such people hate the Anarchists for it is our endeavor to abolish private property. Sir, in Court! In one word, we aim at free men from tyrants and governments.

"The striving for freedom is not the creature of my brain nor that of any other being. It lies rooted in the people and the contentions of the past. The struggles between the people and their oppressors show but too plainly that the people are desirous of being freed from their burdens.

"The burning at the stake and the gallows have been the reward of numberless men of advanced thought, and even to-day thousands feel the icy blasts of Siberia and the torrid breath of New Caledonia, while others yield up their lives in the cause, hidden by the grim walls of dungeons deep. And yet the desire for freedom grew, and grows.

"The world is gliding ever nearer the fact that in Anarchy can be found the happiness and content of man.

"You will not be able to stifle Anarchy by the erection of gallows and of jails.

"You endeavor to make us appear to the public eye veritable murderers, wholly depraved, but when we show the people our true objects they find that we only desire the benefit of mankind.

"We seek the establishment of Anarchy, or, in other words, a freedom from government of any kind; a community of interests based upon common

HER LIFE AT STAKE.

Emma Woods on Trial for the Killing of Lew Brown.

SHE WEEPS AS EVIDENCE AGAINST HER IS GIVEN.

NO LONGER A BLEACHED BLONDE.

Old friends of Emma Woods hardly knew her yesterday when she was arraigned in the Oyer and Terminer Court in Newark for trial on the charge of murdering Lew Brown, with whom she was living. She had been known for years as "Blonde Emma," but the name didn't fit her on this occasion.

The golden color of her fluffy tresses had disappeared. They had become dark—almost black—and were artistically curled. The gay costumes of other days had given way to a sober garb of modified mourning. A piece of white braid around the dress and a little white feather were the only bright touches in her apparel. In hands covered by black gloves she wielded a black fan.

The prisoner has a face that might be pretty if the lips were not so thin and the nose not quite so small and weak. It is plain that she is a woman of strong feelings. While Prosecutor Crane told the jury what he proposed to prove her lips were closed tightly. She watched the Prosecutor closely, but gave no evidence of being stirred by his recital other than that furnished by the rapid heaving of her breast. She did not speak to her counsel, Senator M. T. Barrett, except in answer to his questions.

During Patrick Gaynor's cross-examination Emma Woods broke down and wept. At recess her eleven-year-old boy, Harry Inglis, came and kissed her. She cried this time more freely than before. The boy looked bright and happy. He rubbed his hand soothingly across her temples. Just before the trial was adjourned for the day she turned and looked appealingly at her father, who sat in a seat immediately behind her. He shook his head in a melancholy way and then held it down. Then she cried more bitterly than at any other time during the day.

Supreme Court Justice Depue presided. The court-room was crowded. Those who listened carefully to Prosecutor Crane's opening were inclined to think that he would not insist strenuously on a conviction for murder in the first degree.

After a glass of Brown's house, at No. 333 Warren street, had been produced and explained, Policeman John Brown, Lew's brother, testified as to the identification of the body. County Physician Elliott told how he found a bullet wound in the victim's heart. The blood-stained shirt was produced and the prisoner seized it hastily. When it was taken away she waved her fan violently.

Patrick Gaynor, a bartender at Brown's saloon, testified that on June 1 about 1 P. M. Lew was cutting grass in front of Brown's house.

"Two women called at Brown's saloon, No. 333 Warren street," he continued. "They went to the side door. Emma Woods saw them coming away. Then she threatened to fix him. I saw her again at 10 P. M. She came to the side door and called to the bartender, Daniel Garrity. She stood there about five minutes. Then I went with her to her house. She said Brown had gone away with two women. She took a revolver from the drawer, put it in her stocking and said: 'He'll be ready for him. We went to Tompkins's saloon across the street. She got one more beer. She spoke about Brown beating her. Then she pulled the revolver out of her stocking and said she was ready for him. I left her at the side door leading to Lew's room in the saloon and fell asleep.

"About 2 A. M. Barkley or Garrity woke me up and told me to go over to Brown's house and see what was up. Outside the saloon I met Emma Woods and her boy. She said Lew was shot. We went upstairs and found the body lying in the front room."

On cross-examination Senator Barrett showed that Gaynor was a worthless fellow and had been in the penitentiary.

John Hanley, of No. 9 Bruce street, near Brown's saloon, testified that he, too, heard Emma Woods make the remark about "fixing him." Emma was smiling as she made the remark. Hanley has served time in the Essex county penitentiary for drunkenness and assault and battery.

Edward M. Thompson, who kept the saloon at Warren and Bruce streets, told about the visit of Emma Woods and Gaynor to his place.

"Emma Woods told me about Brown beating her," Thompson said. "I said he'd kill her yet. She said no, he wouldn't kill her that night because she had the gun. She showed me a pistol. At last I told her to go out as I was going to close up."

"Was she in good humor at the time she said she had the gun?" asked Senator Barrett.

"She was."

Daniel Garrity, bartender at Brown's away and told him to go to Cen cool off.

He returned to his father. T him to go to his wife and the son he had been unable to secure th the father told him to call in th It was in violation of all precede calves at 2 A. M., the hour of th Since then Harry Ruck has not

TO COAL VESSELS A

The San Francisco and Kear Phillip B. Low's Toboggi

The flagship San Francisco an Kearsarge, now anchored in N Forty-second street, will start to ing on a cruise in Southern wa fore they leave they will make a B. Low's patent for coaling shi ing war time. The idea conte dezvous made at sea by latitude where the war vessel and col together. In the experiment Kearsarge will represent the col

When they meet off Sandy Francisco will take the Kearsar cable rope will be rigged fr forward of the foremast on the stern of the cruiser. The 200 l descend sharply from the Kears Francisco. A bag of coal, weigh hundred pounds, will be placed or traveller, as it is called, an gravity will carry the coal to th

Naval officers fear that the coa ferred so slowly that it would get a considerable supply on boa

The San Francisco will first g and thence along the Central A returning by way of the Wil She will meet the Kearsarge, wh slower vessel, somewhere in th It is expected that they will re again in March.

There was a court-martial sh on the San Francisco. Corpl. poral of marines on the San charged with petty theft and Kearsarge was charged with des

CANDA & KANE'S ORD

They Have an Unsatisfactory Order an Investiga

A meeting of the creditors of dealers in building material West Fifty-second street, was h ace yesterday. A large numbe including delegations from Al Kingston and Philadelphia. G was chosen Chairman and C. secretary. Neither Mr Canda was present.

A rough statement was pres liabilities $100,356, assets, cluding real estate equities, sto counts, bills receivable and ba principal items were Real est accounts receivable, $213,000 count, $10,000. The statemen close the assets of the individu a creditor wanted to know wh of those assets. His question was

The meeting proved an unsat the creditors and it was finally a committee of three—A. C. Miller and John V. Cockcroft—tigation of the firm's affairs and other meeting.

HUGO OR HENRY MARTI

Anyway, the Court Says the Defraud His Credi

The Sheriff has received an ge on an alias writ Hugo Martin, cerne genuine cocoa butter Washington street in favor of F on a draft from Hamburg. It the ground that Mr. Martin ha debts of creditors. The bran letter from Martin from Ho he said he could not meet $14,000, and that it was no use to p He had hypothecated goods wh American Bank worth $8,50 $5,000 and had just goods to Lowe for $1,000. It grieved t to realize 50 cents on the dol The sale fell through and Mr. M was arrested on the order of $ Baker & Co. against H. Martin. The correct name is Henry

GOLD MINING ON TI

Silver's Decline Starts Capi Cripple Creek Re

COLORADO SPRINGS, Col. ... ...

880722002

The Emma Goldman Papers

[Testimony] The Law's Limit / Emma Goldman.– p. 7 ; 44 cm. In The World. – (Oct. 17, 1893).

Obtained from the University of California, Berkeley. Institutional Location: Doe Library.

heels. Emma was pointed out by the crowd and heard some very unpleasant remarks about herself.

OAKEY HALL GIVES UP.

As soon as Judge Martine took his seat Clerk Hall called Emma to the bar. In answer to the Clerk's questions regarding her pedigree, the woman responded loudly. She said that she was twenty-five years old.

"Where do you live?" inquired the Clerk.

"Why, in the Tombs" replied Emma loudly.

"Before that, I mean," explained Mr Hall.

"Oh! At No. 422 East Fortieth street."

In answer to the Clerk's question as to what she had to say why sentence should not be pronounced Emma started to speak, when ex-Mayor A. Oakey Hall, who defended her on her trial, arose. He surprised everybody by informing Judge Martine that, owing to a misunderstanding with his client, he would withdraw from the case. He said that he had advised her not to make a speech in court, but she had declared that she would Emma, who was standing then at the bar, awaiting her sentence, nodded her head. She again started to say something, when Judge Martine warned her to confine her remarks to the case in hand. Her face flushed and she grasped the railing in front of her.

She spoke in a rasping voice, humble and meek

NO SPEECH AFTER ALL.

"Your Honor," she said nervously, "In view of the fact that the police have done everything they could to incite my friends the Anarchists, to some demonstration, so that they could put them in jail also, I shall refrain from delivering any speech here."

That is all she said. When she had concluded she looked at her ex-counsel and smiled. Mr Hall was watching her intently. He colored slightly and motioned to her to sit down. She started to do so when Judge Martine began to talk, and a court officer yanked her around to face the bench.

Judge Martine lost no time in sentencing her. This is what he said:

"In this case the Court has given much consideration as to what would be a just disposition to make of this defendant after this conviction. You were represented in this case by one who is as able to present the facts as any lawyer now at the bar. His vast experience and his ability as counsel were called upon to their utmost extent in your behalf. The facts were submitted to the jury. There were witnesses deemed worthy of credence by the jury who stated that they heard the remarks which you made. There is no question but that those remarks brought you clearly within the statute. Your language was such as to incite disorder, to incite to riot, and the language as interpreted by those who heard it was such that a riot might have ensued.

ANARCHISTS SHOULD BE EXCLUDED.

"You are a woman beyond the average in intelligence. What your advantages have been in the way of education I do not know, except as they were exhibited here in court. You are certainly an intelligent person. In the light of reason you must have known the effect of language such as you uttered on that occasion. Now you have testified in your own behalf, and you told us you did not believe in our institutions; that you did not believe in our laws, and that you have no respect for them. Such a person cannot be tolerated in this community by those who believe in law, and I am happy to say that the greater number of our people do believe in law. I think it very improper that the great strength of this nation is not exercised to the extent that you and those who entertain the same ideas should be met at the portal of our country to the end that they should not be allowed to enter here.

"We are proud of our institutions, and much money and much blood have been spent to build them up and we do not propose that any person, man or woman, shall undertake to tear them down. We do not propose to allow you to bid defiance to our institutions without showing you that the strong arm of the law will take hold of you and that the law cannot be defied. I look upon you as a dangerous woman in your doctrine. Fortunately, there are only a few, compared with the great number of our citizens, who believe in your doctrines, but it is necessary that those who believe the way you do should be taught that the law will be vindicated.

THE LAW'S FULL PENALTY.

"I have no hope of doing any good for you. I am satisfied that you are depraved and have no respect for law. The sentence of the Court is that you be confined for the full term allowed by law, which is one year in the penitentiary."

Miss Goldman paid no attention to Judge Martine's words. All the time he was talking she was smiling at several of her friends who sat within the inclosure. When Judge Martine concluded, she was led away to the Tombs outside the court room she met Justus Schwab. She whispered something in his ear. Schwab smiled. Turning to a police officer, Schwab inquired the woman's sentence. He was told. "You've done your best," he replied.

The speech which Miss Goldman intended to deliver in court and which she prepared in advance. This is it:

THE RIGHT OF FREE SPEECH.

"I speak not to defend myself, but to defend my right of free speech, trampled upon by those who have caused the curtailing of my liberty.

"I know that the right of free speech was once guaranteed to every man and woman in this land.

"What do those who have brought me here understand by the right of free speech? Does it give a right to all to say what appears to the individual good or bad, or has it been granted to permit the expression of only that which to a [illegible] the laws, then all those who were present at those meetings, and who by protracted and loud applause evinced their approval of what I said, were equally guilty with me. Why, then, did the city authorities proceed against me alone? Why? Because the authorities know that no danger lies in the workingman's ignorance of the true cause of his privations.

"From the moment that I, as an Anarchist, showed them that the workingman could never expect relief from his despoilers, from that moment I made the ruling masses uncomfortable, and had to be put out of the way.

"I do not acknowledge laws made to protect the rich and oppress the poor. Who are the law makers? Senators, the great of the land? Capitalists. Capitalists who torture thousands to slow death in their factories they are people who live in affluence, robbing the workingman of his strength to deprive him of the results of his labor. they are men whose fortunes have been built upon a foundation formed by pyramids of children's corpses.

"The wealth, the luxury, the pomp and glory of power are bought at the price of murdered and disfigured mankind.

"Ever rises the voice of the disinherited people, a voice growing in volume, and to which the overbearing classes will not listen, and to still which they devise new laws intended to allevue the masses. Bands of priests are sent out to teach subjection, to propagate superstition and keep the people in ignorance.

"The demands of the workingmen are met with the Winchester rifle and the Gatling gun, and I must confess that my brethren and myself will ever oppose such a state of 'order,' an 'order' in which we do not believe, and whose representatives we will never be compelled to meet in the struggle for advancement.

AIM OF THE ANARCHISTS.

"I can fully understand that such people hate the Anarchists, for it is our endeavor to abolish private property, State and Church. In one word, we aim to free men from tyrants and government.

"The striving for freedom is not the creature of my brain, nor that of any other being, it lies rooted in the people and the contentions of the past, the struggle between the people and their oppressors, show but too plainly that the people are desirous of being freed from their burdens.

"The burning at the stake and the gallows have been the reward of many fearless men of advanced thought, and even to-day thousands feel the icy blasts of Siberia and the torrid breath of New Caledonia, while others yield up their lives in the cause hidden by the grim walls of dungeons deep. And yet the desire for freedom grew, and grows.

"The world is slowly ever nearer the fact that in Anarchy can be found the happiness and content of man.

"You will not be able to stifle Anarchy by the erection of gallows and of jails.

"You endeavor to make us appear to the public eye as veritable murderers, wholly depraved, but when we show the people our true objects they find that we only desire the benefit of mankind.

"We seek the establishment of Anarchy, or, in other words, a freedom from government of any kind, a community of interests based upon common production of equal and necessary character, we seek a perfect liberty for every individual to enjoy the grand and glorious products of nature, we seek for each an equal liberty to cultivate the talents and abilities as well the attainments of the highest knowledge.

"All wrongs now perpetrated, such as theft, murder, lying and prostitution, are an outcome of the injustice at present obtaining in the social state, and will disappear with its downfall.

"I tell you, the day of reckoning is not far—a time when no concessions will be granted to the tyrants and despots.

"Such is my belief, spread by me among the workingmen, and this belief will cease only with my life.

"You have convicted me, you may pass sentence of imprisonment upon me, but I tell you that I hate your laws, that I hate your 'order,' for I know but one 'order'—it is the highest potency of order—Anarchy."

WATCHED BY DETECTIVES.

On the way to the Tombs Miss Goldman was surrounded by a crowd of Central Office detectives. Her grandmother, Mrs. Fredrika Goldman, who attended her during the trial, followed her to the gates of the Tombs, where she kissed her an affectionate good-by. An old, gray-whiskered man, who looked every inch an Anarchist, followed Emma to the prison. The detectives watched him closely.

"Perhaps he's got a bomb," was suggested.

"If he raises his hand, he'll drop," a Central Office man replied.

Emma Goldman will be taken to the penitentiary to-morrow along with a number of other women. In the Tombs, when asked what she thought of her sentence, she replied:

"I have nothing to say to you. What I have to say shall be through my own paper."

When asked what she thought of the spectators' applause of Judge Martine's remarks, she replied: "They were applauding me, not him."

Mr. Hall, when asked why he withdrew from the case, tapped his forehead and pointed at Miss Goldman. "She is like all fanatics," he said, "a little bit gone."

Railroad to Whiteface Mountain Top.

SARANAC LAKE, N. Y., Oct. 16.—A syndicate will next spring build a railroad to the top of Whiteface Mountain, which is 5,000 feet high. The road will be thirteen miles long.

Excursions to World's Fair via Washington and the B. & O. RR.

Special train of vestibule coaches will leave Jersey Central station, foot of Liberty street, New York, 8.30 A. M. Oct. 18 and 25; arrive at Chicago 4.30 P. M. next day. $17.00 round trip, good ten days. Ticket offices, 172, 415 and 1140 Broadway. , Don't miss New York Central's great World's Fair excursions, Oct. 18 and 18. Only $15 round trip. , rubbed his hand soothingly across her temples. Just before the trial was adjourned for the day she turned and looked appealingly at her father, who sat in a seat immediately behind her. He shook his head in a melancholy way and then held it down. Then she cried more bitterly than at any other time during the day.

Supreme Court Justice Depue presided. The court-room was crowded. Those who listened carefully to Prosecutor Crane's opening were inclined to think that he would not insist strenuously on a conviction for murder in the first degree.

After a plan of Brown's house, at No. 313 Warren street, had been produced and explained, Policeman John Brown, Lew's brother, testified as to the identification of the body. County Physician Elliott told how he found a bullet wound in the victim's heart. The blood-stained shirt was produced, and the prisoner gazed at it fixedly. When it was taken away she waved her fan vigorously.

Patrick Gaynor, a hanger-on at Brown's saloon, testified that on June 1, about 1 P. M., he was cutting grass in front of Brown's house.

"Two women called at Brown's saloon, No. 319 Warren street," he continued. "They went to the side door. Emma Woods saw them going away. Then she threatened to 'fix him.' I saw her again at 10 P. M. She came to the side door and called to the bartender, Daniel Garrity. She stood there about five minutes. Then I went with her to her house. She said Brown had gone away with two women. She took a revolver from the drawer, put it in her stocking and said she'd be ready for him. We went to Thompson's saloon, across the street. She gave me money to order beer. She spoke about Bruwn beating her. Then she pulled the revolver out of her stocking and said she was ready for him. I left her on the side stoop leading to her house, went to the saloon and fell asleep.

"About 2 A. M. Bartender Garrity woke me up and told me to go over to Brown's house and see what was up. Outside the saloon I met Emma Woods and her boy. She said Lew was shot. We went upstairs and found the body lying in the front room."

On cross-examination Senator Barrett showed that Gaynor was a worthless fellow and had been in the penitentiary.

John Hanley of No. 9 Bruce street, near Brown's saloon, testified that he, too, heard Emma Woods make the remark about "fixing him." Emma was smiling as she made the remark. Hanley has served time in the tall and penitentiary for drunkenness and assault and battery.

Edward M. Thompson, who kept the saloon at Warren and Bruce streets, told about the visit of Emma Woods and Gaynor to his place.

Emma Woods told me about Brown beating her," Thompson said. "I said he'd kill her yet. She said no, he wouldn't kill her that night because she had the gun. She showed me a pistol. At last I told her to go out as I was going to close up.

"Was she in good humor at the time she said she had the gun?" asked Senator Barrett.

"She was."

Daniel Garrity, bartender at Brown's saloon, said two women came to the side door of the saloon on June 1. They asked for beer and Lew Brown served them. The women didn't stay long. At 7:30 P. M. Brown went to the theatre. He returned about 11:30, locked the safe and went to his house.

"About 2 A. M." Garrity continued, "Emma Woods came to the saloon and smashed the window. She said, 'Lew's shot. I've shot Lew.' I woke Gaynor and sent him to the house. I asked her why she did it. She said he shot her first."

John Donohue was sleeping in the saloon with Garrity and the others when Emma aroused them. He heard her shouting about having shot Lew. Donohue went to the house.

"Emma knelt down beside the body," Donohue continued. "She cried, asked Lew to forgive her, to kiss her and asked him if he wouldn't have a drink. She said he was dead and she'd be hanged or else she and Harry would go to a watery grave."

"What woke you up that morning?"

"The screams of a woman shouting: 'I'm a murderer, I've shot Lew. I've killed Lew.' I was awake before the glass was broken."

Edward Garrity, the bartender's brother, corroborated the testimony given by the other witnesses who were in Brown's saloon.

"Are you a married man?" asked Senator Barrett.

"Yes."

"How many children have you?"

"I don't know."

"Where is your family?"

"I don't know and don't care."

"I want nothing more to do with you," Senator Barrett said in disgust.

Senator Barrett says he will contend that Brown shot himself. He probably will begin the defense this afternoon. The trial is expected to close to-morrow.

NO FATTED CALF FOR HARRY.

Young Ruck's Divinity and His Father Frown Upon Him—Then He Disappears.

Harry August Ruck, son of John Ruck owner of the Effingham apartment-house, at Fifty-eighth street and Ninth avenue, who has just attained his majority, disappeared Oct. 4 on account of a love affair. Last spring Harry Ruck's fancy lightly turned to thoughts of love, and Miss Ella Seybold, of No. 116 West Sixty-first street, was the object. John Ruck frowned upon the match, but the young man insisted and refused to give up Miss Seybold. He left his father's house, but found later that Miss Seybold did not care to marry him on account of his diminutive stature.

She cared more for Leonard Barker, who boarded in her family, or for a Wall street lawyer, with red hair, and would have none of young Ruck. Ruck called upon her with a revolver, and threatened to shoot unless she married him at once, but Miss Ella, who is tall and big in proportion, took the revolver [illegible] liabilities, $400,336; assets, [illegible] cluding real estate equities, [illegible] counts, bills receivable and [illegible] principal items were: Real es[illegible] accounts receivable, $213,000 [illegible] count, $40,000. The statement [illegible] clude the assets of the individu[illegible] a creditor wanted to know w[illegible] of these assets. His question w[illegible]

The meeting proved an unsa[illegible] the creditors and it was finally [illegible] a committee of three—A. C. [illegible] Miller and John V. Cockcroft—[illegible] gation of the firm's affairs an[illegible] other meeting.

HUGO OR HENRY MART[illegible]

Anyway, the Court Says the[illegible] Defraud His Cred[illegible]

The Sheriff has received a[illegible] $8,000 against Hugo Martin, [illegible] cerine, gelatine, cocoa-butter [illegible] Whitehall street in favor of F[illegible] on a draft from Hamburg. It [illegible] the ground that Mr. Martin h[illegible] defraud creditors. The firm [illegible] letter from Martin, from B[illegible] he said he could not meet [illegible] $14,000, and it was no use to [illegible] He had hypothecated goods w[illegible] American Bank worth $8,50[illegible] $5,000 and had put goods in [illegible] house for loans. The goods [illegible] to realize $5,000 over the adv[illegible]

The Sheriff locked up Mr. M[illegible] week on an attachment for $[illegible] Phillip Bauer & Co. against [illegible] is said there is some doubt as t[illegible] his correct name is Henry [illegible]

GOLD MINING ON T[illegible]

Silver's Decline Starts Cap[illegible] Cripple Creek Ro[illegible]

COLORADO SPRINGS, Col[illegible] ty-four gold mines and [illegible] are believed to be rich enough [illegible] paying quantities, have cl[illegible] easily. They are at Bre[illegible] Mountain and in the Cripp[illegible] The shutting down of silver [illegible] due to the sudden boom in t[illegible] region.

WASHINGTON, Oct. 16[illegible] to-day, as reported to the [illegible] mint, is slightly higher t[illegible] being 80.7365 an ounce. [illegible] week the tendency upward [illegible] to-day offered $0.7340 an o[illegible]

John H. Cheever Mulct[illegible]

Judgment for $6,630 was [illegible] against John H. Cheever [illegible] American Exchange Nationa[illegible] of $5,000. It was dated Au[illegible] the New York Belting and P[illegible] and payable eight months af[illegible] Mr. Cheever had indorsed [illegible] Mr. Cheever alleged that the [illegible] with the Potter-Lovell comp[illegible] that Erwin H. Corey, their [illegible] had negotiated it, toge[illegible] amount of other commerci[illegible] paper to secure notes of [illegible] company.

Extension for the La[illegible]

WALKERVILLE, Ont., [illegible] Walker, the millionaire [illegible] have leased the London and [illegible] way with the purpose of co[illegible] Buffalo making it the western [illegible] Lackawanna road. If the [illegible] not the Lackawanna will [illegible] have a road to the Detroit River, from which p[illegible] some arrangement for cross[illegible] peninsula and entering Chi[illegible]

Flint Glass Strike On

PITTSBURG, Oct. 16.—[illegible] the United States Glass Co[illegible] workers' union began to-day [illegible] union glass workers went [illegible] "K[illegible]. A force of police [illegible] but their services were not r[illegible]

WELLSBURG, W. Va., Oct[illegible] Glass Works resumed [illegible] Only two of the former empl[illegible] work.

Receiver for Lockport's

BUFFALO, Oct. 15.—Ju[illegible] appointed William C. Gre[illegible] receiver of the wrecked M[illegible] that city and fixed his [illegible] The order was granted on [illegible] by Deputy Attorney-General M[illegible]

To Superintend the N[illegible]

H. Eutis Stokes, built [illegible] honse by the Belmont con[illegible] to officers of the Northern [illegible] recting the appointment [illegible] charge of the electric ne[illegible] applicants aver that it [illegible] necessary to prevent loss [illegible] those they represent holde[illegible] of stock. Decision was re[illegible]

As a Commissioner

At a special meeting of th[illegible] Police Commissioners Theodore [illegible] had just expired, was re-elec[illegible] years as a Commissioner of [illegible]

Liveryman Michael Ga[illegible]

Michael Sullivan, the ex-l[illegible] who was tried for murder t[illegible] acquitted, died in the alcoh[illegible] ute Hospital Sunday nig[illegible] been living at the Godnet [illegible] while his wife lived with [illegible] ter Mrs. J. H. Elliott, at [illegible] fifth street. After his acq[illegible] of murder he took to drink[illegible] he remained.

50

890210008

The Emma Goldman Papers

[Interview] Emma on the Island / Emma Goldman.– p. 9 ; 43 cm. In The World. –(Oct. 19, 1893).

Obtained from the University of California, Berkeley. Institutional Location: Doe Library.

THE WORLD.

NEW YORK, THURSDAY, O

EMMA ON THE ISLAND.

The Eloquent Little Anarchist Begins Her Year's Imprisonment.

SHE'D RATHER STAY THERE TWO YEARS THAN GO TO CHURCH.

PLAIN SEWING INSTEAD OF ORATORY.

The little woman Anarchist went to the penitentiary on Blackwell's Island yesterday as coolly and unconcernedly as if she were going into the country for a holiday.

In fact Emma Goldman seemed to be bored with the whole proceeding. She didn't like the attention she attracted, and she was willing to talk to pass away the time.

It was about 12:30 o'clock when the prison van left the Tombs. There were twelve men inside. The little Anarchist climed up on the seat in front with James Cash, the driver. She covered her face with a thick veil so that no one could recognize her. But after a while she removed the veil.

"Taking your girl out for a drive, Jim?" some one called to Cash as they moved away. Emma laughed.

When they arrived at the foot of Twenty-sixth street there was one group of thirty four people there. Five professors and twenty nine pupils—five of them women—of the Fowler & Wells Institute were on their way to Blackwell's Island to study the bumps of criminals. After they had looked at the little Anarchist they decided to postpone their visit.

Miss Goldman was placed in a room with another woman, Hattie Richardson, who will spend six months on the Island for beating her mother. The boat did not start until 3 o'clock. The prisoners were taken on board half an hour before. At first they sat on stools in front of the woman's cell. Afterwards they moved to the bow of the boat on the main deck.

The little Anarchist wore a blue Eton jacket. The light which came through her tortoise-shell eye-glasses hurt her eyes, and she kept them nearly closed the greater part of the time. A group of reporters stood about her. At first she answered questions with monosyllables, but after awhile she chatted brightly, asking many questions.

"Will they allow me to have newspapers over there?" was one of the first things she wanted to know. When she was told that they were not permitted in the prison she said it was a great hardship.

"Will they try and make me go to church?" she asked presently. One of the officers on the boat said he didn't know whether it was compulsory or not.

"Well, I won't go," said the little Anarchist, firmly and easily. "I don't believe in church. I would rather lose the two months for good behavior. I would rather stay there for two years than go to church."

"Will you make an effort to secure a new trial?" she was asked.

"No; why should I? Even if I got a new trial I would only be convicted again. The best way is to go and serve my sentence and get through with it. They have made a martyr of me, but I don't like it. I don't want to go to prison. I would rather be outside than be a martyr. But I must go, and so there is nothing to do but make the best of it."

She smiled in a rather disdainful way and shrugged her shoulders. She took the whole experience as if it were the most commonplace thing.

"Judge Martine gave me the longest sentence he could," she went on.

"No, he could have given you a fine as well," some one told her.

"Yes?" drawing down the corners of her mouth. "Perhaps he did not give me a fine for fear that some Anarchist would blow him up. There would be a good deal to blow up," she ended with a little laugh.

"The Judge said I was a menace to the community. What nonsense! I could do nothing. No one person can do anything. I said nothing which would excite people to riot. I said the same things many times before, and I will say the same things again. Nothing can make me change them.

"In convicting me, they have done themselves more harm than me. Now, lots of people who never heard of me before the trial but who know about me, but sympathize with me and the cause. My conviction will make a difference in the elections too. The people cut off the head of Louis XIV. Do you think a Martine or a Jacobs or a McIntyre would frighten them?"

Then Miss Goldman came down to everyday affairs and said she hoped she would be allowed to work in the library, but she supposed she would have to sew.

When Blackwell's Island was reached she walked behind the other prisoners, with Deputy Sheriff Dalrymple. She talked with animation.

The prison record shows that Emma Goldman is 5 feet and 11 inches in height and that she weighs 127 pounds. She said she was born in Russia and had been eight years in this country, and she said also that she was married and that she had a religion.

The little Anarchist was given a task and dressed in prison clothes. She ate her first prison meal of black coffee and bread last night. To-day she will begin work in the sewing-room, entering upon the monotonous round which will not vary for ten months, if her behavior is good, and one year if it is not.

BLUDGEONING AT ELLIS ISLAND.

A Big Immigrant's Vicious Assault on a Witness Against Him.

Commissioner Senner, at Ellis Island, received information a few days ago that Karl Wielak, an Austrian jail bird, was on his way to New York. Mr. Senner learned that Wielak was a passenger on the Fulda, detained at Quarantine. When Wielak landed he was

A BRITON'S PRIZE.

W. W. Shaw, of London, Weds Mary L. Wakeman, of New York.

THE KIDDLE-DUNHAM AND STEWART-DART NUPTIALS.

J. M. COWAN AND EUGENIE KOEHLER.

Another handsome American girl was yesterday added to the ranks of British matrons. She was Miss Mary Louise Wakeman, whose marriage with William Walton Shaw took place at noon at St. Bartholomew's Church. The bride is a daughter of Mrs. William Webb Wakeman, and she met Mr. Shaw in Paris last year.

The chancel was blooming with white chrysanthemums. Rev. Davis S. Greer performed the ceremony. Mr. Shaw's brother, Charles E. Shaw, of London, and a member of Parliament, came over to act as best man. A coronet of orange blossoms, in which gleamed a diamond sunburst, held the point-lace veil worn by the bride, which fell low on the train of her white satin gown. There were ruffings and draperies of the same lace on the corsage and skirt, and she held a bouquet of orange blossoms and lilies of the valley. She was given away by her uncle, John D. Wood.

The ushers were R. C. Wood, William Babcock, Edward Darrell and George Garr. Miss Edythe Wakeman, the maid of honor, wore white silk ruffled with lace and trimmed with satin loops and bows, and wore a wide-brimmed hat with pink roses and white tips on it. She carried pink and white roses. A wedding breakfast followed at the apartments of the bride's mother, No. 479 Fifth avenue.

KIDDLE—DUNHAM.

Miss Florence Isabel Dunham and Alfred W. Kiddle were married last evening at the home of the bride's father, M. L. Dunham, No. 132 West One Hundred and Thirtieth street. The house was garnished with a profusion of chrysanthemums. A canopy of the white-fringed flowers was over the couple when the ceremony was performed by Rev. Dr. Harsha, of the Collegiate Church. Lander's orchestra played. The bride was attired in white satin, with point-lace frillings and flounces, and wore a tulle veil fastened with diamonds. Her bouquet was of Bride roses and lilies of the valley.

Frank Kiddle, the bridegroom's brother, was best man, and the ushers were Robert M. Dunham, Horace P. Montgomery and Edward Bourne. Miss Mollie Montgomery, the maid of honor, wore a white crepe de chine trimmed with pearl, crystal passementerie and fringe and carried yellow chrysanthemums. Miss May Underhill and Miss Bessie Kiddle, the bridesmaids, were in pale-yellow satin. An elaborate supper was served.

STEWART—DART.

A pretty wedding, celebrated last evening in the parlors of the Hotel Endicott, was that of Miss Marion S. Dart, daughter of Henry C. Dart, and James Bayne Stewart, of Baltimore. Rev. Dr. Gallaudet, rector of St. Ann's Church, performed the ceremony. The bride was attired in a pretty gown of white satin, with square corsage, trimmed with point lace. The front of the skirt was also richly trimmed with flounces of point lace and crystal. Her long veil of lace was caught with a diamond bow-knot and clusters of orange blossoms. She carried a bouquet of Bride roses.

Mr. Gilman was best man and the ushers were Messrs. Rogers and Hardy. Miss Addie Bennett, of Brooklyn, was maid of honor. She was gowned in pale-pink satin, with chiffon to match, and carried a bunch of La France roses. Among those present were Mr. and Mrs. Lus Passos, Miss Pennington, of Baltimore, Mr. and Mrs. Henry Mole, Mrs. Ettore Bostogi, Mrs. Bennett, of Brooklyn, Miss Stewart, Mr. and Mrs. Edward Dart, Miss Dart, Miss Cook and Mr. and Mrs. McKee, of Pittsburg.

COWAN—KOEHLER.

The marriage of Miss Eugenie Koehler, daughter of Joseph M. Koehler, of No. 1021 Madison avenue, to John J. Cowan was celebrated at 6:30 P. M. yesterday.

OH, WE'RE A NOBLEMAN!

Thuna Swindles Eighteen Boarding-Houses, and Will Wear Stripes.

Max Thuna was convicted in General Sessions yesterday of the larceny of $25 from Mrs. Margaret E. Mackie, who formerly kept a boarding house at No. 343 East Nineteenth street. Seventeen other comely boarding-house mistresses, who were swindled by Thuna, testified against him. Thuna went to Mrs. Mackie's house one evening clad in a long ulster and patent-leather boots. He said he was a foreign nobleman on his way home from the World's Fair and wanted board for several days. He carried a small valise. He told Mrs. Mackie that he had a piano and a valuable horse at the Dealbosses street ferry house, and wanted to know if she had any objection to his bringing the piano to his room. Mrs. Mackie said she would be delighted, as she had a daughter who could play.

Then Mr. Thuna explained that he couldn't get the piano until he had paid a little obligation he owed the express company. All he had with him, he explained, was a gold watch, a family heirloom, which he didn't want to sell outright. Would Mrs. Mackie be so kind as to lend him $25 on it? Mrs. Mackie, anxious to oblige the noble boarder, let him have the money and took the watch as security. The

THE COIN MAKERS

CHORUS OF CANDIDATES—The boodle, the
The boodle, the
GILROY—Shall I shut them up, boss?
CROKER—Let them sing! They think they'

TALK IN POLITICAL RESORTS.

Lively Times in the Ninth District, Where Gibbs Sharpens His Cowie Tomahawk—An Old Quarrel.

There are two days more of registration in New York County this year. These fall upon Oct. 27 and 28, Friday and Saturday of next week. From present appearances the registration will be unusually light.

* * *

Just now there is more fighting politics going on in the Ninth Assembly District than anywhere else from Kingsbridge to the Battery. The Ninth is a peculiar district. It has a larger percentage of American-born voters than almost any other district in the city, and every man of them is a politician. He shouts for home rule and passes resolutions against outside interference in all of its organizations, Republican or Democratic, native or foreign, white or black. The Tammany leader in the Ninth is James W. Boyle, a genial, good fellow who jumped out of the old County Democracy about two years ago and has pushed himself into high favor in the Wigwam. He does not live in the Ninth District, but upon the death of the late James Fitzpatrick was designated as the leader by the Tammany Sathedrin, greatly to the disgust of the old Tammany men of the district. These men have never been conciliated. They now claim that Mr. Boyle from the minute he was made leader has been engaged in knocking down every old Tammany man of prominence who had stood high in the confidence of Mr. Fitzpatrick and replacing him with an ex-County Democrat who was a friend of Mr. Boyle. They point to the fact that Mr. Boyle is not in sympathy with the policy of home rule by showing that none of his home delegates to the Saratoga Convention lived in his district, and that the delegate selected by him to the Constitutional Convention, committee, "requesting" that they send $25 each for the purpose named.

* * *

The most peculiar thing about the fight in the district is its bringing to the front the old personal quarrel between ex-Senator Fred Gibbs and ex-Alderman James A. Cowie, whose factional fights in the old Thirteenth District formed one of the most picturesque features for New York politics for nearly a decade. Under the reapportionment Mr. Cowie is now a resident of the Ninth, but the old bitterness between him and Gibbs still continues and Mr. Gibbs is fighting from under cover as usual. Mr. Gibbs's chief lieutenant in the Thirteenth District is Michael Curley, a saloon keeper at Tenth avenue, corner of Seventeenth street. Mr. Curley is brother-in-law of John McDermott, a young man born and raised in the Ninth District, of clean record, but of no political experience, whom Mr. Boyle has nominated as member of the Assembly from the Ninth. Prominent Tammany men in the district say that Mr. McDermott is as much ex-Senator Gibbs's candidate as he is the candidate of Mr. Boyle, and that the Gibbs Republicans in that portion of the Ninth District, which was formerly the old Thirteenth, will vote for him and knife Cowie to gratify the old time spite of Senator Gibbs.

Judicial Citizens date is wholes lawyer.
democ
good ch

The Fourth days to Many longed ganizati
the clu however over to wants h

The District
date for the losses run and him tha

The doing t drawn
"A

sembly:

Frank Croker.
Wolf to him.
could Assemb to him last off
To his
in the future voters have d nothing
point o

Just what led up to the nomination of Mr. McDermott at Senator Gibbs's suggestion has not yet been developed. Bartholomew Kenny, one of Fitzpatrick's old henchmen, holds a place as dockmaster. He says he has received information that his place was being bargained for by the leaders of his organization, and that Mr. Gibbs and his man Curley had the dispossess at if could be turned out. He could get no satisfaction from the district leaders and in desperation went directly to Mr. Croker who decided that he was not to be removed, Gibbs and Curley were very much disappointed. They said that the place belonged to them by the fulfillment of some previous contract which has never yet come

51

BEST COPY AVAILABLE

881014011

The Emma Goldman Papers

"My Year in Stripes" / Emma Goldman.– pp. 1-2 ; 43 cm. In The World. –(Aug. 18, 1894).

Obtained from the University of California, Berkeley. Institutional Location: Doe Library.

Why The World Exists

The World

"Circulation Books Open to All."

VOL. XXXV. NO. 12,051. PRICE TWO CENTS. NEW YORK, SATURDAY, AUGUST 18, 1894.

"MY YEAR IN STRIPES."

Emma Goldman, Anarchist, Describes Her Imprisonment on Blackwell's Island.

SHE CANNOT FORGET ITS HORRORS.

Her Life in the Women's Prison and the Sufferings of the Miserable Ones Who Shared It.

EVEN HOME IS DARKER NOW, SHE SAYS.

Once Again, She Solemnly Declares She Will Not Rest Until Government Is Overturned and Anarchy Is on Top.

Emma Goldman, the Anarchist, was released from the penitentiary on Blackwell's Island yesterday. She was imprisoned there for delivering an incendiary speech a year ago. Miss Goldman wrote a letter relating her experiences and observations in prison, and the idea gained her that the letter had a certain commercial value. The World bought it, just as The World would buy an unpublished poem by Tennyson or the description of a prize fight by John L. Sullivan. Besides being interesting to the few who agree with Miss Goldman's views touching society and government, this letter will appeal to the great body of the American people who like to hear both sides of a question.

Here it is:

To the Editor of The World:

The right of free speech and assembly has long been a dead letter, a farce.

Peaceful laborers are not safe for a policeman's club. Honest men are persecuted, imprisoned and legally murdered for giving utterance to their feelings. The crimes and outrages of the police committed during the past year prove only too well that despotism and tyranny have supplanted the freedom once guaranteed to every man and woman of America.

My prosecution was conducted with such injustice, however, that many thinking men and women all over the country have not only noticed it but have entered an act of their sympathy for the "terrible Emma Goldman."

Why was this prosecution confronted with so much venom and spite? Surely not because the accused was a woman!

I, this terrible Anarchist, was arrested, not for what I said, but on a trumped-up charge made by a few legalized blackmailers, detectives and spies—men who have sold their honor and their manhood for a petty mess of pottage.

The whole trial was conducted with the greatest unfairness. They proved neither my guilt nor my innocence.

SCARED BY THE GHOST OF ANARCHY.

I was convicted, not because of the lecture delivered on Aug. 21, but because it was an Anarchist that stood before them. It was not Emma Goldman that was tried in the Court of General Sessions, but the ideas she expressed. It was the red ghost of Anarchy that made the courageous "protectors of law and order" tremble—it was the fear of the future, their guilty consciences which told them that it was not wise to have Emma Goldman among the people. It was uncomfortable to have men and women who were able and willing to open the eyes of the oppressed and show them a way to a better condition. It is safer for corrupt people that such men and women should be out of the way even if perjury must be resorted to in order to accomplish it. What does it matter if Emma Goldman was brutally attacked by six ruffians—dragged through the streets, submitted to indignities that would make the most hardened criminal quail.

What does it matter how it is done, so she is disposed of?

JUSTICE SHE DID NOT EXPECT; MERCY SHE SCORNED.

What does it matter how many lies those Judases may tell, so the purpose is accomplished and the authorities are thereby enabled to rid themselves of one whose presence is disagreeable. I knew before the trial what the result would be, but engaged counsel not because I desired to sue for either justice or mercy. The former I did not expect, the latter I spurned.

It was to propagate my principles and prevent my enemies from hustling me off to prison without a hearing or a trial, as they did in the case of my comrade, Claus Timmerman.

Well, Emma Goldman was disposed of. Not so her cause, you "noble knights," who tremble at the voice of Truth. You can imprison an Anarchist and legally slaughter our comrades, but you cannot kill Anarchy. It defies you, and will live on when judges, district attorneys, detectives, spies, tyrants and monsters of every description will be buried under the last fragment of private property, Church and State.

FROM THE TOMBS TO THE PENITENTIARY.

Two days after my trial I was sent to my new "residence," in which I was to spend the following ten months. After being confined for two weeks in the Tombs, this was a change, and any change was welcome. I enjoyed the trip immensely. When I reached the dock I saw several representatives of the press who had become my faithful knights and who stuck manfully by me all through my trouble. They seemed to [illegible] to me, but I had never cared much for reporters, but I was very grateful for their company.

Blackwell's Island is beautifully situated, surrounded by water. Its grounds are lovely. It seems more like a place of enjoyment than of suffering, but one look at the gray, gloomy building is sufficient to chill the new prisoner.

"Beggars are not choosers" is the old proverb, and although I neither begged her choice this place for my temporary "home," I was very much interested in it, and made a thorough examination of the outside of the palace.

DRIVEN THERE BY THEIR SURROUNDINGS.

American prisons compare favorably with Russian ones in cleanliness and order. On the whole, however, they are just as corrupt, just as miserable. And the food and cells are worse.

Most of the unfortunates in the prisons are victims of the pernicious conditions of society. They are driven either by need or by temptation to commit the offenses that place them there. Most of these offenses are of less importance than those committed daily and hourly by the rich and influential.

During my ten months' imprisonment I met no criminals that were at all odd to do. All were poor, miserable, broken-down remnants of humanity. Scarred in the streets of New York, and uprooted from earliest infancy by the other unfortunates some of them so educated. All are aged long before their time by privations and poverty.

WHY HIM WRITING THIS.

Personally I cannot complain of my own treatment. Upon the time I entered I received much better treatment than the others. I was never punished. I had lighter work and was always treated with a certain amount of respect. It is not, therefore, any special spite I wish to vent that prompts me to place my experiences before the public, but an earnest desire to call the attention of thinking people to the miserable conditions of the inmates there.

When I reached prison I was brought before the head matron, who has entire charge of the female portion of the institution. This lady is the sister-in-law of the warden, and, of course, has a "pull." The warden is an old, feeble man, and seems to be under the influence of four women—his wife, his sister-in-law and daughter and a cousin. They are the real managers, the poor old gentleman being only a puppet in their hands. He has, however, a certain amount of firmness, and if he knew how his sister-in-law abuses the position she holds she would not hold it a week.

"ALLOWED TO TAKE A BATH."

The matron is about fifty years of age, tall and very stout, with a cruel, hard face and a sensual mouth. She makes a chilling impression on the newcomer. To me she was more than usually kind. She gave me a more civil reception than prisoners usually get, and assisted me to undress myself. Then she gave me a blue and white striped dress and blue checked apron, the usual prison costume. After my name, occupation and address were taken, I was allowed to take a bath, which was greatly refreshing after two weeks of the Tombs.

Prisoners are given a bath each week and furnished with a change of clothing.

"THE HOTEL," AS SHE CALLS IT.

The female wing consists of a large mess hall, with sixty-seven cells. A large room for the chapel and a ward for the sick. The cells are short and narrow, dark and damp. A piece of canvas stretched across two irons represents the bed, two blankets, a straw pillow and a pail completed the outfit.

It was near 5 o'clock when I retired to my "chamber." I sat down and commenced to think. "How shall I ever stand it in this hole?"

I fell asleep while meditating upon the subject, but suddenly I jumped to my feet, startled by a loud gong. One of the prisoners told me it was supper-time.

Supper consisted of a pan of a greasy black liquid called "coffee," which is a decoction made by pouring boiling water over burnt bread.

The "ladies" of the "hotel" seemed very hungry; they ate their portions in silence.

"Women are reforming," I thought, "for those seemed to have learned the lesson of keeping silent." Afterward I found out that their silence was not due to improvement, but to the rules, which forbid talking at meals. This was one of the hardest rules for new female boarders to obey.

Supper did not last longer than five minutes. Then they all went back to their cells. Then a loud voice said "Close!" and all the doors slammed together. The cells were locked, and one day of misery had passed.

THE ROUTINE OF A DAY.

At 5 o'clock in the morning I was awakened again by the clang of a bell, at which signal the cells were unlocked and the "ladies" went down to make [illegible] to me, but I had never cared much for reporters, but I was very grateful for their company.

Blackwell's Island is beautifully situated, surrounded by water. Its grounds are lovely. It seems more like a place of enjoyment than of suffering, but one look at the gray, gloomy building is sufficient to chill the new prisoner.

"Beggars are not choosers" is the old proverb, and although I neither begged her choice this place for my temporary "home," I was very much interested in it, and made a thorough examination of the outside of the palace.

DRIVEN THERE BY THEIR SURROUNDINGS.

American prisons compare favorably with Russian ones in cleanliness and order. On the whole, however, they are just as corrupt, just as miserable. And the food and cells are worse.

Most of the unfortunates in the prisons are victims of the pernicious conditions of society. They are driven either by need or by temptation to commit the offenses that place them there. Most of these offenses are of less importance than those committed daily and hourly by the rich and influential.

During my ten months' imprisonment I met no criminals that were at all odd to do. All were poor, miserable, broken-down remnants of humanity. Scarred in the streets of New York, and uprooted from earliest infancy by the other unfortunates some of them so educated. All are aged long before their time by privations and poverty.

WHY HIM WRITING THIS.

Personally I cannot complain of my own treatment. Upon the time I entered I received much better treatment than the others. I was never punished. I had lighter work and was always treated with a certain amount of respect. It is not, therefore, any special spite I wish to vent that prompts me to place my experiences before the public, but an earnest desire to call the attention of thinking people to the miserable conditions of the inmates there.

When I reached prison I was brought before the head matron, who has entire charge of the female portion of the institution. This lady is the sister-in-law of the warden, and, of course, has a "pull." The warden is an old, feeble man, and seems to be under the influence of four women—his wife, his sister-in-law and daughter and a cousin. They are the real managers, the poor old gentleman being only a puppet in their hands. He has, however, a certain amount of firmness, and if he knew how his sister-in-law abuses the position she holds she would not hold it a week.

"ALLOWED TO TAKE A BATH."

The matron is about fifty years of age, tall and very stout, with a cruel, hard face and a sensual mouth. She makes a chilling impression on the newcomer. To me she was more than usually kind. She gave me a more civil reception than prisoners usually get, and assisted me to undress myself. Then she gave me a blue and white striped dress and blue checked apron, the usual prison costume. After my name, occupation and address were taken, I was allowed to take a bath, which was greatly refreshing after two weeks of the Tombs.

Prisoners are given a bath each week and furnished with a change of clothing.

"THE HOTEL," AS SHE CALLS IT.

The female wing consists of a large mess hall, with sixty-seven cells. A large room for the chapel and a ward for the sick. The cells are short and narrow, dark and damp. A piece of canvas stretched across two irons represents the bed, two blankets, a straw pillow and a pail completed the outfit.

It was near 5 o'clock when I retired to my "chamber." I sat down and commenced to think. "How shall I ever stand it in this hole?"

I fell asleep while meditating upon the subject, but suddenly I jumped to my feet, startled by a loud gong. One of the prisoners told me it was supper-time.

Supper consisted of a pan of a greasy black liquid called "coffee," which is a decoction made by pouring boiling water over burnt bread.

The "ladies" of the "hotel" seemed very hungry; they ate their portions in silence.

"Women are reforming," I thought, "for those seemed to have learned the lesson of keeping silent." Afterward I found out that their silence was not due to improvement, but to the rules, which forbid talking at meals. This was one of the hardest rules for new female boarders to obey.

Supper did not last longer than five minutes. Then they all went back to their cells. Then a loud voice said "Close!" and all the doors slammed together. The cells were locked, and one day of misery had passed.

THE ROUTINE OF A DAY.

At 5 o'clock in the morning I was awakened again by the clang of a bell, at which signal the cells were unlocked and the "ladies" went down to make [illegible] fastidious, for only five minutes are allowed for this purpose and they never are late.

After that they are driven like cattle to their cells again. Then the bell rings for breakfast and all the inmates march down to the mess-hall. This meal is a repetition of that of the night before; "coffee" and bread, then back they go to their cells, where they remain until 11 o'clock.

The air in these cells is shocking and nauseating. The women remain in them until a bell calls them down for a walk. With their pails in their hands they all walk to the river, a short distance from the prison. The "line" or "gang" is led by two matrons.

There are usually about seventy women in this institution. About twenty-five women work in the laundry, which is considered the hardest work. Five serve at the warden's house. Two serve the deputy warden. The others, who are not in the sewing department, do chamber-work for the keepers.

MADE FOREWOMAN OF THE SEWERS.

I was made forewoman in the sewing-room. I had to give out the work, do all the cutting and packing and keep the accounts of work sent in and sent during the week. Here the women mend shirts, sacks and pants for the male prisoners. The sewing women have to work very hard. Miss Wad was not only a very [illegible] but also a hard job. I had to be on my feet all day.

From 1:30 to 11:30 A. M. all is quiet. Then the washwomen come in and take their seats for dinner. The [illegible] for the four days of the week is invariably corned beef with [illegible] potatoes. On Friday there is a treat—fish and potatoes. A half hour is allowed for dinner and a half hour for rest. Then all start at work again until 4:30 P. M. On Saturdays the work is stopped at noon and the prisoners remain in their cells. On Sundays those who are religiously inclined are allowed to leave their cells and attend church services.

IN THE HOSPITAL.

I remained on the floor two months, when I had an attack of rheumatism. But not until I could no longer work was I transferred to the hospital.

Until that time, although my work had been arduous, I had not seen the real horrors of prison life. But what I witnessed in that hospital made my blood run cold and filled me with indignation and horror.

The hospital is large and airy. There are sixteen beds, and it is kept exceedingly neat and clean—considering patients do all the scrubbing and cleaning. There are three doctors—house-surgeon and junior.

A doctor from the city visits the wards three or four times a week. The others visit them twice a day.

After a month's illness I was made orderly in the ward, after which time I had full charge of all the medicines and patients. I had to wait on the doctors who take care of the sick and attend all operations. Although one matron is on day duty and one at night, all the work was left to me, and for seven long months I worked night and day.

The day matron is old and too infirm to take proper care of the sick. She has also to attend to other duties. While her will be good, she is unable to do the work. The night matron, who is on duty four nights in the week, is a noble, generous woman, kind and goodhearted. She makes every effort to make the burden of those poor, sick women lighter.

CHARGES AGAINST THE HEAD MATRON.

The greatest pleasure of the head matron is to torment and plague both her assistant and the prisoners. Nothing satisfies her, nothing pleases her. Her harsh voice is heard from one end of the place to another, and she keeps it in an uproar from morning until night.

She encourages prisoners to gossip about each other and about the under matrons. She often requires prisoners to spy upon the under matrons and report to her—a duty I flatly refused to do.

She has, however, one unaccountable mania. She is very fond of colored people. While I see no difference in races, I think all should be regarded as human beings. The most depraved, ignorant, repulsive black woman is sure of a warm reception from this head matron and is placed above the most intelligent white woman. No matter what they do, she will never punish them, but will deprive white women of their food and other comforts for them. They abuse, insult and even beat their white sisters in misery.

Some of this head matron's modes of punishment are as ridiculous as others are cruel. Fancy a full-grown woman standing all day facing a black-board! Prisoners receiving this punishment are also deprived of their dinner. If all these things fail then comes the dungeon, with its cold, dark dreariness—a most cruel and brutal punishment.

Many of the prisoners are kept in the dungeon for weeks.

EMMA GOLDMAN.

My imprisonment is over now and I do not regret it. It has been a school of experience for me and my time was not altogether lost. For it was my privilege to make the lives of some of the poor, helpless ones more endurable.

I was often shocked by the cruelties of the place, and I remember one woman who was not allowed to see a doctor, though her temperature was 103.

Another woman begged to be taken out of the stifling cell. She was choking—the kind matron said she was only "faking." A few days after I was sent for and hurried down with restoratives. But I saw as soon as I reached her that she was no longer in the power of prison authorities. The doctors said she died of heart trouble.

Another woman seventy years of age went there sick, but the brutal head matron put her to scrubbing. She was

(Continued on Second Page.)

My imprisonment is over now and I do not regret it. It has been a school of experience for me and my time was not altogether lost. For it was my privilege to make the lives of some of the poor, helpless ones more endurable.

I was often shocked by the cruelties of the place, and I remember one woman who was not allowed to see a doctor, though her temperature was 103.

Another woman begged to be taken out of the stifling cell. She was choking—the kind matron said she was only "faking." A few days after I was sent for and hurried down with restoratives. But I saw as soon as I reached her that she was no longer in the power of prison authorities. The doctors said she died of heart trouble.

Another woman seventy years of age went there sick, but the brutal head matron put her to scrubbing. She was

(Continued on Second Page.)

THEY SWEAR IT'S A GHOST.

Here Are Five Men Who Make Affidavit About This Apparition on Third Avenue.

IT'S A POLITE SORT OF SPECTRE.

Runs Right, Left and Centre, and Runs Not Complain When a Brick Is Shied Through It.

No fewer than fifteen persons are willing to take solemn oath that they saw this ghost in the front room of the first flat at No. 1353 Third avenue. This is an ordinary four-story building, the ground floor being a store, just like hundreds of others on Third avenue. The block between Seventy-second and Seventy-third streets is as busy as any other on that busy thoroughfare.

The ground floor of this building was occupied as a paint shop. It was burned out last Saturday. The parlor of the flat above was burned badly. The windows were destroyed altogether. John O'Connor, a bartender, his two sisters and his cousin, Thomas McKeown, occupy the flat.

The discoverer of this ghost is Simon Weinberg, who has a cigar store and a billiard parlor at No. 1352 Third avenue, which is directly opposite the haunted house. Mr. Weinberg is also a notary public. Mr. Weinberg does not look like a discoverer of ghosts. He has the reputation of being a sedate and conservative man. This is what he says of the ghost:

"I was sitting out in front on Wednesday night. It was just 10:15 o'clock when I saw it. It was a white figure in the window. I thought it was a woman in her night dress at first, and I didn't think much of it. Then it began to act strangely. Then I looked at it closely. It was like a man with a sheet over him. It stretched out its arms and waved them back and forth. It bowed to the right and then to the left. Then it bowed in front. It moved with a slow and stately movement.

"Three young fellows, who came out of the saloon in the middle of the block, saw it, too, and stopped suddenly. One of them yelled and the ghost darted out of sight. The young men walked on, and I thought it was some fellow playing a joke. Within a minute or two the ghost appeared again. It began to march back and forth in front of the windows, bowing right and left.

"I called to some young fellows who were on the corner. One, McLaughlin, lives upstairs. 'Come here, Mac,' I said, 'look across the street there's a ghost up there.'

"'Oh, rats,' Mac says, 'I don't believe in any such nonsense as that.'

"Then he looked over, and when he saw the ghost bowing he gave a jump. One of the other fellows began to shiver. I said I thought it was some one playing a joke. Then a young fellow with red hair and a straw hat picked up half a brick.

"'I'll soon settle whether it is a human being or not,' he said. With that he walked over towards the other side. He waited until the ghost was in the middle of the window and then he fired the brick straight at it. We saw that brick go right through the white figure, and we heard the brick fall on the floor with a crash. The ghost melted away."

Somebody suggested that they get a policeman. McLaughlin found Policeman Quinn, who was on post. "There's a ghost in No. 1353," said McLaughlin. "Come up and see it." The policeman told McLaughlin he had the willies, whatever they are, but he decided to investigate. Just as the window came within the policeman's vision the apparition appeared.

"Holy smoke!" exclaimed the policeman, only he didn't say smoke—"What hell?" Then he stopped. He watched the bowing of the white figure, the melting into air and the appearing again. Then he went over and interviewed Richard Stephens, who is employed to watch the burned paint-shop.

"Ghost?" said the watchman, "Huh!"

Then he laughed at the policeman. Quinn went to Morrison's saloon and saw O'Connor.

"What do you mean by letting some fool dress himself in a sheet and go bowing around in your flat?" he demanded.

O'Connor breathed hard and significantly tapped his forehead, but Quinn convinced him he wasn't fooling. O'Connor put on his coat and went with the policeman. But by that time the ghost had made its final appearance for the night.

Weinberg was a good deal disturbed about the ghost, and he told many people about it. They laughed at him and said he had "seen. All the same ten or fifteen of them made it their business to be around on Thursday night. Promptly at five minutes before 11 the ghost appeared at the window. It bowed as it had done the night before.

The discoverer of the ghost thought the matter over and decided that something should be done. He talked it over with some of those who had seen the apparition, and the result was that this affidavit was sworn to:

We, the undersigned, do swear that on the date, at about 11 P. M., we saw what appeared to be a ghost at the first-floor window of No. 1353 Third avenue New York City.

B. DREYFUS,
V. LEWIS,
J. McCAREN,
J. BOENNAN,
WILLIAM SALOMON.

Sworn to before me this 10th day of August, 1894.

SIMON WEINBERG,
Notary No. 122.

A reporter found that O'Connor's household was a good deal excited over the affair. "A ghost," said Miss Annie O'Connor, "sure, there's nothing of the kind about here. There's no room for a ghost in the flat. It's all the getting up of those men across the street."

"A ghost!" said Stephens, the watchman, "it's a natural ghost. I discovered what it was last night. It was a cat, a white cat. I saw it plain enough. But those fellows across the street would go before any court in the land and swear that it was a ghost. There ain't no such things as ghosts."

Every one of the men who signed the affidavit said a good many others were

(Continued on Second Page.)

MAUL'S BUBBLE TO BURST.

When Wedding Bliss Was Pulled Out to Love with Garage Slapper He Was Her Beau.

When the Rev. Dr. Roberts performed the ceremony which made Miss Nina H. Pillard, of Pillard, Livingston County, Mrs. George Francis, of New York City, in the John Hardy Fifth avenue church a month ago to-day, he did not know that the handsome young man was once an employee at the elegant Pillard home in Livingston County, and that he was taken up by the pretty and wealthy young woman and by her old-educated and put in the way of success in worldly affairs. Nor did he know that George Francis was once George Clapper, and that the Pillard and Clapper families in Livingston County are widely separated in the social scale.

The Pillard family went to the Genesee Valley with the salt boom, and the village which grew up about there was named Pillardville in their honor. It is now called Pillard for short. The family kept up a fine establishment at Pillard and another here.

The Clapper family was poor and the boys worked at odd jobs over the county. George was the most ambitious. He was studious and managed to take courses in bookkeeping at the Geneseo Normal School. The knowledge there gained secured him a place in a grocery store at Rochester, but he went back to Livingston County and somehow drifted into the employ of the Pillardes. While with them he frequently drove the carriage for the young ladies of the family.

Just how it happened only Miss Nina and the studious young employee know. But it did happen, and one day humble George Clapper packed up and went to Poughkeepsie, where he entered the business college and was finally graduated with honor.

Everybody in Pillard said Miss Nina knew where the money came from that supported the young man during those years and paid for his education.

George Clapper came from College a handsome and polished young gentleman, very different from his brothers and sisters at home, and the equal of the elegant Pillards in bearing and attainments.

But the transformation was not complete. One day George Clapper posted off to Albany, and after a little legal formality left the city as George Francis. Then he came to the metropolis, and soon fell into a good business which now brings him enough to support two in the style becoming to his assumed station in life.

But George Francis never forgot the Clapper kindly still, visiting along and jobs in Livingston County, and when he went back there to visit his old parents had many a good drive with him behind the best team George could find at the livery stables. A year or so ago he bought a house for the old folks, and they expect to die in it surrounded by the comfort and plenty they did not know when their boy was plain George Clapper.

During these visits whenever Miss Nina and George Francis met they greeted each other as old acquaintances, nothing more. That is why the news of their marriage has upset all Livingston County.

Dr. Henry O. Pillard, of No. 10 West Thirty-fifth street, is an uncle of the young bride. At the residence last night it was said that the family preferred to give out for publication nothing beyond the fact that the marriage had taken place at the time and place stated.

TOWSER GOT A BATH ALL RIGHT.

But as He Struggled to Get In the Swim He Dragged in His Master, and a Man Who Tried to Save Him Was Arrested.

Jacob Maul, of No. 236 Pleasant avenue, is not a fish by any means. He owns a Newfoundland dog, Towser, that stands nearly as many hands high as he does. He took Towser to the foot of East One Hundred and Seventeenth street for a swim after dinner yesterday. The dog was impatient to get into the water. He dragged his master about while the latter was trying to unhook the chain from his collar, and, suddenly, both dog and man were floundering in the river.

Two small boys on the dock yelled for help, and Louis Elgin, a plumber, of No. 346 East One Hundred and Seventeenth street, dived in. Maul instantly threw his hands around his neck and Elgin was powerless. He tried ineffectually to shake off the drowning man, and when he found it was useless he shouted to the boys to run for help.

John Quinn, of No. 446 East One Hundred and Fourteenth street, came along and jumped in. He managed to tow both men to the dock and they were dragged ashore.

Policeman Meickle, of the East One Hundred and Twenty-sixth Street Station, had been called. Maul was excited and dripping. He speaks indifferent English, and the policeman had an idea that he was accusing Elgin of having pushed him into the river. He arrested Elgin. Quinn and the boys accompanied Meickle and his prisoner to Harlem Police Court. There, through an interpreter, Maul told how the dog had dragged him into the water. When Elgin jumped in and grabbed him he was sure his would-be rescuer wanted to drown him. The small boys said it wasn't so, and Justice Tainter discharged Elgin.

The dog—well, he didn't act a bit like the Newfoundland dogs of the school books. He just swam around, and didn't worry about his splashing, spluttering master or the man who was making a collar-and-elbow effort to save him. Maul said when he was leaving court that he thought Towser had got rattled.

MRS. ASTOR WINS A RACE.

Ladies Steer Catboats at Newport in an Exciting Contest.

(Special to The World.)

NEWPORT, R. I., Aug. 17.—An exciting catboat race took place off this port this afternoon between local cats selected from those usually to be let for here from the Long Wharf. The crews were appointed by lot, and consisted of a lady and gentleman for each boat. The lady steered and the boat was disqualified if her companion touched the tiller. The steerswomen were Mrs. J. J. Astor, Mrs. Butler Duncan, Mrs. Harriman, Mrs. Ladenburg and another lady whose name was not disclosed.

Royal Phelps Carroll had charge of the procession, and the starting signal was given from the Navalces. The course was from a line between Navahoe and [illegible] and around the buoy on Bishops Rock and return. The wind blew strong from the east, making it a dead run to the mark and a beat back. A remarkably good race resulted in a win for Mrs. J. J. Astor, Mrs. Potter was a good second. J. J. Astor's electric launch Progresso accompanied the fleet around the course and a fleet of cats and naphthas covered round during the contest.

Ithuriel, Vaquero, Celia, Adelaide and Dorothy are ready for the twenty-one-foot race to-morrow for August Belmont's cup. This class will have a race off this port every day next week: Monday, second cat, for prize presented by Aperal Belmont; Tuesday, first cat race for cup presented by the ladies of Newport valued at $50; Wednesday, race for cup presented by Herbert Barrett; Thursday, second cat race for ladies; Friday, race for cup presented by Ralph Ellis; Saturday, deal for ladies' cup.

CAMPANIA IS QUEEN [illegible]

Arrives from Queenstown in Five Days Nine Hours and Twenty-[illegible] Minutes.

SMASHING ALL OCEAN RECORDS.

Her Passengers Left Behind [illegible] Stop in New York Friday Night—Odd Events Logged in Two Days.

To the eastward of Fire Island appeared at 4 P. M. yesterday the red funnels of the steamship Campania. She had sailed from Queenstown Sunday, and her passengers did not [illegible] America Friday night.

This wonderful voyage breaks [illegible] ocean record as it has not been broken for years, and the prophecies [illegible] where the big twin Cunarders,

STEAMSHIP CAMPANIA—QUEENST[illegible] TWIN

[illegible] and Lucania, were launched [illegible] been more than realized. But it [illegible] surprise even to those who had [illegible] so much of the highest [illegible] English ship-building skill. And [illegible] the sea-sharps got down to [illegible] they grew more and more amazed.

The Campania left Liverpool Saturday. At Queenstown she took [illegible] the remainder of the British mail, [illegible] those passengers who had elected [illegible] aboard at her last port. Just [illegible] soon the last sack and the last [illegible] passengers were aboard, and the [illegible] got under way. At exactly 12:01 Sunday she passed Daunt's Rock, [illegible] entrance of the harbor, and swung [illegible] to the westward. There was a [illegible] west, northwest wind blowing, [illegible] enough to ruffle the ocean. [illegible] was light and languid, and as the [illegible] pama left the land, sank down, [illegible] her, the open ocean laid as peaceful [illegible] a pond. Her twin screws sent a [illegible] swath of foam astern, and the [illegible] was so still that for hours it could be seen lying behind her in a broad [illegible]

From Sunday noon to midday [illegible] the twin engines, exerting their [illegible] effort of 30,000-horse power, [illegible] flyer over the knots. From Monday [illegible] till Tuesday at the same [illegible] weather was serene, and when [illegible] day observation was taken and [illegible] quest mathematical problems [illegible] solved, it was found that the Ca[illegible] had made just 525 miles more.

[illegible] through these tremendous [illegible] ances of speed the engines worked [illegible] easily as a well-oiled hub. When [illegible] ship's day ended on Wednesday, [illegible] showed that in the twenty-four [illegible] she had made 543 knots.

The west, northwest winds be[illegible] Aug. 16, Thursday, when the Ca[illegible] was off the Grand Banks—the h[illegible] fog and ice. Then they shifted [illegible] to the southeast, and from that [illegible] swung to the north, northeast [illegible] came with the shifting winds, [illegible] two hours the engines worked [illegible] duced speed. This was done as a [illegible] pre of safety for all afloat on [illegible] lantic, for if the Campania had [illegible] other vessel she would have [illegible] through her as a knife cuts through [illegible] low cheese. In the two hours [illegible] vessel crawled, her engineers [illegible] that she lost about eleven knots [illegible] about thirty minutes in time.

[illegible] fog didn't last long, and at the [illegible] the enforced delay the Campania [illegible] winging away to the westward [illegible] pace she had set from the Irish [illegible] As a result of the delay her run [illegible] Thursday to 525 knots. She made [illegible] a measure next day, however, and [illegible] the run, 548 knots, was announced [illegible] was a cheer from officers and passengers alike.

All hands knew about this time [illegible] the laurels of the Lucania—the world's [illegible] record of 5 days 12 hours and 17 [illegible] minutes—were lost, and bets were offered [illegible] but the wagers were, of course, [illegible] much she would beat the record. [illegible] had an idea that she wouldn't, but [illegible] man willing to gamble that she [illegible] lose could have had many an [illegible] money offered at two-hundreds to [illegible] odds. Every soul aboard was [illegible] for a trip through Thursday, [illegible] early hours of Friday morning [illegible] there were almost as many waiters [illegible] on the ship as there are at a [illegible] meeting.

Long before noon the excitement [illegible] high, and when the officers appeared [illegible] the bridge to take the observations [illegible] flew as fast as the foam that [illegible] under the Campania's counter. [illegible] announcement of the day's run made [illegible] money change hands, but most [illegible] on the time she would make to [illegible] was pretty well figured out that [illegible] nothing short of an accident could [illegible] the Campania from sighting Sandy [illegible] Lucania's time. The mathematicians [illegible] aboard knew the ship's position [illegible] noon observation, and from that [illegible] they knew it was in the neighborhood [illegible] of 120 miles to Sandy Hook. [illegible] Island was abeam at 4:25 P. M., [illegible] and was pretty well figured out that [illegible] the Island to the Hook the Campania [illegible] made the distance of thirty-four miles [illegible] in exactly one hour and twenty minutes.

At exactly 5:45 P. M. she crossed [illegible] bar at Sandy Hook, making the run [illegible] from Daunt's Rock in 5 days 7 hours [illegible] by 3 hours and 11 minutes. The [illegible] was 2,781 knots, a short course, for [illegible] this reason her performance is considered [illegible] to be navigators. [illegible] gineers in charge of the [illegible] chinery are of course those [illegible] most of the credit is due, for [illegible] of good seamanship could [illegible] for loyalty to this quarter.

Considering the time and the [illegible] covered the average hourly [illegible] Campania was 21.6 knots an [illegible] average daily run over 500 [illegible] high average that above [illegible] action.

This performance of the [illegible] entitles her to hold both [illegible] eastward records. Her [illegible] of 5 days, 11 hours and 57 [illegible] in November, 1893, [illegible] speed of 21.82 knots on [illegible] respect the Lucania is [illegible] the winter season, much [illegible] the one traveled over by the [illegible]

881014011

The Emma Goldman Papers

"My Year in Stripes" / Emma Goldman.– pp. 1-2 ; 43 cm. In The World. –(Aug. 18, 1894).

Obtained from the University of California, Berkeley. Institutional Location: Doe Library.

...RS DEFEAT BOERS.

...l Police Sent to Relieve a Besieged Garrison Driven Off with Heavy Loss.

...CKE OF FARMERS' FAMILIES.

...Siege Prepared in the ...pproaching Storm—Northern Road Blockaded.

...TORIA, South African Republic, ...ELIM—Kaffir rebels have re... the force of Transvaal mounted ...ent to relieve the besieged post ...t Agatha. The police lost heavily ...

...ttacked by numbers the Kaffirs ...d the retreating troopers and at ...the main returns of the Boer ...The Kaffirs were driven back, ...d advance of the column has been ...d.

KAFFIR IN WAR DANCE

...the Boer settlements along the ...Niver come reports of severe ...between isolated parties of re... Moors and the Kaffirs, who are ...these homesteads along the ...

...ers are fleeing before the Kaf... now, taking with them all their ...property, but large quantities of ...he and cattle have fallen into ...ends.

...Boer families have been massa... the fiercest feelings have been ...against the rebellious natives.

...Coulpansberg district Sandilah ...have been perpetrated. Large ...of women and children have ...in and an immense amount of ...has been destroyed.

...nd passenger coaches have been ...to all the disturbed districts. ...assengers have been killed, and ...bee, after being looted, have ...cked, the mules being stolen. ...Murchison road is closed. The ...ers erected a strong barricade ...at a point where it passes be... two hills, and they are said to ...red to stoutly defend this pass. ...overnment is reinforcing its ...e rapidly as possible. It is es... that an advance in force will be ...om the Kaffirs to-day or to-...

...ffirs are the great warlike na... of South America. The Zulus ...Matabeles are branches of this ...the term Kaffir is usually ap... the parent stem. One rarely ...the Zulus and Matabeles as ...

...story of the Kaffirs affords in ...rticulars a parallel to that of ...the Indian tribe in this country. ...as or the Sioux, for instance. ...the owners of the most fer... healthy lands in South Af... have been gradually crowded ...subdued by the British and ...olonists. At times they have ...igorous resistance and have in... great losses on the invading set... ...ent the time that Europe was ...k the great Napoleonic wars ...ed men, women and children, ...waste the unprotected settle... required all the British forces ...Africa to overcome them. ...The most formidable inroads of ...rs was about sixty years ago, ...y burst across the frontier ...fighting men and slaughtered ...mbers of people. It required ...the use of hand-to-hand fighting to ...them. That war was commarable ...ense to the fight between the ...ettlers and the Maoris in New ...Fifteen years later there was ...ig war, and there was yet an... ...ugh not quite so extensive, in ...

...affirs differ from the North ...Indians in that defeat in ...does not mean decay. Under ...nd Dutch rule they are in... ...n numbers and undergoing the ...ixing process as the Saxons in ...try. They are almost the only ...n the diamond fields ...

... and morally the Kaffirs are ...ior to the other negro tribes. ...her south they live that is, ...the climate aroun—the higher ...qualities.

...of the Kaffir tribes have light ...brown complexions, and they ...erly 6 feet in height. They are ...proportioned, muscular. But ...n, owing to excessive work, are ...all respects to the men, ex... up two tribes where they are ...The Kaffirs are Greve, war... ...ble, and were more honest ...original state than since they ...contact with Europeans. ...ffirs making the raids in the ...belong to outlying tribes, in... those further south, and will ...d as soon as the settlers can ...ir forces. The Dutch of the ...and Orange Free State are ...border warfare, as the Eng... tried to conquer them, know.

...TES OF THE RACE-TRACK.

...and remarkable page of famil... who play the horses, by The ...ever black and white artist, in ...'s Sunday World.

...OTHER WOMAN CRUSADER.

...in an Thirty-fifth Street by ...a Property Owner Arrested.

...Imbued with the spirit that ...Mrs. Ballade on the warpath ...h life in Twenty-fourth street, ...a Neville has started out ...ge on Thirty-fifth street. Yes... ...e went to Jefferson Market ...got a warrant for the ar... ...William M. Benger, of No. 151 ...ty-fifth street, for "eating the ...ns." Nos. 147, 149 and 151 co... ...t, for immoral purposes. Ben... arrested last night, but was ...

...ville was the Fairy Marvel ...namela" spectacle at Woburn... ...ays that when she found out ...ter of the people who lived ...ors" she asked to have her ...ted, but Benger refused to do ...She brought suit against him ...amages for false representa... ...retaliated by serving a notice ...

...ewsman.

..."are so close to Broadway," ...last night, "that I considered ...rtunate, until I heard the ...revelry that came up through ...shaft. I have to keep my ...closed tightly, so that my sis... ...ter may not hear the dis... ...conversation."

...ville has been engaged to ...State for the Republican ...fall. She says she is not ...any free advertisement.

...Vanilla Limited Stands Alone.

...Vanilla Limited, which runs the ...express company from New York a... ...fast train of the year and one of ...the finest trains from New York, over ...Chicago & Alton R.R.

"MY YEAR IN STRIPES."

(Continued from First Page.)

...ours several days before the Female ...Hirschberg would admit that she was ...sick. When the doctor ordered her to ...be removed in the hospital the brutal matron still declared she was "faking," and continued to abuse her until the nurse resented the indecently foul and unwomanly ...and attention. Tired and ...sympathy seemed very late for she died just a day as as before she would have been free, legally murdered.

WHAT SHE SAW WILL HAUNT HER.

Again I say that I received no ...treatment. But that could not affect me ...to the sufferings of the poor inmates there. My friends were astonishing in their attention and gave me the tenderest care, and the first matron knew that if any harm had befallen me, even though the law did nothing, she would have had to account to my friends. ...I can never forget the faces of the dead, sickened and blistered by suffering. I can never forget the haggard, worn look of the living. These sights will haunt me to my dying day.

I do not know why, but one female monster seemed anxious to propitiate me, and used to send me steals from her own table which I never touched—and talked very confidentially to me. But I am not to be so taken in.

MORE OF AN ANARCHIST THAN EVER.

Yes, I am more of an Anarchist than ever.

I am more than ever determined to use every means in my power to spread my doctrines among the people.

I defy prison and prosecution.

I could never protect myself, now that I have seen the injustice of the law.

However pleasantly I might be situated, I could not banish from my mind the thousands who are oppressed and suffer from the injustice of the present system.

Society lies in its last convulsions. The people are awakening to their condition. Let them once fully realise it and the present system will go.

Man cannot be happy as long as they are slaves.

They cannot expect theft, murder, prostitution and oppression to be gotten rid of until the system which breeds rottenness is gone.

Mending of any kind won't do.

The earth must be swept of these parasites—human vampires, despots of crime.

As the last fragments of this system disappear, Anarchy will lift her proud head and crown out her blessings to all humanity.

For this I shall continue to work.

The true and loving mother of humanity, my motto is an ever, "Death to Tyranny."

Vive l'Anarchie!

Emma Goldman

Before Warden Fitchury, of the penitentiary, went away on his vacation, he left orders that no reporters should be admitted to Miss Goldman. Ordinarily, the prisoners released from the penitentiary leave Blackwell's Island on the 8 A. M. boat, which heads them at the foot of East Fifty-second street. But Miss Goldman, with the purpose of avoiding the newspaper men, who she knew would be waiting for her, was permitted to take the 6 A. M. boat, which carries back the officers who have been on night duty in the prison.

Arrived at East Fifty-second street, Miss Goldman was met by Edward Grady, ex-Alderman Anarchist, who was a witness for her at her trial. A few reporters were waiting for her, but she positively refused to speak to them. With Grady, she boarded a First avenue car and rode uptown a few blocks. Then alighting, they took an elevated railroad train downtown. She breakfasted at Dennett's, on Park Row. Then she went home and yesterday afternoon and last night she visited her friends and received their congratulations on her release. The group of Anarchists in this city made no organized demonstration of joy at her return.

Miss Goldman was vivacious; her cheeks were red and her eyes were bright. She wore a new straw hat with gay flowers on it, a blue linen shirt-waist and a black dress skirt. She lost five pounds in weight during her incarceration.

"Physically I am pretty well," she said to a reporter of The World, "but the mental strain on me has been very great. It is a frightful thing for a woman of intelligence to be so placed that she cannot exercise her own free will, that she is a mere machine. But worse it was to be surrounded by such degraded wretches as are prisoners in the penitentiary. You must understand that I hold it is not their fault that they are what they are. But there they were in prison, and I was among them."

"Have you made any plans for the future?" asked the reporter.

"I cannot go backward," she answered. I cannot go sideways I must go forward."

Miss Goldman will speak in English at what is announced as a "grand concert, mass-meeting and reception," at the Thalia Theatre to-morrow night. John Swinton, Charles W. Mowbray and others will also make addresses.

It was at a meeting of the unemployed at Union Square last August that Miss Goldman uttered the words that a jury decided were incendiary. Her trial was most sensational. It opened on Oct. 5, 1893, and after four days her trial ended in a conviction. Her sentence of one year's imprisonment, which began on Oct. 16, was commuted by her good behavior to ten months.

HE'S A KNIGHT ERRANT IN BLUE.

Policeman Newhan Gallantly Rescues Seven Imprisoned Working Girls and Is Promised a Treat of Ice-Cream.

Policeman Charles Newhan, of the Macdougal Street Station, is a very modest man. He blushed when he was married, not many months ago, and may say in the station-house that he has never got over the habit. So when he walked past Nos. 169 and 170 South Fifth avenue at 6 o'clock last night and saw a dainty handkerchief flirting from the fire-escape above him he said: "Go on with yours, I'm a married man," and forthwith patrolled his beat. Then he came back, as it was his duty to do. The handkerchief was then being waved violently.

"Surely, ma'am," said he, "if your intentions are honorable you'll speak your mind, and I'll come to your aid, ma'am."

"Come quick," a soprano voice answered him, "we're in a heap of trouble. We're prisoners."

Off went Officer Meehan's coat and shield. In two minutes he was on the landing of that fire-escape. A moment later he was seen struggling down the difficult descent with a fainting bundle of femininity in his arms. By this time a curious crowd had gathered and there was much excitement. All sorts of stories had got about.

"Somebody's gone and locked up a dozen young ladies and the copper's gone to do him," cried a wise small boy, so the crowd expected a scrap.

But there wasn't any. Policeman Newhan carried one young lady down, then he fetched another until he had landed seven on the sidewalk.

Then the girls explained it all. They were making paper boxes for the Monneck Manufacturing Company, and, as there was a rush of business, were working overtime.

...away, and not together to give them the key to the outside door, which shut with a snap-lock. So when their work was over they found themselves locked in, and forthwith hung out the distress signal which had caused Policeman Newhan such embarrassment. They said their names were Julia Wolf, Julia McKeogle, Anna Kamp, Lily Hiperia, Rosie Wood, Carrie Eurwarger and Julia Landers.

"To-morrow's Saturday," said Miss Wolf. "Come around and we'll blow you off to ice-cream, won't we girls."

"Sure Mike," said all in a chorus.

"Go on with you," said Officer Newhan, I'm a married man."

Jones's girl neighbors with a stubborn cough whom a sale convinced, may be had in Dr. JAYNE'S ALTERATIVE. Sold by druggists. Large bottle and valuable book for 50c.

DEMOCRATS WILL FIGHT.

Voted Against Mr. Root in the Albany Convention as a Warning on Apportionment Robbery.

WOMAN SUFFRAGISTS DECORATED.

Long Shore Lead to the Suggestion that It Would Be Well to Get Off the Floor of a Train.

Special to The World.

ALBANY, Aug. 17.—Chairman Becker, of the Constitutional Convention Committee on Apportionment, called to-day for an extension of time until next Friday to report the proposed apportionment amendment.

Mr. Stevens asked Mr. Becker whether the article was not nearly ready, and said that the general principles which he understood had been adopted were such that he was perfectly willing that Mr. Becker's time should be extended for a year. This caused a smile, and Mr. Becker replied that the article is in shape, but the committee desires time to perfect it. Mr. Becker's request was granted.

The analysis of the proposed apportionment scheme, as printed in The World this morning attracted very general attention. A dozen Republicans said they were convinced that the creators of the measure had gone too far from the line of justice, and predicted that the sober element in the Republican majority would succeed in persuading the headstrong to abandon their extreme policy.

Should the conservative Republicans not succeed in modifying the harshness of the Apportionment Committee's proposition it is not improbable that they will form a quadrangular with the Democratic minority for the purpose of amending the article. The conservative Republicans are aware that to go too far in partisanship to the apportionment matter will endanger other convention work before the people.

Mr. Marks's proposition to give property-owners in condemnation proceedings the right of electing whether a jury or a commission should determine the question of damages was brought up by Mr. Root, who wanted to kill it finally. The Committee of the Whole considered it last night, reported progress and ask leave to sit again. The convention refused, 88 to 56, to give this permission.

It was thought this killed the scheme, which, as The World has shown, is full of possible harm to the new underground road of New York City and of possible benefit to the Manhattan monopoly. But Mr. Root was defeated to-day—88 to 73—and the subject therefore may be taken up again by the Committee of the Whole.

Many Democrats who are opposed to the Marks proposition voted against Mr. Root's motion to kill it, as a sort of preliminary move in the apportionment struggle. If the Republicans insist upon passing an unfair apportionment the Democrats can rely to the support of the Marks Manhattan monopoly measure and send it to the people. It is almost certain unpopularity would help to drag the apportionment article down to defeat.

The new rule requiring sessions on Saturdays goes into effect to-morrow. It is likely that not more than a bare quorum will be present in the morning, and it is prophesied that at the afternoon meeting there will not be a quorum. Excuses from attendance for a day or two days were sought and obtained to-day by forty-six members, and for this reason a motion was made to abandon the sessions to-morrow. The motion was lost after President Choate had made a vigorous protest against wasting any opportunities. It is probable, however, that the Saturday afternoon session will be abolished. The really valuable members of the convention would rejoice if the Committee on Rules would take the verbosity situation in hand and arrange that there shall be less "yap," and thus give the members Saturday afternoon, Sunday and Monday until 8 P. M. for rest and private business.

Three-score members of the convention were decorated to-day with the badge of the Order of the Yellow Rose. These are the delegates who favored the woman suffrage cause with their votes the other night. The badges were distributed about the chamber by Mirabeau Lamar Towns. They were Marechal Niel roses and had been given in a basket to Mr. Towns by some of the women who led the suffrage cause. On the card fastened to the basket, placed on Mr. Towns's desk, were the words: "To Mirabeau Lamar Towns, the Tribune of the women."

Another basket of three-score roses was given to Mr. Lauterbach. It stood on his desk all the morning, and many read the card inscribed: "To the Noblest of his Race, the Leonine Champion of Woman Suffrage, Edward Lauterbach."

Mr. Merrenass's amendment to forbid the raising of salaries of public officials during their incumbency occupied the attention of the convention for a long time to-day. A. H. Green offered an amendment assuming the New York Board of Estimate and Apportionment.

A motion to recommend the amendment for a third reading was carried by the close vote of 64 to 62. On the motion in the open convention to send the matter to a third reading, the measure was defeated, 66 to 58.

The Committee on Industrial Interests has decided to report the following as an anti-conspiracy amendment:

No law shall be enacted making it unlawful for any number of persons to peaceably band themselves together for the purpose of raising the wages, decreasing the hours of labor or bettering the moral or material condition of themselves or others.

The sub-committee of the Cities Committee, having in charge the drafting of a section relating to the contracting of debts, have decided that no city, county, town or village shall loan money to any individual for any purpose, nor incur indebtedness of any kind except for city, county, town or village purposes, which indebtedness shall not exceed 10 per cent. of the assessed valuation of such division.

PLUCKY WOMAN CHASES A THIEF.

Resident Has Jewelry, Mo Had Stuck Other Valuable Property.

Mrs. E. S. Lehman, wife of a hosier on Sixth avenue, went driving yesterday. She reached her home, No. 111 Waverley place, just after dusk. Turning the corner of the stairway on her way to her flat on the second floor she came face to face with a slim, slight, fair-haired young man who made way for her to pass, bowed and passed downstairs. Then Mrs. Lehman found the door of her flat wide open. She had carefully locked it before she went out. She ran after the young man, and when she reached the street pointed him out to a policeman. Then followed a race along Waverley place, round into West Fourth street, the policeman following the man, until at Jones street another policeman in plain clothes jumped out of a doorway and caught the fugitive.

At the Charles street station the man said he was George Wilson, and he refused to give his address.

"If you say I stole your property I'll sue you," he said to Mrs. Lehman; but she willed when two diamond rings, a diamond scarf pin, a pearl pin, a gold watch, a pair of opera glasses, all her jewelry, and a number of articles of silverware were found on his person.

Detective Sergeant Titus, of the Charles street station, has been detailed to work up the case.

DYNAMITE GUN WORKED WELL.

The Sandy Hook Destroyer Shows What It Can Do in the Way of Coast Guarding.

The official test of the dynamite gun was continued on Sandy Hook yesterday before the Board of Ordnance and Fortifications. Four dummies and five loaded projectiles were fired. It was demonstrated that the gun could guard the Swash Channel as well as the main ship channel, and even could send its projectiles across the Romer Shoal into the East Channel and beyond.

Four of the "live" shots fired exploded. One failed to do so, but as the contents will only explode by a heavy concussion, no danger is anticipated from it. W. T. Kingman, the President of the Pneumatic Torpedo and Construction Company, who was present, was well satisfied with the test, and so was H. G. Batcheller, the superintendent. Tests will be continued as weather permits.

A Brave Irishman Dead.

Major John McCartan died at his residence, No. 79 East One Hundred and Twenty-seventh street, on Wednesday. He will be buried from his late residence to-morrow at 2 P. M. He was born in County Armagh, Ireland, in 1826, and came to this country in 1848. He was one of the founders of the Sixty-ninth Regiment. When the war started he was made a captain in the Eighty-eighth Regiment, of the famous Irish Brigade. He served with such distinction during the war that at its close he was brevetted major.

Van Winkle and Made Two Jersey Heroes.

Isaiah Van Winkle and Ernest Mace, of Bloomfield, N. J., were fishing in Greenwood Lake, Thursday, when a row-boat containing a Miss Sims, of Brooklyn, and a young lady from Jersey City upset. Both men jumped overboard to the spot, and Mace seized the Jersey girl. Van Winkle dived for Miss Sims, and caught her. In the mean time a third man had set out from the shore in a boat, and the party was rescued. Miss Sims was unconscious, and is yet under care of two physicians, who are also guests at the Casino.

Lester Wrench; Policeman's Gift.

The one hundredth performance of "The Passing Show" was given at the Casino last night to a crowded house. At the end of the first act, on behalf of the members of the orchestra, Conductor Ike De Angelis presented Conductor Ludwig Englander, the composer of the music, with a handsome gold wrist-watch. Later Mr. Englander gave Mr. De Angelis a three-hundred policeman's club.

WHISKEY THE CAUSE OF IT.

President Greenhut, of the Trust, Said to Have Had a Serious Quarrel with Nelson Morris.

THAT WENT TO SAG HARBOR LAST.

Offered to Lend a Half Million, but Morris President Refused Unless the Row Followed.

There is trouble among the big men in the Whiskey Trust. The much talked about loan of $1,000,000 to a long ...[illegible] delayed. THE air was full of sensational stories about the trust yesterday and the difficulty it was having to raising money, and a drop during the day to the stock from 21 1-4 to 11 3-4 on sales aggregating 14,700 shares was regarded by the Street as a sure sign that something was going wrong.

The first report, which was regarded as authoritative, was that Nelson Morris had refused to indorse any of the notes which the Trust proposed to give for cash advances. Then came rumors of a serious falling out between Morris and President Greenhut, of the Trust. Mr. Greenhut was downtown all day, but he, as well as the other officials and representatives of the Trust, kept out of the way of reporters. From persons who have business relations with the Trust and its officers it was learned late in the day that the present reported trouble in the Trust camp grew out of Nelson Morris's refusal to indorse the Trust's notes.

Morris had, it is said, agreed to lend his name to the paper, but was prevented from doing so by Goldman, Sachs & Co., brokers at No. 1 Pine street. It appears that this firm handles the paper of Nelson Morris & Co., on which Morris is the indorser.

This paper finds ready havers here among banks and brokers, but when it became known that Nelson Morris intended indorsing half a million or more of Whiskey Trust notes, Morris's brokers, Goodman, Sachs & Co., thought the knowledge might be detrimental to the value of the paper of Nelson Morris & Co. Accordingly, so the report went, Goodman, Sachs & Co. sent for Morris to come to see them and heard that he had agreed to be an indorser on Whiskey Trust paper, and told him that he must not indorse, and explained the reasons why.

President Greenhut also came to town yesterday and was not at all pleased when he found that Morris had heeded the advice of his brokers and declined to indorse any Trust notes. Without Morris as one of the indorsers, the prospect for raising $1,000,000 or any considerable part of it were very poor. But President Greenhut remembered what Russell Sage had promised to do when the trust had a million, so he, accompanied by Mr. Morris, and, it is said, one of the Wormsers went up to see Mr. Sage about 3 P. M. yesterday. Just what occurred at the conference with Mr. Sage is not known, but it was said after the meeting was over that Sage was ready to lend the money, provided Mr. Morris's indorsement was given for the loan.

Morris said he couldn't and wouldn't do this, and his refusal was the cause of an exchange of unpleasant words between the two men, and of their parting in anger. The reported row is regarded as a serious matter for the trust in view of the present...tariff situation. It was current rumor in Wall street that the heavy selling of whiskey stock yesterday was from the principals who were letting go their own holdings in order to raise money with which to release whiskey from bond.

President Greenhut was reported to be at the West End Hotel, Long Branch, last night. Inquiry there for him brought out the information from his friends that he was in New York at the Holland House. The clerks there said he was not in the establishment, but that they knew he was at the West End Hotel. Nelson Morris kept out of sight also. A mutual friend of the two men, who was found at the West End, said that it is true that a misunderstanding had arisen between Greenhut and Morris, but that it was of a trivial nature and that the conference in Russell Sage's office was not as sensational as reported.

A World man who called at Mr. Sage's country home at Lawrence, L. I., last night failed to see him. Mrs. Sage carried the reporter's request for an interview to him and returned with the message that he was very weary, and would not be disturbed.

"He says," said Mrs. Sage, "that a number of persons in New York City know as much about the row in his office as he does, and that there is no reason why he should talk about it."

KANSAS'S FIRST GOVERNOR DEAD.

Dr. Charles Robinson Was a Leader of That Band Which Fought to Desperately for a Free Soil.

Special to The World.

LAWRENCE, Kan. Aug. 17.—Charles Robinson, the first Governor of Kansas, died here to-day, after an illness of several weeks.

Dr. Robinson's name is indissolubly connected with the early history of Kansas. He was one of the leaders, the most fearless, the most aggressive and the most persistent, of that devoted band which waged there the long and desperately-bloody struggle for human liberty.

He endured bodily anguish for it; he was cast into prison; he was plundered of his property; his home was despoiled and burned; he was in peril of his life many a time. But neither his faith nor his courage was shaken. Hatred of slavery was a consuming passion with him. All his life he was a reformer, he had that exaltation of spirit and contemptuous disregard of personal consequences which make the martyr; and though he lived to see the triumph of freedom and to enjoy his reward, he remained the reformer to the end of his days.

Dr. Robinson went to Lawrence, Kan., in 1854, as confidential agent of the New England Emigrants' Aid Society. He became there the leader of the Free Soil party, was Chairman of its Executive Committee and Commander-in-chief of its troops. He led, too, in the Topeka convention of 1855, which adopted the Free State Constitution, and under it was the next year elected Governor. He was Governor upon the admission of Kansas in 1861, and as such organized most of the Kansas regiments for the civil war.

NO NEED TO BE IN A HURRY.

DOCTORS McCOY AND SNOW'S OFFER OF TREATMENT UNTIL CURED DOESN'T go into effect on September 1. They will send to be in a hurry. Take your time, and begin treatment when it suits you. This isn't the last month in which the offer holds good. The offer is that Doctors McCoy and Snow will treat all persons who apply at their offices absolutely free. No charge will be made except a small sum to cover the cost of the medicines necessary to effect a cure. Doctors McCoy and Snow will continue to treat persons free until cured for an indefinite period.

DOCTORS McCOY AND SNOW,

Offices, corner 4th street and Madison avenue, opposite the Grand Central Station, and corner Lexington avenue and Broadway, opposite Sherman Monument, New York. If you live in a distant city, write for a symptom blank. Address Doctors McCoy and Snow, Box 2, Station D, New York City.

FAT PEOPLE reduced 10 pounds per week without starving. Harmless. Reliable. Prepaid $1. Book free. Dr. PALMER M.D. Fond du Lac, Wis.

BANK TELLER IS HERE TO SUE.

"I'm the Cigarette-Smoking Prima Donna" She Says, and So Manager Whitney Now Has Two Wrecking Suits.

Marie Tempest, the "freedom about prima donna," and a passenger on the Adriatic Tuesday, arrived yesterday. The singer's return was anxiously anticipated, it having been understood by both the public and her manager, Fred C. Whitney, that she had consented to remain in London for the next three years under contract to Augustus Harris, of the Daly Theatre London. Mr. Whitney has hopes so far as to engage Miss Lawley Hamilton as the star for the company. Now, however, he finds it for granted that the rumors of Miss Tempest's defection were correct he made himself with an extra cuddle upon getting down on the beach.

"I was more than surprised this morning to find that my arrival was unexpected," said Miss Tempest, on the St. James Hotel last night. "My engagement as a prima donna was not gained by breaking contracts, and I do not propose to begin now. During the summer I had a number of advantageous offers to appear in London, but, as Mr. Whitney refused to consent to postponing my departure with him for another year I determined to return to New York, although I might easily have broken the contract. You can rely upon it that I will head the Marie Tempest opera company, which, my contract specifies, must be organized according to my ideas.

"Just what opera I will sing I cannot say until Mr. Whitney returns from Detroit. I have a new opera by Andrea and one by a new British composer, among others to choose from. Mr. Martus will be my stage manager, and Julius Steger my leading support. We will open in some town yet undecided upon on Sept. 10, and come to New York three weeks later."

Julius Steger, the baritone, returned on the Augusta Victoria with Marie Tempest. The prima donna was particularly anxious that it should be known that the statement that her negotiations with George Edwardes had fallen through because he refused to engage Steger was untrue. The baritone is under contract in the London manager after the expiration of his season with Whitney.

THE WICKEDEST SUMMER RESORT.

A startling and shocking expose by NELLIE BLY of one of America's most fashionable watering places in to-morrow's Sunday World.

MRS. M'CALL-WALL SILENT.

She Feels Her Burden Well, but Thinks Young MacAllister Should Speak.

If Heyward McAllister came to town from Newport yesterday, as it is said, he kept himself secluded. Up to 10 P. M. he hadn't called on Mrs. Lizzie McCall-Wall, although she had confidently expected him—or at least she said so. She waited with a fondly beating heart, but he didn't appear. Therefore she could not make the "statement" she had promised, because it wouldn't be just.

MRS. LIZZIE M'CALL-WALL.

She felt that this thing would ruin her, but she was determined to bear it for his sake. Still, he should have come forward, and if he didn't do so by to-day she would have something to say. She wasn't going to sue him, because there was nothing to sue him for. But she did think he ought not to leave her in this position before the public and she couldn't bear it much longer.

Deputies Sent Out to Meet Train Robbers.

SAGINAW, Mich., Aug. 17.—It was reported to Grand Trunk officials here that the passenger train on the Cincinnati, Saginaw and Mackinaw Railroad, due here at 5 o'clock, was to be held up at Berne, twelve miles south. A squad of deputies was sent to Berne, but found nothing more formidable than a few tramps so the train came through without incident.

WHEN YOU CAN'T EAT

without that uneasy or drowsiness afterwards then is time to take Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Pellets. They make digestion EASY. Keep a vial of them in your vest-pocket and take one after every hearty meal. It's time to take them, too, whenever you "feel bilious." They're specific for biliousness and act wonderfully upon the liver.

These tiny, sugar-coated Pellets—the smallest, the pleasantest to take, and the most natural in their ways—absolutely and permanently CURE Constipation, Jaundice, Biliousness, Indigestion, Sick or Bilious Headache, Sour Stomach, and every illness, stomach and bowel disorder.

CHRONIC NASAL CATARRH.

H. St. Hodges, Esq., of Lakeview, Rich Co., Utah, says: "I was suffering from chronic catarrh and bought a half-dozen bottles of your Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy, and I am happy to say I am permanently cured of that disease."

7 STORES TOGETHER.

Park Row and Chatham Square.

COWPERTHWAIT,

Park Row and Chatham Square.

THE VERY BEST

SEWING MACHINES,

ALL ATTACHMENTS

$1 Weekly for 35 Weeks.

EVERYTHING FOR HOUSEKEEPING.

FURNITURE, CARPETS, &c.

$1 Weekly on $65 Worth.

ONLY ONE VISIT NECESSARY.

Collections Made IF DESIRED.

DR. TOBIAS'

Venetian Horse Liniment

is also unequaled, superior to any other, cures PAIN, SPRAINS, BRUISES, STRAINS, &c.; and removes the lame in the world.

TOBIAS VENNY CONDITION POWDERS

are also unequaled, superior to any other, cures FEVER, HOVEL TROUBLE, &c., and removes the cause. Directions accompany each box. Sold by druggists, grocers and horsemen. Price of Liniment, 50 cents and $1 per bottle; Powders, 25 cents per box. Sold by all druggists and dealers.

53

881116012

The Emma Goldman Papers

[Excerpt from Lecture] Hailed Emma Goldman / Emma Goldman. – p. 8 ; 43 cm. In The World. – (Aug. 20, 1894).

Obtained from the University of California, Berkeley. Institutional Location: Doe Library.

ANARCHISTS IN ACTION.

MOWBRAY. MARIE LOUISE. MISS GOLDMAN'S FRIEND. SCHWAB. SHE INTRODUCED MISS GOLDMAN. MISS GOLDMAN.

cried. "Do not use words, but strike! strike!

"All authority and all officials are rotten, from the dirtiest policeman up to the curs we call Presidents."

When she got through it was noted that her exertions had loosened her back hair and untied the bow of red ribbon she wore around her neck. She drank a tumbler of water and cooled off while stamping the floor with her foot.

HERE'S EMMA GOLDMAN.

Then came Emma Goldman, and her reception showed that her law-breaking and the punishment she received for it had almost deified her in the minds of her lawless admirers. When the fat Chairwoman had announced her as about to come on the stage pandemonium seemed to have broken loose. Nearly everybody who was sitting down stood up, and those who had been standing up jumped up in the air. The din and racket was worse than that on the baseball field when the home nine wins out on a tied score in the last inning.

She entered from the left wings and strutted to the front centre of the stage. There, dressed in simple black, save for a red ribbon at the neck, she stood with her head thrown back and glared up at the roof with her peculiar, half-closed eyes. The crowd was glad to see her. There was no doubt of that. There was whooping, howling, yelling and cheering, until finally she raised her arm and waved her handkerchief, while her coun-

SIX ARE STRANGELY SICK.

Doctors of Elizabeth, N. J., Mystified by the Illness of the Connolly and Hayes Children.

IT LOOKS LIKE A CASE OF POISON.

As It Was Neither Impure Milk Nor Impure Candy, an Official Investigation Will Be Held To-Day.

The good people of Elizabeth, N. J., are much wrought up over two seeming cases of wholesale poisoning which occurred there within twenty-four hours of each other, and which would indicate that some subtle malign influence hov-

SHOT AT BY VOGEL BEFORE.

Miss Bartlett Says He Threatened Her Many Times, and Tried to Kill Her in Milwaukee.

FOLLOWED HER FROM CITY TO CITY.

The Suicide's Brothers Arrange for His Burial and Cable the News to Their Father in Germany.

The body of William H. Vogel, the clothier's son, who shot himself Saturday afternoon after having attempted to kill his mistress, was left at the boarding-house, No. 123 East One Hun-

OUR SUNDAY A FAILURE.

We Need Swimming, Baseball, Music and Beer for Little and Big.

A POOR DAY FOR THE MAJORITY

Throw Away "Keep-Off-the-Grass" Signs, Let's Have More Parks and Gardens, and Give the Weary Recreation.

There are about 600,000 families in New York City.

Of these less than 25,000 are able to get away to the seashore for the summer. Of the remaining 375,000 families, not more than [illegible] are able to get out streets too much with nothing to think of but mischief.

And as a matter of fact what is there for the man or woman, the boy or girl, with no money to spend beyond a few cents, a half dollar or seventy-five cents? How can they amuse themselves on Sunday, the one holiday of the week, the only time for resting the spots the harness has rubbed, for stretching the limbs, stiff with the routine of six days' labor?

First there is church. Well, but most of the people of New York do not go to church. A majority of those who do go go only in the morning, very early and for only a little while. The rest—well, the most of the rest—luxuriate at the seashore.

Then there are Coney Island and the other near-by summer resorts. But it costs money to go and come. It costs money to stay, more money than these masses of the people can afford every Sunday, more than many of them can afford any Sunday.

There are the parks. But baseball is not allowed in the parks, and there is no place to sit, except for a very few, who come early and, holding on to a good thing when they have it, sit late. One may not romp or play about in the parks on Sunday. There is music, it is true. But we must stand or move slowly up and down hard stone walks.

Such gardens as there are, are for the most part closed. And how many open-

SUNDAY AT GRAY GABLES.

President Cleveland Took His Ease on the Piazza with His Cigar and His Sunday Paper.

SOME TALK OF BRIGHT'S DISEASE.

Its Presence Would Not Be Surprising, but, at Any Rate, It Cannot Have Reached an Advanced Stage.

(Special to The World.)

BUZZARD'S BAY, Mass., Aug. 19.—Robert Lincoln O'Brien, the executive clerk, slipped away from Gray Gables last night unnoticed, bearing in his satchel the signed Sundry Civ[illegible]

BEST COPY AVAILABLE

881116012

The Emma Goldman Papers

[Excerpt from Lecture] Hailed Emma Goldman / Emma Goldman.— p. 8 ; 43 cm. In The World. —(Aug. 20, 1894).

Obtained from the University of California, Berkeley. Institutional Location: Doe Library.

HAILED EMMA GOLDMAN.

Anarchists Filled the Thalia Theatre to Celebrate Her Release from Jail.

BUT JOHN MOST STAYED AWAY.

Law, Government and Police Denounced in Several Languages, While the Audience Sweltered.

MARIE LOUISE, COMMUNIST, PRESIDED.

Police Made No Show, but Reserves Were Ready to Prevent an Outbreak—Goldman's and Mowbray's Fiery Words.

There was a polyglot assemblage in the Thalia Theatre last night.

Twenty-eight hundred Anarchists of New York welcomed Emma Goldman, just released after ten months' imprisonment on Blackwell's Island.

A Frenchwoman presided. There were speeches in English, Italian, French, German, Spanish and a jargon and a recitation in Russian.

In approbation of the speeches "vives," "vivas," "hochs," "bravas" and "bravos" rent the suffocating, humid air.

But there were no "hurrahs." It is doubtful if there were twenty people of American parentage in the big audience.

Incidentally the reception was turned into a source of revenue. It must have been profitable.

It is a nice question whether a short imprisonment does not pay a popular and accomplished Anarchist.

Those who paid ten cents each swaltered in the upper tier, those who paid fifteen cents sweltered in the balcony, those who paid twenty cents swaltered in the parquet. It was simply a question of sweltering at different altitudes.

Justus Schwab, his family and friends filled a box.

The police were very little in evidence. Inspector Williams was there in plain clothes, of course, and so was Capt. Berghold, who commands the precinct. But right back of the theatre, in Elizabeth street, all the reserves were on duty in the station-house.

Although the speakers called the police hard names, the police treated the audience with most distinguished consideration. They cleared the aisles, to be sure, but those who blocked the aisles violated the law. The fireman on duty at the theatre, a red-headed man, No 519, was very nearly violent in his efforts to clear the aisles. But perhaps his professional eye saw more clearly the danger that threatened should fire break out.

The Frenchwoman who presided was Marie Louise. She was one of the Paris Commune. She wore a black satin dress and a red necktie. She was as motherly a person as ever recommended the overthrow of all governments.

She said in a weak voice that they were there for two purposes:

1. To welcome Emma Goldman.

2. "To protest against organised tyranny, which hides behind that convenient thing called law."

Charles W. Mowbray, the English tailor, was the first speaker. He said, privately, that he was very well but he did not look well. It will greatly rejoice the English police to learn that Mowbray has a much better opinion of them. They have improved by comparison with the police of this country.

"I always used to abuse the police of England," cried Mowbray. "They are gentlemen compared with your police."

This was a very popular sentiment.

THEY CHEERED MOWBRAY.

When the obese French Communist in black satin, who presided, had introduced Mowbray, the British Anarchist received what he would call an "hovation." He did not look well. He needs new clothes, and he needs a rest.

"We are here," he said, "to welcome back to liberty a young woman whose crime was that she dared to tell the starving masses that they, who have created all that is valuable, all that is beautiful and all that is to be enjoyed, except that which nature has provided—that they had the right to enjoy life and their share of its comforts. She cried, 'Do not use words, but strike! strike!

"All authority and all officials are rotten, from the dirtiest policeman up to the czar we call Presidents."

When she got through it was noted that her exertions had loosened her back hair and untied the bow of red ribbon she wore around her neck. She drank a tumbler of water and cooled off while stamping the floor with her foot.

HERE'S EMMA GOLDMAN.

Then came Emma Goldman, and her reception showed that her law-breaking and the punishment she received for it had almost deified her in the minds of her lawless admirers. When the fat Chairwoman had announced her as about to come on the stage pandemonium seemed to have broken loose. Nearly everybody who was sitting down stood up, and those who had been standing up jumped up in the air. The din and racket was worse than that on the baseball field when the home nine wins out on a tied score in the last inning.

She entered from the left wings and strutted to the front centre of the stage. There, dressed in simple black, save for a red ribbon at the neck, she stood with her head thrown back and glared up at the roof with her peculiar, half-closed eyes. The crowd was glad to see her. There was no doubt of that. There was whooping, howling, yelling and cheering, until finally she raised her arm and waved her handkerchief, while her countenance lost its expression of opera-bouffe hauteur and assumed one of weariness. That secured silence. Then she said:

"Friends and Comrades: I have come back to you after having served ten months in prison for talking. If the representatives of your Government intend to prosecute women for talking, they will have to begin with their mothers, wives, sisters and sweethearts, for they will never stop women from talking. (Cheers.) But it was not Emma Goldman who was prosecuted. It was the thoughts of Emma Goldman, the principles of Anarchy, that were prosecuted, the views held by thousands of brave men and women who have died and are ready to die as did Santo. It was the right of free speech that was prosecuted in the Court of General Sessions, and not little Emma Goldman. (Shouts of "Vive l'Anarchie!")

"The authorities are afraid of those who are trying to open the eyes of the people to their sufferings. I hate the tyrants of the present system too much to have pity on them, but when I sat before Judge Martine listening to the inflammatory speech of District-Attorney McIntyre I could but feel sorry for him. I said to myself, Oh, you coward District-Attorney. It is fear, a false fear of society that makes you try to convince those jurors of the terrible things that would happen if Emma Goldman was not convicted and imprisoned. (Cheers.)

SHE LOATHES JUDGE MARTINE.

"I was found guilty, and then I was left to the tender mercy of Judge Martine. He gave me ten months because he could not give me any more. I loathe Judge Martine. (Cheers.)

"Oh, you Judges and you District-Attorneys, you can imprison and you can guillotine and send to the gallows all the Anarchists, but you need not delude yourselves with the idea that you can kill the spirit of Anarchy. (Cries of "Never!" "Vive l'Anarchie!")

DEFIANT IN TWO LANGUAGES.

"The future will be ours, brothers and sisters. I am as loyal as ever to liberty, the loving mother of the poor, the wretched, the miserable. I defy the Judges, the District-Attorneys and the police, and so I say let them go on with their dastardly work. They are working on their own coffin. Every blow they strike drives a nail. Every Anarchist they send to jail or to death takes another spadeful of earth from the hole into which their carcasses will be placed. (Cheers.)

"I am with you again under the red flag of Anarchy and liberty, and under it we will march together until we get [illegible] tution. We are children no longer, our eyes are open now. They cannot tell us any more that the judges and the district attorneys are in office to protect us. They are there to protect those who are driving men to desperation, women to wretchedness and sweet young girls to sell themselves body and soul. 'Vive l'anarchie' we will cry with our last breath."

There was another tornado of noise. Then Goldman repeated her harangue in German. When she had finished she strutted off in the same grotesque manner she had entered, but she had to come back and promise the crowd that they should hear again from her soon.

A very lady-like Anarchist then made an address in jargon. She was Miss Sarah Schmidt. She wore a black lace [illegible] with black silk as if her [illegible] Manning himself has said, that a starving man has a right to share his neighbor's food. Emma Goldman suffered the tortures of Blackwell's Island for ten months for this alone, and there are many others who would do the same if the capitalists had their way.

"This young woman comes back to tell us that she is just the same at heart as she always was, to show the capitalists and their slaves, the authorities, that conviction and imprisonment make no difference to those who have truly accepted the principles of anarchy. (Cheers.) The ideas of anarchy are the only ideas which hold out hope to those who are now suffering for the necessaries of life. Those who rely on the policeman's bludgeon for power fail to understand what anarchy is, and they [illegible]

ANARCHISTS

MOWBRAY. MARIE LOUISE. MISS GOLDMAN'S FRIEND.

SIX ARE STRANGELY SICK.

Doctors of Elizabeth, N. J., Mystified by the Illness of the Connolly and Hayes Children.

IT LOOKS LIKE A CASE OF POISON.

As It Was Neither Impure Milk Nor Impure Candy, an Official Investigation Will Be Held To-Day.

The good people of Elizabeth, N. J., are much wrought up over two seeming cases of wholesale poisoning which occurred there within twenty-four hours of each other, and which would indicate that some subtle malign influence hovers over a certain part of the town.

Up to last evening six victims had been reported, all of them under seven years of age, and as no plausible explanation has yet been reached by the doctors, the alarm felt by anxious parents is all the greater, for they know not against what to guard.

When Dr W. A. Mack, of No. 16 Third street, was called on Saturday morning to attend Bernard and Mamie Connolly, aged respectively four and two years, at No. 117 Wall street, he found them apparently dead. As their symptoms were those of poisoning, he concluded that they must have eaten something which they had found about the house or in the street. The children had been playing in the rear of the house all morning and had suddenly become deadly sick. Violent vomiting was followed by utter collapse.

It was two hours and a half after the doctor's arrival before the pulse of the little girl was perceptible. She was still quite weak yesterday. The boy was not so greatly affected. In both cases exhaustion was followed by feverish thirst, and the tongues of the children bore that irritated, red appearance that usually follows the swallowing of corrosive poison. Dr. Mack closely questioned the children, but he could not learn that they had eaten anything except their usual breakfast of bread and butter and coffee. There are two other children in the family and they ate and drank together, but only the younger ones were affected.

Dr Mack, who is one of the health officers of Elizabeth, was inclined to believe, in spite of the protestations of the family, that the sickness was caused by eating impure candy or something of that nature, but he changed his mind when he heard of another case of poisoning at No 151 Wall street, across the way from the Connollys'. Mrs. Hayes, a widow, lives there with her four children—John, aged six; Kate, aged four; Michael, aged two and a half, and Thomas, aged thirteen months. About 11 o'clock yesterday morning Mrs. Hayes's attention was drawn to the baby, whose stomach was evidently completely out of order. Immediately after Kate became similarly affected, and before [illegible] with all four children were lying helpless on the floor.

They showed exactly the same symptoms of the Connolly children. Dr Mack was sent for, but as he could not be found, County Physician O'Reilly, who lives near by, was called in. He found the baby and Kate almost dead, but the two other children had already recovered, though still weak. He followed about the same course of treatment adopted by Dr Mack, had external applications and soothing remedies for the stomach—but he [illegible] pronounce the young ones out of danger.

Now, the strangest thing about these cases is that the youngest victim is a babe in arms still feeding on milk, and absolutely unable to have partaken of any of the impure substances attributed as the possible cause of trouble [illegible]

SHOT AT BY VOGEL BEFORE.

Miss Bartlett Says He Threatened Her Many Times, and Tried to Kill Her in Milwaukee.

FOLLOWED HER FROM CITY TO CITY.

The Suicide's Brothers Arrange for His Burial and Cable the News to Their Father in Germany.

The body of William H. Vogel, the clothier's son, who shot himself Saturday afternoon after having attempted to kill his mistress, was left at the boarding-house, No. 123 East One Hundred and Sixteenth street, all day yesterday. Beyond the hiring of an undertaker by his brothers nobody seemed to care about it. The family did not come to town. The undertaker, James J. McLarney, of No. 1053 Third avenue, had instructions to remove the body to his establishment late at night, and avoid publicity as much as possible.

At the house of the Rev. Selig Rosenstamm, the father of Mrs. Adele Vogel, who got a divorce from Vogel last June, there was apparently a feeling of relief that he was out of the way.

Vogel had been living a wild, fast life. He needed money very badly at many times, and it was hinted yesterday that possibly it was not jealousy but financial troubles that caused his deed.

Louise V. Bartlett, the woman shot by Vogel, is still in Harlem Hospital, with a bullet lodged in her right hip. The physicians fear that peritonitis may carry her off. She is a handsome woman, and Vogel's infatuation with her was complete.

"I met him first Oct. 9, 1893, at the World's Fair," Miss Bartlett said last night. "We went to live together at No. 1238 Michigan avenue. He was insanely jealous of me from the first. He had a revolver. He gambled a great deal and often wrote to his father for money. He received amounts varying from [illegible] to $500.

"We went to St. Paul and later to Minneapolis. He was so jealous that our fellow-boarders thought him insane.

"I wrote to his father and asked him to take him home. I feared for my life. Then I left him and went to Milwaukee, where he followed me. One morning he fired four shots, none of which hit me. I then returned to Chicago and he followed me there. After a quarrel we separated again and I went to Boston. He came to Boston a week after and threatened to kill me if I did not accompany him to New York. We arrived here three weeks ago. Last Saturday morning he acted strangely. I did not know of the revolver in the bureau drawer. He came in saying that we would go down to Long Branch for a sail. I went to the closet to get my clothes, and when I turned I saw the revolver pointed at me and the next instant he fired without any word of warning.

"I dragged the mattress from the bed and shielded my body. He fired twice more and then shot himself."

Henry Vogel, the young man's father, is at Carlsbad, Germany. His has been called to and will return.

CAPSIZED OFF STATEN ISLAND.

Where Are the Passengers of the Jib and Mainsail Boat Josie G. H., Found Floating Keel Up?

Capt. J. Hemmes, of Clifton, S. I., towed a jib and mainsail boat of about twenty-two feet into the dock at Clifton last night. It is thought those who sailed the boat earlier in the day were drowned.

The craft was picked up by Capt. [illegible] about a mile southwest of [illegible] Island, in the lower bay. The [illegible]

BEST COPY AVAILABLE

881116012

The Emma Goldman Papers

[Excerpt from Lecture] Hailed Emma Goldman / Emma Goldman. – p. 8 ;.43 cm. In The World. –(Aug. 20, 1894).

Obtained from the University of California, Berkeley. Institutional Location: Doe Library.

"vivas," "vivas," "bochs," "bravos" and "bravos" rent the suffocating, humid air.

But there were no "hurrahs." It is doubtful if there were twenty people of American parentage in the big audience.

Incidentally the reception was turned into a source of revenue. It must have been profitable.

It is a nice question whether a short imprisonment does not pay a popular and accomplished Anarchist.

Those who paid ten cents each sweltered in the upper tier, those who paid fifteen cents sweltered in the balcony, those who paid twenty cents sweltered in the parquet. It was simply a question of sweltering at different altitudes.

Justus Schwab, his family and friends filled a box.

The police were very little in evidence. Inspector Williams was there in plain clothes, of course, and so was Capt. Berghold, who commands the precinct. But right back of the theatre, in Elizabeth street, all the reserves were on duty in the station-house.

Although the speakers called the police hard names, the police treated the audience with most distinguished consideration. They cleared the aisles, to be sure, but those who blocked the aisles violated the law. The fireman on duty at the theatre, a red-headed man, No. 819, was very nearly violent in his efforts to clear the aisles. But perhaps his professional eye saw more clearly the danger that threatened should fire break out.

The Frenchwoman who presided was Marie Louise. She was one of the Paris Communa. She wore a black satin dress and a red necktie. She was as motherly a person as ever recommended the overthrow of all governments.

She said in a weak voice that they were there for two purposes:

1. To welcome Emma Goldman.

2. "To protest against organized tyranny, which hides behind that convenient thing called law."

Charles W. Mowbray, the English tailor, was the first speaker. He said, privately, that he was very well but he did not look well. It will greatly rejoice the English police to learn that Mowbray has a much better opinion of them. They have improved by comparison with the police of this country.

"I always used to abuse the police of England," cried Mowbray. "They are gentlemen compared with your police."

This was a very popular sentiment.

THEY CHEERED MOWBRAY.

When the obese French Communist in black satin who presided, had introduced Mowbray, the British Anarchist received what he would call an "hovation." He did not look well. He needs new clothes, and he needs a rest.

"We are here," he said, "to welcome back to liberty a young woman whose crime was that she dared to tell the starving masses that they, who have created all that is valuable, all that is beautiful and all that is to be enjoyed, except that which nature has provided—that they had the right to enjoy life and their share of its comforts. She dared to tell the masses, as Cardinal Manning himself has said, that a starving man has a right to share his neighbor's food. Emma Goldman suffered the tortures of Blackwell's Island for ten months for this alone, and there are many others who would do the same if the capitalists had their way.

"This young woman comes back to tell us that she is just the same at heart as she always was, to show the capitalists and their slaves, the authorities, that conviction and imprisonment make no difference to those who have truly accepted the principles of anarchy. (Cheers.) The ideas of anarchy are the only ideas which hold out hope to those who are now suffering for the necessaries of life. Those who rely on the policeman's bludgeon for power fail to understand what anarchy is, and they dare not put forward a man or woman to argue the issue with us.

"People are beginning to learn that government exists not for their protection, but for the protection of the thieving capitalists who have them by the throat and are throttling them.

POLICE EXIST FOR BOODLE.

"The police are here to protect the thieves of society in their work of plunder. It is just as well that those men who wear the blue coats and the brass buttons should know the dirty work they are doing, for there may perhaps be a spark of manhood left in their breasts which will bring them to say that too long they have been armed and fighting against their fathers, their brothers and their friends.

"You are all a lot of cowards. Yet they call this a civilized nation!

"Civilization, what does it mean? It means to you that in a country won by the blood of your fathers, shed for the cause of liberty, you have gradually permitted yourselves to degenerate into cowards and slaves. Until you get into yourselves some of the courage which your fathers had you will remain the slaves of the capitalistic classes. (Cheers.)

"Arouse yourselves! be men! (Shouts of "We will.")

"Now give a hearty welcome to Emma Goldman, who comes to you to-night to show you and to show the capitalists how after imprisonment and torture she does not hesitate to say just what she said before and just what she was made to suffer for." (Cheers and shouts of "Vive l'Anarchie!")

THE ITALIAN SPEECH.

The crowd was such that this would bring Goldman to the front, but it did not. Instead, the chairwoman brought her treble voice into play to present Maria Rhoda, a black-haired, black-eyed, dark-skinned and black-gowned woman of uncertain age, not of no uncertain power of speech. She spoke in Italian.

And this little woman worked herself up into a terrific passion, waving her arms and mopping her perspiring face with a red handkerchief. At least it looked like a handkerchief. But the crowd soon wearied of her.

"All the people who are grinding us down should suffer the vengeance!" she

Then came Emma Goldman, and her reception showed that her law-breaking and the punishment she received for it had almost deified her in the minds of her lawless admirers. When the fat Chairwoman had announced her as about to come on the stage pandemonium seemed to have broken loose. Nearly everybody who was sitting down stood up, and those who had been standing up jumped up to the sky. The din and racket was worse than that on the baseball field when the home nine wins out on a tied score in the last inning.

She entered from the left wings and strutted to the front centre of the stage. There, dressed in simple black, save for a red ribbon at the neck, she stood with her head thrown back and glared up at the roof with her peculiar, half-closed eyes. The crowd was glad to see her. There was no doubt of that. There was whooping, howling, yelling and cheering, until finally she raised her arm and waved her handkerchief, while her countenance lost its expression of opera-bouffe hauteur and assumed some of weariness. That secured silence. Then she said:

"Friends and Comrades, I have come back to you after having served ten months in prison for talking. If the representatives of your Government intend to prosecute woman for talking, they will have to begin with their mothers, wives, sisters and sweethearts, for they will never stop women from talking. (Cheers.) But it was not Emma Goldman who was prosecuted. It was the thoughts of Emma Goldman, the principles of Anarchy, that were prosecuted; the views held by thousands of brave men and women who have died and are ready to die as did Santo. It was the right of free speech that was prosecuted in the Court of General Sessions, and not little Emma Goldman. (Shoots of "Vive l'Anarchie!")

"The authorities are afraid of those who are trying to open the eyes of the people to their sufferings. I hate the tyrants of the present system too much to have pity on them, but when I sat before Judge Martine listening to the inflammatory speech of District-Attorney McIntyre I could but feel sorry for him. I said to myself, Oh, you coward District-Attorney. It is fear, a false fear of society that makes you try to convince those jurors of the terrible things that would happen if Emma Goldman was not convicted and imprisoned. (Cheers.)

SHE LOATHES JUDGE MARTINE.

"I was found guilty, and then I was left to the tender mercy of Judge Martine. He gave me ten months because he could not give me any more. I loathe Judge Martine. (Cheers.)

"Oh, you Judges and you District-Attorneys, you can imprison and you can guillotine and send to the gallows all the Anarchists, but you need not delude yourselves with the idea that you can kill the spirit of Anarchy. (Cries of "Never!" "Vive l'Anarchie!")

DEFIANT IN TWO LANGUAGES.

"The future will be ours, brothers and sisters. I am as loyal as ever to liberty, the loving mother of the poor, the wretched, the miserable. I defy the Judges, the District-Attorneys and the police, and so I say let them go on with their dastardly work. They are working on their own coffin. Every blow they strike drives a nail. Every Anarchist they send to jail or to death takes another spadeful of earth from the hole into which their carcasses will be placed. (Cheers.)

"I am with you again under the red flag of Anarchy and liberty, and under it we will march together until we get rid of poverty, of misery and of prostitution. We are children no longer. Our eyes are open now. They cannot tell us any more that the judges and the district attorneys are in office to protect us. They are there to protect those who are driving men to desperation, women to wretchedness and sweet young girls to sell themselves body and soul. 'Vive l'anarchie' we all cry with our last breath."

There was another tornado of noise. Then Goldman repeated her harangue in German. When she had finished she strutted off in the same grotesque manner she had entered, but she had to come back and promise the crowd that they should hear again from her soon.

A very lady-like Anarchist then made an address in jargon. She was Miss Sarah Schmidt. She wore a black lace dress trimmed with pink silk, as if her anarchistic ideas were not colored with the deepest Anarchist dye.

During John H. Edelmen's speech he said 2,000,000 tramps were wandering over the highways and byways of this country.

"What is a tramp?" indignantly interrupted a man who had paid 20 cents for a seat in the parquet.

"I will tell you," answered Edelman, hastily. "A workingman who is out of work and waiting for another job. I know about tramps, for I tramped across the State of Iowa and studied them. My only surprise is that a workman who can earn only enough to support life, does not throw down his tools when he finds he can support life without work."

Anarchist Esitve spoke in Spanish. Marie Louise then advanced to the footlights and said, "I now introduce you to an old friend, John Most."

(Loud and prolonged applause.)

But no John Most appeared, and the audience went home, disappointed.

Killed as Old Man While Hunting Birds.

(Special to The World.)

CAMBRIDGE, N. Y., Aug. 19.—Two young sons of James W. Robertson, who lives near Shushan, were out hunting partridges Friday, when one of them, seeing a movement in the bushes, fired. The shot struck James Ferguson, eighty years of age, in the knees. The old man was picking berries at the time. Mr. Blackfan extracted fifteen shot from the wounds, but Mr. Ferguson, weak from age, did not rally from the shock, and died last evening.

New Yorkers in a New Railway Company.

LOUISVILLE, Aug. 19.—Articles incorporating the Southern Railway Company have been filed in the County [illegible] Samuel H. Spencer, Charles H. Foster, Francis Lynde Stetson, of New York; Alexander H. Anderson, of Raleigh, N. C.; William A. Ewen, of Dobbs Ferry, N. Y.; T. W. Bullitt, of Louisville, and William Baldwin, jr., of Washington. The capital stock is fixed at $1,000,000, and the indebtedness must not exceed $10,000,000.

[illegible]

IT LOOKS LIKE A CASE OF POISON.

An It Was Neither Impure Milk Nor Impure Candy, an Official Investigation Will Be Held To-Day.

The good people of Elizabeth, N. J., are much wrought up over two seeming cases of wholesale poisoning which occurred there within twenty-four hours of each other, and which would indicate that some subtle malign influence hovers over a certain part of the town.

Up to last evening six victims had been reported, all of them under seven years of age, and as no plausible explanation has yet been reached by the doctors, the alarm felt by anxious parents is all the greater, for they know not against what to guard.

When Dr. W. A. Meck, of No. 36 Third street, was called on Saturday morning to attend Bernard and Mamie Connolly, aged respectively four and two years, at No. 127 Wall street, he found them apparently dead. As their symptoms were those of poisoning, he concluded that they must have eaten something which they had found about the house or in the street. The children had been playing in the rear of the house all morning and had suddenly become deadly sick. Violent vomiting was followed by utter collapse.

It was two hours and a half after the doctor's arrival before the pulse of the little girl was perceptible. She was still quite weak yesterday. The boy was not so greatly affected. In both cases exhaustion was followed by feverish thirst, and the tongues of the children bore that irritated, red appearance that usually follows the swallowing of corrosive poison. Dr. Mack closely questioned the children, but he could not learn that they had eaten anything except their usual breakfast of bread and butter and coffee. There are two other children in the family and they ate and drank together, but only the younger ones were affected.

Dr. Mack, who is one of the health officers of Elizabeth, was inclined to believe, in spite of the protestations of the family, that the sickness was caused by eating impure candy or something of that nature, but he changed his mind when he heard of another case of poisoning at No. 61 Wall street, across the way from the Connollys'. Mrs. Hayes, a widow, lives there with her four children—John, aged six; Kate, aged four; Michael, aged two and a half, and Thomas, aged thirteen months. About 11 o'clock yesterday morning Mrs. Hayes's attention was drawn to the baby, whose stomach was evidently completely out of order. Immediately after Kate became similarly affected, and before the poor woman could collect her wits all four children were lying helpless on the floor.

They showed exactly the same symptoms of the Connolly children. Dr. Mack was sent for, but as he could not be found, County Physician O'Reilly, who lives near by, was called in. He found the baby and Kate almost dead, but the two other children had already recovered, though still weak. He followed about the same course of treatment adopted by Dr. Mack, had external applications and soothing remedies for the stomach—but he was too late before he could pronounce the young ones out of danger.

Now, the strangest thing about these cases is that the youngest victim is a babe in arms still feeding on milk, and absolutely unable to have partaken of any of the impure substances attributed as the possible cause of trouble with the Connolly children. The Hayes children had been playing all morning in their yard as usual. They had eaten nothing except their regular breakfast, and had been surrounded all the time by other children, none of whom were taken sick. There are many children in the block, and an impurity in the water would have naturally attacked many more.

It cannot be a case of impure milk, because the Connolly children drank none. The doctors are puzzled, the residents badly frightened, and an official investigation will be instituted to-day.

For a Memorial of P. S. Gilmore.

Alexander Bremer, of the Musical Protective Union of this city, has written a letter advocating the erection of a bust or other suitable memorial to the memory of Patrick Sarsfield Gilmore, who did so much for the cause of good popular music in this city and aided many worthy charities during his lifetime. Mr. Bremer says in his letter that similar works of art have been erected in this city to the memory of foreign composers and musicians, but that not one has been put up to an American, chiefly because of the lack of a suitable subject. The subject, he says, has now been found, and he has started a popular subscription which it is hoped will meet with a hearty response.

Crooks Should Keep Out of Court.

Archibald Woods was held in Jefferson Market Court yesterday, charged with having stolen a bicycle from Frank Albert, the ex-champion. Woods came to court to see the result of an excise arrest, and was recognized and arrested. He is said to have stolen bicycles at Stapleton, S. I., and other places.

At the Hotels.

Windsor.—Judge J. W. Tyler, of Cleveland.

Waldorf.—W. R. Hearst, of San Francisco; Franklin MacVeagh of Chicago; D. M. Riordan of Arizona, Arthur Lee, of St. Louis; Cortland Van Camp, of Indianapolis; W. S. Wilson, of Maryland.

Holland.—A. E. Burkhardt, of Cincinnati; Maurice L. Rothschild, of Minneapolis.

FOLLOWED HER FROM CITY TO CITY.

The Suicide's Brothers Arrange for His Burial and Cable the News to Their Father in Germany.

The body of William H. Vogel, the clothier's son, who shot himself Saturday afternoon after having attempted to kill his mistress, was left at the boarding-house, No. 123 East One Hundred and Sixteenth street, all day yesterday. Beyond the hiring of an undertaker by his brothers nobody seemed to care about it. The family did not come to town. The undertaker, James J. McLarney, of No. 1051 Third avenue, had instructions to remove the body to his establishment late at night, and avoid publicity as much as possible.

At the house of the Rev. Selig Rosenstamm, the father of Mrs. Adele Vogel, who got a divorce from Vogel last June, there was apparently a feeling of relief that he was out of the way.

Vogel had been living a wild, fast life. He needed money very badly at many times, and it was hinted yesterday that possibly it was not jealousy but financial troubles that caused his deed.

Louise V. Bartlett, the woman shot by Vogel, is still in Harlem Hospital, with a bullet lodged in her right hip. The physicians fear that peritonitis may carry her off. She is a handsome woman, and Vogel's infatuation with her was complete.

"I met him first Oct. 9, 1893, at the World's Fair," Miss Bartlett said last night. "We went to live together at No. 1235 Michigan avenue. He was insanely jealous of me from the first. He had a revolver. He gambled a great deal and often wrote to his father for money. He received amounts varying from $5 to $100.

"We went to St. Paul and later to Minneapolis. He was so jealous that our fellow-boarders thought him insane.

"I wrote to his father and asked him to take him home. I feared for my life. Then I left him and went to Milwaukee, where he followed me. One morning he fired four shots, none of which hit me. I then returned to Chicago and he followed me there. After a quarrel we separated again and I went to Boston. He came to Boston a week after and threatened to kill me if I did not accompany him to New York. We arrived here three weeks ago. Last Saturday morning he acted strangely. I did not know of the revolver in the bureau drawer. He came in saying that we would go down to Long Branch for a sail. I went to the closet to get my clothes, and when I turned I saw the revolver pointed at me and the next instant he fired without any word of warning.

"I dragged the mattress from the bed and shielded my body. He fired twice more and then shot himself."

Henry Vogel, the young men's father, is at Carlsbad, Germany. He has been cabled to and will return.

CAPSIZED OFF STATEN ISLAND.

Where Are the Passengers of the Jib and Mainsail Boat Jessie G. H., Found Floating Keel Up?

Capt. J. Hemmes, of Clifton, S. I., towed a jib and mainsail boat of about twenty-two feet into the dock at Clifton last night. It is thought those who sailed the boat earlier in the day were drowned.

The craft was picked up by Capt. Hemmes about a mile southwest of Swinburne Island, in the lower bay. The captain was in his steam launch Surprise. When sighted the yacht was floating keel up. She was taken to Swinburne Island, where she was righted and bailed out. She proved to be the Jessie G. H.

Her name was painted on the stern. Her sails were all set, and closely trimmed flat. From this it is thought she was on the port tack when she went over. If that was the case she was heading from Tottenville or Perth Ambuy. In the boat were a lady's hat pin and a number of bottles of soda water. The launch cruised about the spot where the boat was picked up, but could find nothing more.

The captain believes the boat was upset and that those who were in her were drowned. There was no other craft near her. The boat is at Heinmee's dock in Clifton.

A WICKED TWIN OF THREE.

He Crept Up Behind His Brother and Cut Off Two of His Fingers.

A young child of John Kelsey, of Centreport, N. Y., one of twins, was badly injured by his brother yesterday afternoon, who, in a fit of temper, took an axe and cut off two of the fingers of his right hand. The two boys were seated on a log when one struck the other, who went away and in a few minutes returned and crept up behind his brother and dealt him a blow with all his strength. The little hand was resting on the log alongside. The twins are not yet three years old.

Thoroughbreds and Thoroughbreds.

Along with the great lot of thoroughbred horses which arrived from England yesterday on the Mohawk, of the Cattle Transport line, were a number of theatrical celebrities. Mike [illegible] van, John L.'s former trainer, was one of them. Then there was Miss Margaret Morrington, author of "Capt. Letty Blair," Arthur Forrest, leading man with Mansfield; E. F. Cotton, of Frohman's Company, who sings of the hot dog, and the actresses Miss Morris and Miss Warren.

56

BEST COPY AVAILABLE

880722004

The Emma Goldman Papers

[Excerpt from Lecture] Howls for Emma Goldman / Emma Goldman.– p. 2 ; 43 cm.
In The New York Times. –(Aug. 20, 1894).
Obtained from the University of California, Berkeley. Institutional Location: Doe Library.

linars

TABLE WATERS.

IN MILLIONS
SANY HOUSE-

ROACHABLE

ELL AS GOOD."
ARE RECOM-DRINK IT."
ND FOR IT IS NCREASING."

Times, London.

started. Fantasy was con stood in the mile-est mile was 2.15, less what she had scored style when a year

was a complete fail-old form. Mr Mackey California in charge
even more important season, and was pro-
A complaining leg
and it was only after fore that Silicon could han Blake at Detroit
though a pronounced ill luck followed her,
in moderate time, she ally, when the struggle
third money and was returning to Clevener, till one forenoon,
o 2 12, she stepped in ramult with her train-

the Terre Haute Purse, approaching, and the
were anything but the preparation again
but it was not till Buffalo meeting that the old farm Goldsmith, on carrying off the heat, noted the im-
with much concern, as piloted Dancourt to they left Buffalo for th drivers expressed chances were in favor
who had seen so many r brief career. Their and, and Silicon, after once more on the top
as the winner of the given to one contest in will moves nearer the largely on the East-attractions at Chicago

ary meeting at Pough-shade. The revival of on River Driving Park
derable interest, for the regular line for dropped out, finding it large purses and play
hile the list of entries commences next Tues-any such sensations
at Washington Park,
aterial to insure good

LY FAMILY

an Who Remembers Landstile.

Mail Journal

spoke a son of one of ed the bodies from the ide in the White Mounhas been visiting in and has had the story himself to them and I suppose not fearful pulled when ll for days with the ddies are impressed
my mind than they
Father had taken up a 1821, and by 1826 had y clearing the land and barn. For two years
ng over the land, and e looking forward to work On the 28th
gan to rain, and many Carroll County, were lden that covered the
and rubbish in great ail's tavern in Bartlett Farmers were sitting when in came a man
who told us about the Willey farm.
the Willey farm, and
ix, concluded that they re of a neighbor, Abel was among us thought
ight Edward Melcher, muel Tuttle, Abram Ball and my

[illegible] ATTACK FROM FRANCE.

Premier Object to Bold and Calls Himself a Mimic Body.

From Correspondent London Telegraph.

M. Jules Simon's notes on his interview with the German Emperor will appear in the Revue de Paris to-morrow. The French politician and writer went to Berlin in order to attend the congress on Socialist questions, and he was most graciously received by the Emperor and Empress. The Kaiser somewhat resembled, according to M Jules Simon, a young Norman noble in appearance and manners. He was affable and gay, but there was something in his physiognomy which seemed to denote that it would not be well to differ with him on a serious question

When he received the delegates he was in a hussar uniform, covered with a mantle which was emblazoned with orders. The Empress was in mourning M. Jules Simon was astonished at the pure French and Parisian accent of the young monarch. "I must confess," he writes, "that he spoke better than I do, for I have a little of the Breton brogue left."

The Emperor, being complimented on his command of French, said that his teacher was a Parisian and a purist. "Have you heard me make use of an unorthodox expression?" asked the Kaiser. "Only once, your Majesty," replied the Academician. "When was that?" said the Emperor, showing a little surprise. "When you said that we were met here in order to tipple, (goinailler.)" "But the word 'goinailler' is in the dictionary of the Academy?" "It is," answered M. Jules Simon, "but it is never heard in the Academy or in the salons of the Academy." The Kaiser was much amused at this sally and promised to remember what he was told.

The conversation next turned on the works of French writers. The Emperor said that he was never so contented as when he dined quietly at home with his wife like a good burgher of Berlin, and read to her a chapter of a novel before retiring. He chiefly liked the works of Georges Ohnet, but it was in vain that M. Simon stood up for Zola. The Emperor admitted Zola's gifts as an inimitable story teller and a deep observer, but objected to certain methods of his.

M Jules Simon next tried to get the Kaiser to talk politics, but found it a difficult task. All that the young monarch said was that he thought it was better to do good for men than to terrify them; that he believed the French Army to be ready for an emergency; that the results of another campaign between France and Germany could not be foreseen, and that the man who should incite the two nations to go to war with each other would be either a madman or a criminal. M. Jules Simon concludes his interesting article with a description of the fall of Prince von Bismarck from power and of the departure of the Chancellor from Berlin amid the acclamations of the multitude, who had seemed to abandon him for a while when he had incurred the imperial disfavor.

THE WAR GOVERNORS.

Names of Men Who Served Their Country Well.

From The Columbus (Ohio) State Journal.

The death of ex-Gov. Austin Blair of Michigan removes the last but two of the famous "war Governors" of our time. The other exceptions are ex-Gov. W. P. Sprague of Rhode Island, afterward a United States Senator, who still survives, and holds the dignified position of policeman at Narragansett Pier, and ex-Gov. A. G. Curtin of Pennsylvania.

The late ex-Gov. Blair entered politics when the Republican Party was formed, in 1854, and in 1860 he headed the Michigan delegation to the Chicago convention, voting for William H Seward all the time. He was Governor of Michigan from 1861 to 1865, and gave active support to the National Government.

What a list of distinguished men is found in the "war Governors"! Many of them have been celebrated since the war, some of them have been Representatives, others have been Senators, and two have been Cabinet officers. California furnished Leland Stanford and F. F. Low; Connecticut, W. A Buckingham; Delaware, William Burton and William Cannon; Illinois, Richard Yates and Richard Oglesby; Indiana, Oliver P Morton; Iowa, S. J. Kirkwood and W. M. Stone; Kansas, Thomas Carney; Kentucky, B Magoffin and T E Bramlette; Maine, Israel Washburn, Jr., A. Coburn, and S. Cony; Maryland, A. W. Bradford; Massachusetts, John A. Andrew; Michigan, Austin Blair and H. H. Crapo; Minnesota, Alexander Ramsay; Missouri, H. R. Gamble; New-Hampshire, Isabod Goodwin and N. S. Berry; New-Jersey, Charles S. Olden and Joel Parker; New-York, Edwin D. Morgan and Reuben E. Fenton; Ohio, William Dennison, David Tod, and John Brough; Pennsylvania, Andrew G. Curtin; Rhode Island, W. P. Sprague; Vermont, Frederick Holbrook; Wisconsin, L. P. Harvey, Edward Salomon, and J. T. Lewis.

The "war Governors" of the Southern

HOWLS FOR EMMA GOLDMAN.

THALIA THEATRE FILLED WITH ENTHUSIASTIC ANARCHISTS.

Judge Martine and Assistant District Attorney McIntyre Attacked by Emma for Sending Her to Blackwell's Island—"Putting Nails in Their Coffins," She Said—Nowbray Railed Against the Police—Most Would not Talk.

Howls, screeches, handclapping, and thumping of feet greeted Emma Goldman last evening in the Thalia Theatre, on the Bowery, on her first appearance before the Anarchist public after her release from Blackwell's Island, where she had been doing unwilling work for New-York County as punishment for using incendiary language and inciting to riot and bloodshed.

The theatre was crowded from top to bottom. Men, women, and children kept trooping in. Every seat was taken, and the aisles were being filled until the firemen and police objected, and the order was given not to sell any more tickets. About a hundred persons were turned from the doors, and these got back their money after some squabbling at the box office.

The crowd was made up of various nationalities—Germans—but there were not very many of them—Italians, Russian Jews, Hungarians, Frenchmen, Cubans, and Spaniards. If there were any native Americans there they were so few as not to be noticeable, and yet Charles W. Mowbray, the English Anarchist, in his address, reminded them of the great struggle of their forefathers to shake off the galling English yoke. His hearers laughed heartily at this joke.

Long before the speakers appeared the air became stifling and sickening. But as many of those present were cloakmakers and tailors, who are accustomed to work in large groups in very limited space, they did not seem to mind it much.

Finally the Arbeiter Liedertafel, the Anarchist singing society, came out and rendered a revolutionary song. They are all Germans, and Justus Schwab is their leader. When the singers finished, a small crowd of Anarchists, men and women, came on the stage. Several took seats at a table in the middle of the stage, and Miss Voltairine de Cleyre, a Frenchwoman, became Chairman. She began talking in an extremely low voice, and some one shouted: "Louder!" She strained her voice to its utmost pitch, and gave her hearers the information that they were assembled to welcome back an Anarchist victim of capitalistic oppression who had dared to exercise her right of free speech.

This pleased the crowd immensely, and there was a roar of applause. Mowbray was then introduced, and he also told his hearers that they had come to welcome back a good Anarchist, who had dared to tell the starving masses that they had a right to live when their labor had made all that there was in society. He proceeded to quote Cardinal Manning, who, he said, had declared that a starving man had a right to his neighbor's food. Poor Emma Goldman, Mowbray continued, had suffered the tortures of Blackwell's Island, and if the capitalists could have their way she would still be in prison. But she was out, in spite of all, and she was still the same good Anarchist that she always had been. At this there was another howl.

Mowbray attacked capitalists and their agents, the police. He stigmatized the New-York police as a lot of pantalas. The English Army, he said, was no better. When he was an English soldier at Gibraltar the lessee of a valuable oyster bed complained to Gen. Napier about the depradations committed there. Gen. Napier offered to double the guard at the place, but the man begged him, for heaven's sake, not to do so.

"Please take away the guard that is there," he begged, "for it is the soldiers who steal my oysters."

The London police, Mowbray said, were gentlemen in comparison with the New-York police. He wondered how the American workingmen submitted to all the oppression and exactions of capitalists. They ought to look back with pride to their forefathers of the Revolution, who fought bravely to throw off the galling British yoke.

When Mowbray had subsided, a dark-complexioned Italian young woman, Maria Roda, came forward, holding up a red handkerchief. She called Emma Goldman the apostle of the new evangel and the preacher of humanity. She also attacked capitalists and all Governments that supported capitalists.

Roda was followed by Sarah Edelstadt, who made an address in the Jewish-German jargon. The crowd became [illegible]

NEW ENGLAND

Lord Amherst [illegible] India for about [illegible] Mutiny of 1857 [illegible] years, and found [illegible] ready for him on [illegible] knew little about [illegible] he was called up [illegible] of the English [illegible] and was as ignorant [illegible] arts of war. Nevertheless, and England [illegible] indebtedness up, [illegible] extension of the [illegible] about through [illegible] the work is devoted [illegible] that war, and is [illegible] in a simple unpretentious [illegible] the operations of [illegible]

The English [illegible] know with the [illegible] edge of their [illegible] perception of [illegible] men. They found [illegible] over that the [illegible] people, and that [illegible] ingenuity in spite [illegible] ment and lack [illegible] tactics. The early [illegible] event of the war, [illegible] English fleet and [illegible] called for its surrender was thirty [illegible] and almost to [illegible] fired from the [illegible] to which one [illegible] piled, and the [illegible] tions missionary [illegible] a message from [illegible] inquired what [illegible] intimated that [illegible] other hostile demonstrations [illegible] all the European [illegible] at once. Before [illegible] Rangoon the [illegible] natives had discovered [illegible] city, and when [illegible] they found but [illegible] eight traders of [illegible] sionaries, the Am[illegible] English command[illegible] did not prevent [illegible] evacuation showed [illegible] capable of [illegible] and that the info[illegible] from it that they

What the Bur[illegible] the town and [illegible] whose [illegible] on account [illegible] country, they [illegible] reach of the [illegible] they could live [illegible] doubt they regret[illegible] they had the [illegible] army which had [illegible] besieged by [illegible] its supplies from [illegible] and Madras.

Meanwhile Mad[illegible] of the Burmese [illegible] the English safe [illegible] goon, moved an [illegible] frontier and att[illegible] was weak. At a [illegible] a decided victory [illegible] them flying before [illegible] were fell before [illegible] this operation the [illegible] lish an exhibition [illegible] says the author:

"While they [illegible] officers saw them [illegible] but presently the [illegible] rank were prostrate [illegible] fore long they were [illegible] ceased in couples [illegible] something after the [illegible] dwellings of prea[illegible] was not wanting [illegible] diers had with them [illegible] rial necessary for [illegible] which the siege [illegible]

This sort of w[illegible] edly, but in time t[illegible] stand that it was [illegible] tions against arm[illegible] the use of shell[illegible] cared but little.

Another charac[illegible]

BEST COPY AVAILABLE

880722004

The Emma Goldman Papers

[Excerpt from Lecture] Howls for Emma Goldman / Emma Goldman.— p. 2 ; 43 cm.
In The New York Times. —(Aug. 20, 1894).
Obtained from the University of California, Berkeley. Institutional Location: Doe Library.

...made. The revival of ...n River Driving Park ...nsiderable interest, for ...in the regular line for ...k dropped out, finding it ...large purses and play ...hile the list of entries ...t commences next Tues... ...e any such sensations ...d at Washington Park, ...material to insure good

...LEY FAMILY.

... Man Who Remembers ...t Landslide.

...ston (Me.) Journal

...Tasker, a son of one of ...uct the bodies from the ...slide in the White Moun... ...has been visiting in ... and has told the story ...e said

...boy then, and I suppose ...hat fearful period when ...out for days with the ...slides, are impressed ...n my mind than they. ...Father had taken up a ...n 1821, and by 1826 had ...ly clearing the land and ...d barn. For two years ...ng over the land, and ...re looking forward to ...his work. On the 28th ...gan to rain, and many ...Carroll County, were ...slides that covered the ...and rubbish in great ...ull's tavern in Bartlett ...Farmers were sitting ...when in came a man ..., who told us about the ...Willey farm.

...ed the Willey farm, and ...lly, concluded that they ...ns of a neighbor, Abel ...ers among us thought ...night Edward Melcher, ...Samuel Tuttle, Abram ...ge, Isaac Fall, and my ...started for the notch. At ...found the stream so ...ntleman Crawford, who ...nd Melcher carried him ...We had supper at Craw... ...that night. All night ...up through the notch ...ion. At last we arrived ...broke we commenced

...he mountain slide preg... ...back its track ...than three feet of the ...fell away one corner of ...rock and broken tim... ...d ended over along the ...he seemed to have sud... ...he lower end was more ...The upper crust hung ...rt, and formed several ...crowds had arrived, as ...ning family had spread ...sign could be found of ...last, noticing a cluster ...entrance of one of the ...led the attention of Mr ...to it, and the latter ...me out with a white, ...ared me, boy as I was, ...ip. He told the crowd ...hand of a man jammed ...and indicated where to

...Davis. After a hirsu... ...the body and clasp... ...was the body of Mrs ...of the rest of the ...ed in like manner with ...three of the children, ...e never recovered. ...had started to escape ...upon hearing the ava... ...upon them and had ...the flight. They had a ...ble bear to which they ...going. The house was ...deeply imbedded in the ...upted a beech tree ...the course of the ava...

...KEEP AWAKE.

...rkhouse That ...Credit.

...ndon Telegraph

...Poplar who work hard ...in order to pay their ...t be highly gratified to ...ve been wearing their ...to assist William Ed... ...of their workhouse, to ...It takes him half an ...up a pin and another ...herculean exertion he ...ed that he requires to ...in slumber to recruit ...He tried to induce ...cept a theory he had ...roved that the trouble ...in the morning was so ...his case it should be ...e arrangements and ...to his bedside. When ...e declined to acknowl... ...of this deduction. Ed... ...to carry his pet idea ...lously by crawling un... ...himself to a

...imperial disfavor.

THE WAR GOVERNORS.

Names of Men Who Served Their Country Well.

From The Columbus (Ohio) State Journal.

The death of ex-Gov. Austin Blair of Michigan removes the last but two of the famous "war Governors" of our time. The other exceptions are ex-Gov. W. P. Sprague of Rhode Island, afterward a United States Senator, who still survives, and holds the dignified position of policeman at Narragansett Pier, and ex-Gov. A. G. Curtin of Pennsylvania.

The late ex-Gov. Blair entered politics when the Republican Party was formed. In 1854, and in 1860 he headed the Michigan delegation to the Chicago convention, voting for William H. Seward all the time. He was Governor of Michigan from 1861 to 1865, and gave active support to the National Government.

What a list of distinguished men is found in the "war Governors"! Many of them have been celebrated since the war, some of them have been Representatives, others have been Senators, and two have been Cabinet officers. California furnished Leland Stanford and F. F. Low; Connecticut, W. A. Buckingham; Delaware, William Benton and William Cannon; Illinois, Richard Yates and Richard Oglesby; Indiana, Oliver P. Morton; Iowa, S. J. Kirkwood and W. M. Stone; Kansas, Thomas Carney; Kentucky, B. Magoffin and T. E. Bramlette; Maine, Israel Washburn, Jr., A. Coburn, and S. Cony; Maryland, A. W. Bradford; Massachusetts, John A. Andrew; Michigan, Austin Blair and H. H. Crapo; Minnesota, Alexander Ramsay; Missouri, H. R. Gamble; New-Hampshire, Icabod Goodwin and N. S. Berry; New-Jersey, Charles S. Olden and Joel Parker; New-York, Edwin D. Morgan and Reuben E. Fenton; Ohio, William Dennison, David Tod, and John Brough; Pennsylvania, Andrew G. Curtin; Rhode Island, W. P. Sprague; Vermont, Frederick Holbrook; Wisconsin, L. P. Harvey, Edward Salomon, and J. T. Lewis.

The "war Governors" of the Southern States were John G. Shorter and Thomas H. Watts, Alabama; H. M. Rector and Harris Flanagan, Arkansas; John Milton and A. K. Allison, Florida; Joseph E. Brown, Georgia; Thomas O. Moore, Louisiana; John J. Peters and Charles Clark, Mississippi; H. T. Clark and Zebulon Vance, North Carolina; F. W. Pickens, M. L. Bonham, and A. G. McGrath, South Carolina; Isham G. Harris, Tennessee; F. H. Lubbock and Pendleton Murrah, Texas; John Letcher and William Smith, Virginia.

From Stanford to Letcher there are many famous names, and the death of ex-Governor Blair recalls the fact that the "war Governors," both North and South, will soon be nothing more than a memory.

BEACONSFIELD'S PEACOCKS.

With Special Reference to One That Came to Tea.

From Our Animal Friends.

Some years ago I paid a visit to a friend who rented a cottage on Hughenden Manor, where the late Earl of Beaconsfield reared the celebrated white peacocks, which he ultimately bequeathed to Queen Victoria.

Soon after my arrival my friend, who was confined to a couch by a spinal affection, said

"I expect a gentleman to tea at 6 o'clock; would you, please, set the door ajar, for he cannot open it himself."

I thought this strange, but made no remark.

The sitting room was approached by a long, narrow passage, and presently—the tea service being laid—we heard the tap, tap of a regular tread approaching the room. Then followed a decided jab at the door, and in swept a magnificent peacock. No wonder, thought I, that in the early ages of chivalry the most solemn oath was taken on the peacock.

Our visitor walked straight to my friend, looking around as if in search of something. She produced some fruit and cake, which he ate out of her hand, and then picked up some crumbs soaked in milk from a saucer on the floor. I put forth my hand to caress him, upon which he raised himself on his toes and uttered a shrill cry, repudiating all my blandishments vigorously.

In the same manner he came every evening, remaining about half an hour. His affection for his hostess was evident, but I never got beyond his toleration.

Two months afterward my friend left Hughenden. Subsequently she wrote me:

"Poor Ralph is dead. That stupid gamekeeper never let him into the cottage nor fed him in the evening, as he promised me to do. I hear from the little maid you remember that the poor bird sat out in the rain and would lie for hours beneath the window, uttering occasionally a plaintive cry. At night he persisted in roosting in the cedar tree in the cottage lawn. Becoming too weak to fly upward, he lay among the shrubs in the dew, and was one morning found dead."

Of what did he die? Most probably of the passive cruelty of the gamekeeper.

The Colored Troops Did Nobly.

From The Anaconda (Mon.) Standard.

The military control of the Northern Pa-

Chairman. She began talking in an extremely low voice, and some one shouted "Louder!" She strained her voice to its utmost pitch, and gave her hearers the information that they were assembled to welcome back an Anarchist, victim of capitalistic oppression who had dared to exercise her right of free speech.

This pleased the crowd immensely, and there was a roar of applause. Mowbray was then introduced, and he also told his hearers that they had come to welcome back a good Anarchist, who had dared to tell the starving masses that they had a right to live when their labor had made all that there was in society. He proceeded to quote Cardinal Manning, who, he said, had declared that a starving man had a right to his neighbor's food. Poor Emma Goldman, Mowbray continued, had suffered the tortures of Blackwell's Island, and if the capitalists could have their way she would still be in prison. But she was out, in spite of all, and she was still the same good Anarchist that she always had been. At this there was another howl.

Mowbray attacked capitalists and their agents, the police. He stigmatized the New-York police as a lot of pantatas. The English Army, he said, was no better. When he was an English soldier at Gibraltar the lessee of a valuable oyster bed complained to Gen. Napier about the depredations committed there. Gen. Napier offered to double the guard at the place, but the man begged him, for heaven's sake, not to do so.

"Please take away the guard that is there," he begged, "for it is the soldiers who steal my oysters."

The London police, Mowbray said, were gentlemen in comparison with the New-York police. He wondered how the American workingmen submitted to all the oppression and exactions of capitalists. They ought to look back with pride to their forefathers of the Revolution, who fought bravely to throw off the galling British yoke.

When Mowbray had subsided, a dark-complexioned Italian young woman, Maria Roda, came forward, holding up a red handkerchief. She called Emma Goldman the apostle of the new evangel and the preacher of humanity. She also attacked capitalists and all Governments that supported capitalists.

Roda was followed by Sarah Edelstadt, who made an address in the Jewish-German jargon. The crowd became impatient, and called for Emma Goldman.

At last Emma came out from behind the wings, and all the Anarchists began to yell and clap their hands. This continued for nearly a minute, when Emma beckoned to them to stop. When silence was restored she began her speech.

"Here I am again," she said, "and, as you see, I am alive. You know it is impossible to kill a woman. Just fancy these American men prosecuting a woman!

"The representative men of America look across the ocean and beg the capitalists of Europe to help them drive out Anarchists like Emma Goldman. They teach us here to hate other nations, but when it comes to a question of prosecuting Anarchists, they unite with the Europeans."

Assistant District Attorney McIntyre and Judge Martine were bitterly attacked.

"When I listened to the speech of District Attorney McIntyre," she said, "and noticed the mean manner in which he tried to influence the jury against me, I said: 'You coward, it is your great fear of the doctrine of Anarchy that makes you speak so.' After he had poisoned the jury's mind, and it had convicted me, I was given over to the tender mercies of Judge Martine. And you know what he did. He gave me ten months on the Island because he could not give me more.

"Yes, they imprisoned me, but they could not imprison Anarchy. They did not succeed in breaking my belief, my faith in anarchy, our loving mother, and I defy Judge Martine and McIntyre to break Anarchy. The more they try the stronger we shall grow. They are driving nails into their own coffins.

"I am with you again under the flag of Anarchy to fight against our enemies until we bury them, and drive away misery and District Attorneys and Judges. These fellows live on our money and protect the wealthy robbers. Have we any freedom here? At every corner there are armed policemen. Do you call this freedom? If we were indeed free, we should not be here to speak thus. We should be talking about better things. So long as we have a drop of blood left, we will keep up the fight for liberty."

John Most had been announced as one of the speakers. Most and Emma Goldman have been deadly enemies, and have called each other names in the Anarchist papers. The Anarchists thought this would be a good opportunity to reconcile the two, and Most swallowed a bitter pill when he allowed his name to go on the list of speakers at the meeting.

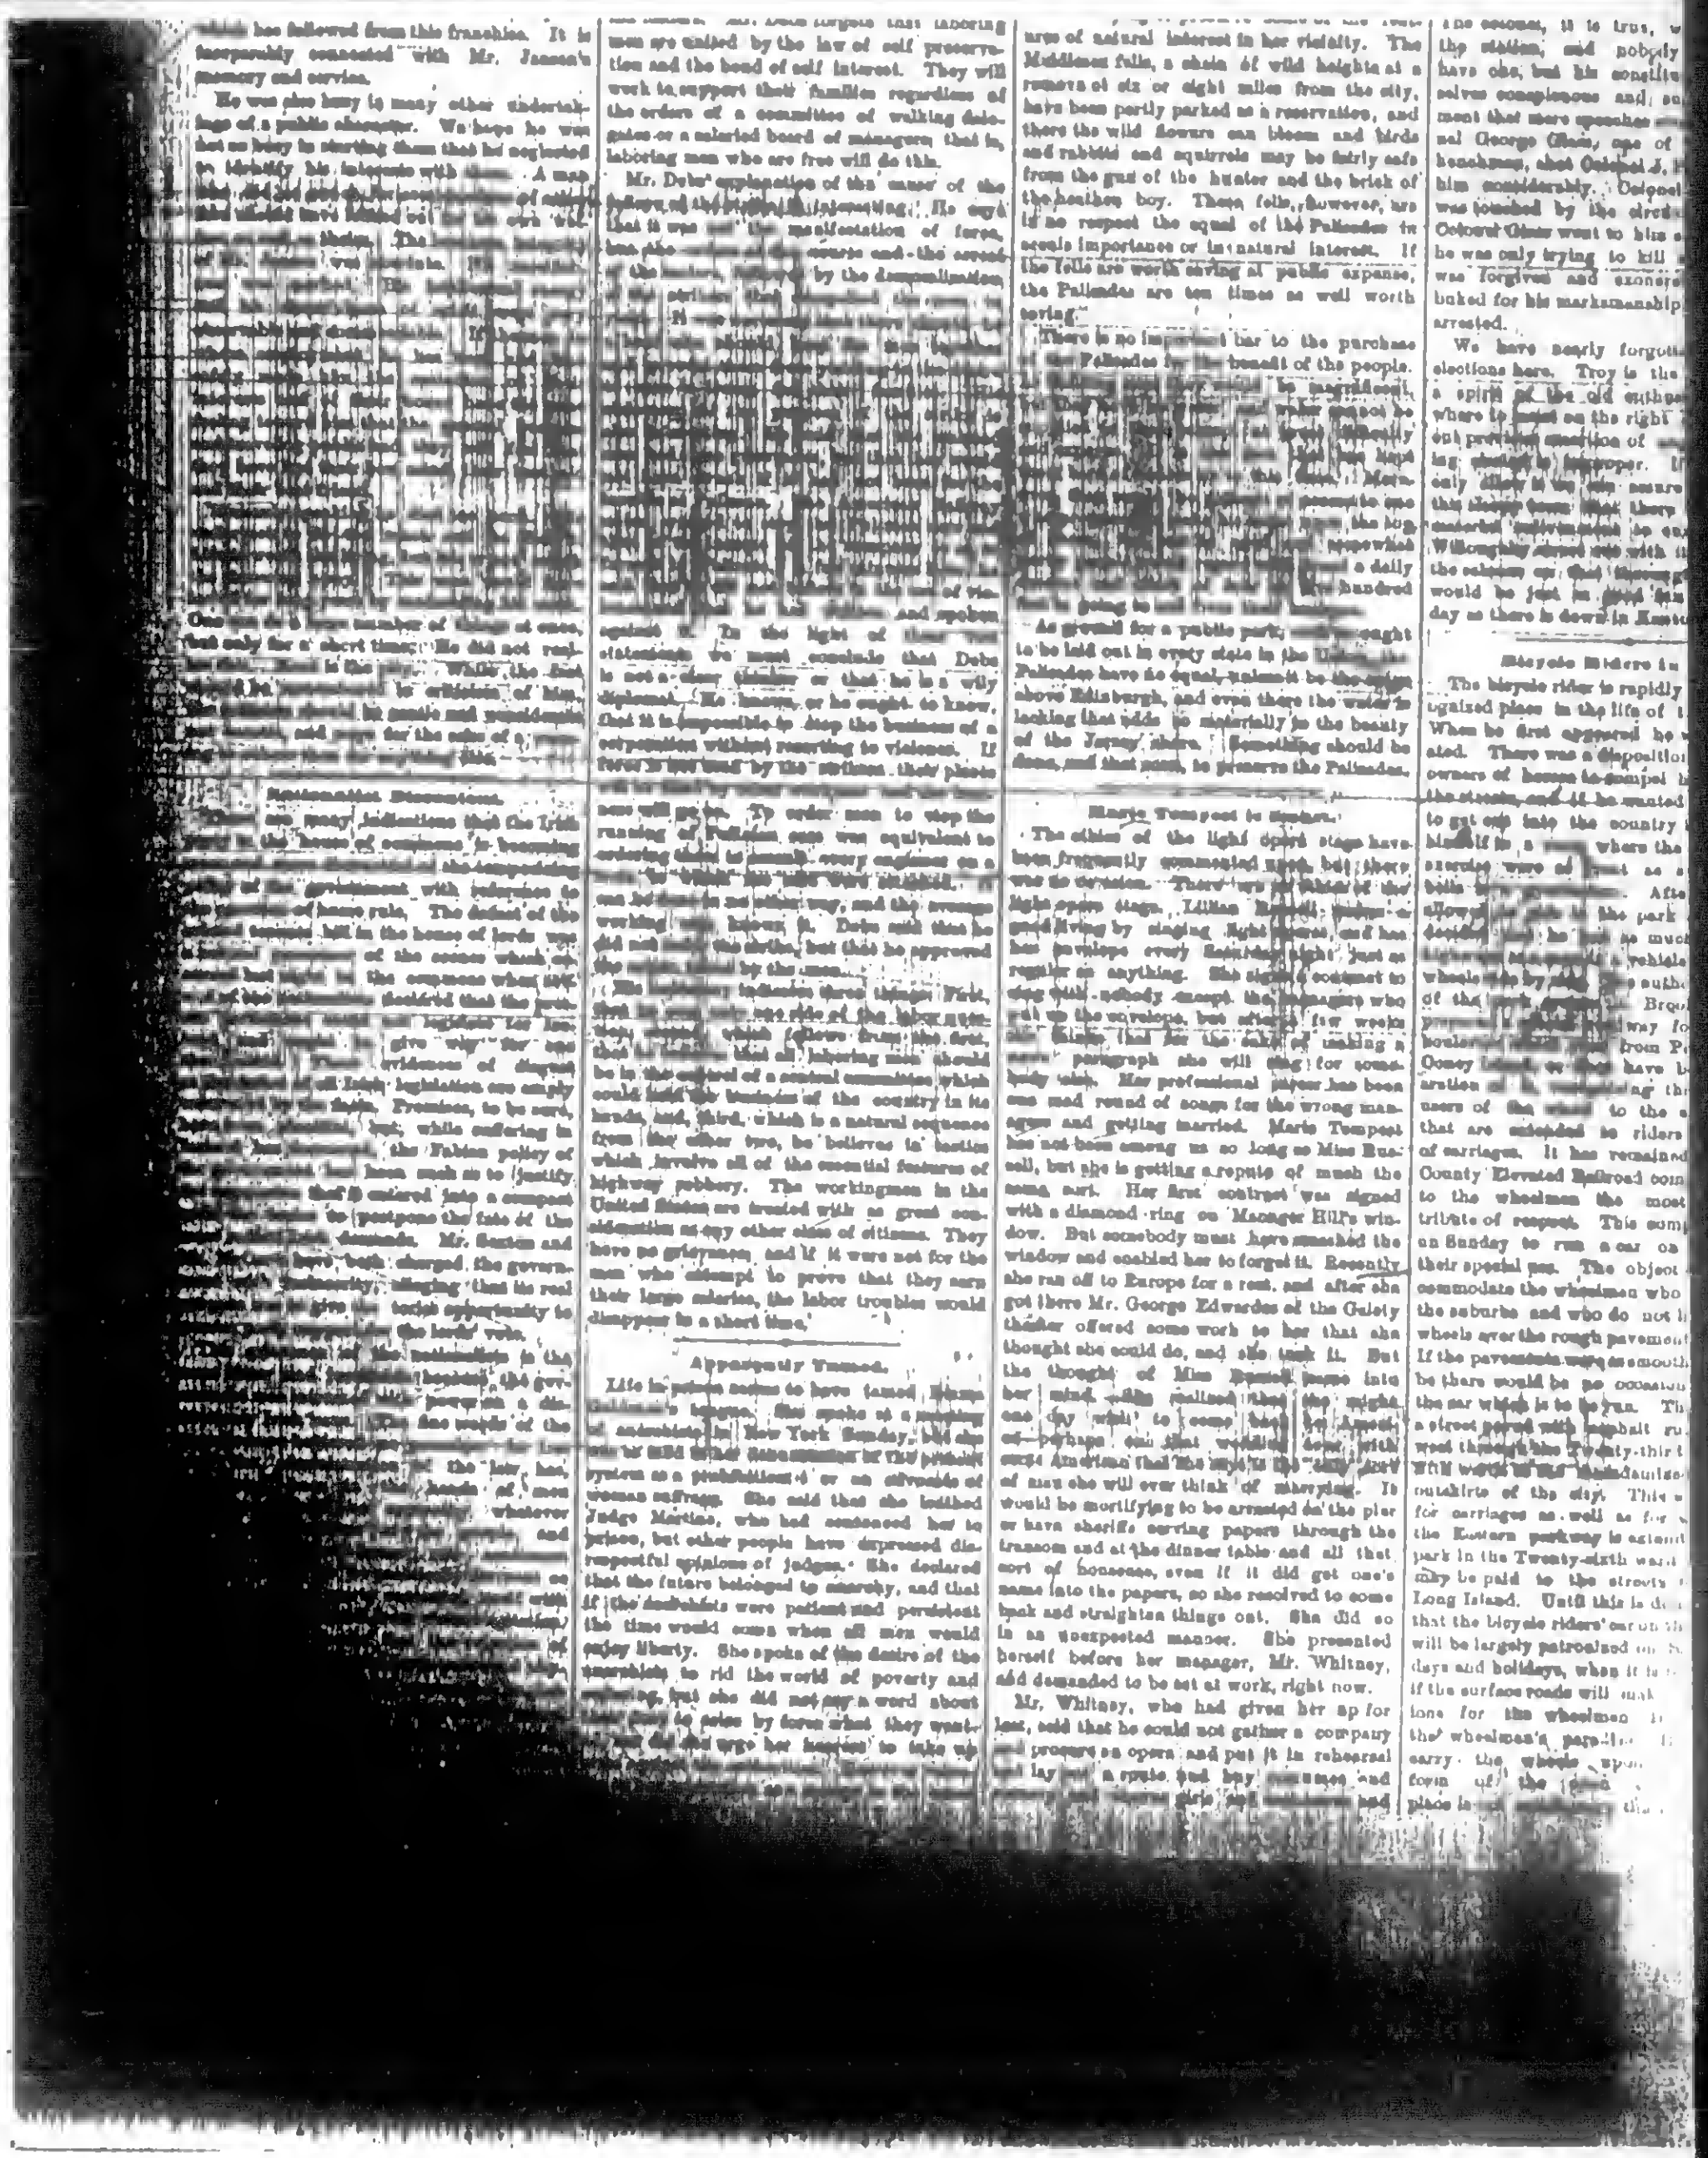
Many of the Anarchists came on purpose to hear him speak. He came to the theatre and went as far as the wings, from where he took a peep at the audience. There were loud calls for Most, but one speaker after another was brought out, and the singing society sang another song, but still no speech from Most. At last it was announced that Most had gone away.

Justus Schwab moved an adjournment, but the crowd continued to shout for Most. Some cried out that there was fraud somewhere. Schwab picked up the Chairman's large boquet and followed her out behind the scenes. It was then realized that the "reception" was really over, and the audience slowly went out, muttering words of discontent at not having heard Most.

Widows and Widowers in Europe.

From The American Register, Paris.

International statistics prove that widows



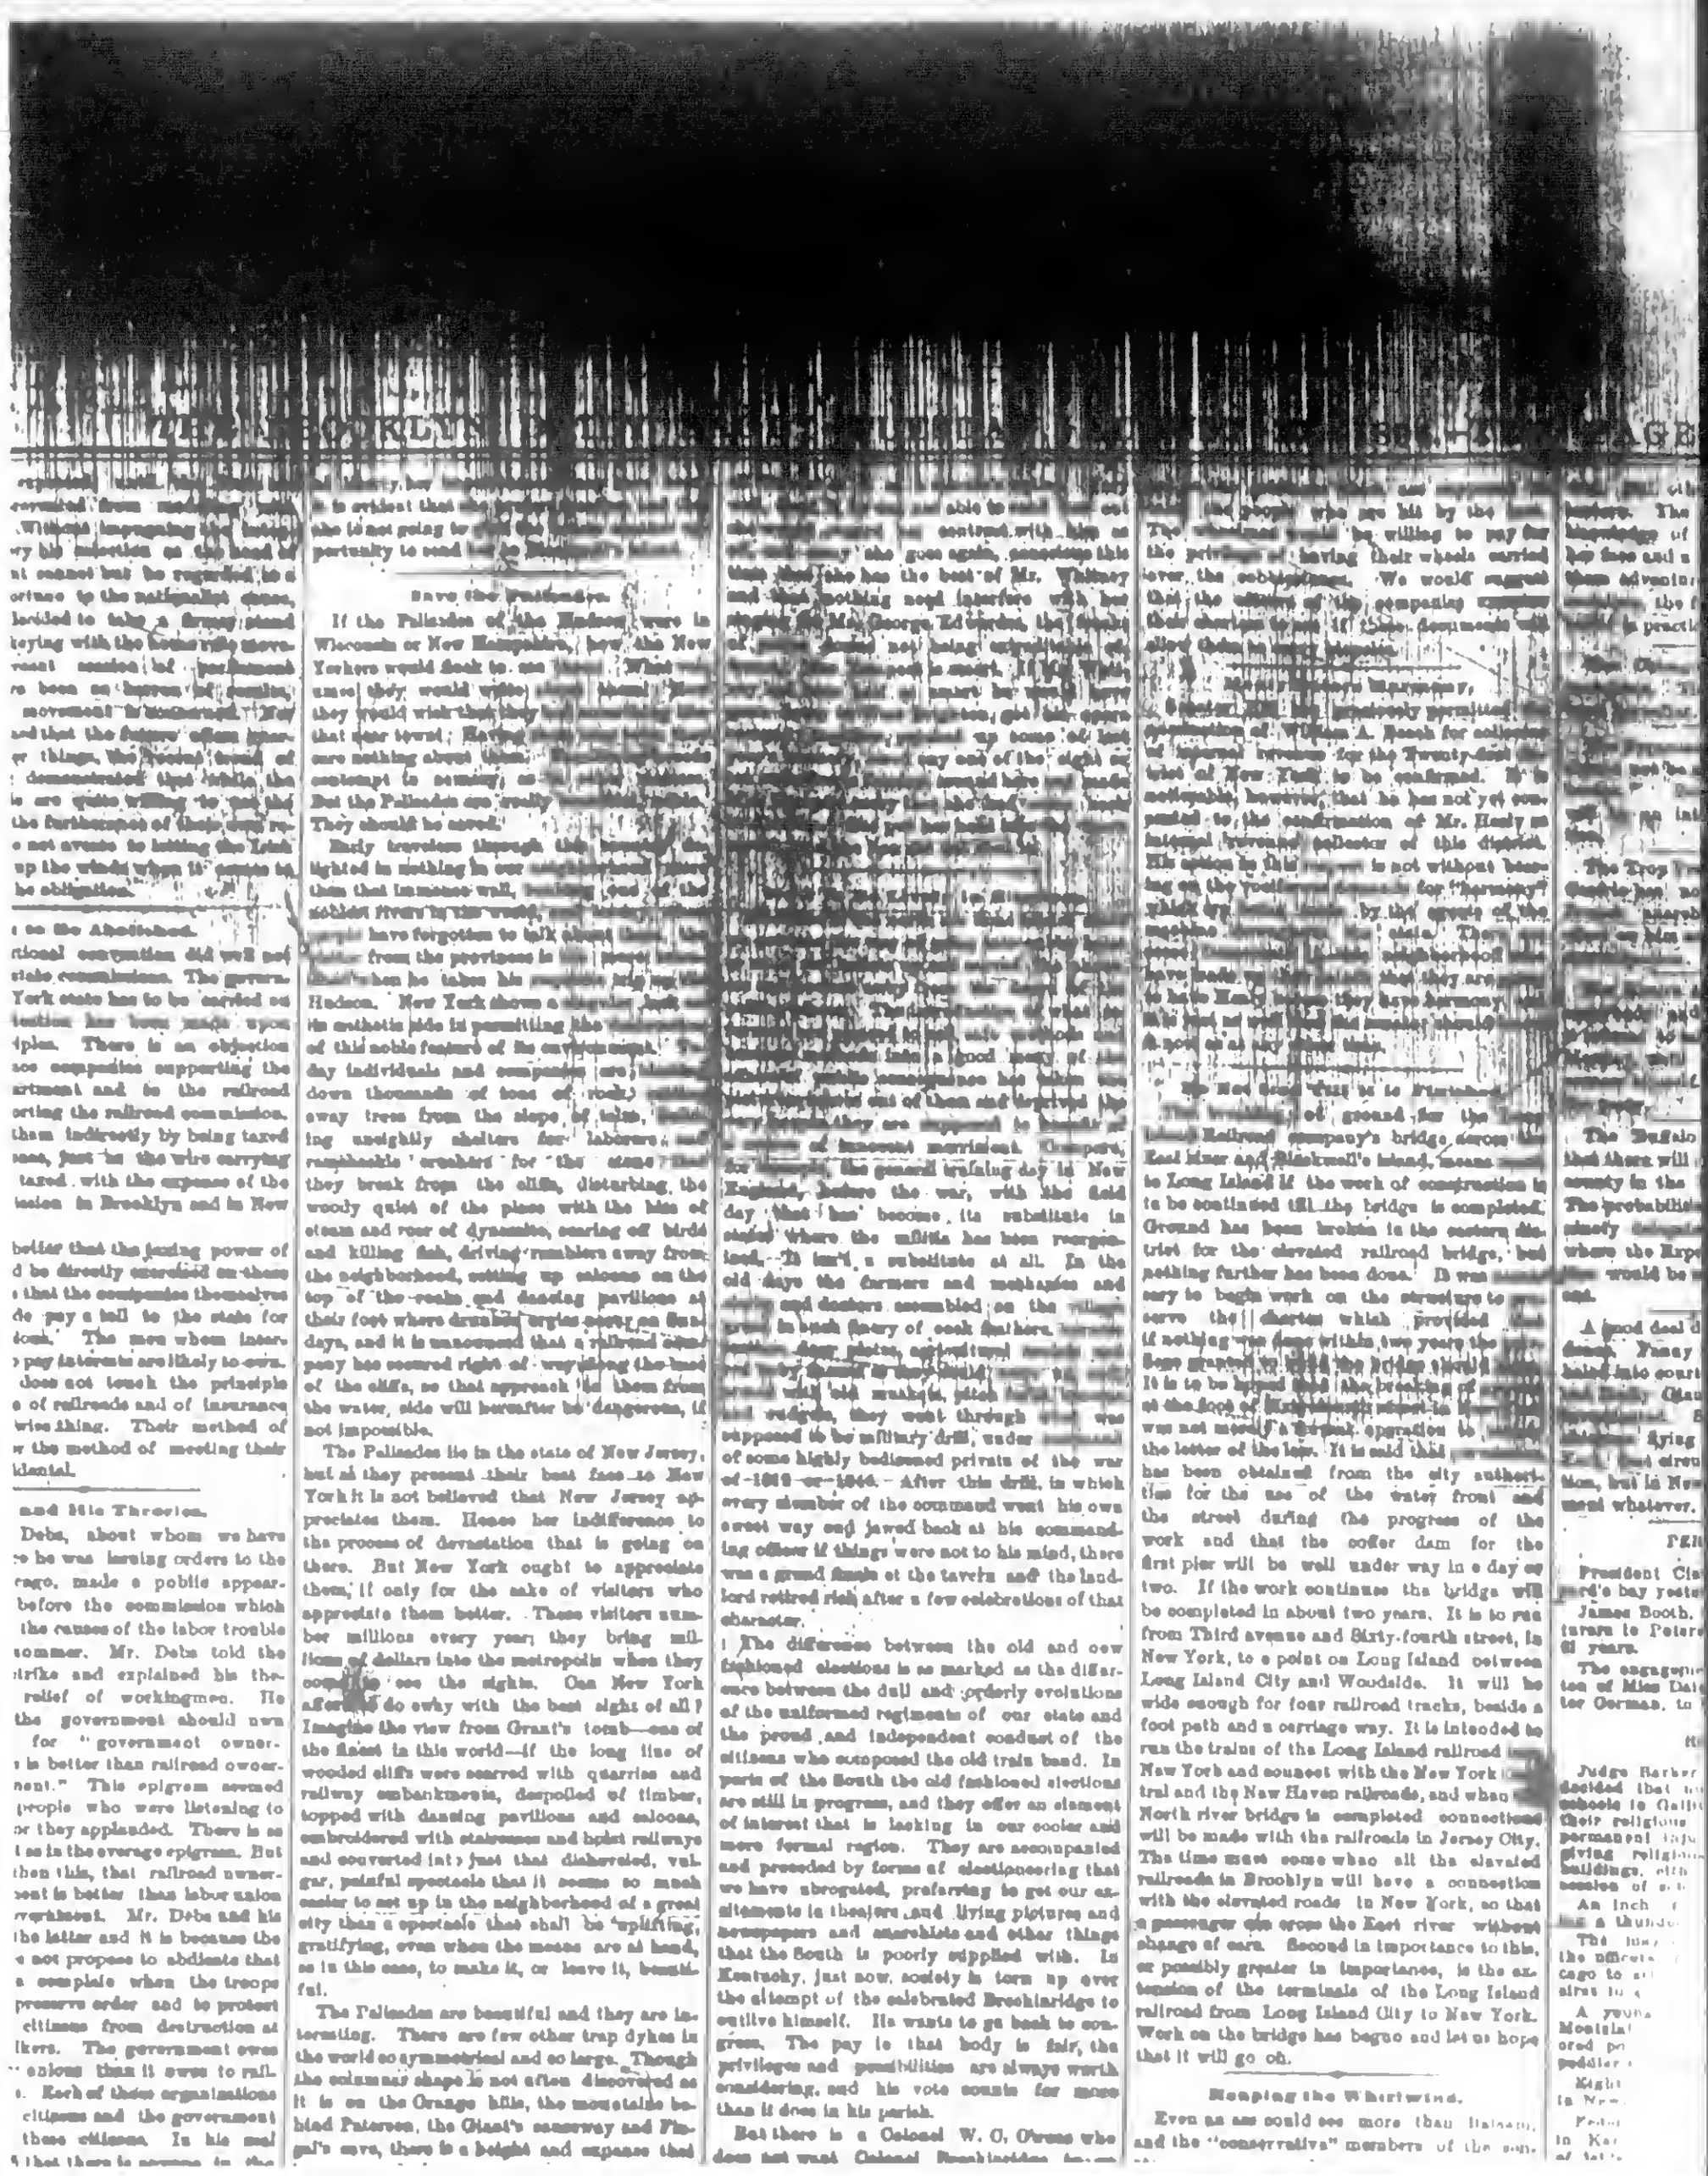
BEST COPY AVAILABLE

891215017

The Emma Goldman Papers

[Summary of Lecture] Apparently Tamed / Emma Goldman. – 28 cm. In The Brooklyn Daily Eagle. –(Aug. 21, 1894).

Permission to reproduce or quote in any form must be obtained from The New York Public Library, Astor, Lenox and Tilden Foundations. Institutional Location: Rare Books and Manuscripts Division.



BEST COPY AVAILABLE

891215017

The Emma Goldman Papers

[Summary of Lecture] Apparently Tamed / Emma Goldman. – 28 cm. In The Brooklyn Daily Eagle. –(Aug. 21, 1894).

Permission to reproduce or quote in any form must be obtained from The New York Public Library, Astor, Lenox and Tilden Foundations. Institutional Location: Rare Books and Manuscripts Division.

BEST COPY AVAILABLE

871117002

The Emma Goldman Papers

[Friends of Alexander Berkman] / Emma Goldman. – p. 2 ; 31 cm. In The Firebrand [Portland]. – Vol. 1, no. 24 (July 21, 1895).

Permission to reproduce or quote in any form must be obtained from The New York Public Library, Astor, Lenox and Tilden Foundations. Institutional Location: Rare Books and Manuscripts Division.

adds the power of monopoly to the privilege of ownership. The difference in point of honesty between the two is, however, similar to that existing between sunlight and sunshine; the former finally necessitates the latter.

As regards money values, it is not necessary to refer to the authority of Judge Tiffany, and other government officials, to determine the fact that money is but the sovereign fiat of state authority, its material vehicle being a monopolized commodity, its intensified power, or value resulting therefrom, is yet but the embodiment of the sovereignity of law. Legal flats are equally as criminal as illegal counterfeits; the value of both is mythical, non-existent value. The beneficiary of counterfeit money is a criminal outlaw; the beneficiary of flatism is a capitalist by law. The monetizing of so called precious metals necessarily appreciates the commodity value of that portion of such metal not directly operative as money; as legal tender for debt, or for purchase. Money is but a creation of tyrannic state authority; simply an arbitrary privileged method of creating artificial capital, in order to control the wealth, and natural capital, of the producers. It is legalized, enforced robbery. The complete demonitisation of the accumulated metallic currency, the absolute extinction of representative values, and all forms of legal flatism, applied to each and every government existent, would undoubtedly open the eyes of the civilised producers. They would then abruptly discover ownership to be the foundation of this accursed system, and its beneficiaries to be the announcers and controliers of statuary government. They would discover that the fortified State exists as a bulwark to defend law and ownership, and to enforce the arbitrary levying of tribute.

With such defrauding institutions in vogue, asking the quiet consent of the producers to such tomfoolery tactics, the product of displaced labor soon passes into the hands of such criminal parasites. This monstrous regime is at bottom an absolute despotism, though not apparently so to the victimized producers. Such a system must completely and finally embrace the monopolization of both natural and artificial capital—of both ownership and government. The intrinsic value of metalic money is the commodity worth, and whatever that value is can be ascertained only after they completely cease their money functions; this value will be small compensation for the labor expended in production and the enslavment resulting therefrom. The fictitious legal value, or fiat, connected therewith, is valueless, and forever dependent upon the producers blindness and the fortified State for its existence; its beneficiaries ever require these provisions in order to enable them to manufacture such unless capital, and force their purchasing fiat into circulation amongst the producer's essential wealth, and real capital, its invented utilities. This criminal purchasing power coupled with other forms of legal privilege, united with the crime of ownership in the earth's resources, is what gives capitalistic society its exploiting power; being united with, and dependent upon the fortified State for existence, privilege and monopoly must live and die together with the State. The producer's wealth is thus quite easily obtained and their functions completely controlled by these magical processes; it is by such despicable methods that the wage and profit system is born and developed, hand in hand with government. The products of the wage slaves and producers of all classes, passing directly, also indirectly, into the possession of legalised brigands, through monopolisation of the land and the machinery of production, which is accomplished through the existion of, and monopolization of fortified statuary government, and its legal product, artificial capital. Labor's produce now presents itself in its ownership garb as commerce, with a price attached thereto, and being but the wealth of the producers abstracted therefrom under the guise of a wage system, and as profits, rent, interest and taxes; this being the case commerce is best defined as alien property, that privilege and monopoly deducts from producers. It is the price that producers pay for legal capital and government. It is the spoils of ownership-authority.

(to be continued)

Correspondence.

I beg to call the attention of THE FIREBRAND comrades, and liberty loving men and women everywhere, to the fact that the friends of Alexander Berkman are getting ready to appeal for a commutation of the excessive sentence imposed upon him, in 1892, for attacking Frick, the superintendent of the Carnegie iron works, during the labor troubles of that time. Most of your readers will, no doubt, remember the outrageous treatment labor received at the hands of capital, during the Homestead strike; how Pinkerton's men were engaged by Frick, smuggled down there and armed with Winchester rifles, with instruction from this man Frick, to shoot to kill. Now these hired assassins charged upon a group of defenceless men and women, who were armed with nothing but their courage and honesty of purpose, killing eleven and wounding many more. As usual the attention of the strikers was directed to the poor scabs, who are ever through circumstances compelled to take their places, while Frick, who was directly responsible for the trouble, who gave the order to drive the sick wives and children of the strikers from their homes, and who expressed the desire to have the working men massacred, rather than to see them win the strike, was not in the least molested. Even the capitalist press joined with many law-abiding citizens in denouncing Frick, and sympathising with the unfortunate workmen.

It was at this stage that Berkman appeared upon the field, July 23d., 1892. Though not a striker, and not suffering from the cruelty of Frick himself, he keenly felt the wrongs inflicted upon his brethren. Berkman, the noble youth, recognizing the man who was responsible for the sufferings of the strikers, determined to strike a blow at the cause of the evil, and the death of the eleven victims. The cries of starving mothers and innocent children gave him courage and will power to combat the enemy. He made an unsuccessful attack on Frick, slightly wounding him, but creating consternation in the enemy's camp. By the light of subsequent events it is shown that the act was not altogether in vain; Plutocracy has never raised its head so proudly since.

Utterly terrified, fearing a similar attack from other sources, the authorities hurried Berkman away to prison, where he was forced to remain two months, after which time he was brought before a prejudiced judge and jury, without council, or the least chance to defend himself. He was, on the 20th. of September sentenced to twenty-two years imprisonment; such a trial being illegal and without a precedent in the history of jurisprudence.

Today, while Frick, in perfect health, lives to enjoy his ill-gotten wealth, poor Berkman is languishing in a dark, musty cell, shut away from his friends and from the world, never enjoying a stray beam of sunshine; still dreaming of a dawn of perfect freedom, and a day when labor will no longer be crushed beneath the iron heel of wealth. For behind his prison bars his big warm heart still throbs with the hopes and fear of the downtrodden; he still keeps watch on the events of our times, and when permitted to write to his friends still encourages them not to give up the fight. Though but a boy in years, he has shown the philosophy and courage of a man; no word of complaint has ever passed his lips in all these three years, although he has been subjected to even more rigerous discipline than prisoners usually undergo.

Lovers of justice everywhere, even if not in sympathy with the feeling that prompted the act of 1892, must recognise the injustice of such a trial, under such circumstances, and by such a judge and jury, and must agree with us that when, according to the law he was accused of violating, the extreme penalty should have been seven years, the tactics pursued in order to sentence him for such a length of time were unlawful, as well as unjust and inhuman.

Berkman does not petition for a pardon, nor for a new trial, but simply for a reduction of tence. Comrades and friends that feel interested in this poor prisoner will bear in mind that money is required for every effort of this kind, and will help us all they can.

Those desiring further information, or desiring to contribute to the fund, should address, until further notice, Charles Schneider, 82 Hill street, 12th. Ward, Allegheny, Pa.

Emma Goldman."

Comrades:—The Journals of Europe have the defect that they do not give us an exact idea of the revolutionary movement in America. In order to be up to date with the progress of the emancipation of the people, it becomes necessary to read the papers in their original language. I subscribe for your paper, and the amount of subscription will be sent as soon as the paper is received.

Markaloff.

Rustchuk, Bulgaria.

All our exchanges who favor justice will please copy and request others to. The comrades everywhere will do well to exert themselves in Berkman's behalf. Get your local papers to mention this effort to free Comrade Berkman.

890127098

The Emma Goldman Papers

[Interview, Th]e Red Queen Is Here / Emma Goldman.– 36 cm. In The Pittsburgh Leader. –[(Sept? 1895, fragment)].

Permission to reproduce or quote in any form must be obtained from the International Institute of Social History. Institutional Location: Solo Linder Archive.

SINGLE COPY—FIVE CENTS

E RED QUEEN IS HERE.

a Goldman Says There Is No Prosperity in Pittsburg Except for the Employer.

IS GOING TO STUDY MEDICINE ABROAD.

perity! There's no prosperity cept for the employers. I find ers just as poor as they were was here last. Prosperity and e two different things; there is ut not prosperity."

was the sting of poignant sar- tbe words as they came from of Emma Goldman, the "Red of anarchism, as she made re- he question of a representative Sunday "Leader," "Why do you Pittsburg to speak when there uch prosperity?"

Goldman arrived in the city yes- and is staying with friends, fel- mmunists. She is just returning eight months' tour through the d southwest, having spoken in ncipal cities of California, Colo- ansas, Illinois and various oth- s. She is here now not so much ead the propaganda as to the sleeping Anarchists." Last s spoke in West Newton to a f sympathizing workmen. This ; she is to be heard at Collins- ar West Newton; on Tuesday Church on Thursday at Co- Turner hall in Lawrenceville; ay at Moorhead's hall, Grant nd Second avenue, under the of the Molders' union; at Tur- , Lawrenceville, on Saturday; lows' hall, South Side, on Octo- cDonald on October 3 and 4; at le avenue, Pittsburg, on Octo- he following night at Fayette the 9th at Roscoe; 10th at K. ll, 432 Wood street. After a day f rest among her friends she o New York, whence on Octo- e will sail for Europe. She ex- spend at least three years during which time she says she ve America a rest." The first ead will be spent in spreading propaganda in England, Scot- l France, and the two remain- s in Switzerland, where Miss aldman, From Her Best Pic- ture.

expects to pursue the study of for the purpose of "minister- physical sufferings as well as g! sufferings of humanity." ready graduated as a trained t belie es she can be of better her fellows as a physician, not however, entertain any bandoning anarchy for medirchist congress is to be held in 900, during the World's fair. s Miss Goldman is accredited can secretary and delegate American groups. The place of ng has not yet been desig- t the month of August has l upon as the time. This will st anarchistic congress held since 1878. It is fathered by Nowhenhas, editor of the ialist,' a German publication; ditor of a French socialistic d Reclus, the distinguished st of France. Speaking of the Miss Goldman said: may be trouble but if there ready for it; we are prepared o the bitter end."

ed that some effort may be France to prevent the assem- ris of foreign Anarchists in nts the Reds will make a l stand. As for herself she s no trouble. "I am an citizen," she said seeming for the moment to forget that anarchy recognizes no form of government or order, "and that may carry me through all right." Then she added, in response to a query, that she had never had any trouble in Paris, although she had spent some time there at a period, however, when there were no disturbances.

Miss Goldman's speeches here will be upon such topics as "Patriotism," "Politics and Its Corrupting Effect Upon Men," "Trade Unionism" and "Why I Am an Anarchist-Communist."

"I am here not so much to make a propoganda," she said to the "Leader" man, "as to awaken the people. I do not believe Anarchists are made; I think they are born. There is no prosperity for the workingman; there is work, 'tis true, but the toiler is not sharing in the fruits of his labor. Prosperity! That is for the employer. Why the miners are no better off to-day than they were when I was here before when there was so much talk of hard times."

An interrogatory as to what is being done in the case of Alexander Berkmann brought forth this explanation: "In the first place I was always opposed to any legal efforts in behalf of Berkmann because I knew in behalf of action was contrary to my views and principles. Still what I did for him was done in the name of humanity; would not retard anything that others might think proper in his behalf. The pardon board, you understand, has refused to hear the Berkmann case because Mr. Frick while he has not said 'nay' has intimated to the pardon board that it would not be to the interest of his class to do anything for the prisoner. So the Czar of Russia declares Berkmann shall not be pardoned. Nothing further is being done for Berkmann now."

Miss Gnidman related her experience at Spring Valley, Ill., this month on the occasion on which she was alleged to have wished to baptize some children with beer. "There was no truth whatever in the published reports," she said emphatically. "The facts of the matter are these. Between the time of my former visit to Spring Valley in May and the last one this month, 19 children had been born into Anarchist families. The women folks are not very far advanced and the men wanted to get them out to our meetings so I could talk to them on women's questions, so we played a little trick by inviting them to bring their children as a sort of reunion. I made a remark about the Christians baptizing with water and said if wine was good enough for them I was opposed to any adulteration and preferred the pure beer or wine. There was no reference to baptizing the children in beer, for in the first place we do not believe in baptism at all.

"I had some trouble with the police in Spring Valley on September 6. We had arranged for a parade and meeting on the public square; I carried the red flag at the head of the procession and it was just like waving a red rag in the face of a bull. The mayor threatened to arrest me if I spoke although he had already given permission for the meeting. I then remained in my room, but he still [illegible] not address the crowd and that they should disperse. I told him that the men were armed and were determined to hold the meeting, that if I were disposed to do so I could not influence them to leave, but that if he would not interfere with us I would guarantee that there would be no trouble. If, on the other hand, he did interfere I would not be responsible for what would happen. He finally said that I should be careful what I said. At all events we held the meeting and the newspapers roundly roasted the mayor for showing the white feather."

Regarding the Dreyfus case she said: "The Dreyfus case has done more to discredit anarchy than twenty-five years of active propaganda; it has done more to show the world how rotten the government of France is than anything else in history. Of course, the Anarchists are all for Dreyfus, they did a great deal of work in his behalf. Personally I do not believe Dreyfus is a sympathetic character. What the Anarchists did, however, was from a humanitarian point of view—a principle."

Miss Goldman was with a group of fellow Anarchists when the writer talked to her, among the party being Messrs. Bauer and Gordon, who were active in the movement for Berkmann's pardon. She looked remarkably well, and as she passed along Smithfield street the casual observer would never have suspected that an Anarchist of international notoriety was so close at hand. She wore a neat fitting black suit with tailor-made jacket and a small toque.

BEST COPY AVAILABLE

890123004

The Emma Goldman Papers

Alexander Berkmann / Emma Goldman.– p. 54 ; 47 cm. In The Torch [London]. –Vol. 2, no. 4 (Sept. 1895).

Obtained from the University of California, Berkeley. Institutional Location: Doe Library.

I remember a gentleman stating as a proof of his truthfulness, when I cast a doubt upon an assertion that he had made, that he was a member of the Institute of Journalists, and wrote for a great many London newspapers. He seemed quite astonished when the crowd around laughed and howled. I was not surprised at all. E. Y.

EMMA GOLDMANN.

Our comrade, Emma Goldmann, from New York, who has been in London during the last few weeks, has thrown herself into the breach with all her accustomed energy, and has given a very much needed fillip to our open-air propaganda. She has addressed large and enthusiastic crowds at Regent's Park, Hyde Park, and at our different stations in the Canning Town district. On Friday, 13th, in company with Louise Michel, Lawrence, and others she addressed a meeting at South Place Institute, giving an account of the treatment our comrade Berkmann is subjected to in prison, and trying to interest the public in the efforts made to bring about a reduction of the cruel and vindictive sentence of 23 years passed on him. P.

ALEXANDER BERKMANN.

I beg to call the attention of the Torch readers and liberty loving men and women everywhere, to the fact that friends and comrades of Alexander Berkmann are about to appeal for a commutation of the excessive sentence imposed upon him in 1892 for attacking Frick, the superintendent of the Carnegie iron works, during the labor troubles of that time.

All our readers will remember the causes which led to the brave act of our comrade Berkmann, and even those not sympathising with the feeling that prompted the act of July 1892, must recognize the injustice of the sentence passed on Berkmann by American "justice," and must agree with us that when, according to the law which he was accused of violating, the extreme penalty should have been seven years, the tactics pursued in order to sentence him to 22 years imprisonment were unlawful, as well as unjust and inhuman. Berkmann does not petition for a pardon, nor for a new trial, but simply for a reduction of sentence.

Comrades and friends who feel interested in the welfare of our brave, courageous, imprisoned comrade are requested to give us their financial aid

Subscriptions will be received by Comrade Gunderson, 98, Wardour St., Soho Square, London, W.

EMMA GOLDMANN.

ITALY.

CAVALOTTI's heroic attempts to bring Crispi to justice and to force him to defend himself before a judge have, as we predicted, ended in failure. As already reported, the judge charged with the preliminary investigation of the documents collected by Cavalotti has decided that the accusations cannot be sustained. Part of the evidence he rejected as not bearing the construction placed on it, and with regard to the rest he declared that the court had no jurisdiction and that the parliament alone was competent to deal with it. As Crispi is absolutely sure of the votes of the thieves and lackeys who have sold themselves body and soul to him, he can continue to defy public opinion, and carry on the game which has made Italian politics stink in the nostrils of every honorable man.

It has been suggested that the twenty-fifth anniversary of the entry of the Italian army into Rome should be celebrated by a general amnesty. A ministerial council was held last week to discuss the question, but the outcome of its deliberations has not yet been made known Judging from the way the police are acting in Sicily, where the dissatisfaction amongst the peasants is constantly spreading, and isolated outbreaks are a matter of every-day occurrence, the talked-of amnesty will remain a pious aspiration of a few well-meaning journalists.

At Palermo twelve of the best-known leaders of the revolutionary Socialists have been arrested in virtue of the law of July 1894 and sent into domicilio coatt.. Amongst them is Prince Cuto, and the editor and most of the staff of the Riscossa, which, in consequence, has ceased publication. Several other warrants have not yet been executed, as the people against whom they are directed have disappeared. P.

FRANCE.

THE situation at Carmaux remains unchanged. The company demands the unconditional return to work of the glass-blowers on strike, while the latter persist in their demands. Public opinion is still on the side of the strikers, and subscriptions are flowing in from all sides. M. Jaures is doing his best to keep up the spirits of the workers, holding meetings continually, and working indefatigably on their behalf.

In spite of all the extensive precautions taken by the police not to lose sight of Senator Magnier he has managed to give them the slip, and to disappear. The papers assert that the watch kept on his house was nothing but an elaborate farce, and that it was never intended to arrest him, as he was mixed up with too many people, still high in power, who were afraid of the revelations he might make when brought to trial.

The perpetrator of the joke on Baron Alphonse de Rothschild has not yet been discovered. It is pretty evident that the affair has been grossly exaggerated. The letter most probably contained nothing but a cracker which was arranged to go off when it was opened, and thereby to frighten the recipient.

A young man entered Rothschild's bank in the Rue Lafitte about 3 p m. on the afternoon of the 5th September under suspicious circumstances, but was immediately taken up by a detective. When arrested he was seen to carry something which, on examination turned out to be a cocoa tin containing a mixture of chlorate of potash and gunpowder. He had attempted to ignite a fuse attached to the bomb with the end of a lighted cigarette, but did not succeed in doing so before the police overpowered him He first refused to give any information about himself, but admitted that he was an Anarchist and claimed to have had serious intentions of wrecking the bank. He turns out to be a man of education, a skilled workman of the name of Leon Boutelhe, and asserts in a letter that he addressed to the Juge d'Instruction that he intended to cause an explosion because the sight of wealth inspired him with a feeling of hatred, as he, as well as the majority of his fellow-workers, were obliged to spend their lives for the purpose of enriching millionaires.

Our Comrade Alexander Cohen, who returned last month to Paris to be retried in consequence of the sentence passed on him at the trial of the thirty, was acquitted last week and immediately expelled the country. The police did not even allow him to communicate the fact of his expulsion to his wife, but conducted him straight from the prison to the station. He revenged himself by making a detective, who accompanied him, carry a large and heavy dictionary, and giving generally as much trouble as possible. P.

BELGIUM.

FOUR Anarchists living at Anvers have been sentenced to various terms of imprisonment for having in their possession

BEST COPY AVAILABLE

63

880805006

The Emma Goldman Papers

[Excerpt from Lecture] Emma Goldman in London / Emma Goldman.— pp. 173-174 ; 36 cm. In Liberty [London]. —Vol. 2, no. 22 (Oct. 1895).

Obtained from the University of California, Berkeley. Institutional Location: Doe Library.

going doing!" Surely he has not retired altogether from the active part he has so long taken in the progressive movements of the age. Nor can it be that Inverness is so far north as to place him out of reach. He, at any rate is not forgotten: neither is his work. We shall be pleased to hear from him.

That the wheat crop this year is one of the smallest ever known in the United Kingdom is a fact of considerable interest, even to Anarchists, who are sometimes accused of indifference with regard to such subjects. That in the event of a war breaking out the people of this country might absolutely be without a supply of grain is the "bogey" generally trotted out on these occasions. Occasionally also—as was done the other day in the Chronicle—a correspondent points to the system of more intelligent cultivation recommended by Kropotkin. These ideas are, however, beside the question really at issue. What is necessary in order to solve the agricultural problem is the abolition of the present landlord system—in other words the (comparatively speaking) free use of land. Nothing short of this will put the cultivator of the soil in a position to truly benefit himself and the community at large.

Politicians, including some of the I. L. P., are beginning to notice the cloud "no bigger than a man's hand" that is rising on the horizon and which will overshadow the next School Board election. It is evident—clear as noonday—that the sectarians (Catholic, Church, Dissent,) have already acquired a power over the machinery of public education that is bound in the end to destroy anything and everything tending to promote secular and unfettered teaching in our schools. This is the outcome of pandering to compromise on a subject that should years ago have been placed outside the influence of both creeds and parties. As Anarchists we are called upon to support free education in the fullest and most comprehensive definition of the term. To all sectarians—be they of the class tolerant or intolerant—our warning is "Hands off. Teach your mysticism, or your theology, if you must teach such things, in your own schools, but not in public schools or with the money of the public."

Friends and comrades in America are about to appeal for a commutation of the sentence on Berkmann, and a fund is being subscribed for paying the expenses which must be incurred. The injustice and illegality of the sentence passed on Berkmann is described in the address given by Emma Goldman, on the 13th ult., and reported in this issue. It is earnestly hoped that English Anarchists will render all the assistance they can. Contributions will be received and thankfully acknowledged by Comrade Gunderson, 98, Wardour Street, Soho Square.

In answer to numerous enquirers we state with very much regret that the health of our Comrade and earnest co-worker L. S. Bevington remains in a very precarious state. Every reader of LIBERTY will join with us in sincerely hoping that rest, quiet, and bracing sea air may tend to ultimate renewal of vigorous life.

The labour war is being carried on at Carmaux by the strikers there with great pluck and determination, in defence of the right of organization, which in theory is allowed by law. Any attempt, however, to put the law into practice is immediately met by that brutal form of suppression so characteristic of the bourgeoisie. It is a marked feature in connection with this strike, that not one of the men will draw a franc from the strike fund so long as he has anything to sell or pawn. The fund in existence will require augmentation as the battle goes on, and if English comrades can assist and will send on their contributions to the office of LIBERTY, we will acknowledge and forward to the proper quarter.

EMMA GOLDMAN IN LONDON.

PUBLIC MEETING AT SOUTH PLACE INSTITUTE, FINSBURY.

Emma Goldman, the woman who voiced the sufferings of the unemployed in New York in 1892, and who consequently suffered imprisonment for this so-called breach of the laws of the U. S. A., arrived in England on the 22nd of August. Her first appearance in public was in Regents Park, where she spoke to a large crowd. At later periods she addressed meetings at Hyde Park, Whitechapel, Canning Town, Barking, and Stratford, her speeches being recieved in every case with marked approval. And on Friday evening the 13th ultimo she delivered an interesting address in the South Place Institute, Finsbury.

The meeting was called to consider the subject "Political Justice in England and America." The chair was occupied by R. Peddie, and on the platform and amongst the audience were Louise Michel, Touzeau Parris, E. Leggatt, Henry Seymour, Amy Morant, C. Morton, G. Lawrence, and James Tochatti.

The Chairman having briefly stated the object for which the meeting had been called, Comrade Leggatt spoke on his imprisonment and said that a magistrate was always more severe on a man if he happened to be an Anarchist than upon an ordinary man, and that he as a working man would continue to assert his right to ride in comfort.

J. Tochatti said the question of Political Justice in England no one could afford to ignore, whatever their political views may be, nor could we allow the Continental system of "agents provocateur" to be introduced without strenuous opposition. Justice was not administered in accord with equity but used by the classes to suppress all advanced thought which threatened their interests. Acts of Parliament passed in panic had been strained in order to brutally punish men who had been trapped by the police. It had been admitted by ex-detective M'cIntyre that the Walsall Anarchists were victims of a police plot. It was difficult to believe that in England men like Charles and Battola were suffering through the infamy of men like Coulon and the reptile detectives of Scotland Yard, but such was the case.

Henry Seymour said the case of Berkmann, who got 22 years for a 7 years' offence because he happened to hold anarchistic views showed, according to American law, that if 7 years' imprisonment was a sufficient punishment for an attempt to kill, 15 years' imprisonment was the adequate penalty for daring to hold an opinion that American law was rotten. The case of the Chicago Anarchists made it manifest that the United States police were capable of every conceivable villiany. Torning our attention to our own country, the Walsall Case showed that the Secret Service, in the light of the revelations of inspector M'c Intyre, was an abomination not to be endured. Having recently taken an interest in the Maybrick Case, he said he was acquainted with its details, and could speak with assurance of the scandalous way in which the police manufactured evidence to secure a conviction, and an acquaintance with the case of John Hay revealed that Home Office officials were open to barefaced bribery. We might agitate and secure the reduction of unjust sentences in a few cases, but it must be understood that there is no radical remedy for this state of things except to put an end to the present inequitable economic conditions which permit the privileged few, who control the government, to live in opulence and ease at the expense of the degradation of the masses.

Emma Goldman dealt with the subject from an American point of view. She said three years had past, since Alexander Berkmann, the noble youth, attempted to avenge the wrongs inflicted upon the strikers at Homestead, during the labor troubles of 1892. Three years of struggle, hardship and privation for the working class, and wealth, extravagance, amusements and pleasure, for a privileged few.

"What(she asked) was Berkmann's crime?" Had he stolen the wealth labor had created? Had he robbed mankind of the necessary means of life? Had he invested the hard earned pennies of widows and orphans in swindling schemes? Had he built factories, where men women and half grown children, were slowly tortured to death? Had he plagued, cheated, enslaved, and tyrannized humanity? No! Had he done all that, he might have remained a free man, he would have been honored and respected as a good citizen, have had a chance of being elected to Parliament, Senate, or Congress, or chosen as President of the U. S. A. Berkmann was in prison, because he hated and opposed all this, because he was strong, and let the act follow the thought, because he attempted to destroy the life of a man, who had brought disaster and privation upon thousands of people. The condition of of the workers in America was just as miserable as in other countries, the strikes that had taken place within the last ten years demonstrated the long suppressed sufferings of the working classes. It was the Homestead strike of 1892, which revealed to the public the dreadful condition of the amalgamated steel and iron workers, and the brutal treatment they were subjected to by Frick, the superintendent; the workers were actually owned by Carnegie and Frick; the barracks they lived in belonged to Carnegie and Frick, the food, tools and clothing had to be bought at Carnegie's shops, and the prices they paid for these necessaries were enormous. The result of such tyrannical treatment was the strike of July 1892. The men were determined to fight for their homes and families, they were ready to die if necessary, they would not endure a life of drudgery any longer. Frick seeing the earnestness and seriousness of his slaves, engaged a number of Pinkerton's men at two dollars per day, smuggled them into Homestead and gave them the order to shoot and to kill. On the 6th of 880805006

The Emma Goldman Papers

[Excerpt from Lecture] Emma Goldman in London / Emma Goldman.— pp. 173-174 ; 36 cm. In Liberty [London]. —Vol. 2, no. 22 (Oct. 1895).

Obtained from the University of California, Berkeley. Institutional Location: Doe Library.

July these armed assassins charged upon a crowd of men and women, killing eleven and wounding many more. The strikers fought a brave battle; they energetically defended themselves and drove back the hired blood-hounds; Frick called upon the government to send the militia to his assistance. Of course the Government complied. What was the army in America for? what was an army kept for in England, or on the continent, if not to protect private property? But the militia would never have been permitted by the strikers to enter within the boundaries of Homestead, they would have had to pass over the bodies of the workers. The authorities saw the people were in earnest, they understood that to use force would mean a war, so they decided to use a trick. The strikers were promised full protection against the Pinkerton's men and that "scabs" should not be put to work in the mines; the poor deluded and confiding strikers, did not see this trap and the militia were allowed to march into the town cheered and applauded by the people; those people afterwards shot down like dogs by the cowardly brutes in uniform. Frick who schemed all those things, and who gave the order to drive the sick wives and starving children of the strikers from their homes, he who caused the death of the eleven victims on the 6th of July, who expressed the intention to have the workers massacred, rather than let them win the strike, was not in the least molested. It was then that Berkmann appeared; though not a striker himself and not suffering from the brutality of Frick, he keenly felt the wrongs inflicted upon his brethren. Alexander Berkmann decided to strike a blow at the cause of the evil. His hatred of tyranny gave him the requisite courage, and on the July 23rd, 1892, he made an unsuccessful attack on Frick, only wounding him but creating consternation in the enemy's camp. Utterly terrified and fearing a similar attack from other quarters the authorities hurried Berkmann away to prison, where he remained months without trial, after which time he was taken before a prejudiced judge and jury, and without counsel, or an opportunity to defend himself, was on the 20th of Sept. sentenced to 22 years' imprisonment. Such a trial was illegal and without precedent in the history of American jurisprudence. It was an open secret that America was ruled by a band of thieves who monopolized the land, machinery, rail-roads mines and factories, in fact all the wealth of the country. All laws were made and enforced by the few. The rights of free speech, assembly and the press, were things of the past, so far as the interests of the workers were concerned, and the constitution which provided equality before the law, had never been observed in the U. S. Men who were in power and had the almighty dollar could commit any crime, seduction, theft, etc. and remain unpunished. Every official from the policeman to the President could be bribed; but those not possessing the means were lost—were helpless. Frick and Carnegie used their stolen money freely in order to obtain a long sentence for Berkmann, and they succeeded. Twenty two years' imprisonment! Did it not make one's blood run cold to think of it? Could they imagine what it meant to be shut out from the world, to be buried alive for such a long term within prison walls? Could they grasp what it was to suppress one's feelings, wishes, passions and thoughts, to become a mere automatic machine, to see the same cold cruel faces of the watchmen, to hear the same harsh voices of the officials week after week, year after year—to have darkness around you all that time? No! no one who had not been in prison could understand it. Such however was the lot of hundreds of men and women in Siberia—in modern bastilles all over the world. Berkmann was one of the great army of free thinkers, revolutionists and Anarchists, who had sacrificed their life and liberty for the advancement and welfare of mankind. Frick to-day was in perfect health, was enjoying his illgotten wealth. The Brutus of the 19th Century was languishing in one of prisons of America, but was dreaming of the dawn, of a day of perfect liberty when labor would no more be crushed beneath the iron heel of Capitalism. Behind the prison bars, his big warm heart still throbbed with the hopes and fears of the down-trodden, he still watched the events of our times and when permitted to write to his friends encouraged them to continue the fight. No word of complaint had escaped his lips during those three weary years, although he had been subjected to even more rigorous discipline than prisoners usually were. The pistol shot of the 23rd of July had found an echo in the hearts of the oppressed and opened the eyes of many people to the fact that the Anarchists were not a gang of ruffians, as Society was pleased to call them. Anarchism meant the destruction of the existing brutal system of exploitation and robbery of the masses, but not by unnecessarily violent means, and its aim was to establish a society of complete freedom, and respect for one another, free access to the means of life and to every individual unrestricted liberty to own the proceeds of his labor, and the right to learn, study, enjoy, love and live according to his own tastes and desires. The acts of Berkmann, Caserio, Henri, Vaillant, Pallas, and other brave heroes were but the heralds of the coming Social Revolution.

Louise Michel addressed the meeting in French to the effect that the speakers preceding her had spoken of English and American justice, but had not mentioned French justice, probably out of politeness as there was nothing good to be said of it. As she was not a patriot but an Internationalist she would complete the picture without talking politics, which is the art of deceiving others for your own benefit. When they saw the robberies committed in the Southern Railway scandals and other Panamas known and unknown, and the immense Madagascar cemetery, they found that French justice was very hard on the disinherited and most gentle towards the privileged. It was the most unequal justice in the world. And this we call a republic! Res publica, a public thing representing all, but this republic only represents capitalists acting against the workers who were condemned in advance, while the capitalists were absolved. All French statesmen were thieves, some murderers, yet justice crept before those offenders, it was bribed by those whose crimes were heaped as high as heaven. Even the Empire of bloody memory dared not have committed such injustice for fear of being destroyed. Tyrants did well in showing themselves in their true light. It was good for propaganda. The political farces are nearly played out. Anarchists despise weapons used by the enemy for human butchery. When an obstacle to the Social Revolution is to be removed it may sometimes be necessary to use violence. French potentates however, for the time being, may rest in peace. They are too useful in showing the crimes that power commits for the Revolutionist to desire their immediate removal by any means, violent or otherwise.

T. Parris thought that the object of the meeting might have been more emphatically stated as "Legal Injustice" instead of "Political Justice." Unless the latter was intended to be sarcastic, and that was not apparent from the reading of the bill. He emphasised the fact that justice literally meant, what the law yielded us. Equity was usually meant when the word justice was used, but it was frequently proved that the laws were anything but equitable. However in the present case they had met to protest against punishments being given by Judges through prejudice, that even the law, that harshest of all taskmasters, had alloted for the offences charged against the prisoner Berkmann. The cause of this was class and social prejudices. Our rulers were the property class, and the laws were made and strained for the conservancy of their privileges. Our duty and work therefore was not to use their discredited means of coercion, but to educate the people in the principles of Socialistic Anarchism. And when so educated the power of the privileged classes would pass into the hands of the people, who would use it to destroy the present legal systems and promote equality of opportunity—the only possible basis of liberty.

Miss Amy C. Morant, of the Independent Labor Party, delivered an address which was received with considerable applause.

C. Morton told the audience that there had been a great deal of talk about brotherhood, but that he failed to see how that would improve matters, as brothers quarrelled and robbed each other. What was wanted was the abolition of government and exploitation.

Lawrence said that as those in possession of the wealth of the countries of Europe were the educated classes. It would be vain to preach the use of the weapons of brotherhood to the half educated workers, but seeing that the possessing classes are at all times prepared to use force to prevent the workers bettering their condition there was but one course open, and that was to teach resistance by like force.

A comrade having spoken in Russian, the meeting was brought to a close, having lasted three hours.

Emma Goldman left London for Scotland on Saturday 14th of September, and on the following evening addressed a large audience in Bredalbane Hall, Glasgow. The welcome accorded her by Glasgow comrades was most hearty. During the week she was very busy, her engagements including meetings in Edinburgh, and Maybole, as as well as in Glasgow. Her appeals on behalf of the Berkmann Release Fund were productive of good results —23/10 being collected by the cigarette makers of Glasgow, and at a social gathering 11.3 were subscribed. The various meetings were in every other way a great success, being largely attended, and the applause given to Emma Goldman and the other speakers most sympathetic. Our Comrade desires us to say that the reception she has met with in England and Scotland fills her with hope and energy for the strenuous continuance in the future of her labors for the cause of Liberty.

We have a few "Berkmann Subsription Lists," and will gladly forward one to any comrade who will undertake to get it filled up.

OUR CONTEMPORARIES.

We acknowledge with thanks the following publications: "The Firebrand, for the hurling away of the Cobwebs of Ignorance and Superstition," (Portland, Oregon).—"The Torch," (London).—"Freedom," (London).—"The Anarchist," (Sheffield). —"La Sociale," (Paris).—"Volne Listy," (Brooklyn, N. Y.)—"La Verdad," (Rosoario de Santa Fe, Argentina, S. A.)—"L' Avenire," (Montevideo).—"El Despertar," (Brooklyn, N. Y.)—"Freie Wacht," (Philadephia).—"La Question Sociale," (Paterson, N. J.)—"Les Temps Nouveaux," (Paris) —"Die Zukunft," (Vienna).—"La Education Integrale," (Paris).—"Der Socialist," (Berlin).

The plucky little "Firebrand," which by-the-bye, has hitherto prided itself on having been the only Anarchist-Communist periodical published in the English language in the U. S. A., is doing excellent work, and notwithstanding the fact that one of its contributors was "run in" and fined for delivering an address at a street corner, is not deterred from continuing its "burning" propaganda. The article that appeared in our last number, over the signature of W. O. Owen, was taken from "The Firebrand." "The Altrurian" issued from the same office has been stopped, but its writers will throw their energies into "The Firebrand."

The list given above testifies to the fact that the United States are not without vigorous Anarchist-Communist periodicals in other than the English language. The latest addition is "Volne Listy," the number of which to hand contains an article by Elisee Reclus.

"Der Socialist," with its interesting Literary Supplement, contains articles by Kropotkine and other able writers.

Pouget's "La Sociale" adds to its always striking cartoon a popular song. "Pere Peinard's Almanac for 1896" is announced for publication this month (October).

65

871117001

The Emma Goldman Papers

The Condition of the Workers of America / Emma Goldman. — pp. 3-4 ; 36 cm. In The Firebrand [Portland]. — Vol. 1, no. 41 (Nov. 17, 1895).

Permission to reproduce or quote in any form must be obtained from The New York Public Library, Astor, Lenox and Tilden Foundations. Institutional Location: Rare Books and Manuscripts Division.

THE CONDITION OF THE WORKERS OF AMERICA

By Emma Goldmann in The Torch, London.

"Mind your own business" is a proverb very frequently used by every American. But, unfortunately, its real meaning has so far been misunderstood by the great majority. It has never cared for its own affairs, but has entrusted its business, its life and welfare, to the hands of a few land, mine and railroad owners, and to merchants of every description.

This privileged minority, true to the teaching of Christ, "Love thy neighbor as thyself," has constantly robbed and exploited the people of America.

In fact only these "noble" gentlemen have grasped the meaning of the proverb "mind your own business." During the last century they have taken precious good care to get as much as possible out of the working class. They have cut down the wages of their employees at every favorable opportunity, driven them out of their homes, destroyed their happiness, suppressed all free thought, till at last they have roduced the country to a state of slavery and degradation.

The bourgeois class of America, which has increased its wealth year by year, battening on the toil of the people by an organized system of wholesale theft, blood-shed and robbery, has had at its disposal a whole host of officials, superintendents, managers and foremen, who have considered it their duty to assist their masters in the philanthropic work of tormenting the lives of those in their power.

While the Astors, the Goulds, the Vanderbilts, the Rockefellers, and the Dewits are spending their "valuable" time at the gambling tables of Monte Carlo, or trying to recruit their health, ruined by excessive drink and other vices, in Italy, Paris, or England, their humble servants are minding their affairs, inventing new schemes, and looking about for fresh means to delude and oppress the workor.

While the privileged few are getting richer and richer, the great mass of the people is sinking year by year lower and lower into poverty and distress. While millions of dollars are squandered in theatres, diamonds, dresses, and other luxuries, the downtrodden are leading lives of misery and starvation, working twelve, fourteen, and sixteen hours out of every twenty-four, in order to eke out a miserable existence.

I cannot deny the fact that a small proportion of the American workers are economically much better off than a great many of the workers of England and the Continent. But they are native-born American citizens who have banded themselves together for the purpose of excluding from the advantages they themselves enjoy all belonging to other nationalities. They look down upon all foreigners, and consider that nobody is as smart, as witty, as capable as they themselves.

Let us try to see who these brave, "free" Americans are.

We say in Russia "Scratch a Russian and you find a Tartar," but if you scratch an American citizen, you find either an Englishman, Irishman, Dutchman, Frenchman, German, or a mixture of nationalities.*)

*) True, but they are Americans just the same, distinct in every respect from their ancestors. E. S.

The only true Americans were the native Indians, a kind and peaceful lot of people, who were cruelly robbed of their land and happiness by the ancestors of those who now rule the country. I should think myself disgraced had my ancestors been amongst those who mercilessly slaughtered the Indians wholesale, pretending to do so in the name of civilization.

Recently a few American missionaries were killed by an angry Chinese mob. According to the statement of one who escaped, the mob was provoked by the insolent, impertinent and overbearing behaviour of the missionaries; yet the American authorities were thrown into a state of terrible excitement by the "outrage", and the press joined with the clergy of every denomination in denouncing the poor chinese as savages, and urged the government to demand immediate satisfaction from China.

Were not the men who first settled down in America robbers and swindlers? Are the English, who are pretending to civilize Africa whilst killing hundreds of men and women, any better? Certainly not, and their conduct ought to be all the more strongly condemned inasmuch as they do it in the name of Christianity, whilst the Chinese and Negroes only act in self-defence when they resist the encroachments of the missionaries.

Let us now consider the condition of the American worker. As I said before, there is a small section which is in a good position, has comfortable houses, can efford to send their children to good schools, and so far has not felt the pangs of hunger.

Having inherited the business instincts of Dutch, English and Jewish ancestors, the Americans are first-rate hustness men. The average American is calculating, shrewd, and possesses wonderful skill, which enables him to cheat and swindle his neighbour of his hardly earned dollars.†) His chance of getting on in the world is, therefore, greater than that of his less samrt competitor. Bar-keepers, cashiers, clerks, newspapers distributors and collectors are workers in a good position,‡) but their numbers are so small that it would be unfair to judge the condition of the American worker by their example. The average wage of the working class in most branches is 6 dollars a week, for a working day of 12, 14, or even 16 hours. People working in the tailoring, cloak-making and cigarett trades do not earn more than 4 dollars a week, and there are thousands of people walking the streets of New York, Chicago and other great cities, who would work for even, less if they only could.

The unemployed movement of 1893 frightened the authorities to such an extent that, fearing a riot, they felt themselves compelled to do something for the people. But what these "charitable gentlemen" who feast on luxuriously prepared meats and drink sparkling wines, actually did was but a mockery in the eyes of the starving unemployed.

They arrested first the speakers and leaders of the unemployed, sentencing them to rigorous terms of imprisonment in the hope of breaking the spirit of the people by so doing. After that they opened a few kitchens where coffee and tea could be obtained for one cent, but, as they needed the cent first, these kitchens did not prove of much use to the starving. Some landowners gave a few hundred acres for the unemployed to work on, but the opportunities for work provided by it were but a few drops in the ocean of misery, especially as only a few families were supplied with the raw material and machinery necessary for tilling the soil.

Strange to say all this did not improve the condition of the unemployed. The number of people living in the slums of New York to-day is greater than it ever was before. Thousands of people live in the utmost poverty, surrounded by filth. They do not know where to turn for relief. Young women are compelled to sell their bodies on the street, and half-grown children, shivering with cold, without home or shelter of any kind, are forced to beg or steal, and some even to lie down in the streets and die.

Even the lot of those who have work is not much better.

Men, women and children have to work from morning till night, never enjoying a breath of fresh air, never seeing the sun in the clear heavens, living on a few cents per day, and having everlastingly before their eyes the terrors of starvation. All this misery exists side by side with wealth and extravagance unequalled elsewhere. These horrors abound in nearly the richest country in the world, a country on which nature has bestowed its richest gifts. The people who have created all this wealth, who have built the mansions, found the gold, woven the silk and tilled the land are living in misery and degradation, whilst those who have robbed them of everything they have created are living in luxury, feasting, gambling, and generally enjoying themselves at the workers' expense.

If the stones of the mansions in which the rich live, the diamonds, silks and satins they wear could speak they would tell a horrible tale — a tale which would shake the nerves of the blood-suckers and exploiters of labour, and make them dread the day when the people, tired of their long sufferings, the wretchedness of their lot, will rise to revenge themselves on those who are responsible for it all.

And the apathy and indifference which have so long crippled the energy of the masses is at last beginning to disappear. The strikes at Homestead, Tennessee, Buffalo, Chicago, Brooklyn and New York have prooved that the people of America are tired of leading the lives of dogs. The energy and enthusiasm displayed during these strikes, and the heroic way, in which the worker has met death in the fights with the police and militia have shown what the people were capable of. They have been an earnest of what the workers will do when called upon to fight the great fight for the recovery of their rights and the welfare of all dear to them.

Of course, the authorities have used every means to sap the courage of the strikers. They have instructed the police and the militia to shoot down the strikers and show no mercy to anyone who dares to rebel against their power. We are told that the police and the military exist only for the protection of the people, but it is a fact that always and everywhere they have been used to protect property and to defend and uphold the powers that be.

†) Not any more than other nationalities.

‡) Those positions are far from being well paid in the west. E. S.

871117001

The Emma Goldman Papers

The Condition of the Workers of America / Emma Goldman. — pp. 3-4 ; 36 cm. In The Firebrand [Portland]. — Vol. 1, no. 41 (Nov. 17, 1895).

Permission to reproduce or quote in any form must be obtained from The New York Public Library, Astor, Lenox and Tilden Foundations. Institutional Location: Rare Books and Manuscripts Division.

But bullets and imprisonment cannot destroy an ideal. Five men were murderod in Chicago on the 11th of November, 1887. Lawfully and rightly, say the upholders of the present social order. But their deaths have not been able to silence their voices, which sound louder and louder from beyond the grave, and their ideas live on. Alexanper Berkmann's brave act showed to all who wish to see the real cause of the people's misery. Anorchists are no longer looked upon as a set of fools or ruffians, and the principles of those who havo died on the gallows or are languishing in prison are to-day discussed in the press, in tho pulpit, and in the mansions of the rich. Hard work is before us, as it will not be easy to convince tho American workman, who prides himself on his fresdom, that he is a slave. But I see the day before me when the workers of America will unite with those of other countries, and tho people rising in righteous wrath will wreck the system of brutality and tyranny which today crushes the life-blood out of them. It is a systeu which gives to the few the power to enslave the many, which upholds corruption, prostitution and degradation, and which must be destroyed before freedom be possible.

On the ruins of the rotten system Anarchy will be established, snd Anarchy will render possible the wellfare and happiness of all.

CLIPPINGS AND COMMENTS.

Chicago, Nov. 9.—The bones of the Anarchists hanged for the Haymarket massacre are not to rest in peace. The bodies of Spies, Parsons, Lingg, Fischer, and Engel, now lying in Waldheim cemetry, will be exhumed and cremated. The ashes will be reinterred somewhere —it is not known where—but in a spot to whicb those who hold the memory of these men dear may visit when they wisb. This was the suggestion made at a meeting of socialists and trades unions of Chicago tonight. There was not a dissenting voice. The idea of such action was the outcome of the officers of the Waldheim cemetry refusing to permit the annual demonstration this year at the graves of the dead Anarchists on the anniversary of their execution.

All attempts to hold a parade in bonor of the memory of the executed Anarchists were abandoned this afternoon, when the police permit to hold the parade was given up.

Herr Most has been informed that no criticism on the national or municipal government is wanted from bim, and that if he makes any speeches tomorrow it will be bis interest to make them polite.—The Oregonian.

I have no faith in the dispatches of the associated press, and do not believe that the bodies of our murdered comrades will be cremated and worshiped in such a manner. But I have faith in the despotism and tyranny that is growing so very fast in this country of the "free and the brave."

It is evidently very annoying to the legal robbers, who have every cause to fear the awakening of the masses, that our murdered heroes are notforgotten. On the other hand, the vampires, or the government, which is identical, must be aware of their weakness and rascality if they fear the criticism of a single man; even a peaceable parade of a few men is dangerous to this "sacred" institution, called the government, or as it is called to-day, the conspiracy of the rich.

In the meantime the parasites of Chicago are making great efforts to free (sic!) Cuba from the tyranny of Spain; that is, they are jealous of Spain and are anxious to exploit the toilers of Cuba themselves, as there is not sufficient in this country to satiate their greedlness. A. I.

Correspondence.

A DEBATE ON METHODS.

When our series of lectures and discussions was commenced, a week ago last Friday, I sent a number of notes inviting many prominent populist orators to be present and oppose me, if they saw fit. Mr. G. Teats, the most eloquent, and apparently the fairest and most fearless of them all, was there and remarked that the hour was too late to go into a reply to my arguments, but would meet me in joint-debate.

Last Monday evening, Nov. 11th, the debate came off according to arrangements. Mr. Teats admitted that he was striving for the same end — perfect freedom — but contended for political action and the enactment of various reforms as the best and most practicable means to that end. On the other hand I tried to show that freedom could not be reached by increasing the powers of government; that the only way to become free is to abolish government.

Mr. Teats made as strong a plea for political action as any one could make, but if the applaud can be trusted as indicating the approval of the audience, the anarchist theories were far the more popular, dispite the fact that many of those present were Mr. Teats political and personal friends and admirers.

Anarchism is getting a hold in Tacoma that is pleasing and encouraging in the extreme.

H. A.

THEY ARE SPREADING OUR IDEAS.

The International Workmen's Educational Club of Waterbury meets every Sunday at 2:30 P. M. in our Hall, Bank, corner Jackson str. At our last meeting we have decided to arrange a mass meeting for the 10th of November. Comrade Dr. Smirnow will address the meeting. Subject: The 11th of November 1887. Admission free.*)

We hope that during this winter we shall be able to arrange mass meetings frequently and to distribute our literature as much as possible. At present we distribute 25 copies FIREBRAND, 25 copies FREIHEIT, 35 copies FREIE GESELLSCHAFT, 15 copies REBEL and 15 copies ARBEITERFREUND. We hope that the comrades of other towns will follow our example in spreading our ideas among our fellow workingmen.

Inclosed you will find $2.00 for THE FIREBRAND and literature. J. ARONBERG.

Waterbury, Conn., Nov. 1st '95.

*) This letter came in too late for our last weeks issue. A. I.

RECEIPTS.

Baltimore, Md.—The Group, $1.00. Los Angeles, Cal.—G. J., 50c.; W. F., 50c. Buffalo, N. Y.—The Croup, $5.00.; H. W., 50c. Portland, Or.—W. M., 25c. Tacoma, Wash.—A. M., 25.; Kl., 50c.; J. S. J. 50c. Chicago Ill.—O. W., 50c.; G. W., 50c.; K. C., 50c. Northampton, Mass.—P. S., 25c. Alleghony, Pa.—The Group, $2.00. Waterbury, Conn.—The Group, $1.00. Brooklyn, N. Y.—C. L., $1.00.

Fund for free distribution of THE FIREBRAND in Chicago:

A. S., 25c.; W. I., 25c.; Debating Club, $2.00; Sales; 75c.; R. N., $1.00.; A. E., $1.00.; Socialistic Federation, $1.00.; J. R., 25c.

WE are requested to announce the following:

Rev. A. W. Martin of the First Free Church of Tacoma, will lecture in the Unitarian Church, corner 7th and Yamhill streets, Portland, on "The Industrial Revolution," the last Sunday in November.

A series of lectures on the subject of Evolution, showing man's relation to nature, will be given by Rev. A. W. Martin, under the auspices of the Tacoma Debating Club, provided one bundred tickets can be sold to cover Hall rent and the expense for the stereotyped pictures used in illustrating the lectures.

Price of tickets, admitting to the full series of the lectures, will be fifty cents. Those interested in making these lectures a popular success, should call at Klemencic and Reed, corner 11. and A streets, for further information.

JEAN GRAVE'S BOOK.

THE DYING SOCIETY AND ANARCHY, translated by Olive Rosselti, is of the greatest value to anarchist propaganda.

Our friends ot the Torch publish it at the low price of 10 cents. All those who desire to get our friend's book should write to the Torch, 127 Ossulton St. N. W., London, England; or send orders to THE FIREBRAND.

ANARCHIST JOURNALS.

THE REBEL, monthly, 50c; 170 Hanover St., Boston, Mass.

THE TORCH, 127, Ossulton St., London, N. W.

FREEDOM, 7, Lamb's Conduit Street, London W.C.

LIBERTY, 7, Beadon Road, Hammersmith London, W.

THE ANARCHIST, D. J. Nicoll, Broomhall Sheffield.

All of England at 50 cts. a year.

LES TEMPS NOUVEAUX, J. Grave, 140 Rue Mouffetard, Paris.

LA SOCIALE.—E. Pouget, 23, Rue des trois Freres, Paris. France.

LA VERDAD, T. Carlo, Correo num. 228, Rosoario de Santa Fe, Argentina, S. A.; subscription voluntary.

EL PERSEGUIDO, B. Salbans, Casilla de cerros unm. 1120. Buenos Aires, Argenteria. S. A. Subscription voluntary, L'AMI DES OUVRIERS, Hastings, Pa.

EL ESCLAVO, TAMPA, FLORIDA, weekly, subscribtion voluntary.

EL DESPERTAR, 51 POPLAR PL.—BROOKLYN, N. Y. $1.50 a year.

LA QUESTIONE SOCIALE, 325 Straight St. Patterson, N. J.; $1.00 per year.

FREIHEIT, John Mueller, P. O. Box No. 346 New York City.

DER ANARCHIST, Nic. Mauer, 174. E. Third St., New York City.

FREIE WACHT, 522 Berk St., Philadelphia, Pa.

DER ARME TEUFEL, No. 6 Champlain Street, Detroit, Mich.

DIE FACKEL OF VORBOTE, both No. 28-30 S. Market St., Chicago, Ill.

DIE ZUKUNFT. Semi-monthly, 75cts. per year. Send subscriptions to Wenzel Kubesh, IV, Shoenburgstrashe 5, 3. Slock, Vienna, Austria. Exchanges and publications to Alfred Sanftleben, Zurich, Oberstruss, Stupferstr, 1. Switzerland.

DEINICKE LISTY, 266 A. B, New York City.

DUCH VOLNOSTI, 19 Zion Place, Chicago, Ill.

VOLNE LISTY, Frania Lefner, 43 Johnson Ave., Brooklyn E. D., N. Y.

ANARCHIST, H. E. Kaspers, Stationstraat, Sappemeer, Holland.

DER SOCIALIST, Wilhelm Spohr, Berlin, P., Frankfurter Allee 105, 1 Treppe. Germany.

DIE FREIE GESELLSHAFT, a monthly Journal for the most advanced ideas in social science (hebrow language). Yearly $1.00. Address: I. Rudash, 162 Norfolk street, New York.

870701701

The Emma Goldman Papers

Between Ourselves / Emma Goldman. – p. 53 ; 28 cm. In Liberty [London]. – Vol. 3, no. 5 (May 1896).

Obtained from the University of California, Berkeley. Institutional Location: Doe Library.

"LIBERTY" is a journal of Anarchist-Communism; but articles on all phases of the Revolutionary movement will be freely admitted, provided they are worded in suitable language. No contributions should exceed one column in length. The writer over whose signature the article appears is alone responsible for the opinions expressed, and the Editor in all matters reserves to himself the fullest right to reject any article.

All Communications—including orders for Papers or Pamphlets—should be addressed to The Editor, Carmagnole House, Beadon Road, Hammersmith, W

Subscription, 1s. 6d. per year, post free Per quire of 27 copies, 1s. 7d. post free.

The trade supplied by W. Reeves, 185, Fleet Street, E.C.

LIBERTY,

LONDON, MAY, 1896.

BETWEEN OURSELVES.

Emma Goldmann writes us from New York to the effect that she has returned from her visit to the continent, where the comrades gave her a most sympathetic reception. She wishes to be remembered to all English friends of the cause, and says she will send for publication in our next number some interesting details of the Socialist and Anarchist movement in the various continental towns and cities with which she has made acquaintance.

We learn from Pouget's La Sociale that the sentence of death passed on Lorion, and the execution of which he has been expecting any day for nearly twelve months (as mentioned in another part of this issue) has been commuted for one of five years' penal servitude. This means simply prolonged torture, something more cruel than any form of instantaneous execution. Lorion's health has already been destroyed, and his existence is now unmitigated pain and wretchedness. Next month we shall publish a letter he has written, in which he describes some of tortures to which his diabolical gaolers subject him.

We cannot help but feel encouraged by the success of the meetings held by Tom Mann at the Holborn Town Hall. There is no doubt that the effect will be a considerable addition to the ranks of Socialism, and, indirectly but as a necessary consequence, to Anarchism; for it is certainly true that nine Anarchists out of ten have arrived at their convictions along the path of Socialism: the 871117003

The Emma Goldman Papers

Eastern and European Propaganda / [Emma Goldman].– p. 2 ; 40 cm. In The Firebrand [Portland]. –Vol. 2, no. 16 (May 24, 1896).

Permission to reproduce or quote in any form must be obtained from The New York Public Library, Astor, Lenox and Tilden Foundations. Institutional Location: Rare Books and Manuscripts Division.

HOW ANARCHY WILL COME.

I do not know, but I have some idea as to how it will not come. It will not be ushered in or won by means of a violent revolution, at least, for several decades to come, although it may come sooner than any of us dare to hope, some other way. The enemy (the State) is too strongly fortified The money power is the State and the State is the money power, and the church completes the trinity. Church, Calf and State,—place the godheads in any order—it is all one. Fortress-like arsenals are already builded and being builded; cannon and arms and soldiers are prepared to vomit shot and shell and move at a cry to arms from law and order and tens of thousands of the toilers ready to shoot and bayonet charge at the bidding of uplifted hands of priests and clergymen and politicians. Superstition is in the field at the head of a well-armed host ready to fight for the trinity and defend every monopoly. The masses, in a large sense, only ask a little better wages and eight hours of toil or moil in shop, factory or mill.

Anarchy will not come through any political party—by the ballot-box, which would certainly be overridden unless declaring the will of the people by a stupendous, overwhelming majority, and how much likeliness there is of such a declaration is hardly open to conjecture.

Will a great strike usher in Anarchy,—such a strike as William Morris dreamed of in his prose-poem "News from Nowhere"? Possibly, within a decade; probably, a quarter of a century hence such a strike might win. I doubt if it is known how large the "don't care" or "let alone" party is today or how fast that party grows in numbers: that party (if party be a correct name—which it isn't) would not, I think, be arrayed against Humanity.

Any attempts to "set up anarchistic society here or there" must have us, indeed, Mr. Byington admits, a fairly numerous working minority, even to be object-lessons as suppressed experiments. I am not a pessimist, but think it only sane to try and see things as they are, and not through a rose-tinted medium. How long it will take to disprove to a sufficient number the everlasting misrepresentations of press and pulpit regarding Anarchy I would not venture to guess; a continual flow of falsehood can only be counteracted by a constant iteration and re-iteration of the truth. A fairly large minority won over, means the "beginning of the end" insofar as the downfall of monopoly is concerned. Today, propaganda would seem to be our most effective means of warfare.

I think it is nearly certain that any sudden change from present social disorder to communism is both undesirable and, anyhow, impossible.

A social revolution today, even if won (most improbable of impossibilities!) by the proletariat would only result in our enslavement to the crass ignorance, superstition and bigotry which dominate the world today: result in a change of masters, indeed, and for the worse: result in a slavery to priestcraft and demagogueism compared with which our present social disorder gives fair opportunities to work for "better things." On the other hand should the State win (nearly a certainty) progress would, it seems to me, be arrested,—for how long a period it is idle to attempt to guess. The Commune of Paris of 1871, resulted in the butchery of thousands of brave and honest men,—resulted so in my opinion, by reason of the predominance of crass ignorance and old-time, ingrained superstitions of the omnipresent, unnumbered fools. Why would a social revolution called into action today result in freedom? Would not the omnipresent fools be as numerous as ever? Would not such a war, here, today, "blossom thick with such mistakes?" How large a proportion of the people even know what self-hood, freedom, self-sovereignity mean?

Expediency must not be lost sight of. Liberty-lovers are only a small minority. The State Socialists deny self-hood and equal freedom—at least, State Socialism does so,—and the Populists are in the same boat: no more sense of freedom, quite as much enthralled by governmental superstition—and even more saturated with rant and feebleness. The unknown number of the "silent", of the freethinkers, of the all round radicals, would alone even stand neutral in a war today for equal freedom. The priest, demagogue and politician, inspired and directed by the money power, have the ears of the masses today, even as they had them yesterday. This is not to say that Anarchy makes no progress, but the road to "the land of equal freedom" is both rough and long. All Anarchists claim equal freedom and equality of opportunities and wish to get rid of the state. Individualists and Communists are on the same ground here. I believe myself [illegible] conditions will lead more and more to voluntaryism and Communism in all the necessities; how, equality of opportunities will surely abolish poverty, tend to equalize wealth and make happiness on earth a possibility to one and all.

State Socialism would end in failure, as they would only be able to experiment in more or less large communities. Their plan necessitates an autocratic rule, and the intelligent members would soon secede and wander away. Then the orthodox members would quarrel amongst themselves, by reason of the fact that all governmentalists believe that, personally, they need no government, but that everybody else needs a very large measure of it to keep them in the straight and narrow way that leads to "righteousness". The investigating skeptic will find this to be a truism.

I have no hope of "better things" through legislation, as all helpful legislation would be the repeal of unjust laws, of special and class laws. Monopoly cannot be too loudly and constantly execrated.

I would be glad to know just what Mr. Byington means by "expropriation", which he concedes "is possible". I do not think a few coal barons could prevent the miners receiving the full value of their labor, nor would their mining stocks be other than so much waste paper, as the people would never pay more than the cost of production and transportation for their coal in whatever way they paid for it. So would it be with all dividend-paying stocks—all monopolies, of course. Rent and interest could not be collected, and cost of production and delivery would be the price paid under a condition free from all monopoly, so that the vast wealth of individuals would be distributed so widely that it would, it seems to me, be very like expropriation, whatever name be given it. Monopoly of land could not be possible. Whatever we name the abolishment of privilege, to the monopolist it would be marvelously like "expropriation".

If Anarchy is liberty, and I think it is, the most real question is, How can equal freedom, that is to say, equality of opportunity, be brought about?

CLINTON LOVERIDGE.

Literature.

IRENE; OR, THE ROAD TO FREEDOM, by Sadie Bailey Fowler; H. N. Fowler & Co., Philadelphia; cloth, 50 cents.

This radical novel is interesting as a study in mental development, profound as a discussion of the social question, and but for its defects as a work of art, it could be commended without an adverse criticism.

In Nanie and Irene, two members of "the girl-trinity", we have some good charater-dellneation, but the other characters are indistinct, and one really wonders what it is in Florella that makes her one of the trinity. As the title suggests, it is woman's freedom in sex relations, primarily, that interests these people, and in the development of the story toward a solution of the problem it is seen that the relations of industrial and sexual life are so intimate that the solution of the one is the solution of the other. But it seems incongruous, if not actually pardoxical, that, in as radical a story as this, Irene, the most conservative spirit among the leading characters, should be presented in the role of heroine. The author could not have intended by this to convey the lesson that the radical element must be counterbalanced by the conservative in order to avert social disaster, because Irene is logically forced to surrender every position that is distinctively her own. Though she is gentle, firm and brave in her convictions, loving and lovable withal, bold, outspoken, radical Nan, who thought necessary sometimes to shock conventional society, and who shares largely in heroic honors, will be the favorite with progressive readers.

The plot is a rapid succession of "mysteries"—there are mysteries of birth and death, mysterious presences and mysterious absences—in fact so prevalent is this element as to be somewhat bewildering.

But if we cannot class the author in the front rank of artists, we can pronounce her work a success so far as the treatment of her chosen subject is concerned. She gives evidence of much study and originality of thought. Hers is the best and most thorough fictional discussion of the social question that I have read. One follows the [illegible] interest, and the philosophy is as engaging as the fiction.

J. H. M.

[illegible] PROPAGANDA.

[illegible]arn that you did not know of comrade John Turner's propaganda in this country. I think it very important for the western friends to know how the propaganda is going on in the east.

I cannot say we have an Anarchistic movement of any importance in the east, but I am confident we could work one up if there were people both able and willing to participate in the work. Just what could be done we have seen by Comrades Mowbray and Turner's visits to the States. Mowbray has traveled as far west as St. Louis, holding good meetings all over, not to speak of the success met with in Boston. Thanks to his work, the Anarchists held a May day demonstration on the 3d and the Central Labor union arranged meetings for Comrade Turner — things never before heard of here. We see that if a man is determined and has the ability to make his way he succeeds. It is foolish to say the American workingmen have no wish to study Anarchistic ideas. Give them a chance and they will do it. Of course our principles must be propagated in a plain and popular language, such as THE FIREBRAND uses.

Comrade John Turner has left his work in London and come over to the "freest land in the world", though he was aware of the fact that the Americans are a hard lot to preach Anarchism too. He is a very energetic and earnest fellow, a fine speaker and an excellent debator, and, above all, he is not conceited like many others who know less. We could successfully spread our ideas if he knew the localities and did not have to depend on those comrades who are willing enough to help, but who have not the least experience and understanding as to how to arrange meetings.

Comrade Turner has addressed three meetings in New York City, which have been well attended. Not so those in Newark and Paterson; but certainly Comrade Turner is not to blame for that. On the 30th of April we gave a farewell entertainment to our comrade. The hall was packed. A number of detectives and policemen were present, looking for a job. Comrades Edelman, Mowbray, Turner, Whithington and myself spoke, but we did not seem to gratify the wishes of the officials, as they went away without running any of us in. I am sorry to state that the financial result of the affair was not satisfactory.

—We have formed a group,—meeting for the present at 50 E. First street. Our work for the summer will be to raise a fund large enough to carry on propaganda next fall and winter. So far, we have issued an Anarchist May day manifesto, of which several thousand were distributed on the 2d at the demonstration of workingmen at Union Square.

I can also inform THE FIREBRAND readers that our brave Comrade Alex. Berkmann's case is being pushed. No definite step can be taken until 1897. All we want to do now is to get money, and the more the better, as we will need about $1000. I beg the comrades of THE FIREBRAND to appeal for aid; if all will help we are sure to liberate him some day.

I have made a trip through different countries on the continent, where I found our ideas marching on wonderfully. In England and Scotland meetings are held several times a week in halls and parks, thousands of workingmen and women listening eagerly to the speeches, where leaflets, manifestos and papers are distributed in large quantities. In France the admirable acts of Ravachol, Henry, Vaillant, Cæsario and others have done more for the spreading of our principles than ten years of writing and speaking. Les Temps Nouveaux (formerly La Revolte), has increased its circulation from 8000 to 18,000, and La Sociale (formerly Pere Pienard) from 8000 to 20,000. Anarchist publications are springing up in all parts of France. In Austria the comrades have to confine themselves to a clandestine propaganda, as the authorities make daily arrests, imprisoning or expelling everyone who takes any noted part in the movement. The plutocrats are confident now that they have annihilated Anarchistic propaganda, but they will soon find out that imprisonment and suffering cannot stop the tide from flowing on.

Not a grave of the murdered for Freedom but grows seed for Freedom in its turn to bear seed Which the winds carry afar and resow and the rains and the snows nourish.
Not a disembodied spirit sees the weapons of the tyrants let loose
But it stalks invisible over the world, whispering, counseling, cautioning.

—Walt Whitman.

BEST COPY AVAILABLE

69

880921019

The Emma Goldman Papers

[Summary of Lecture] Propaganda in the East / [Emma Goldman]. – p. 2 ; 41 cm. In The Firebrand [Portland]. – Vol. 2, no. 18 (June 7, 1896).

Permission to reproduce or quote in any form must be obtained from the State Historical Society of Wisconsin, Madison, WI.

Here again is a sample of his logic; "Communism is possible under Individualism; but under Communism Individualism would be out of place." That is to say, Communism is compatible with Individualism, but Individualism is not compatible with Communism. To put it mathematically, twice three are six, but thrice two are — not six! The only basis for such a course of "reasoning" is his assumption that Communism is authoritative; that is, that choice would be forbidden the individual. Further evidence of the State Socialist.

Yes, I fancy it would be rather "awkward to say Society is Communistic, notwithstanding many are Commercialists", etc., because it would not be true. Society cannot be Communistic while a part of it is un-Communistic. Holders of private property are not Anarchists—they are Invaders. Private property is a denial of freedom of opportunity; it is monopoly. Every individual is equally entitled to any and all natural advantages, and under liberty only on condition that he has access to the products of labor applied to the more favorable advantages will any individual accept the less favorable. If the principle of liberty has a basis in nature it lies in this proposition. But this assertion of liberty includes Communism as the only condition of realization.

The only surprise that Dr. Rossi's conclusions after his Cecelia experience occasions me is to find him such a superficial thinker. Conditions denied his colony freedom of association, which is an essential matter. The colonists were compelled to associate regardless of compatibility, and the natural result was, and will always be under such conditions, discord and disruption.

Mr. Fulton further shows his misconception of Communism when he assumes that it proposes the equal distribution of wealth—State Socialistic regulation again. Perhaps he never read the Communistic formula: "From each according to ability; to each according to need." And it depends upon his idea of an "equitable distribution" whether it would be better realized under Individualism than under Communism. If by equity he mean liberty, I think I have shown that the Individualist private property proposition is incompatible with equity.

J. H. M.

PROPAGANDA IN THE EAST.

NEW YORK AND VICINITY.

PROPAGANDA in New York started with an address on Anarchist-Communism before the Manhattan Single Tax Club, which gave rise to a very animated discussion. The room was filled and the members, while holding to their one idea, had to admit that progress would not stop at its realization. The idea of Anarchy had been discussed among themselves and some had come to the conclusion that it was sound. Altogether they were a very intelligent, earnest lot of men, and there is a good field among them for the spread of our ideas. It is hoped the American Group of New York will not neglect them, as they gladly welcome any one among them.

This was Saturday, April 18th. On the Sunday the Socialist Labor Party was visited, and Comrade Turner took part in the discussion after a lecture on "The Class Struggle", showing clearly that this struggle is only confused by polititical issues and political action. A very lively time followed.

On Tuesday, April 21st, the first lecture under the auspices of the American Group took place in Clarendon Hall. It was a good audience, mostly Americans, and the subject was "Anarchy an Essential of Socialism", a good discussion and Social Democratic opposition following.

On Wednesday, April 22d, a flying visit was paid to Philadelphia to give a lecture on "The Anarchist Ideal" before the Ladies' Liberal League. This was a success in every way—a good audience, a good discussion, with a little weak opposition from members of the Socialist Labor Party. Though desirous of returning to New York, Comrade Turner was pressed to remain over the 23d to attend a meeting of the Single Taxers, which he did, taking part in the discussion and showing the insufficiency of their teaching.

Returning to New York on the 24th, the second lecture in Clarendon Hall was "The Policy of the Future", reviewing the different methods of the past, pointing out their various strengths and weaknesses, and advising an active, energetic propaganda both inside and outside of organized labor, so as to create a feeling of solidarity among all the workers, even the tramps and so-called criminals, whom the respectable workers in steady employment have been taught to despise, confident that if they once caught the idea of Anarchism the methods of overthrowing existing institutions would suggest themselves. The abstention from the polls on election days and the holding of public meetings declaring the solidarity of labor, and the class struggle was put forward as an idea to start with.

April 26th, in the same hall, the subject was "The Power of Capitalism", and industry, politics, government, literature, the press, religion and education were passed under review to show how in every department of modern life the poison of this power is felt.

On the 27th a visit was paid to Newark and a lecture on "Church and State, Twin Enemies of the People" was given before a very interested audience, Comrade Lathrop Withington in the chair.

On Wednesday, April 29th, Comrade Mowbray made a trip from Boston and accompanied Comrade Turner to Paterson, where a mass meeting was held at which both spoke, returning to New York next day.

Thursday, April 30th, in Clarendon Hall a farewell meeting and entertainment was given previous to Comrade Turner's leaving next day for Boston. The hall was crowded and, it is pleasing to say, was the largest of the meetings held. Songs, recitations and singing by the German choir, together with speeches by Comrades Edelmann, Lathrop Withington, Mowbray, Turner and Emma Goldman kept every one interested and pleased until eleven o'clock, when the floor was cleared for dancing, which was kept up till the early hours. Thus ended a little over a month's propaganda in and around New York by Comrade Turner, and it shows what could be accomplished if only a few propagandists were in the field. Everything is ready for it, and though the first ones might find it hard work and sometimes discouraging, it would not be long before a strong and vigorous movement would be the outcome.

BOSTON AND PROVIDENCE.

Saturday morning, May 2d, Comrade Turner arrived in Boston and was met at the depot by Comrade Kelly, who accompanied him to the house of J. O'Sullivan, president of the Boston Central Labor Union, who entertained him to breakfast. On the Sunday he was the guest of the Central Labor Union and spoke at the regular session in the afternoon, time being granted for the purpose. Speaking as an Anarchist, he pointed out the strength and weakness of Trade Unionism and showed that unless it was built up with intelligent members who had an ideal of some kind superior to capitalism it would continually crumble up in the conflicts forced upon them in time of trade depression. The rapid growth of Socialist and Anarchist ideas in the ranks of the English Trade Unions was pointed out and a belief expressed that with the same conditions here similar results would follow. He was wonderfully well received.

On Monday, May 4th, a public meeting of welcome was called by the Central Labor Union, at which Comrade Turner delivered a rousing address calling upon Trade Unionists to study deeper the political and economic situation and rise superior to past efforts. A collection was taken for Anarchist propaganda.

Sunday evening, May 3d, a May Day meeting was held in Puritan Hall, at which comrades Miller, Kelly, Mowbray and Turner spoke in English and Most in German. There were also speeches in French and Italian. The meeting was a big success, the hall being packed. All the speakers dwelt on the solidarity of labor and spoke of the aspirations of the workers all over the civilized world. It was one of the best and biggest Anarchist meetings ever held in Boston.

On Tuesday Comrade Turner spoke at a meeting of striking hoisting-engineers, and while encouraging them in their battle, urged them never to be satisfied until they had abolished masters [illegible] in conjunction with their fellow workers established a free co-operative condition of industry.

On Wednesday, May 6th, he also spoke at a meeting of electrical workers who are organizing a union; and there, too, while advising them to combine for protection in their work, and to assist one another in this craft, he urged them to never rest satisfied with mere organization, but to see to it that they should [illegible] it is that work is always so precarious and men always out of work, ready to snatch at another's job; how it is that the more there is produced in society the more tramps there are, and when they had learned that to see to it that their organization should become a force to destroy the cause of their misery and at the same time to rebuild a newer and better condition.

Friday, May 10th, a visit was paid to Providence and a lecture on "Anarchism or Social Democracy?" was given, which evoked some opposition from local Socialists, one of whom, however, entertained Comrade Turner that night.

On Sunday afternoon, May 12th, a meeting was arranged by Providence comrades in Onleyville, but when the hall was reached the sweltering heat prevented many from coming inside, so it was decided to try an open air meeting in the shade. This was a big success and Comrade Turner was listened to with great attention, only interspersed occasionally with applause. A solitary policeman came along when the meeting was half through and seemed unable to grasp what was up. After listening some time with evident interest he moved off perhaps to report before taking any action.

At the close of the meeting Comrade Turner took the train back to Boston and lectured in the evening on "Anarchism and Socialism", many of the Central Labor Union officials being present and carefully following the points of the lecture. Questions and discussion followed.

On Thursday, the 14th, a joint debate took place in Clarendon Hall, where the Central Labor Union meets, between Turner and Mr. Spillane, a Socialist, on "Trade Unions or the Ballot?" before a large audience. Despite the fact that Spillane was the strongest opponent the Socialists could put up, they had to admit that he failed to show the use of the ballot to the workpeople.

Altogether the visit to Boston has been a big success, both financially and for the propaganda. If comrades elsewhere would arrange things the same way a most encouraging tour could be carried through. It rests now with them to say how far he shall go on. There has been some delay in New York, necessitated by the fact that things had to be organized a bit before our comrade could leave there. Here he went immediately into the heart of the organized labor movement on account of the influence local comrades have with their unions and the Central Labor Union, and himself being president of his union in England did the rest. Since he has been in Boston he has received a letter from President Gompers, of the American Federation of Labor, who had heard of his arrival here, and who wishes him success, and says he hopes to meet him as he goes west and will send him a letter of introduction to Trade Unionists wherever he may go. If, therefore, comrades who are in the organized labor movement set to work in their unions they can arrange through them for some big meetings.

On Friday, May 15th, an entertainment and social was arranged by the Rebel Group to bid goodbye to Comrade Turner. Mr. J. O'Sullivan and many prominent labor men of Boston were present. They have treated our comrade right heartily, vieing with one another in their efforts to make his visit both enjoyable and profitable. A very pleasant evening was spent in song, talk, recitation, and hearty good wishes toward our comrade's further efforts.

He leaves here for New York again to solidify his previous work, then a week in Philadelphia, where six meetings have been arranged as a result of his previous visit to the Ladies' Liberal League. After that, to Buffalo, and then, Westward, ho! It is hoped the comrades everywhere will do their utmost to make the most of his visit. Correspondence should be sent to H. M. Kelly, 170 Hanover St. Boston, who will arrange dates.

A PERSONAL STATEMENT.

Before I became an Anarchist I was a State Socialist. While Communism had its attractions for me, as it naturally would one who had previously held collectivist views, there were nevertheless some things in Communism of which I had grave doubts of being reconcilable with Anarchy or liberty. As I confounded Individualism with the so-called individualism of today, as taught in the University of Chicago, I could not consider it seriously for an instant; hence I took greedily to the many features of Communism which I did like and swallowed the various poluts I did not like in a lump. The statement of Comrade Owen in The Firebrand some time ago that he found himself gradually slipping away from Communism, kept me from declaring myself in very positive tones as being a Communist. Comrade Holmes in writing to me made it pretty plain that Communism, rightly understood, was not incompatible with Individualism, nor altruism with selfishness. In his book, "Bases of Anarchy," he even shows that groups, as groups, might be in relation to one another as individual to individual. J. H. M., in a recent number of The Firebrand, holds that communes would be composed of agreeable natures to the exclusion of the seriously objectionable. Once the independence [illegible]

871117005

The Emma Goldman Papers

The Berkman Fund Again / Emma Goldman.– p. 2 ; 41 cm. In The Firebrand [Portland]. –Vol. 2, no. 29 (Aug. 23, 1896).

Permission to reproduce or quote in any form must be obtained from The New York Public Library, Astor, Lenox and Tilden Foundations. Institutional Location: Rare Books and Manuscripts Division.

and a denial or invasion of the rights of all other persons.

Now government is primarily for the maintenance of property, and property cannot exist without government, because the parceling of natural opportunity necessitates courts of decision and officers of administration. The values which belong to and result from the restriction made possible by property, are the only object in the way of the free exchange and consumption proposed by Communism. With the abolition of the power to restrict production, which inheres in monopolization of opportunity, in accordance with economic principles the abundance of products in relation to man's wants will destroy value, or price. Under private ownership we see the coal barons close the mines in order to maintain prices, while speculators in grain and cotton lock those products up for the same purpose, and the result is suffering for want of warmth, clothing and food. Thus does property strike at the right of existence. But if these people were free to produce—that is if opportunity was not monopolized—the values placed on those accumulated products would vanish into thin air. Restriction of opportunity is a necessary adjunct of "markets" and commerce, notwithstanding the fact that its whole tendency is self-destructive.

Communism, then, means equality of opportunity and what follows: free production, free consumption and the grouping of individuals according to congeniality and mutual choice. This cannot be construed to mean that individuals must group, any more than the "right to worship God according to the dictates of one's conscience" means that one must worship. Eventually such a construction would lead to the violation of the principle laid down.

My friend will now understand why the so called communistic colonies have failed. They placed the entire charge of affairs in the hands of their little government, not infrequently an autocracy, and the whole life of the individual was subject to dictation and direction; and when enforced incongenial association is added, it is no wonder the attractions of outside society have almost invariably proved irresistable.

As to the sex question, I see no insurmountable difficulties. present arrangements in that particular are a part of the property system, and there is no doubt in my mind that it will disappear with the abolition of that system. It is accepted as the proper thing because it is the traditional thing, and when people begin to question customs that particular one will hardly escape. I have never met a thorough Communist who still clung to church or marriage superstitions. Communism with its economic freedom will establish interdependence of the sexes and provide for free association in this as in all other respects.

Yes, Anarchist-Communism has for its aim "the greatest good of all," and it cannot be a contradiction in terms, for the reason that it accords to each the right to decide for himself what is good. By what comparison may we decide the perfection or imperfection of human nature? It is lauded as the highest thing in nature: shall we compare it with something outside of nature? It is a product of its environment, and perfectly selfish; moreover, there is no need of unselfishness anywhere. All that is necessary is to understand that the primary condition to self-development is liberty and that our own liberty is only insured in the liberty of all.

J. H. M.

The Berkman Fund Again.

You have published an attack upon me written by a certain P. Franco, in The Firebrand of July 26th, and I hope you will not refuse to publish my reply.

First of all I must emphasize that I do not write these lines in order to satisfy the impudent inquisitiveness of P. Franco, or others like him, who would not hesitate a moment to besmirch one's honor at any cost whether they are false or true.

I did not expect the comrades of The Firebrand to defend me, as I can very well defend myself; nor did I ask them to make me acquainted with the contents of private letters, as that comrade Isaak received from one of The Firebrand readers and which, according to Isaak was directed against me, stating that I had spent the money collected for Berkmann for my personal use, during my tour on the Continent. The man who has thus expressed himself about me to comrade Isaak has also written one to me, in which he says among other things; "Of course, I do not mean to say that you had used the money collected for Berkmann for yourself." This letter I have sent to comrade Isaak, which ought to convince him that the man has either written a falsehood to him, or has not moral courage enough to uphold the same accusations in his letter to me. P. Franco in his letter to The Firebrand has lied, as well, as the man in his letter to Comrade Isaak. Franco says he did not ask me about the Berkmann fund, because he can speak neither English nor German. Now, those who know him are acquainted with the fact, that he can speak English enough to be understood, enough to make disturbance in meetings, as he did both in London and here, and that he knew enough English to spread false reports about Comrades Mowbray, Merlino, Cipriana and other well known men who have suffered in the movement long before anyone knew of the existence of Franco. The reason why he did not ask me about the Berkmann fund is, because he is a coward, ready to admit this any time himself. Well, I do not care to take up too much space in talking of Franco; it is beneath any honest and decent person to spend time with such a miserable creature.

J. H. Morris, in his comment on Franco's letter says: "According to the principles of Anarchist association any member of the group, whose object is the release of Berkmann may know what is done with the fund to which he has subscribed." Certainly, and Comrade Morris could have saved himself the trouble to tell me that, as I claim to understand the principles of Anarchist association. According to my understanding of Anarchist principles, those who have NEVER subscribed a cent, NEVER CARED for Berkmann's release, have no right to ask any accounts of whomsoever, and to poke noses into other people's affairs. I am the last one to give information to people like P. Franco or the conceited and impertinent fellow who wrote to Comrade Isaak.

To those who have assisted me in my work for my friend Alexander Berkmann, I say this: The money collected abroad by myself and other comrades amounts to about $20 and was sent to Charles Schneider, Pittsburg, Pa., who was appointed at the time as treasurer of the Berkmann fund by the Pittsburg comrades. Anyone wishing to know how the money was used will do well to address him.

As to Berkmann, he is not only my comrade, but also my friend and a very dear one, too. I shall continue to work for him as energetically as I have until now and all impertinent attacks and slanders will not induce me to give up the fight.

I am very sorry The Firebrand has taken up personal matters, and can only predict that if its publishers continue in the same way, they will only put nails to their own coffin. EMMA GOLDMANN.

New York, Aug. 5., 1896.

The publishers of The Firebrand certainly have a right to publish whatever they please, but they have no right to publish any accusations without knowing

We are glad to publish the above information in reply to inquiries received at this office, but we are sorry Comrade Goldmann takes the matter in the spirit here exhibited. We have published no accusations, and we could not know the truth or falsity of any we may have received without an accounting from her. The letter referred to as having been received by Comrade Isaak was not a private letter, but written to The Firebrand. In the most friendly spirit Comrade Goldmann was informed of the question raised as to the disposition of the fund, and we are sorry to say the reply consisted of bluster similar to the above. It was not our personal business to know the truth or falsity of any accusations or to settle matters between Comrade Goldmann and her questioners; but The Firebrand, as a representative of the movement, has been made a "go-between" in the case, and however much we may regret it, we have been able to see no fair way to avoid it. Were we to follow her suggestion as to personalities, her own letter would furnish the first occasion for exclusion, because it is the first to indulge in personalities and hard names. Personal enmity may have prompted those letters of inquiry, but we are not omniscient and could have no knowledge of this. Personally, I want to say that what I said concerning the principles of Anarchist association was not intended for Comrade Goldmann's enlightenment, but was in the nature of a reason for publication of the inquiry coming, supposably, from a contributor to the fund; also as a hint to such inquirers as were not contributors. If, as appears from the above letter, the two inquirers mentioned are non-contributors, it is hoped they will have the good sense to keep still in the future. At any rate the matter closes here, so far as The Firebrand is concerned.

J. H. M.

More Concerning Methods.

IN the last issue of The Firebrand I remarked that "industrial warfare will continue to break out" with the probability of violence attending such outbreaks increasing. I think all who have noted the trend of events in the industrial world must have noticed that gradually all peaceful means for combating the employer is being taken away from the employe. Boycotting is now punishable as conspiracy in a number of states, and striking, quitting work in a body, is enjoined by the courts. This shows that the government will be drawn more and more into the struggle between employer and employe, and always on the side of the employer. Attempts to make use of the government for their own advantage will continue for a time by the workingmen, prompted by such hybred organizations as the Socialist Trades and Labor Alliance, but a few more instances of the calling out of the militia to shoot strikers who have assembled, a few more instances of imprisonment of strikers on charges of riot and conspiracy, must show a large number of the trades unionists that they can expect nothing but lead and iron from the government. If the Anarchist propagandist is busy among the union men he can without doubt, by calling attention to these things, turn the hatred of the trades unionist away from the poor scab—the more unfortunate victim of monopoly—to the power that creates and maintains monopoly.

Then, too, in such industries as are not so easily monopolized, industries that can be started with but few tools and a small amount of stock, the tendency for striking workmen to form competing companies—so-called cooperative companies—will increase.

Joint stock companies among the workingmen will be tried for a time, but the internal troubles that will arise and the final monopolization of the stock by the shrewd few, must soon prove this form of cooperation futile. But the example of other cooperative concerns that work on a truly cooperative—not stock company—basis, will tend to show them that they can manage their own affairs without imitating the methods of capitalism.

There are some industries that cannot be established or operated on a small scale, and usually in those industries the operators become physically incompetent to readily adjust themselves to any other kind of employment. The workers in these industries must fight it out on the grounds, and they and the railroaders form an immense army.

When the workingman get over their servitude to the union bosses, the leaders who always call the strike off before it is really won, and stand together regardless of the action of the leaders, they will begin to learn their strength and their employers will find themselves powerless without government aid. When government aid is invoked and the struggles of these industrials for better conditions are crushed by the militia and the regular soldiery, men shot down and the blood and iron theory in full force, then a general strike, aiming to "teach the government a lesson", may be looked for. Once started, such a strike would spread, as shown by the great railroad strike of 1894, from one trade to another until even the farmers would do all in their power to assist it.

The organization of the various cooperative associations that will have gone on will very materially assist in a general strike. All the mechanics, artisans and laborers can refuse to work for money, but accept the certificates of these associations in payment for their labor. In this manner the workers

890320000

The Emma Goldman Papers

[Interview] Emma Goldman Here / Emma Goldman.— p. 3 ; 43 cm. In The Pittsburg[h] Leader. —(Nov. 20, 1896).

Obtained from the State Library of Pennsylvania. Institutional Location: Special Collections.

hose first mortgage bonds rkee came into possession of d assigned to the government
tion and collection on ma-he benefit of his heirs. This is came to maturity in 1894.
ell explained to a reporter was brought in the court of ay, 1893, and that what the
was an accounting from the with leave to make applicanking fund in liquidation of rtgage indebtedness of cord to be a lien prior and par-hat of the United States.

FIRE IN CLEVELAND.

Slightly Burned While
g From the Building.

VELAND, November 20, 1896.
ick block owned by ex-Parsons, and occupied kelemeyer & Sons, whole-
e, was destroyed by fire this he building, valued at $75,000, valued at $100,000, were both Both were insured. One of s of the firm and two emburned about the faces and they could escape from the e fire was caused by an exrnace gas.

ERAL OF M'CREA.

the Officer Reach Butler.
ement To-Morrow.

BUTLER, November 20, 1896.
ns of Thomas E. McCrea, the rden killed at Emsworth yesbrought here this morning and are at the residence of James on Washington street.
ns, of Erie county, accomparpse, and when seen at the se, said he did not think a murder in the first degree referred against Cronin as o premeditation. They were g on the platform, and al-rea was the stronger, Cronin vantage of going down the nped off, McCrea holding him nd and followed in discharge to his death. A charge of r will probably be made, and he convicted on this count will be held to-morrow morn Clearfield church, this county,
nt will be in that cemetery.
fe and son and daughter from n from Rochester, N. Y., ar-fternoon, and several of the
are expected this evening.
sentenced to the Columbus for 2 years and 4 months for bery, and his aged father seardon for him. Mr. Evans k Cronin dragged McCrea off purposely.

AD THREE WIVES.

., Woman Pursuing Mr.
ltzel in Indiana.

E, IND., November 20, 1896.
Peltzell, living near Angora, this city this morning, in husband, of whose duplicity rtling evidence. Mrs. Peltzel of but two months when erted by her husband. Soon appearance, wife No. 1, living turned up and an investigahed the fact that a second ing in Cleveland, O., where bride followed him, going ty to South Bend, where all was lost. Mrs. Peltzel will city to Chicago, where with he is confident she can find a husband, whom she is de-prosecute.

AN SHOT A DEER.

ndidate Was Not an Suc-
His Fellow Huntsmen.

RVE, MO., November 20, 1896.
m J. Bryan, Senator Jones,
ne and most of the party ylug a short sojourn at this hunting yesterday, but the tial candidate was not as the other huntsmen.
g of a deer yesterday was the trip. It is a rule of the y to kill a certain number fall, and the allowed number ed a few weeks ago, but in
. Bryan the rule was sus-the chief guest of the party
o have a shot at one of the nimals. About 4 o'clock yes-noon, the party found a fine r was not badly frightened ground until Mr. Bryan sent its left side.
ill leave on Saturday, as Mr.
be in Denver next Tuesday.

CHIEFS CONFER.

fet at Chicago To-Day.

NICAGO, November 20, 1896.
ds of five railroad brother-session at the Sherman
They are: P. M. Arthur, otive Engineers; P. H. Mor-Railroad Trainmen; E. E.
Conductors; F. P. Sargent, notive Firemen, and W. V.
e Railroad Telegraphers.
the heads of these brother-to outline a policy for the talk over matters of inter-ganization that have come
e preceding twelve months.
nothing of a sensational na-meeting. It is said, as the are enjoying peace at pres-

EMMA GOLDMAN HERE.

FAMOUS WOMAN ANARCHIST TO LECTURE IN PITTSBURG.

In an Interview With a "Leader" Man, She Talks Interestingly of Her Beliefs—Her Experience While in Blackwell Island Prison for Inciting Riot—It Is Believed She Is Raising Funds for Berkman.

Miss Emma Goldman, perhaps the foremost Anarchist of the United States at the present time, arrived in Pittsburg this morning quite unannounced. She was seen by a "Leader" reporter, and talked very interestingly of her plans and the cause for which she is famous. The impression prevails that the purpose of her visit here is to raise money in an endeavor to have Berkman, the man who shot H. C. Frick, pardoned. Miss Guldman would not admit this, and evaded the question, prefering to speak of her work in general. She said that she will remain here at least a week, delivering lectures nearly every day during her stay. The first one will be delivered in the Duquesne Dancing academy on Wylie avenue to-morrow night. It will be especially for the German residents, and that language will be used by Miss Goldman. She will lecture Sunday afternoon at the same place in English. The subject of to-morrow night's talk will be "The Effect of the Recent Election on the Condition of the Workingmen," and that of Sunday afternoon, "Anarchism in America."

Miss Goldman intends to visit all the large cities of the west, and has just come in from a tour of the eastern cities, and was last in Philadelphia. In speaking to the "Leader" man of her mission this morning, she said:

"I want to correct an impression that has prevailed about my having been in Pittsburg in the interests of the cause I represent before this visit. I believe at the time Berkman was tried and sentenced it was said I was here, but it was not so. At the time I was in Baltimore, and, as I am not ethereal, I could not very well be in two places at once. Yes, I worked in the interest of Berkman at the time, and assisted in holding several meetings in his behalf. You know, the Central labor unions of both Boston and Philadelphia passed resolutions expressing their belief that Berkman had acted from conscientious motives."

"Is it the purpose of your visit to help Berkman?" was asked.

"Well, no; not exactly. Of course every true Anarchist has his interest at heart, and will do all they they can to have his sentence commuted or have him pardoned—at least I will. But that is not the only object of my visit. Pittsburg is a large city, containing an immense number of workingmen, and it is them that I came to talk to."

Emma Goldman, the Anarchist.

Miss Goldman was asked if she thought or knew of any one having prompted or urged the attempted assassination of Mr. Frick, to which she replied that she did not think so.

"Anarchists," said he, "do not or should not act on the advice of any outsider when they feel that it is their duty to perform something for the sake of their principles. If I felt it my duty to perform something of the kind would do it without asking any one whatsoever about it; neither would I advise any person to do something for which they might have to forfeit their lives. We can all tell the difference between right and wrong, and that should alone govern us in our actions. The impression that anything of this kind is arranged at a meeting and lots drawn to see who will perform the act is erroneous."

"But do you think it is the right way to gain your ends?" the reporter asked.

"We are opposed to governments as of themselves harmful, and there was never yet a change in reformation without revolution. Remember I do not advise any one to rebel and place their spoken of. She gave as a reason for not taking a more active part in it her residence in another state, which debarred her from working personally for the commutation.

A SOLDIER'S WIDOW.

Sequel to the Story of an Attempted Suicide—Mrs. Crouse Entitled to a Pension.

Some time ago, it will be remembered by the readers of this paper, a demented woman was picked up by the police after she had attempted suicide, and was taken to St. Francis hospital, where she said her name was Mary Hannahan. Afterwards she said that her name was Crouse, she having married a young machinist by the name of Harry Crouse during the war, and that three days after the wedding he left her and went to the front, since which time she has never heard a word from him.

The story was given wide publicity at the time, but nothing was ever heard from any of Crouse's relatives. After the woman had recovered from the illness subsequent to her attempt to kill herself, she was turned over to the department of charities and sent to the city home at Marshalsea.

This morning a man named Harry J. Burg came to the office of the department on Fourth avenue, and said he thought he could tell something about the woman's husband. He said that he picked up an old paper during an idle moment the other day, and in it saw an account of the woman's attempt at suicide. The name of Harry Crouse recalled to his mind a young man of that name who had gone to the war and never returned. The man he knew was a machinist, and was supposed to be a single man, none of his acquaintances knowing anything of his marriage.

This Harry Crouse became a lieutenant in his regiment, and one day while crossing a bridge was fired upon by sharpshooters and his body was seen to fall from the bridge into the creek below, from which it was never recovered. Mr. Burg said that Harry Crouse was a member of a good family, who were well known in these parts, and that if his wife could prove her identity, he thought she would have no trouble in getting a pension, and thus would not be a charge on the city. He says he has a photograph of Mr. Crouse which the latter sent him from the army, and he will bring it to the department to be shown to Mrs. Crouse, to see if she would recognize it as that of her husband. Mr. Burg, who gave this information, lives at 4632 Greenwich street, Pittsburg.

DIDN'T GET A LIST.

Mrs. Collins Pays Her Respects to Superintendent of Police Leslie.

It was learned to-day that Mrs. J. S. Collins, who called at City hall early in the week to see Superintendent of Police Leslie about a list of names and addresses of the keepers of immoral houses, had called again last evening. It will be remembered that at the time of the first call of the lady the superintendent was absent from his office and she did not get to see him. Last evening she was more fortunate—for the time being. The superintendent was in, but the conversation between the parties was very brief. As soon as Mrs. Collins introduced herself the head of Pittsburg's "finest" remarked to her that he had been told of her previous visit, its object and that he had written her telling her that he had no list as she desired.

"But," said Mrs. Collins, "the newspapers have published such a list."

"I can't help that," said the superintendent. "If the newspapers have such a list in their possession why not get it from them?"

At this point Mrs. Collins intimated that she had got but little information from Mr. O'Mara when he was superintendent of police, and she guessed there wasn't much to be had from police officials as to the location of immoral houses,' saying which she left.

RABBITS GALORE.

The Packets Morena and H. K. Bedford Bring Large Numbers of the Little Animals.

The packets Lorena and H. K. Bedford arrived at the Pittsburg wharf last night, and this morning they began unloading their freight. The most prominent feature about the cargo was the large number of rabbits which the boats brought up. There were hundreds of them, and they found ready buyers. This is the first lot of rabbits brought up on the boats this season.

The Pittsburg Coal Exchange and Harbor No. 25 Masters and Pilots are making an effort to procure legislation regarding bridge lights in and around Pittsburg. Resolutions have been prepared and will be sent to congress to be presented at the next session.

In reply to the request of Harbor No. 25, Major Heuer, of Cincinnati, has said in regard to the dredging of the Ohio at the head of Phillisee Island that it would be impossible to get the work done before the bad weather sets in. It would require time to secure the necessary appropriation from congress, and there are other things which would hinder the work.

The river is still falling slowly, and is expected to continue doing so until more rain comes. The marks at the wharf this morning showed 3.7 feet, and at Davis Island dam they showed 5.6 feet.

PATRIOTS HAVE RIGHTS.

GENERAL TRACY SPEAKS OF AID GIVEN THE CUBANS.

United States Citizens May Sell Arms, Organize Expeditions at Sea Outside Shore Limits and Do Anything Except Violate the Letter of Statutes Intended to Preserve Neutrality.

NEW YORK, November 20, 1896.

The trial of the alleged Cuban filibusters in the U. S. court reached a climax as regards public interest this afternoon, when ex-Secretary Benj. F. Tracey began his address for the defense. He said:

"This is an important case from whatever standpoint you may view it. It involves," he continued, "issues that may hereafter arise between the government of the United States and the government of Spain. This case is alleged to involve a violation of a statute of the United States. This government owes certain duties to other nations. It has not attempted, however, to control the sympathies of our people for Cuba. An American citizens we must and we will give the right hand of sympathy to those Cubans who are striving to obtain their freedom and to have the privileges which we enjoy. Let the national government do its duty, but we shall continue to extend our sympathies to the Cubans and we will not judge harshly any Cuban who seeks in this country to aid his brethren in their native isle."

General Tracey declared that there is no limit to the aid that the people of this country may extend to the Cubans except such as is absolutely forbidden by the statutes. "American citizens," he said "are forbidden to organize any military expeditions within the limits of the United States to aid Cuba. If the organization be formed out at sea, outside the waters of the United States, then it is not within the command of the statutes. Any merchant may sell arms to either of the belligerents and not violate law. In all cases of war commerce is open."

HAVE BIG WOOL INTERESTS.

Nevada People Sorry They Voted Against McKinley.

CANTON, November 20, 1896.

Major McKinley had several callers this morning. They came for the most part while he was driving with Mrs. McKinley, and awaited his return. Ferdinand Peck, of Chicago, stopped on his way from New York, to have a chat with the President-elect. Mr. Peck said that he did not know that Illinois would press a man for the cabinet, though several men from Chicago had been mentioned. Discussing the rumor which referred to Lyman J. Gage as a cabinet possibility, Mr. Peck said:

"The selection of Mr. Gage for the position now held by Secretary Carlisle would seem to be a happy one. Mr. Gage is an expert financier, and a broad-minded man of high reputation and standing. How the appointment would be regarded from a political point of view I do not presume to say."

Ed Perkins was another caller at the McKinley residence this morning. He told Major McKinley he had been in Idaho since the election, and the people there are sorry they voted for free silver and free trade for their wool interests are six times as great as their silver mining interests. General Nelson A. Miles will arrive here at 4 o'clock this afternoon.

The Japs Reach Chicago.

CHICAGO, November 20, 1896.

N. Oshima, G. Yernaga, J. Tokoyama, F. Obana and K. K. Komhura, imposing-looking Japanese, arrived at the Auditorium this morning. They are interested in railroad development in Japan and are making a tour of the leading railroad centers of this country, to study American methods.

MEETINGS.

Office of the Monongahela Water Co., Pittsburg, Pa.,
November 18, 1896.

NOTICE is hereby given that by order of the president and board of managers of this company, there will be a meeting of the stockholders held at the offices of the company, 1113 Carson st., S. S., Pittsburg, at 2 o'clock P. M., Saturday, December 5, 1896, to consider and pass upon the advisability of entering into a contract with the Chartiers Valley Water Company and such other business as may be brought before the meeting. Martin Prenter, secretary. 11-19-28-s

ASSIGNEE'S SALES.

ASSIGNEE'S SALE—To the highest bidder, $3,000 stock of new furniture, at No. 36 West Diamond, near Market st., Saturday, at 10 o'clock. 11-19-a

OPTICIANS.

DR. LITTLE is a specialist in fitting glasses. Charges for glasses only. 536 Smithfield st. 11-18-ay

PERSONAL.

PERSONAL—Superfluous hair, moles and other facial blemishes permanently destroyed by the electrical needle, without scar, by Miss Streng, 903 Penn ave., Dickson building. 1-16-syb

CHRISTY—J... ing, November ... his residence, ... after a brief ... Funeral service... Saturday afterno... ment private later.

DEWAR—At 5:30 ... ber 20, 1896, Mrs. R... of Alexander Dewa... her age.
Funeral services at ... Woodlawn avenue, ... vue, Sunday after... ment private at a...

HAWK—At Ashe... day, November 18, 18... Hawk, in his 28th ...
Funeral services at ... 6523 McPherson str... day at 2 o'clock P. ...

KEIL—On Thursd... nt his residence, ... Main streets, Shar... Jacob Keil, Sr., in h... Funeral services at ... Lutheran church, ... day, November 21, ... the family are res... lend. Interment ...

LEWIS—On Thur... ber 19, 1896, at 11 ... Lewis.
Funeral services at ... Broad street, Eas... vember 21, at 2:30 ... vate.

LUCAS—On Friday ... 2:30 A. M., Rev. Cha... First Christian chu... 48th year.
Funeral services at ... Montgomery avenu... 3 o'clock Sunday ... later in Virginia.

ORTGIES—On Fri... at 5 A. M., William ... t month and 11 d...
Funeral on Monday ... residence, 216 F... gheny. Friends o... spectfully invited ...

WALLACE—Asle... day, November ... Nevin Wallace, you... and Ada P. Wall... John Hinchcliff, ... months.
Funeral on Sunday ... the residence of h... hard street, at 2 ... vate.

THE UNIO... OF PI... 335, 337 and ... Capital ... Executes Trusts. ... Allows Interest on ... to Check.

YOUR ENTIRE ES... PENNS... Title and ... 410 Smi...

CHEAP HYACIN... AND TULIPS. ... Fall planting... orde... and Shrubs now. ... street, Pittsburg.

Bann... PURE...

J. B. ST... ACCOU... Room No. 8 — ... Sixth ...

LEGAL.

HUGH S. CRAIG ... Diamond st. Es... Keon, late of the ... ceased. Notice is h... lers of administrati... said decedent have ... undersigned. All pe... estate are requeste... and those having ... against the same w... without delay to Ka... istratrix, 99 Center ...

OFFICE of A. J. ... Fifth avenue. ... sasser, deceased.—N... that letters of admi... the estate of Anto... late of Penn towns... to the undersigned ... indebted to said e... make immediate pay... ing claims or dema... will make them k... Catharine Eisasser, ...

NOTICE is hereby ... tion will be ma... the state of Penney... of December, A. D. ... the general assem... wealth of Pennsyl... plement to an act ... provide for the inc... tion of certain ... April 29, 1874, provi... ment, ... the charters ... the second ... the incorpora...

72

BEST COPY AVAILABLE

890320000

The Emma Goldman Papers

[Interview] Emma Goldman Here / Emma Goldman.— p. 3 ; 43 cm. In The Pittsburg[h] Leader. —(Nov. 20, 1896).

Obtained from the State Library of Pennsylvania. Institutional Location: Special Collections.

...ell, living near Angora,... city this morning. In ...tand, of whose duplicity ... evidence. Mrs. Peltzel ... but two months when ... by her husband. Soon ...rince, wife No. 1, living ...ed up and an investiga... the fact that a second ...in Cleveland, O., where ...ide followed him, going ...South Bend, where all ...s lost. Mrs. Peltzel will ... to Chicago, where with ... confident she can find ...sband, whom she is de...ecute.

SHOT A DEER.

...ate Was Not as Suc... Fellow Huntsmen.

...Mo., November 20, 1896. ...Bryan, Senator Jones, ...and most of the party ...a short sojourn at this ...ting yesterday, but the ...ed here was not as ...ful huntsmen. ...deer yesterday was ... It is a rule of the ...kill a certain number ...and the allowed number ...few weeks ago, but in ...ryan the rule was sus... chief guest of the party ...ave a shot at one of the ...ks. About 4 o'clock yes..., the party found a fine ...was not badly frightened ...nd until Mr. Bryan sent ...left side. ...eave on Saturday, as Mr. ...in Denver next Tuesday.

...HIEFS CONFER.

...e Railroad Brother... ...at Chicago To-Day.

...ago, November 20, 1896. ...of five railroad brother... ...session at the Sherman ...hey are: P. M. Arthur, ...e Engineers; P. H. Mor... ...ailroad Trainmen; E. E. ...nductors; F. P. Sargent, ...re Firemen, and W. V. ...ailroad Telegraphers. ...heads of these brother... ...outline a policy for the ...ik over matters of inter... ...ization that have come ...receding twelve months. ...hing of a sensational na... ...eting, it is said, as the ... enjoying peace at pres... ...country. The five grand ... about 150,000 organized ...en. They will be in ses... ...days.

...LER'S OPINION.

...k Carry Was Killed ...ular Initiation.

...ung, November 20, 1896. ...eller, grand exalted ruler ...ath to believe that E. W. ... of the Iowa Democratic ...of injuries received while ...a lodge of Elks in Des ...tualistic work," said Mr. ...hatically forbids subordi... ...n conferring degrees, to ...anner candidates for in... ...g of this character has ... the past in the order of ... full particulars are re... ...ath to believe that the ...ted while taking an Elk ...re many side or club de... ...es may confer, but these ...me, disciplins and written ... prescribed by the grand

...RABLY INSANE.

...r, Drowned at Cleve... ...ne From Omaha.

...AND, November 20, 1896. ... man found in the lake ...uirson street, Wednesday ...en identified as that of ...who recently came to ...Omaha. He had been em... ...a clerk in the New En... ...was stricken with ty... ...hort time ago and taken ...hospital, from where he ...Wednesday. It is thought ...himself in a fit of tempo...

...hiladelphia Fire.

...HIA, November 20, 1896. ...brick yard plant of Gunn ...th and Erie avenue, was ... last night to the extent ... The loss is principally ...d on a large quantity of ...ins which were damaged ... property is insured for Hotel Closed.

...URO, November 20, 1896. ...s closed the Commercial ...t, proprietor, at Irwin, at ... A. Kline and others, and ...rniture and bar fixtures

...unnel Cut Through.

...URO, November 20, 1896. ...ebaugh tunnel was cut ...ing and the opening an... ...ing of all the whis...

Emma Goldman, the Anarchist.

"Well, no; not exactly. Of course every true Anarchist has his interest at heart, and will do all they they can to have his sentence commuted or have him pardoned—at least I will. But that is not the only object of my visit. Pittsburg is a large city, containing an immense number of workingmen, and it is them that I came to talk to."

Miss Goldman was asked if she thought or knew of any one having prompted or urged the attempted assassination of Mr. Frick, to which she replied that she did not think so.

"Anarchists," said he, "do not or should not act on the advice of any outsider when they feel that it is their duty to perform something for the sake of their principles. If I felt it my duty to perform something of the kind I would do it without asking any one whatsoever about it; neither would I advise any person to do something for which they might have to forfeit their lives. We can all tell the difference between right and wrong, and that should alone govern us in our actions. The impression that anything of this kind is arranged at a meeting and lots drawn to see who will perform the act is erroneous."

"But do you think it is the right way to gain your ends?" the reporter asked.

"We are opposed to governments as of themselves harmful, and there was never yet a change in reformatihn without revolution. Remember I do not advise any one to rebel and place their lives in jeopardy, but put the situation before the working people and ask them to think and act for themselves. If I see which way duty leads me, that is the way I will go."

Miss Goldman was asked to tell something of her experience in prison three years ago, when she was sent to Blackwells island for a year on a charge of inciting riot.

"Oh, I did not fare so badly and in fact I gained a great deal of valuable knowledge from that experience. You know I only served ten months, getting two months' commutation for good behavior. They told me I was a model prisoner and I had no reason not to be, for the treatment they gave me was as good as possible. I had no luxuries except that my friends kept me supplied with wholesome food, one thing that is very bad at the women's prison. Taken all in all, I feel none the worse for that experience. It was unjust for this reason: The officers who testified in the case grossly misrepresented my words to the workingmen in the street the night I made the speech on the street. I urged them to be men and stand for their rights, but at no time advised them to kill and burn or commit any violence. As I said before, an Anarchist may do such things on his or her own responsibility, but no true one ever advises others to do it."

"What stand did the Anarchists take in the presidential election just passed?" queried the reporter.

"They were not exactly on either side, because it would be making a government in either case. But most of the Anarchists, I think, favored the silver question, as it tended much more to the alleviation of the workingmen's wrongs that the gold side, which was the upholding of the powers of monopolists and the rich classes. These Anarchists do not think that the change can be brought about by a political party. It has never yet been done without a revolution and I don't think ever will."

The personality of Miss Goldman will surprise one who is acquainted with her only by reputation. She is rather good-looking and of petite figure. But the most pleasing feature about this famous atheist and Anarchist is her powers of conversation. Her voice is exceedingly pleasant and smooth; the language, slightly tinged with her native Russian accent, is of the best and comes readily to the lips. Her ability for argumentative power is well known.

During the interview the reporter tried several times to get her to talk on the Berkman case, but beyond the few guarded words given she said very little about it and seemd to not have it especially in mind, although she said her efforts, in a way, would be devoted to gaining the commutation

...ailment from his office and she did not get to see him. Last evening she was more fortunate—for the time being. The superintendent was in, but the conversation between the parties was very brief. As soon as Mrs. Collins introduced herself the head of Pittsburg's "finest" remarked to her that he had been told of her previous visit, its object and that he had written her telling her that he had no list as she desired.

"But," said Mrs. Collins, "the newspapers have published such a list."

"I can't help that," said the superintendent. "If the newspapers have such a list in their possession why not get it from them?"

At this point Mrs. Collins intimated that she had got but little information from Mr. O'Mara when he was superintendent of police, and she guessed there wasn't much to be had from police officials as to the location of immoral houses, saying which she left.

RABBITS GALORE.

The Packets Lorena and H. K. Bedford Bring Large Numbers of the Little Animals.

The packets Lorena and H. K. Bedford arrived at the Pittsburg wharf last night, and this morning they began unloading their freight. The most prominent feature about the cargo was the large number of rabbits which the boats brought up. There were hundreds of them, and they found ready buyers. This is the first lot of rabbits brought up on the boats this season.

The Pittsburg Coal Exchange and Harbor No. 25 Masters and Pilots are making an effort to procure legislation regarding bridge lights in and around Pittsburg. Resolutions have been prepared, and will be sent to congress to be presented at the next session.

In reply to the request of Harbor No. 25, Major Heuer, of Cincinnati, has said in regard to the dredging of the Ohio at the head of Phillsee island that it would be impossible to get the work done before the bad weather sets in. It would require time to secure the necessary appropriation from congress, and there are other things which would hinder the work.

The river is still falling slowly, and is expected to continue doing so until more rain comes. The marks at the wharf this morning showed 3.7 feet, and at Davis Island dam they showed 5.6 feet.

WEARY WAYFARERS.

Three of Them Before Magistrate Mackrell This Morning.

Magistrate Archibald Mackrell resumed his duties at the Twelfth ward police station this morning after having spent the past few days in the woods. His honor is quite a sportsman and is now busily engaged in telling his numerous friends of his experiences in the woods.

At the station house this morning the judge had an easy time of it, having to dispose of only three cases, the unforunates having been taken in last night on the charge of vagrancy. Officer Rogers dragged them from a comfortable bed under a pile of iron in the rear of Schoenberger's mills last night on the complaint of the manager of the mill, who alleges that he has been annoyed with the same trio for the past week. He had ordered them away from the mills on several occasions, but they persist in loitering in that vicinity. The trio gave their names as Frank Smith, Frank Wigle and William Schrinhoit. The former acted as spokesman for his comrades and commenced to tell a "hard luck" story, but the magistrate cut him off by sentencing them to jail for five days each.

GOSPEL TEMPERANCE MEETING.

Children Address a Large Crowd at Mission Hall, South Side.

The South Side mission hall was crowded last night with a very appreciative audience. Rev. Muckle had announced a gospel temperance meeting, to be addressed by children under 16 years of age—the result being that crowds were unable to obtain admittance. Miss Lorena Coster presided, and fifteen children gave addresses, which were received with great applause. Mr. Huckle sang "No One Cares for Me." Addresses were also made by Mrs. A. M. Hammett, Mr. Stevenson and Mr. Huckle. Mr. Cyril Huckle and Willie Vockel made the speeches of the evening. The success of this meeting will result in a number of similar gatherings in the near future.

SOUTH SIDE PARKS.

The Twenty-Second Street Site Will Be Boomed To-Night.

A meeting of the citizens' park committee of the Twenty-fifth ward will be held this evening at the office of Alderman [illegible] to take active measures regarding a location of the South Side park. It is understood that the committee will recommend and strongly urge the sub-finance committee of councils to select the South Twenty-second street site as the most central and desirable location.

...Lyman J. Gage as a cabinet possibility, Mr. Peck said:

"The selection of Mr. Gage for the position now held by Secretary Carlisle would seem to be a happy one. Mr. Gage is an expert financier, and a broad-minded man of high reputation and standing. How the appointment would be regarded from a political point of view I do not presume to say."

Ell Perkins was another caller at the McKinley residence this morning. He told Major McKinley he had been in Idaho since the election, and the people there are sorry they voted for free silver and free trade for their wool interests are six times as great as their silver mining interests. General Nelson A. Miles will arrive here at 4 o'clock this afternoon.

The Japs Reach Chicago.

CHICAGO, November 20, 1896.

N. Oshima, G. Yernaga, J. Tokoyama, F. Ohana and K. K. Komura, imposing-looking Japanese, arrived at the Auditorium this morning. They are interested in railroad development in Japan and are making a tour of the leading railroad centers of this country, to study American methods.

MEETINGS.

Office of the Monongahela Water Co., Pittsburg, Pa., November 19, 1896.

NOTICE is hereby given that by order of the president and board of managers of this company, there will be a meeting of the stockholders held at the office of the company, 1112 Carson st., S. S., Pittsburg, at 2 o'clock P. M., Saturday, December 5, 1896, to consider and pass upon the advisability of entering into a contract with the Chartiers Valley Water Company and such other business as may be brought before the meeting. Martin Prenter, secretary. 11-19-28-a

ASSIGNEE'S SALES.

ASSIGNEE'S SALE—To the highest bidder, $3,000 stock of new furniture, at No. 36 West Diamond, near Market st., Saturday, at 10 o'clock. 11-19-a

OPTICIANS.

DR. LITTLE is a specialist in fitting glasses. Charges for glasses only. 535 Smithfield st. 11-18-sy

PERSONAL.

PERSONAL—Superfluous hair, moles and other facial blemishes permanently destroyed by the electrical needle, without scar, by Miss Streng, 903 Penn ave., Dickson building. 1-16-gyb

PERSONAL—Massage—Medicated baths for nervous prostration, rheumatism. Mrs. Schwartz, 2118 Center ave., near Erin street. 9-8-gyb

PERSONAL — Mrs. Ward, seventh daughter of the seventh son, 190 Washington st., Pittsburg. 11-1-y-g-30

CUT GLASS

BOWLS.....

Over 100 styles and shapes—produced by the best makers.

A large size, richly Cut Berry or Salad Bowl for $8.00.

A choice line of other effective designs and sizes at $5 to $20.

PUNCH BOWLS, $25 TO $75.

A hundred other commodities in rich, rare and sparkling cut glass shown in our Art Rooms.

E. P. Roberts & Sons,

Cor. Fifth Ave. and Market St.

FIDELITY

Title and Trust Co.

CAPITAL $1,000,000

Executes Trusts of All Kinds.

Loans Made on Collateral.

LOANS MADE ON MORTGAGES

4-2-tu-f-s

...of Pittsburg.
ASSETS, $417,1[illegible]

No. 311 Wood St.

ALEXANDER NIMICK, President.
JOHN B. JACKSON, Vice President.
WM. P. HERBERT, Secretary.

Fall ... and ... street, Pittsburg.

Ba...

PURELY ...

J. B. STEV...

ACCOUNT...

Room No. 8. — Ste...

Sixth Av...

LEGAL NOT...

HUGH S. CRAIG, at... Diamond st. Estate ... Koon, late of the city ... ceased. Notice is hereb... ters of administration u... said decedent have bee... undersigned. All person... estate are requested t... and those having cla... against the same will p... without delay to Kate J... istratrix, 59 Center ave.

OFFICE of A. J. Ba... Fifth avenue. Estate ... sessor, deceased.—Notice ... that letters of administ... the estate of Anton K... late of Penn township, ... to the undersigned, to ... indebted to said estate ... make immediate payme... ing claims or demands ... will make them known ... Catharine Eisenser, ad... n.

NOTICE is hereby give... tion will be made t... the state of Pennsylvan... of December, A. D. 1896 ... the general assembly ... wealth of Pennsylvania ... plement to an act ent... provide for the incorpor... tion of certain corpor... April 29, 1874, providing ... ment, amendment an... the charters of ... the second class, ... the incorporation of ... companies," approved ... of June, A. D. 1883, a... corporation amendment ... approval of a certain ... charter of the Fidelity ... Association, of Pittsbur... the petition for the ... amendment, viz: By ... ting and altering the f... letters patent, which ... "First—The name of t... poration is the Fidelity ... Association of Pittsburg ... "First—The name of the ... tion is the Vigilant B... Association of Pittsburg ... solicitor.

OFFICE of Jackson ... at law, 413 Grant ... Estate of Sarah Dell... 324 September term, 1... given that by virtue ... orphans' court of Alle... the above number and ... signed will expose at ... premises, on Friday, ... at 2 o'clock P. M., t... scribed real estate of t... DeRoy, deceased: A lo... Seventh (7th) ward of ... burg, Pa., beginning o... the distance of 22 fee... Colwell street; thence t... 13 feet 7½ inches; then... with Logan street 45 ... thence along said all... Logan street 7 feet ele... well street, thence tow... 99 feet; thence paralla... 4 feet 6 inches; thence ... street at the place of ... is erected a two-story h... real estate being sold f... debts of the decedent. ... One-third cash, balance ... nual payments, with ... bond and tight mortga... administrator of estate ... deceased. A. J. Pentec... general auctioneer.

T. R. STONER, attorn... mond street. Noti... that on the 9th May, ... Wynkoop presented hi... court of common plea... gheny county, Pa., at ... 1894, asking to have his ... David Evans, and upon ... thereof said petition w... filed, and on the 6th ... petition having been on ... three months in accord... of assembly in such ca... vided, a decree was m... changing the name of ... Wynkoop to David Eva... David Evans.

WILLIAM HUNTE... 416 Grant st. Es... Schmitt, deceased. Not... that letters of adminis... tate of Ferdinand Schm... of Pittsburg, Pa., hav... the undersigned, to w... debted to said estate ... make immediate payme... ing claims or demands ... will make them know... Catherine Schmitt, a... Penn ave., city.

73

BEST COPY AVAILABLE

890320002

The Emma Goldman Papers

[Excerpt from Lecture] A Woman Anarchist / Emma Goldman.— p. 6 ; 44 cm. In The Pittsburg[h] Leader. —(Nov. 22, 1896).

Obtained from the State Library of Pennsylvania. Institutional Location: Special Collections.

ight, and it is
ay, be done.

ALL.

m, a Formee
ident.

en, relict of r, resident of ni her 67th year,
ke of paralysis,
ago, which left
. She lost the ys before her s ago she was s and general
her husband in ail rapidly. She th county, Ire-
ountry with her
. She settled in mained three a lity [illegible] to [illegible]nity.
[illegible]addock
to John Mc-Thirteen chil-
ouple of whom 9
Mrs. Mary Ann
ott, of Idlewood,
Mrs. John Mc-
cKay, Mrs. La-McMullen, Mrs.
Rose McMullen,
Ellen Bott, wife
egle. There are 12 great grand-
t Mrs. McMullen of the St. Thomaddock, and the
among the first services will be at 10:30 o'clock,
nducted by Very
y, and the inter-
hela cemetery.

ed War Vetee-Home.

nber 21.—A tele-
John C. Dickey hat Major N. B. known as "Dr."
at the Soldiers'
e major enlisted ment, Pennsylva-
c war broke out,
ed to the Fifty-
nteers, serving in
thout two years.
hassified with re-
battles they were
eft. Of the three nts in the service
econd on the list.
l in the battle of

ticed dentistry in
New Castle, Pa., n both cities. He
the home about rn in New York his boyhood days
t, and was about

ang Consolidat-Clerk.

esterday morning
old fever at his th avenue, Allewas, previous to lapstcher of the Co. for many olidation he ref the company at house. Mr. Stu-
, and unmarried.
hree brothers sur-
hurled by Hilman
d Schenley Lodge
funeral will take noon at 3 o'clock
e.

ng, a Monongа-aper Writee.

ovember 21.—Miss ghter of the late
ed of consumption
mother on Main
in her 25th year.
or on the Monon-
an" for nearly five o be one of the e state had she lived. Miss King
Woman's Press
d well known in
was highly respects. Miss King was ort time to Harry ent young man of

a Well-Known Citizen.

of the most wideidents of Wilkins-morning at his resi-30 Wallace avenue.
ge. Mr. Boeringer
ber of General Cus-
U. W., also Elsasinterstutzungs vere-Allegheny, respec-
will have charge of gements for which pleted.

aler of the Iron Bank.

l-known resident of ast night at 11:45
s very well known
ing been cashier of nk for a number of rgess of Mt. Oliver, ber of the Masonic ealhs.

on of late Richard
, died yesterday at rother, Walter, 161
The funeral will
on at 2 o'clock.

n, mother of the

A WOMAN ANARCHIST.

EMMA GOLDMAN TEACHES ANARCHY to 250 LABORING PEOPLE.

Her Lecture in German to an Audience in the Duquesne Dance Hall on Wylie Avenue Last Night—She Pours Red Hot Anarchy into the Mass and Leaves It to Work—Her Criticisms of Politics.

A motley crew was the 250 men and women who assembled in the Duquesne dancing hall, on Wylie avenue, last night to listen to a lecture by Emma Goldman, the Anarchist. The men in the audience mostly kept their hats on and puffed industriously at vile-smelling stogies and cigarettes. The air was dense with smoke and reeking with fumes when Miss Goldman came in about 8:30 o'clock.

H. Gordon, president of the Pittsburg Socialistic society, opened the meeting with a short talk, and then introduced Miss Goldman. The latter is a short and rather good-looking young woman, whose deep gray eyes and gold eyeglasses give her a decided air of intellectuality and finesse. Miss Goldman began at once her lecture, which was delivered in the German language, and in a full, clear voice she continued to exhort her audience for over an hour and a half.

In substance she said:

"Fellow-workmen and fellow-workwomen, you know it is an old saying that Anarchists do not believe in a God. Yet, were I a praying woman, I should certainly pray that God would take pity on the poor laboret and give us fair weather for our meeting to-morrow. Moses of old led the children for 40 long years through the wilderness, wanderers on the face of the globe, before they at last reached the land of promise, and from that day to this have the Jews been a persecuted race, hunted from land to land, until finally they turned to America, the new land of promise, where they can all do what they please, until a big policeman with a club comes along and tells them to desist. The difference between the life of the Jew in Russia and in America is that there he is under the surveillance of the gendarmes, who are a poor class like themselves, while here in America they are ordered about by burly policemen who live at ease and draw fat salaries. There he must work like a galley slave whether he will or no. Here he is free—free to starve, free to be robbed and swindled on every hand. But the moment he seeks to organize labor, or assert his rights or strike for the defense of his dearest interests he is no longer free, but is apprehended and thrown in prison. The greatest hope of the few in this country is that he can save enough from his earnings to make him a wealthy man when he returns to his family in Europe. He forgets that here in this free land when he earns $5 he must at once spend it to feed and clothe himself.

Most Jewish youths when they come to this country know no trade, for in Europe it is a disgrace for them to work at a trade—that is left to the lower classes among the Gentiles, while the Jews are the tradespeople. Consequently when he gets here and finds all mercantile pursuits filled by Americans, he is destitute of a means of support, and very soon learns that when it comes to cheating he is far outstripped by the American born.

"Are not the richest people here Americans? Is there any place in the 400 for a Jew? All the capital is in the hands of Americans and they control every interest. The Jew has every opportunity, according to law, of rising officially and can fill any office except that of President. Then why does he not rise unless because he is kept down and deprived of his rights by Americans? The Americans rail at the European and blame all our social evils on 'those foreigners.' They forget that their forefathers, the English, the Dutch, French, etc., came to this country and in the name of justice, of civilization, and of God, robbed and murdered the innocent savage, the sole possessor of the land for ages. Moses, brough us ten laws, one of which was 'Thou shalt not steal.' This law has come to be applied only to a certain class. For example, a poor, starving wretch, dying from hunger and cold, steals bread or clothing or money. Brought before a judge it is demanded of him if he did not know of the Divine prohibition of theft. Then he is given a so-called trial and imprisoned. If the man of wealth steals whole estates, whole factories, entire railroads or immense fortunes on change he is called a 'shrewd man' and honored with rank and title. (Applause.)

"If a rich woman is caught shoplifting, the wealthy court has a new word [illegible] and says she is afflicted with is not for Me is against Me." 'Workmen of all lands, unite, and we shall be free," cried the lecturer. "What wonder we are despised and trodden down when we do not resist, but say: 'God will protect us.'"

Continuing, Miss Goldman told the fable of the old, old man who was seen planting trees, and when asked why he did so when he could hope to eat none of their fruit, replied that he had posterity to provide for. So, she said, should the Socialist do who, though in ignorance himself, and consequently in poverty, should see to it that his children are educated, so that what they earn shall go to themselves and not be taken away to feed the rich. She made a bitter attack on Carnegie. "He slaves you and robs you to feed his already fat purse and then turns about and to conciliate you, presents you with a fine library, music hall, and all that sort of thing when you are too poor to even pay to hear the music."

She urged upon her hearers that they fight for shorter hours and more pay. She bewailed the necessity of child labor and its results. "When such scenes of starvation as are daily noted about us become common it is time to cry 'Give us liberty or give us death,'" she said. Then lowering her voice from its high key of excitement to the modulated tones of a conversation she began to speak of Alexander Berkman, the Anarchist who is now serving a twenty-two year sentence in the Western penitentiary for attempting the life of H. C. Frick at the time of the Homestead strike. She pictured Frick in the enjoyment of health while Berkman languishes behind prison bars.

"To be an Anarchist is enough to get yourself hung in America for attempting even a small crime," she asserted. The judge, she said, knew Frick to be a millionaire, while his assailant was a hated Anarchist.

"Alexander Berkman," she exclaimed, "is good, brave, noble. What he did he did of his own accord, prompted only by a spirit of resentment against the brutality and mishandling he had suffered from the superintendent of the mills. We Anarchists make no distinction as to race or color, so it is our duty to intercede for him because he stood for our interests. Therefore I appeal to you to contribute a little to alleviate the misery of his prison existence."

Miss Goldman herself took up the collection, which amounted to $10.78.

"When I was in prison, to my shame, for ten months, I did not find rich women ever confined. Only the poor are punished. The rich do not commit crimes. In the name of Berkman I thank you for your gift and will say that no one knows what may happen in this country before his long sentence expires. The day may come when he shall see the walls of his prison fall down, blown up by the hand of the revolutionist."

This closed the lecture after which followed a sort of question box, conducted by Miss Goldmann. She announced for a meeting in the same place this afternoon at 3 o'clock to be addressed in English.

F. DEWITT TALMAGE SPOKE.

Wylie Avenue Rescue Mission Crowded Last Night—Other Speakers.

The Rev. Frank De Witt Talmage, of the Second Presbyterian church, Pittsburg, was present last night at the Wylie Avenue Rescue mission, and delivered a short address. Notwithstanding the inclemency of the weather, the room was crowded.

Rev. Talmage was late in reaching the mission, and while waiting, President John W. Moreland spoke of the great good being done by the mission and cited several instances where prodigal sons had been returned to their homes and families, and who now led upright lives, when but a few months ago they were out in sin. He said the mission was a beacon light against the saloon, and that there were more paupers made from the use of rum in Allegheny county than the rich could care for.

He was followed by Comrade Thomas Smith, an old soldier. Smith said that he had been separated from his family for seven years all on account of strong drink, but that he had at last been saved. He implored those present to at once sign the pledge. Captain Barbour made one of his short but pointed arguments relating his experience and the results. Mr. George Webb, a member of Rev. Talmage's church, said: "I had lost home, friends and everything on earth, and was saved through the influence of Rev. Talmage." Other speakers gave their experiences.

Rev. Talmage was then introduced and his address was confined to the curse of rum. Among other things he said:

"If our churches would stand together shoulder to shoulder, as the saloonkeepers do, we could close every saloon in the city. I am not a crank. Some people would like you to live on wind pudding. I would take a drink of whisky for snake bite, but the difference is that I will take my drink after the bite, and you fellows will take yours before. A man loses all moral feeling, and becomes a dead beat; he is kicked out of his position; his friends forsake him and from the use of intoxicants he becomes a drunken sot.

"If you won't stop by the grace of God, for God's sake stop some way. Some of you will go straight from this meeting to a saloon. When you go home think of what you have heard here to-night and decide to change your life before it is too

TO HELP ARMENIANS.

THE REV. B. FAY MILLS WILL PLEAD THEIR CAUSE TO-DAY.

Says 40,000 Christianized Armenians Will Perish Unless Aid Is Sent Them—Will Deliver Two Lectures in This City and One in Allegheny. Expects to Realize a Large Sum for the Victims.

The Rev. B. Fay Mills arrived in this city last night and registered at the Hotel Anderson. To-day he will address three meetings in aid of the suffering Armenians. The first address will be made this morning at 10:30 o'clock in the Second Presbyterian church in this city. In the afternoon at 3:30 o'clock the Rev. Mr. Mills will address a meeting at Carnegie hall, in Allegheny, and in the evening he will speak at the Sixth U. P. church, Pittsburg. The statement which appeared in one of the evening papers to the effect that he would address a union meeting of ministers this afternoon is incorrect. A "Leader" reporter called on the Rev. B. Fay Mills at the Hotel Anderson last night, and found him, though the hour was late, busily engaged in getting together his notes for the three addresses which he will deliver today.

The Rev. Mr. Mills is a young man of striking appearance, and he is the possessor of a remarkably rich and melodious voice, which he uses to advantage when delivering lectures which is his present employment. The lectures he delivers are based on the social evils of the day and their character may be gathered from their titles, such as, "What Must Society Do to Be Saved?" "The Emptying of Hell, or the Story of a Carrot," "The Kingdom of Heaven On Earth," and "The Christianization of Christianity."

While engaged in evangelical work some years ago the Rev. Mr. Mills became interested in the Armenians and he made a close and exhaustive study of the subject. Whenever he can get a moment from the demands made upon his time in fulfilling engagements on his lecturing tours, he spends it in working for the Armenian cause. In this manner, through the collections taken up by him, he has turned in the sum of $25,000 to the national Armenian relief committee, of which the Hon. David J. Brewer is chairman, and Brown Bros., the well-known New York banking firm, treasurers. It must be remembered that the work done by the Rev. Mr. Mills is purely voluntary and that he is not acting under the direction of any of the Armenian relief societies.

Last summer while attending the convention of Christian Endeavor held in Washington, D. C., the Rev. Mr. Mills delivered a lecture on the horrors of Armenia, among his audience was the Rev. Dr. McMillan, of Allegheny, who was much impressed with the lecture. Some days ago, finding that he would be in this neighborhood, the Rev. Mr. Mills wrote to Dr. McMillan and offered to deliver an address in aid of the suffering Armenians. His offer was promptly accepted, and today's program is the result.

The Rev. Mr. Mills said that he had received a letter from the Armenian relief committee to the effect that unless foreign aid is sent to support them, 40,000 Armenian Christians will perish from starvation and pestilence during the winter.

The Rev. B. Fay Mills was born in Rahway, N. J., in 1857. He is the son of Dr. Thornton Mills, a well-known Presbyterian minister, and is himself a member of the presbytery of Albany. He graduated from the Lake Forest university, Ill., in 1879. The Rev. Mr. Mills divides his lectures under the following heads:

I. Historical. 1. The first Christian nation of the world has been oppressed and persecuted by the Mohammedans for 600 years, and has witnessed a good confession. The persecutions would have ceased any hour that they would have abandoned their faith. Only a little more than one-tenth of the original 20,000,000 are left. 2. Since 1890 there has been an attempted extermination, caused by Mohammedan fanaticism, the conscienceless shrewdness of the Turkish sultan, the growth in intelligence of the Armenians and the utter failure of European nations to fulfill their obligations. Since August, 1894, 60,000 have been killed with great atrocity, and 500,000 rendered homeless and foodless.

II. Political. 1. Turkey has been kept in existence for fifty years by the jealousy of the European powers. Russia wants it all, and England is determined she shall not have it. 2. By the treaty of Berlin (1878) the powers granted the security of life and property of Armenians in Turkey, and Great Britain assumed the position of their special protectur. She has utterly failed to keep her vow. 3. The United States has failed to protect American citizens and property, or to require indemnity or apology for direst outrages distracted the attention of Great Britain when she seemed about to strike a decisive blow.

III. The present need. Thousands have died of pestilence and starvation and cold. England and America have sent $600,000 when we should have sent $5,000,000, at the least. The relief is perfectly administered. Not a farthing has been misapplied. Forty thousand more will die before January unless we send more money.

FINNEGAN CONVICTED.

The Pittsburg Pugilist Goes to the Workhouse for 18 Months.

WASHINGTON, PA., November 21, 1896. John Finnegan, the Pittsburg pugilist [illegible] court her on the charge

TURKEY DRESSING FOR THANKSGIVING DINNER.

But you want as well as the T you to a T. L or Overcoat to well dressed for pointment here.

BEST CAPA

We employ more tail make better work, and Our popular prices act t

Pants to ord
Suits to orde
Overcoats to

Samples and rules samples and prices and

MATCH
IF YOU C 954 an
S

CROKER SAID NOTH

The Tammany Leader Arr
From England Yeste

NEW YORK, Novemb

Richard Croker arrived hon gland this afternoon on the Louis and was welcomed by of Tammany leaders. He wa
ing to talk about his race ho was reticent concerning polit asked why he did not come o
the Tammany forces durin paign.

"Well, I thought I would run the machine," he said glance.

"Are you satisfied with t Sheehan ran the machine?"

"I prefer to say nothing at duct of the campaign as yet.

"What is your opinion of S attitude?"

"That is another subject I to discuss at present."

"Do you think the result o will end the silver agitation
try?"

"I get my impression from men who are informed. I an opportunity to do this not in a position to say an it."

"Did you approve of the e the Tammany machine in
an?"

"I have not said I disap
Mr. Croker quickly. "Lat have something to say."

"Have you returned to ass ership of Tammany Hall?"

"Oh, now, I am not read yet."

Mr. Croker laughingly
Hanna?" when the name man was mentioned. When immense amount of money
by the Republican campaig defeat Bryan he said sen wasn't necessary. All the R to do was to leave Bryan
cerning the fate of the fo
Gilroy and Gratt, Senator other braves who bolted th
Mr. Croker would not tal

EMERY WHEEL B

One Man Killed and An ly Injured at South Penn.

74

890320002

The Emma Goldman Papers

[Excerpt from Lecture] A Woman Anarchist / Emma Goldman.– p. 6 ; 44 cm. In The Pittsburg[h] Leader. –(Nov. 22, 1896).

Obtained from the State Library of Pennsylvania. Institutional Location: Special Collections.

...g Consolidat...
...Clerk.

...sterday morning ...id fever at his ...n avenus, Alto... ...as, previous to ...apatcher of the ... Co. for many ...lidation he re... the company at ...uss . Mr. Stu... and unmarried. ...ree brothers sur... ...uried by Hinman ... Schenley Lodge ...neral will take ...oon at 2 o'clock

...s, a Monongа...
...per Writer.

...vember 21.—Miss ...hter of the late ...d of consumption ...mother on Main ...n her 25th year. ... on the Monon... ...r" for nearly five ... be one of the ... state had she ...ved. Miss King ... Woman's ... well ... ... respect... ...s King was ...me to Harry ... young man of

...Well-Known ...Citizen.

...f the most wide... ...ents of Wilkins... ...rning at his resi... Wallace avenue. ..., Mr. Boeringer ...r of General Cus... ...J. W., also Elsas... ...erstutzungs vere... ...Allegheny, respec... ...ll have charge of ...ements for which ...leted.

...er of the Iron ...Bank.

...known resident of ...t night at 11:45 ... very well known ...g been cashier of ... for a number of ...ess of Mt. Oliver, ...r of the Masonic

...ths.

... of late Richard ...lled yesterday at ...ther, Walter, 161 ... The funeral will ... at 3 o'clock.

... mother of the ...ent coal operators ...here yesterday of ...

...on Friday evening ...nklin street, Alle... ...he funeral will oc... ...n.

MURDER.

...s the Death of ...onald.

...Coroner McDowell ...laremont on the ...naid. McDonald ... a difficulty with ... at the corner of ...nues. McDonald ...d and died from ... The jury held ... recommended the ...nd jury. ...ree witnesses was ... were P. C. Duffy, ... Officer Joseph ...at on the day of ... met probably for ...aid was intoxicat... ...gled a short time ...away. McDonald ...is a cripple, and ...cDonald over the ...arried—one of the ...e campaign with ...ted and the next ... sent to the work... ...rged. McDonald ...hen at the station, ...officers blamed his ...en he went to the ...ians there discov... He died on Fri...

... which confirmed ...

...ly now. They have ...ospitals and cheap ... He claimed he ...hood of Knoxville,

...OF $25.

...With the Deed ...iled on His Per...

...to Officer Michael ...d told him that an ...lender had robbed ...lans. Valender was ...ear and the latter ...robber and locked ...station. While this ...an who claimed to ...peared and the of... ...s name. Valender ...suspicious person. ... $1,300 was found. ...ed up in a small ...ne of his legs. He ...s his own.

they are ordered about by burly policemen who live at ease and draw fat salaries. There he must work like a galley slave whether he will or no. Here he is free—free to starve, free to be robbed and swindled on every hand. But the moment he seeks to organize labor, or assert his rights or strike for the defense of his dearest interests he is no longer free, but is apprehended and thrown in prison. The greatest hope of the few in this country is that he can save enough from his earnings to make him a wealthy man when he returns to his family in Europe. He forgets that here in this free land when he earns $5 he must at once spend it to feed and clothe himself.

Most Jewish youths when they come to this country know no trade, for in Europe it is a disgrace for them to work at a trade—that is left to the lower classes among the Gentiles, while the Jews are the tradespeople. Consequently when he gets here and finds all mercantile pursuits filled by Americans, he is destitute of a means of support, and very soon learns that when it comes to cheating he is far outstripped by the American born.

"Are not the richest people here Americans? Is there any place in the 400 for a Jew? All the capital is in the hands of Americans and they control every interest. The Jew has every opportunity, according to law, of rising officially and can fill any office except that of President.' Then why does he not rise unless because he is kept down and deprived of his rights by Americans? The Americans rail at the European and blame all our social evils on 'those foreigners.' They forget that their forefathers, the English, the Dutch, French, etc., came to this country and in the name of justice, of civilization, and of God, robbed and murdered the innocent savage, the sole possessor of the land for ages. Moses, when he came down from Mt. Sinai, brough us ten laws, one of which was 'Thou shalt not steal.' This law has come to be applied only to a certain class. For example, a poor, starving wretch, dying from hunger and cold, steals bread or clothing or money. Brought before a judge it is demanded of him if he did not know of the Divine prohibitinn of theft. Then he is given a so-called trial and imprisoned. If the man of wealth steals whole estates, whole factories, entire railroads or immense fortunes on change he is called a 'shrewd man' and honored with rank and title. (Applause.)

"If a rich woman is caught shoplifting, the wealthy court has a new word for her, and says she is afflicted with 'kleptomania' and pities her. (Applause and laughter.)

"We are told by the good Christians that we must live and endure these evils in God-like patience, awaiting our reward in heaven. What do I care what awaits me in heaven! I have to live now on earth! They tell us laws will regulate these evils. Through study and education we are becoming more and more convinced that the more laws men have the more miserable is their condition.

"In politics there are no good parties. When these parties place their candidates before the public they fill their mouths with sweet-sounding promises of good to be done and reforms to be achieved, but when these selfsame men come to power they not once forget their good words and spurn the laboring man, who elected them, underfoot, calling him a fool. Bryan is an intelligent man and an advocate of the people. McKinley is also a good man, but his past record as governor is against him. But you cannot put your trust in any of them, fellow-workmen! Cleveland was paid $200,000 for his four years' service to this country, and yet he became a multi-millionaire. Perhaps God was good, and rained down money like manna of old. No! Cleveland it is who made a contract with the Czar of Russia, the greatest tyrant on earth, stipulating for a consideration of a few million to send back suspect Nihilists to Russia, where they could be cast in prison or executed. Cleveland it is who even now is receiving money from Spain for refusing to listen to the cry of distress from king-ridden Cuba. From President to policeman it is the same, save that where the 'cupper' is tipped a dollar Grover rakes in a million. I will not prophesy of McKinley, for he is not yet in the chair, and has not been tried, but let us hope he will not spend the time of his administration fishing and duck shooting. (Laughter.)

"It is not the inclination of any man in power to better the condition of the laboring man unless his own is greatly helped."

Miss Goldman then repeated in glowing details the story of the creation of the first man and woman, and their expulsion from the garden because they ate of fruit that gave them knowledge. "God was right," she said. "When He kept them in ignorance he had absolute control over them, and now our potentates are just as wise as God, and would forbid the mass of the people eating of the fruit of the tree of knowledge, for they know that then they will appreciate their degradation and rebel."

She likened the condition of the Anarchist now to that of the Saviour in His last days, when He said, "Whose ... expires. The day may come when he shall see the walls of his prison fall down, blown up by the hand of the revolutionist."

This closed the lecture after which followed a sort of question box, conducted by Miss Goldmann. She announced for a meeting in the same place this afternoon at 3 o'clock to be addressed in English.

F. DEWITT TALMAGE SPOKE.

Wylie Avenue Rescue Mission Crowded Last Night—Other Speakers.

The Rev. Frank De Witt Talmage, of the Second Presbyterian church, Pittsburg, was present last night at the Wylie Avenue Rescue mission, and delivered a short address. Notwithstanding the inclemency of the weather, the room was crowded.

Rev. Talmage was late in reaching the mission, and while waiting, President John W. Moreland spoke of the great good being done by the mission and cited several instances where prodigal sons had been returned to their homes and families, and who now led upright lives, when but a few months ago they were out in sin. He said the mission was a beacon light against the saloon, and that there were more paupers made from the use of rum in Allegheny county than the rich could care for.

He was followed by Comrade Thomas Smith, an old soldier. Smith said that he had been separated from his family for seven years all on account of strong drink, but that he had at last been saved. He implored those present to at once sign the pledge. Captain Barbour made one of his short but pointed arguments relating his experience and the results. Mr. George Webb, a member of Rev. Talmage's church, said: "I had lost home, friends and everything on earth, and was saved through the influence of Rev. Talmage." Other speakers gave their experiences.

Rev. Talmage was then introduced, and his address was confined to the curse of rum. Among other things he said:

"If our churches would stand together shoulder to shoulder, as the saloonkeepers do, we could close every saloon in the city. I am not a crank. Some people would like you to live on wind pudding. I would take a drink of whisky for snake bite, but the difference is that I will take my drink after the bite, and you fellows will take yours before. A man loses all moral feeling, and becomes a dead beat; he is kicked out of his position; his friends forsake him and from the use of intoxicants he becomes a drunken sot.

"If you won't stop by the grace of God, for God's sake stop some way. Some of you will go straight from this meeting to a saloon. When you go home think of what you have heard here to-night and decide to change your life before it is too late."

—Miss Jennie Martin, sister of City Clerk E. J. Martin, entertained a number of her friends on Thursday evening. Singing, dancing and euchre were the principal features. The singing was rendered by a quartet composed of Messrs. Welsch, Van Halter, Demore and Martin. Excellent string music was furnished by Messrs. Neckerman and Hull.

Expressions of Sorrow at the Death of J. B. Murdock, M. D., by the Faculty of the Medical Department of the Western University of Pennsylvania.

Death has removed from us our beloved friend and eminent co-worker, J. B. Murdock, M. D., and we, the faculty of the medical department of the Western University of Pennsylvania, while deploring his loss, bow in humble submission to the Divine will, and render thanks for the consolation afforded in contemplating the work and services of our fellow-member as being beyond that, and complete r than we could have asked. We acknowledge also our gratitude for his worthy example of exalted life, for his lofty exemplification of patience in suffering, and for the comforting evidences of victory over death.

As a faculty we will miss his counsel, his judgment and the infinite resources of his intellect and heart. Engrafted upon our memories will remain his magnetic presence, admirable individuality, lofty humor, vivid imagination and refined moral sensibilities.

We believe it wisdom to thus commiserate each other, and also to recount the pleasures, hopes and virtues which his living presence has awakened, believing that we may thereby receive inspiration to endeavor, like him, to reach the full measure of the image in which we were created.

Into the broken home circle, of which he was the dignified and genial center, we extend our condolence, and commend each one to Him whose promises are so inclusive that "Even His rod and staff are comforting."

We direct that a copy of these expressions of sorrow be sent to the family of the deceased, and that they be printed in the daily papers and Pittsburg "Medical Review."

W. T. ENGLISH,
J. D. THOMAS,
T. L. HAZZARD, Committee.

$145 $145 $145

Buys a 7 1-3-octave Upright Piano, of handsome design, latest improvements and reliable action, at the music store of J. M. Hoffmann & Co., 537 Smithfield street.

...vention of Christian Endeavor held in Washington, D. C., the Rev. Mr. Mills delivered a lecture on the horrors of Armenia, among his audience was the Rev. Dr. McMillan, of Allegheny, who was much impressed with the lecture. Some days ago, finding that he would be in this neighborhood, the Rev. Mr. Mills wrote to Dr. McMillan and offered to deliver an address in aid of the suffering Armenians. His offer was promptly accepted, and today's program is the result.

The Rev. Mr. Mills said that he had received a letter from the Armenian relief committee to the effect that unless foreign aid is sent to support them, 40,000 Armenian Christians will perish from starvation and pestilence during the winter.

The Rev. B. Fay Mills was born in Railway, N. J., in 1857. He is the son of Dr. Thornton Mills, a well-known Presbyterian minister, and is himself a member of the presbytery of Albany. He graduated from the Lake Forest university, Ill., in 1879. The Rev. Mr. Mills divides his lectures under the following heads:

I. Historical. 1. The first Christian nation of the world has been oppressed and persecuted by the Mohammedans for 600 years, and has witnessed a good confession. The persecutions would have ceased any hour that they would have abandoned their faith. Only a little more than one-tenth of the original 20,000,000 are left. 2. Since 1890 there has been an attempted extermination, caused by Mohammedan fanaticism, the conscienceless shrewdness of the Turkish sultan, the growth in intelligence of the Armenians and the utter failure of European nations to fulfill their obligations. Since August, 1894, 60,000 have been killed with great atrocity, and 500,000 rendered homeless and foodless.

II. Political. 1. Turkey has been kept in existence for fifty years by the jealousy of the European powers. Russia wants it all, and England is determined she shall not have it. 2. By the treaty of Berlin (1878) the powers granted the security of life and property of Armenians in Turkey, and Great Britain assumed the position of their special protector. She has utterly failed to keep her vow. 3. The United States has failed to protect American citizens and property, or to require indemnity or apology for direst outrages upon Americans. The Venezuelan message distracted the attention of Great Britain when she seemed about to strike a decisive blow.

III. The present need. Thousands have died of pestilence and starvation and cold. England and America have sent $600,000 when we should have sent $6,000,000, at the least. The relief is perfectly administered. Not a farthing has been misapplied. Forty thousand more will die before January unless we send more money.

FINNEGAN CONVICTED.

The Pittsburg Pugilist Goes to the Workhouse for 18 Months.

WASHINGTON, PA., November 21, 1896.

John Finnegan, the Pittsburg pugilist who was tried in court here on the charge of assaulting James Munn, at Finleyville, last summer, was convicted this morning and sentenced to 18 months in the workhouse.

James Munn and James Rennie were convicted of stoning a B. & O. train at the time the assault occurred, and were sentenced to each pay $5 fine and the costs.

OFFICERS RE-ELECTED.

Trumbull County, O., Fair's Profits Only $38.

WARREN, O., November 21, 1896.

J. L. Kennedy, of Howland, and O. D. Morgan, of Warren, were re-elected secretary and treasurer of the Trumbull County Agricultural society this afternoon. The society cleared only $38 on the last fair after paying several old accounts.

ELDER HANAWALT INJURED.

The Steely Boys' Pastor Fell From a Haymow.

GREENSBURG, November 21, 1896.

Elder George Hanawalt, pastor of the Dunkard church, at Bnucher, in Ligonier valley, yesterday fell through the haymow and sustained injuries that will cause his death. His kneecap was split and he was injured internally.

He became famous through being the pastor of Joe and Dave Steely, who murdered old man Umberger, in Somerset county, and who were hanged April 2, 1891. Elder Hanawalt on the following Sunday afternoon preached their funeral sermon.

NO LITHOGRAPH COMBINE.

Erie Item Refused to Join With Buffalo and Cincinnati Concerns.

ERIE, November 21, 1896.

The report that the "Courier" lithograph company have gone into a combine is denied by the Erie end of the business. F. J. Walker, of the Erie company, stated that his company had refused to combine. Walker says their business this year will amount to between $200,000 and $250,000.

Butler's Paper Solvent.

RALEIGH, N. C., November 21, 1896.

Senator Marion Butler's paper here, the "Caucasian," is no longer in the sheriff's hands. Judgments against the paper which aggregated only $213, were paid today. There is no issue this week. The paper is entirely solvent.

Brakeman's Hand Smashed.

George Harris had his left hand smashed while coupling freight cars in the Valley railroad Forty-third street yards yesterday afternoon. He was attended by a physician and sent to his home on Forty-eighth street.

954 and ... S...

CROKER SAID NOTH...

The Tammany Leader Arri... From England Yester...

New York, Novembe...

Richard Croker arrived home... England this afternoon on the s... Louis and was welcomed by a ... of Tammany leaders. He was ... ing to talk about his race hor... was reticent concerning politi... asked why he did not come ov... the Tammany forces during ... paign.

"Well, I thought I would le... run the machine," he said w... glance.

"Are you satisfied with the ... Sheehan ran the machine?" w...

"I prefer to say nothing abo... duct of the campaign as yet."

"What is your opinion of Se... attitude?"

"That is another subject I d... to discuss at present."

"Do you think the result of ... will end the silver agitation in... try?"

"I get my impression from t... men who are informed. I ha... an opportunity to do this ye... not in a position to say anyt... it."

"Did you approve of the emp... the Tammany machine in h... an?"

"I have not said I disappr... Mr. Croker quickly. "Later ... have something to say."

"Have you returned to assur... ership of Tammany Hall?" ho...

"Oh, now, I am not ready ... yet."

Mr. Croker laughingly ask... Hanna?" when the name of ... man was mentioned. When t... immense amount of money ha... by the Republican campaign ... defeat Bryan he said senten... wasn't necessary. All the Repu... to do was to leave Bryan a... cerning the fate of the form... Gilroy and Grant, Senator ... other braves who bolted the R... Mr. Croker would not talk.

EMERY WHEEL BU...

One Man Killed and Anot... ly Injured at South ... Tenn.

CHATTANOOGA, TENN., Novemb...

By the bursting to-day of a ... wheel in the works of the Bla... foundry at South Pittsburg, ... Howk, who was engaged near ... was instantly killed and Geo... some distance away, was s... flying fragment and so badly ... he will die. The shop was ... up.

CAPTAIN FORD HONO...

Ford City Formally Celeb... Plate Glass King's Bir...

FORD CITY, Novemb...

This afternoon the J. B. For... sociation, the members of wh... officials and employees of the ... plant of the Pittsburg plate ... pany, formally observed the ... day of the founder of the ... glass industry, Captain J. B. ...

The association was formed ... ago when a monument in ho... tain Ford was erected in t... this place. Each year sinc... ciation has fittingly celebrate... ation as well as the anniver... birth of Captain Ford. To... a drizzling rain, there was ... tendance. Friends were pr... Pittsburg, Tarentum and Kl... pleasing feature was the ... Captain Ford himself, who h... home from a western trip th... attend the meeting.

The exercises were held in ... hall. M. R. Pepper preside... prayer by Rev. Mackey, of th... M. E. church, the audience ... sang "America." Miss Lil... recited an original produc... "Captain Ford and Wife." ... of the day was made by Orr... Esq., of Kittanning, who pai... life-work of Captain Ford, ... his enterprise had benefited ... workmen and added untold w... county. His congratulatory ... Captain Ford were heartily ... statement of the associatin... its present financial conditio... by J. M. Nelson. Music ... by the Ford City band and ... lin club. There were sin... school children and the Germ... and a violin solo by Dr. S. ... of Kittanning.

MISS A. HARE C...

Erie Man Owns a U... Dated 1783.

ERIE, Noven...

E. W. Chellis, manager o... roofing company, is the ow... of great value. It is a U... copper of 1... similar co... by ex-President Harrison ... leading railroad companies ... other one of which they ... under the Northwest ...

890313003

The Emma Goldman Papers

[Summary of Lecture] For Berkmann and Anarchism / Emma Goldman.— p. 2 ; 44 cm. In The Pittsburg[h] Post. —(Nov. 22, 1896).

Permission to reproduce or quote in any form must be obtained from the University of Pittsburgh Libraries. Institutional Location: Darlington Memorial Library.

LS WILL DROP DECEMBER 1.

THORITATIVE STATEMENT
T PRICES WILL BE LOW-ERED BY THE POOL.

EMENT IS ABROGATED.

Cutting to Discourage Mushroom Competition.

W GLASS IS ADVANCING.

nail prices are likely to take a
as a result of the meeting of nufacturers' associations to be the Waldorf, New York, Decem-Assurance is given "The Post" anufacturer identified with the l association that a reduction made. To what extent the base ble will not be known until the turers get together, but it is that cheaper wire and cut nails ad after the first of next month uction has been anticipated, but information to this effect has king.

ssociation price for wire nails $2 55 for carload lots, f. o. b., g, but this base is not adhered
ly. Jobbers have been generally and manufacturers outside the operly underselling the pool
t is anticipated that the base
ll be reduced from $2 55 to $1 25
The reduction will be made to the demand of the jobbers and purpose of driving the mushroom
, which have sprung up all over try, out of the field. In expectaa big drop in prices, jobbers are ying any stocks, and the small likewise shy of the situation and aded up at the present time.

o Kill the Small Fry.

tements which have enabled the maintain high prices will be off nd of the month, and may not ved immediately. It is believed e purpose of the manufacturers he trade of the small fry, and price about $1 25 the small pro who must buy wire will not be compete. If the pool is successontrolling the market, it is berices will not be put up to such again as to give cause for comit is generally conceded that $2 is a fair price, and if the as-can hold it at that figure no kick. Nails are selling in Chi-low as $2, and lower for carload brokers are offering big lots prices, and are believed to be or pool manufacturers.

hought that the dissatisfaction among the manufacturers may e disruption of the pool at the rk meeting, but the jobbers do to see it go by the board, as en a benefit on the whole, and uld not like to see the old conestablishied. The attack made ool by L. C. Bramkamp will be d at the New York meeting.
ns that the existence of the y maintained by the Wire and nufacturers' association is con-the interstate commerce law violation of the Sherman anti-of 1890. The attorney for the made no attempt to deny the gations of the bill.

ade to Boom Prices.

actically admitted that such a had existence in fact. He ar-the object of such combinations nhance the price of wire nails ited the bill and the argument to show that it had the price from 80 cents per omething over $2, resulting in a several million dollars. He at the object of the Sherman to protect interstate commerce ic, and he maintained that cond no right, or if it had, it had sumed it, to attempt to reguate contracts within a state.

ill cannot be supported at all e Sherman act of 1890. If the ts entered into a conspiracy an advance, and are satisfied with the terms now paid, as they know they are receiving the highest wages possible at the present time.

The miners in the vicinity of Brownsville are still on strike, but it is reported that the Beaumont and Knob diggers have agreed to return to work to-morrow morning for $3 1. The miners' committee will meet with the operators at the coal exchange to-morrow to discuss the demand for an advance in the mining rates. It is generally understood that the operators will not concede the advance.

SUFFERING ARMENIA.

Evangelist Mills Arousing Ministers to Petition Congress to Act.

Rev. B. Fay Mills, of Fort Edward, N. Y., is in the city to work among local clergymen in the interest of Armenia. He will address a mass meeting this morning in the Second Presbyterian church, Penn avenue and Seventh street, another in the afternoon at 3:30 o'clock in Allegheny Carnegie hall, and in the evening at the Sixth U. P. church on North Highland avenue. Mr. Mills is the evangelist who has recently taken up the cause of the Armenians, and his addresses are rather from a political than a religious standpoint.

"Yes," he said last night in his room at the Hotel Anderson, "I believe that the United States government has been sadly negligent in taking decisive action in regard to Armenia and the depredations which have been committed on Americans residing there. They have allowed a whole year to pass without securing a cent of indemnity or the arrest of a single offender in connection with the Harpoot outrage of November 11, 1895, where 15 honored American citizens had their homes destroyed by the Turkish soldiers and mob. The Turkish government is making a deep and far-reaching plan to expel all the American missionaries, and now is the time that the ministers and others should use their influence in petitioning congress to do something. This winter will be the hardest for the Armenians they have ever experienced, and there will be more starvation and exposure. Hence we are making especially strong the canvass for funds to help them. The National Armenian relief association of New York, of which David J. Brewer, supreme court justice, is president, is the place for money to go. There are sure to be hundreds of refugees coming to this country this winter, and I only hope the government will not disgrace itself by keeping them out, contrary to our constitutional pretensions, as it did a month or so ago."

DEAD NEARLY A MONTH.

Boys Saw the Body Two Weeks Ago, but Supposed It That of a Drunken Man.

Coroner Heber McDowell was notified yesterday that the body of an unknown man had been found on the Stonecipher farm, near Oakdale. Deputy-Coroner A. B. Moreland went out last night, made an investigation and held an inquest. Saturday, November 14, some boys saw the dead man's body lying where it was found yesterday, but they supposed the man was drunk, and were afraid to go near him. Yesterday afternoon Nicholas Meyers was passing along the same place and saw the body. He reported the matter to Chris Mantz, who sent word to the coroner's office.

The body was badly decomposed. The dead man had a black steel calendar watch in his pocket, which had stopped Sunday, October 25. He had one small memorandum book, in which were written the names: Hermann Kohl, William Russel and Frederick Kruckemeyer, but he had a German bible, a hymn book and German and English text book, in which the name of Hermann Kohl only appeared, and that is supposed to be his name.

The man was about 40 years old, 5 feet 8 inches high, and weighed about 175 pounds, and partially bald. He wore light trousers, blue coat and vest, a gum coat, and high boots, laced up in the front. He is supposed to have been an oil driller. Among some small papers in his clothes was a prescription No. 1863, filled at the McDonald pharmacy on October 20, 1896. The pharmacy was communicated with, but word was received that it

FOR BERKMANN AND ANARCHISM.

EMMA GOLDMANN LECTURES BEFORE A LIMITED AUDIENCE OF KINDRED SPIRITS.

GUARDED IN HER REMARKS.

Courts and the Present System of Government Condemned.

RAISING MONEY FOR A PARDON.

Anarchy and the liberation of Alexander Berkmann were the subjects of a lengthy address in German, delivered by Mrs. Emma Brady, better known as Emma Goldmann, in the Duquesne dancing academy, 512 Wylie avenue, last night. The woman, who several years ago became famous in New York for making incendiary speeches, for which she was sent to Blackwell island for 10 months, had a typical audience. There were about 150 men, women and children present. Nearly all were Russians or Poles. There were others, many of them Americans, who dropped in for a few moments, apparently to satisfy their curiosity. Two policemen were auditors for a short time, taking their places near the door. They did not remain long. There were fumes of tobacco smoke thick enough at times to cut, but this did not seem to have any effect on the speaker.

She was introduced by Harry Gordon, a machinist. He made an extended harangue in a Russian-German-Hebrew jargon, which was difficult to understand. He finally introduced the speaker, who at once sailed into her subject with a vim. She is a small woman, with an intelligent countenance, decorated with gold-rimmed eye glasses. She was neatly attired, in an up-to-date navy blue dress, puff sleeves and masculine shirt front, collar and tie. She spoke in a clear, resonant voice, and at once gained the interest and attention of the audience. Barring the appearance of a small barking dog, and the cries of an omnipresent small boy with a big voice, her speech was not interrupted. At the outset she stated that owing to the preponderence of Hebrews in her audience she would change the subject of her lecture.

She Changed Her Topic.

She had intended speaking on "The Effects of the Recent Election on the Condition of the Workingman," but changed it to "The Jews in America." As an introduction she said a God had caused it to rain on an evening when there was to be an Anarchist meeting, hoping that many would be kept away.

She launched into her subject by referring to Moses and the promised land, which so many of the Hebrews in foreign countries thought to be America. They came here, she said, under the impression that gold could be picked up on the streets, and they would be free men. This she claimed they found out to their sorrow was untrue. They soon learned that they were a species of slaves who paid the salaries of policemen, judges and other officers. Referring to President Cleveland she said the laboring men of the country paid him $50,000 a year for hunting and fishing. She handled the millionaires of the country without gloves, and intimated that should they be relieved by death the country would not suffer. She impressed her hearers with the importance of educating their children in the doctrine of self-preservation and anarchy, claiming that their forefathers had neglected a duty which a present generation should perform. She did not openly advocate revolution or a resort to arms, and did not go into the details of how relief from the present conditions could be sought. Her hearers were left to form their own conclusions. She berated the courts and high officials for giving the rich liberties the poor did not enjoy. She argued that when a poor man committed a crime he was given the full extent of the law, while the rich man by committing crime made himself eligible

FATALLY HURT, THOUGHT DRUN

TWO DOCTORS FAILED TO DI NOSE CORRECTLY PETER M'DONALD'S CASE.

HIS SKULL WAS FRACTUR

Was the Victim of an Assault T Ended in His Death.

THE CORONER HOLDS AN INQU

The inquest into the death of P
McDonald, the workhouse prisoner died last Friday evening from inj received prior to his incarceration, held yesterday at the workhouse,
oner McDowell conducting the inq
The evidence produced shows a of care on the part of certain pers or else proves how doctors are liab be mistaken in their diagnosis of a of drunkenness. The facts show McDonald was considered to be drunk when he was arrested, was to be only drunk when he was rece at the workhouse, and was still sidered only drunk for two days his arrival at Claremont. He died fractured skull.

McDonald and Frank Kelly were rested by Policeman Joseph Thom October 29. At the hearing next m ing it was proved that Kelly had saulted McDonald, striking him on head with a McKinley cane, a tin af containing the head of the p dent-elect. McDonald was known the police to be very quarrelsome, Kelly's story that the old man had assaulted him was believed. Kelly discharged and McDonald was sen the workhouse for 30 days. About days afterward the superintendent the workhouse telephoned to Supe tendent of Police A. H. Leslie that Donald was dying. Mr. Leslie sta out that night with three detect visiting all of Kelly's haunts, but unable to find the man. Kelly wa comparative stranger in the city, was known as a "macer," a street gar. He could not be found, and supposed he left town.

An Unprovoked Assault.

William McMahon, a driver for B & Giltinan, the Grant street livery said he was standing in front of the ery stable, and saw McDonald wal north on Grant street. Kelly was sit on the steps in front of Dr. Oldshue's fice at Grant street and Webster ave
When McDonald got opposite to Kelly arose and struck him on the with a cane. McDonald fell, and Mc hon saw Officer Thompson rush ac
Webster avenue and arrest both
They were sent to the central statio
a patrol wagon.

P. C. Duffy, who keeps the hote
Webster avenue and Grant street,
Kelly strike McDonald and told Tho son to make the arrest.

Officer Thompson testified that Mr. Duffy spoke to him about the he turned and saw McDonald lying the ground, and saw Kelly strike with a cane as he lay there. Thom placed both under arrest. The cane w Kelly used was "all mashed up."
sent both to the central station in patrol wagon. Thompson was at hearing the next morning before M trate McKenna. McDonald was bro out supported by policemen. The ma trate refused to hear the case, and the man back to his cell, and told Dr
L. Taylor to go back and examine
Dr. Taylor started back to the cell
Thompson went home.

Dr. Taylor testified that he was at hearing, examined him and decided there was nothing the matter with except intoxication, and reported the sult of his examination to the magist
The hearing was then held.

Treated as a Common Drunk

Dr. G. M. Kelly, surgeon at the w

The s train of ar

76

BEST COPY AVAILABLE

890313003

The Emma Goldman Papers

[Summary of Lecture] For Berkmann and Anarchism / Emma Goldman.— p. 2 ; 44 cm. In The Pittsburg[h] Post. —(Nov. 22, 1896).

Permission to reproduce or quote in any form must be obtained from the University of Pittsburgh Libraries. Institutional Location: Darlington Memorial Library.

...ught that the ... ng among the manufacturers may the disruption of the pool at the York meeting, bot the jobbers do ish to see it go by the board, as been a benefit on the whole, and would not like to see the old con- established. Tho attack made pool by L. C. Bramkamp will be ered at the New York meeting. aims that the existence of the oly maintained by the Wire and manufactorers' association is con- to the interstate commerce law violation of the Sherman anti- law of 1890. The attorney for the e made no attempt to deny the allegations of the bill.

Made to Boom Prices.

practically admitted that such a oly had existence in fact. He ar- hat the object of such combination o enhance the price of wire nails e cited the bill and its argument ...to show that it had ced the price from 80 cents per something over $2, resulting in a of several million dollars. He that the object of the Sherman as to prolect interstate commerce affic, and he maintained that con- had no right, or if it had, it had assumed it, to attempt to rego- rivate contracts within a state. ld:

bill cannnt be supported at all the Sherman act of 1890. If the ants entered into a conspiracy the only object of the conspir- as to keep up the price of wire If they show 5 that such con- interefered with interstate trade nterference was an incident, not ect, of the conspiracy."

wire nail manufacturers are con- hat they are operating within the nd while not looking for the ap- of the courts on some of the ac- which are seemingly unjust, they tisfied that the final decision will heir favor. It is thought that the n of the supreme court in the trust case has nullified the Sher- aw so far as it is applicable to combinations. It is held on good authority, according to a trade l, that an agreement to establish inerative price is not a violation mon law. If general trade condi- would abnormally depress prices. patch from Philadelphia last night he National hardware jobbers' as- on at its annual meeting just decided to fight the wire nail nd will start independent nail mills pete with the pool plants. No ity is given for this statement. If true, is a change of attitude on rt of the jobbers' association. fore it has been friendly toward l pool.

---

ring to the discharge of a num- the employes of the Consolidated n company, District Master Work- McFarland said yesterday: "I investigated the matter and what I have learned from es who are in a position to I am satisfied that the company making an attempt to break up ganization, as some of the em- believe. The company is not on the union, and as I under- it all the men discharged have t go for cause."

---

ow glass prices are rapidly ad- on account of the depleted owing to the delay in starting dories. The manufacturers have o change in prices, as they have ss to sell. The jobbers having are reaping big profits. In New he jobbers have reduced the dis- to 60 and 5&5 on domestic and 60 per cent on French on ac- of the great scarcity.

port from Jeannette says the mer- of the town on account of the of the wage negotiations last became uneasy and have been on nt of stopping further credit to ass workers. The grocers who en carrying the workers through mmer feared that they would be to collect their accounts, and at ing held Friday night a resolution dopted not to accept credit cer- s issued by the Window glass s' association. Another meeting ...their action was reconsidered. A ion was adopted which pledges ...brekeepers "to stick to the work- till they win their fight."

...hers at the South Tenth street ... the Oliver iron and steel, com- have asked an advance on the now being paid at the mill, ac- g to a report, which has been in tion since the day after elec- Inquiry was made some days ago employes of the finishing depart- and they stated that they had not ted any wage changes. A repre- ...ve of the company stated that yesterday that the body of an unknown man had been found on the Stonecipher farm, near Oakdale. Depoty-Coroner A. B. Moreland went out last night, made an investigation and held an inquest. Saturday, November 14, some boys saw the dead man's body lying where it was found yesterday, but they supposed the man was drunk, and were afraid to go near him. Yesterday afternoon Nicholas Meyers was passing along the same place and saw the body. He reported the matter to Chris Mantz, who sent word to the coroner's office.

The body was badly decomposed. The dead man had a black steel colonial watch in his pocket, which had stopped Sunday, October 6. He had one small memorandum book, in which were written the names: Hermann Kohl, William Russell and Frederick Krulnkemeyer, but he had a German bible, a hyma book and German and English text book, in which the name of Hermann Kohl only appeared, and that is supposed to be his name.

The man was about 40 years old, 5 feet 8 inches high, and weighed about 170 pounds, and partially bald. He wore light trousers, blue coat and vest, a gum coat, and high boots, laced up in the front. He is supposed to have been an oil driller. Among some small papers in his clothes was a prescription No. 1855, filled at the McDonald pharmacy on October 20, 1896. The pharmacy was communicated with, but word was received that it must have been a very old prescription refilled. The body was sent to the receiving vault of the Oakdale cemetery. The verdict was death from an unknown cause.

ADDED TO THE MUSEUM.

Two Suits of Ancient Armor Now on Exhibition.

Two full suits of ancient armor from Venice are now on exhibition in the Carnegie museum. They were purchased by Andrew Carnegie, and are in the center room near the mummies. They are attracting much attention. One is a suit worn during the reign of Ferdinand I of Germany, and the other is a fac-simile of one worn by Henry IV. of France, in 1588. The original suit, worn by the French king, who was afterward assassinated, was presented to the arsenal at Venice, where it now is.

The museum was visited the last week by a class from the Ursuline academy, one from the Allegheny schools and one from the Pittsburg high school. The school children who are to write a prize composition on their visit to the museum were out in full force yesterday. The place is growing in popular interest from day to day.

Ended in a Free Fight.

Braddock went to McKeesport yesterday to play the crimson team, and got the worst of the deal by getting unfair decisions. The first half was good, clean ball, and the Tigers had the ball in their possession all through. The ball was on the five-yard line when time was called, but in the second half, two minutes was played when the Tigers made a touchdown, and the crimsons started a free-for-all fight. Then Braddock claimed the game.

His Victim May Die.

William Kant, a well-known young business man of McKeesport, was arrested last night by Constable Charles Moore. A few days ago Kant quarreled with William Pohl and kicked him in the stomach. Pohl's injuries are of a very serious nature, and the doctors say he cannot recover. Kant gave bail for a hearing before Alderman Skelley Wednesday at 2 o'clock.

LOCAL NEWS IN PARAGRAPHS.

—William Devine was yesterday sent to jail without bail by Alderman F. J. Shellman. He is charged with a serious offense by Pearl Pancost.

—John Schultz was probably fatally injured by a street car on Penn avenue last night. His breastbone was broken and he was otherwise injured. He was carried to his home, 311 Main street.

—John Hanlon was struck by car 106 of the Butler street line at Twelfth street and Penn avenue last night, and received quite a number of flesh wounds, none of which are serious.

—The body of Joseph Dohak is at the morgue. He died last evening at Mercy hospital. He was a miner and was employed by the Stockdale Coal company in their mines. Thursday a piece of slate fell on him. He was 45 years of age.

—The unknown man who fell on the pavement on Liberty avenue opposite Tenth street Friday and died at Homeopathic hospital yesterday, has been identified as John Stu...

be an Anarchist meeting, hoping that many would be kept away.

She launched into her subject by referring to Moses and the promised land, which so many of the Hebrews in foreign countries thought to be America. They came here, she said, under the impression that gold could be picked up on the streets, and they would be free men. This she claimed they found out to their sorrow was untrue. They soon learned that they were a species of slaves who paid the salaries of policemen, judges and other officers. Referring to President Cleveland she said the laboring men of the country paid him $50,000 a year for hunting and fishing. She handled the millionaires of the country without gloves, and intimated that should they be relieved by death the country would not suffer. She impressed her hearers with the importance of educating their children in the doctrine of self-preservation and anarchy, claiming that their forefathers had neglected a duty which a present generation should perform. She did not openly advocate revolution or a resort to arms, and did not go into the details of how relief from the present conditions could be sought. Her hearers were left to form their own conclusions. She berated the courts and high officials for giving the rich liberties the poor did not enjoy. She argued that when a poor man committed a crime he was given the full extent of the law, while the rich man by committing crime made himself eligible to hold office and was looked upon as an exemplary citizen. Her talk was somewhat disconnected, but the sentiments expressed seemed to be in accord with those of her audience, as she was frequently applauded.

An Appeal for Berkmann.

In conclusion she made a plea for Alexander Berkmann, who is serving a sentence of 22 years for shooting H. C. Frick during the troubles at Homestead four years ago. She said the law of the state fixes the maximum penalty for the crime committed at seven years; Berkmann, she said, was sent up for 22 years, not because he shot Frick, but because he was an anarchist. She maintained that she did not defend Berkmann's crime, which she said was committed in defense of the workingman. Whether he acted foolishly or not, he was made a victim of a judicial system favorable to the capitalists. She intimated that Berkmann's aim was not as good as it might have been, and as Frick was today enjoying the best of health, Berkmann should be shown some consideration. To help his cause she passed through the audience and took up a collection. She reported that she had collected $10 78, which she said would be used in giving relief to the prisoner. She said that when Berkmann would leave the penitentiary he would be just as much of a revolutionist and friend of the workingman as when sentenced.

After the lecture she said in private conversation that under the present state administration there was little hope for a pardon, but that the agitation would be kept up. She invited those present to ask any questions, which she would answer. In the course of her replies to questions she said nothing was to be accomplished by voting for any candidate of any party, as it was an admission that leaders and bosses were needed. Anarchists, she claimed, needed no leaders and could have a government without laws as they are made at present. During her remarks she quoted Leibnitz, who once said that "it would require guts, not ballots, to settle the labor problem." This is the only time she referred to revolutionary tactics, and did so very gourdedly.

She will speak this afternoon at the same place in English on "Anarchism in America." Next Thursday afternoon she will speak at 1012 Penn avenue on "The Effects of the Recent Election on the Condition of the Workingman."

Treasured in His Trousers.

A man walked up to Officer Michael Hannigan last night and told him that an Italian named Don Valender had robbed him of $25 in Howard's lane. Valender was pointed out to the officer, the alleged robber was locked up, and while this was being done the man who claimed to be robbed disappeared, and the officer did not secure his name. When Valender was searched $1,200 was found. He had the money tied up in a small bag, fastened around one of his legs. He claimed the money was his own.

Chamber of Commerce Banquet.

The chamber of commerce banquet committee yesterday decided to hold the annual banquet Tuesday, December 18. Covers for 300 will be laid and for as many more as will buy a ticket. The committee intends making the affair a brilliant one, and have invited several noted speakers and statesmen to be present. Tickets will be on sale on November 27 from 11 a. m. to 1 p. m. at the ... of commerce rooms. Wash and with a cane. McDonald fell, and ... hon saw Officer Thompson rush ... Webster avenue and arrest both ... They were sent to the central stat... a patrol wagon.

P. C. Duffy, who keeps the ho... Webster avenue and Grant street ... Kelly strike McDonald and told T... son to make the arrest.

Officer Thompson testified that ... Mr. Duffy spoke to him about the ... he torned and saw McDonald lyi... the ground, and saw Kelly strik... with a cane as he lay there. Tho... placed both under arrest. The cane ... Kelly osed was "all mashed up." ... both to the central station ... patrol wagon. Thompson was a... hearing the next morning before ... trate McKenna. McDonald was bt... oot sopported by policemen. The ... trate refused to hear the case, an... the man back to his cell, and told ... L. Taylor to go back and examin... Dr. Taylor started back to the ce... Thompson went home.

Dr. Taylor testified that he was ... hearing, examined him and decide... there was nothing the matter wit... except intoxication, and reported t... soit of his examination to the magi... The hearing was then held.

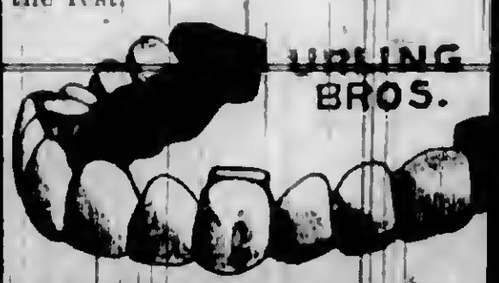
Treated as a Common Dru...

Dr. G. M. Kelly, surgeon at the ...

The s... rain of ... colo... of win... grain ... manganat... potash w... den sever... sand tim... weight of ... The mo... fling d... will disa... every or... the bod... cause ev... diseas... death. I... little at... neglected... make th... diseases. ... serious d... have th... ception in a disordered digestion and ... nutrition. This is true of that most ... of diseases—consumption. It is al... of nervous prostration and exhausti... also of all forms of wasting disease... ments of this description may not ... prevented but cured by a resort to th... remedy.

An unfailing cure for all diseas... have their origin in disorders of the ... tion and faulty nutrition is found ... Pierce's Golden Medical Discover... cures digestive disorders, restores th... tite, invigorates the liver, purifies a... riches the blood, builds healthy fle... muscle and drives out disease-germ... cures 98 per cent. of all cases of co... tion. Thousands have testified to ... facts. Druggists who suggest sub... are dishonest.

Mrs. Ursula Dunham, of Sistersville, T... W. Va., writes: "I should have been dea... not been for your medicine. I was nea... when I began taking Dr. Pierce's Golde... eal Discovery. I had a pain in my side ... time, had but little appetite, and grew ve... The 'Golden Medical Discovery' prompt... the pain, restored my appetite, and in... my weight."



Dr. Pierce's wonderful free book, ... People's Common Sense Medical Ad... will be sent paper-bound, for twe... cents in one-cent stamps to pay t... of mailing only. Address Dr. R. V. ... Buffalo, N. Y. For handsome, ... cloth covers, beautifully stamped, s... cents more (thirty-one cents in all), ... extra cost for this style of binding.

OF COURSE

YOU CAN AFFORD

Crown and Bridge at $5 a Too... cheap enough for anybody. (... things are too cheap.) $5 A TOO... just right. We guarantee the ... and material; our reputation in ... the rest.

URLING BROS.

Gold Fillings, $1.00 up Silver Fillings ... Extracting..... ... Odontunder or Gas FOR PAIN... URLING BRO...

304 SIXTH ST. (Cor. Penn Av...

BEST COPY AVAILABLE

89032000l4

The Emma Goldman Papers

[Summary of Lecture] Emma Goldman Again / Emma Goldman. – p. 2 ; 44 cm. In The Pittsburg[h] Leader. –(Nov. 23, 1896).

Obtained from the State Library of Pennsylvania. Institutional Location: Special Collections.

Curzon, Lady Randolph
Lady Lillian Churchill, Sir
Lady Sophia Scott, Lord
Mr. and Mrs. Greenfell,
George Curzon and his Amer-
Hon. Arthur J. Bal-of the government party
of commons, and Rt. Hon.
lin, member of parliament nt of the board of agricul-will be spent in hunting

tes.

Y DID NOT VOTE.

iunty Where People Did
w an Election Was to Be

TLANTA, November 23, 1896.
n the office of the secretary that Charlton county not ot take part in the recent election, but did not know
as to be held.
o secure election returns
ed there The Oke-swamp s most of the
are several towns
Traders Hill being the

D ROBBER BRUTES.

innati Woman Beaten So at She May Die.

CINNATI, November 23, 1896.
k last night, while the mily were at church, three
, two white and one negro,
their house and assaulted
s. Buckholz, who was alone.
ed her down and demanded
e said she had none. The beat her until she was un-nd took a purse containing from her pocket. The robcaped. Mrs. Buckholz was ed, and, owing to her age, cover from the injuries and nsylvania Pensions.

HINGTON, November 23, 1896.
have been granted to resi-estern Pennsylvania as fol-

Isaac A. Moore, Stahlsmoreland.
James Marsh, Harrisville,

widows (reissue)—Louisa J.
Brighton, Beaver.

IRED FIVE SHOTS.

as Tried to Kill His Wife dis Mother-in-Law.

ucas, formerly employed as
t A. M. Byers & Co.'s South as recently sued by several om whom he had taken mon-mised them work. He was urt trial, but the case has fixed up. His wife left him trouble and it is said that been having trouble since.
y hard yesterday afternoon
wife and his mother-in-law, a Williams. A revolver was he shooting took place at ms' house, Fulton and reets.
ed at Mrs. Williams' house k yesterday afternoon, sayed to have a talk with his t they might live together
Williams said that any talk ave with her daughter was presence. Lucas said that ll right, and he and Mrs.
Mrs. Williams sat in one of or half an hour talking on lects.
mised to reform his ways if ld live with him again. Mrs.
hen she saw the reconcilia-left the room. s changed his manner, and g his wife for leaving him,
ew a revolver, and said:
will settle this right here."
n backed toward the door wo shots at his wife. The fired struck Mrs. Lucas as towards the door. It plow-over her scalp. She threw ds as the second shot was bullet aimed at her head en-rm.
s fell forward, and as she husband stepped up to her the muzzle of the revolver
ad. She grasped the weap-red and the bullet entered
n.
n dashed out of the room.
ns, having heard the shots,
the room and met Lucas.
ce at her, but both bullets
mark.
anis cried for help, and the shed in, while Lucas dashed att Foster was called in.
wound in the abdomen was and he refused to allow to be removed to a hospital,
ey might prove fatal.
Howard, of Alderman Ca-arrested Lucas on Wylie ward was about to take his when Officer Frank Sut-
and demanded that Lu-
over to him, as the case ng to an alderman. After ward gave up his prisoner, taken to No. 2 police sta-

where he made his home during his congressional career as well as since he left congress when he is in Washington.

Private Secretary Thurber denies the report that the President is going to appoint him to a life position before the close of his administration, as has been the custom of chief executives to provide for such officials. Mr. Thurber says he longs for the day when the heavy weight of official office is lifted from his frail shoulders and he can return to the peace and quiet of private life. He expects to return to Detroit and resume the practice of law with Don Dickinson. Mr. Thurber is probably the most unpopular private secretary that ever occupied that position in the White house. He is a man without the necessary knowledge of public men and affairs to fill the office satisfactorily, and it has been the wonder of people who had business with the President that he retained him until the end of his administration. As private secretary to the President Dan Lamont was popular, but as secretary of war he is just as unpopular as he was popular during President Cleveland's first administration. It is fully as difficult to see Secretary Lamont as it is to see the President. But, then, Daniel has become an aristocrat as well as a millionaire since he first came to Washington. That makes quite a difference with some people.

The friends of H. Clay Evans, of Tennessee, are booming him quite vigorously for a cabinet place. Mr. Evans was one of the assistant postmaster generals during the Harrison administration and showed himself to be a very efficient official. After the inauguration of President Cleveland Mr. Evans returned to Tennessee and ran for governor on the Republican ticket. He was elected, but was counted out by a Democratic legislature. He was a candidate for the vice presidential nomination at St. Louis and received in the neighborhood of 300 votes. He would like to be postmaster general.

The board of trade of Washington, to which matters of the kind are usually referred, has recommended the appointment of Mr. S. W. Woodward, a sound money Democrat, to Chairman Hanna to be chairman of the general committee having in charge the ceremonies attending the inauguration of President-elect McKinley. Mr. Woodward is the senior member of the big dry goods firm of Woodward & Lathrop, of this city. He has been a lifelong Democrat, but he repudiated the Chicago platform. He was one of the largest contributors to the campaign fund of McKinley and Hobart in Washington.

The friends of General Russell A. Alger, of Michigan, are urging his appointment as chief marshal of the inaugural parade, and it is generally believed that he will be appointed.

The civil service commission will shortly take up the cases reported to it of officials levying campaign assessments on subordinates. A test case will be made of a postmaster in Indiana. If conviction follows the other cases will be taken up. The case against State Chairman Garman, of Pennsylvania, and County Chairman Howley, of Allegheny, will be among the first ones to be investigated after the test case is made, so Commissioner Proctor says.

Comptroller of the Currency Eckles is figuring on serving out his full term of five years. He was appointed by President Cleveland shortly after his inauguration, and unless charges are preferred in which the senate concurs the new President cannot remove him until his term expires, which is more than a year after next March.

For the second time since its birth the Republican party this year carried the electors of New Jersey. The first time was in 1872, when Horace Greeley was the Democratic candidate and the electoral vote of the state was cast for Grant and Wilson. In 1860 the electoral vote of the "Mosquito" state was divided between Lincoln and Douglas, the former getting four and the latter three. In 1840, 1844 and 1848 the state voted for the Whig candidates. It voted for Pierce in 1852, Breckinridge in 1856, McClellan in 1864, Tilden in 1876, Hancock in 1880, and Cleveland in the three elections in 1884, 1888 and 1892. New Jersey also breaks the record by giving for the Republican national ticket the largest majority ever given for any candidate, also for the first time in its history by sending one of its citizens to the national capital as Vice President.

The unofficial cabinet makers have already picked out a successor to United States Marshal Wilson, of the District of Columbia. They say that Major McKinley has already decided upon Joseph P. Smith, ex-state librarian of Ohio, an old personal friend of the President-elect. It is also said that Mrs. McKinley and Mrs. Smith are such close friends that they desire to be near each other. The office of marshal, formerly paid $6,000 a year, taken from the fees collected, but at the last session of congress the fee system was abolished and the salary of the District marshal was fixed at $5,500.

—The first English riding academy was founded by William III.

Pie for Thanksgiving.

Your Thanksgiving dinner should have a fitting finale, a pie of Heinz's Mince Meat.

THE NATIONAL ORGANIZATION TO BE PRESERVED.

Chairman Bynum Talks of the Plans to Keep up a Fight Against Free Coinage — Tariff for Revenue Revision Needed—Campaign for a Cabinet Position Under McKinley is Opposed.

NEW YORK, November 23, 1896.

William D. Bynum, chairman, and J. P. Frensel, treasurer of the national committee of the sound money Democrats, is in the city for the purpose of discussing plans for future organization with national leaders in this state.

"The national Democracy will certainly continue as a national party," Mr. Bynum said. "Nothing but permanent organization was ever contemplated from the outset. We are the only true Democrats, guided by the genuine principles of the Democratic party. If the currency question should be an issue four years from now, and the free coinage of silver should be advocated, a national Democrat will surely be nominated. The question now is how best to keep our work, how extensive it shall be, and what shall be its general character. There will be a meeting of the national executive committee either in Indianapolis or Chicago before January 15.

"Our plans for the immediate future will be agreed upon, and probably an address to the people will be issued. I do not think the issues in the Chicago platform, other than that of free silver, to which we were antagonistic, will survive four years. I do not regard the tariff issue as important. All we need is a tariff bill which will raise the revenue required. I know the present tariff law is, in general, satisfactory to the manufacturers. The passage of a high tariff bill would be disastrous, and it is not needed, because of the fall in prices.

"Unquestionably, the public mind is set on reform in the currency. We, in the west, believe this is the cause of all our troubles. The Indianapolis board of trade has issued a call to join with it in calling a national convention to consider what should be done. This convention will be undoubtedly held."

Mr. Bynum expressed himself as opposed to any movement on the part of sound money Democrats to secure a place in McKinley's cabinet.

EMMA GOLDMAN AGAIN.

An Address Delivered on Anarchism in America—$10.74 Raised for Berkmann.

Emma Goldman yesterday delivered a lectors on "Anarchism in America" in the Duquesne dancing academy, on Wylie avenue. It was attended by about 200 persons, made up rather evenly of both men and women.

The lecturer graphically reviewed the incidents leading to the Homestead strike and the disastrous results. She said that the Pinkerton detectives were hired to shoot down workingmen, which was contrary to law and civilization. After it was found that their efforts to drive the strikers to submission proved futile, the militia were called out. She alleged that no military could ever be called out to defend the workingmen, but, according to the laws made by monopolists, it was called out for monopolistic protection only.

She referred to the time of slavery, when the negroes were the property of rich men. She said the black slaves were better cared for then, because they were of money value to their owners. Now, she said, it was all different. She compared the workingmen to slaves, and said the time would come when they would all be released from bondage.

She said there were some persons in the audience who would like to hear her utter something of a revolutionary nature, in order that she might be arrested and thrown into prison. She claimed that as Anarchists they were not in favor of bombs, dynamite and violence. Just how to accomplish their ends she failed to state. She maintained that a revolution was approaching. If there was a gallows on every street corner it would not prevent the assertion of the rights of the workingman, which, she said, was bound to occur in the future. She said the labor question would be settled by blood, and that was the only way it would be settled. She berated all the political parties, claiming that when officers were elected, in a few months after they had warmed their seats they would forget that there was such a thing as laboring men's rights.

She made an appeal for Alexander Berkmann. She said he was unjustly sentenced to a term of 22 years in the penitentiary, when the maximum limit by law for the offense committed was, but seven years. She asked for funds to purchase for him some comforts which he would be allowed to enjoy. She passed a hat through the audience, and $10.74 was dropped into it.

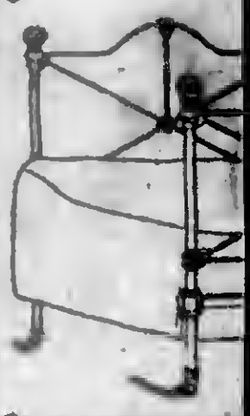
Knights of Honor.

Supreme Protector L. H. Lockhard, of the Knights and Ladies of Honor, will be here this week. There will be three union meetings of the thirty lodges in the county held in his honor. The first will be conducted by Riceville Lodge No. 800, at Silver Palace hall, Fifth avenue, November 25; the second by Thomas A. Armstrong Lodge, No. 1330, at 17 Sixth avenue, November 26, and the third by Banner Lodge No. 484, at 200 Ohio street, Allegheny.

BEFORE BUYING SEE OUR $8.65, $12.00 AND $15.00 OVER-COATS.

At $8.65 we equal Any $12 Coats.
At $12 we equal Any $15 Coats.
At $15 we equal Any $20 Coats.

ARNFELDS
1125, 1127 PENN AVE., NEAR ELEVENTH ST.



YOUR OFFICE

Is incomplete without a telephone—therefore your business is not what it should be.

Every business man should recognize this fact and have this most important fixture placed at once.

C. D. & P. TEL. CO.

A TERRIFIC Cough is difficult to master, but like all other complaints of the respiratory organs, it gives way before the anti-inflammatory and soothing operation of Baker's Pure Cod Liver Oil. It can be readily taken by the most delicate. Ask your druggist. Jno. C. Baker Co., Philadelphia.

Men's and Winte Scotch either Lac die, Cottage don, Frenc sizes and of Goodyea
W.
MARK HER YOU CHA —such a does not o not in these values — th is higher—
with the va

IRON —couldn't bed now for net—we go —just 480—
now—going
AT
—bed 6 ft.
in.—handsc
pattern — th
tically no we —they'll las you ever bo
be sure to g
bodo.
Ferree, Stop
18 to 42
28 to 37 River
TRY

78

BEST COPY AVAILABLE

890313005

The Emma Goldman Papers

[Summary of Lecture] Another Talk on Anarchism / Emma Goldman.— p. 8 ; 43 cm.
In The Pittsburg[h] Post. —(Nov. 23, 1896).
Permission to reproduce or quote in any form must be obtained from the University of Pittsburgh Libraries. Institutional Location: Darlington Memorial Library.

ANOTHER TALK ON ANARCHISM.

EMMA GOLDMANN, THE WOMAN AGITATOR, LECTURES TO A TYPICAL CROWD.

MORE MONEY FOR BERKMANN

Capitalists, Millionaires and the Militia Roughly Handled.

PREDICTS A BLOODY REVOLUTION

Captialists, millionaires, the present form of government, Pinkerton detectives and the state and national military had abuse heaped upon them during a lecture delivered by Emma Goldmann yesterday afternoon. It was the second of a series to be delivered in this city, and was listened to by a much larger audience than the one of the evening previous.

More than 200 persons gathered in the Duquesne dancing academy at 512 Wylie avenue. Small dodgers announcing that a lecture on "Anarchism in America" would be delivered, were scattered about in some of the most densely populated portions of the city. As a result the audience was composed chiefly of the employes of sweatshops and toby factories, the Hebrew faith predominating by a large majority. There were about 100 chairs in the room, which were occupied mostly by women, while the remainder of the audience stood for nearly two hours listening to an exposition of anarchy.

A noticeable feature of the gathering was a continual stream of people coming and going. They did not come to hear the lecture, but to get a glimpse of the speaker. After listening for a short time they would retire, evidently satisfied with knowing what Emma Goldmann looked like and her mode of expression. The visiting class were from the higher walks of life, who had read much of the woman anarchist. Unlike the evening previous, there was no smoking permitted, and the audience was cleaner and much better dressed.

The lecture was delivered in English. Although a foreigner, she has excellent command of the language, and her efforts at word-painting made her at times eloquent. She spoke with an earnestness that at once enlisted the sympathy of her audience, and frequent were the approvals of sentiments uttered by cheers and applause. This was especially the case when she poured volleys of bitter censure on Andrew Carnegie. She graphically reviewed the incidents leading to the Homestead strike and the disastrous results. She said that the Pinkerton detectives were hired to shoot down workingmen, which was contrary to law and civilization. After it was found that their efforts to drive the strikers into submission proved futile, the militia was called but. She argued that no military could ever be called out to defend the workingmen, but, according to the laws made by monopolists, it was called out for monopolistic protection only. And for this, she claims, the workingmen paid the cost.

She referred to the time of slavery, when the negroes were the property of rich men. She said the black slaves were better cared for then, because they were of money value to their owners. Now, she said, it is all different. She compared the workingmen to slaves, and said the time would come when they would all be released from bondage.

She said there were some persons in the audience who would like to hear her utter something of a revolutionary nature, in order that she might be arrested and thrown into prison. She claimed that as anarchists, they were not in favor of bombs, dynamite and violence. Just how to accomplish their ends she failed to state. She maintained that a revolution was approaching. If there was a gallows on every street corner it would not prevent the assertion of the rights of the workingman, which, she said, was bound to occur in the future. She said the labor question

KAUFMANN

"THE BIG STORE"

FROM THE STOCKS Representing the Stupendous Aggregate VALU

MOORE & BEIR, N. St. Paul St., Rochester, N. Y.

M. SAMPTER SONS & CO., 11 to 19 E. 4th St., New York.

SCOOPED IN BY OUR REA

AND TO BE OFFERED TO PITTSBURG CLOT

All last week twenty-seven men were kept as busy order to facilitate matters as much as possible, both for ou quality, into as few lines as possible. This, in spite of the help of a much increased sales force, will assure prompt a

Choice From All $8, $9, $10 an

Overcoats and Ulsters for Only

Every garment in this line is strictly All-Wool, and of this season' simeres and Cheviots, and the Overcoats and Ulsters are made of Kerse fit perfectly. The rule is: First come, first served. Come at once, and

ONLY $5.75

All $14, $15 and $16 Men's Suits, Over

Coats and Ulsters, Included in These Pur chases, Thrown in Our Famous Line at

The advantage thus accruing to men who wi from our reinforced $8.65 line during the next fev derful. This same price of $8.65 will give them after counter of first-class Melton and Kersey Over ford and Cheviot Overcoats, first-class Chinchilla an extra quality Frieze, Chinchilla and Shetland Uls table of perfectly fitting and finished finest Americ

BEST COPY AVAILABLE

890313005

The Emma Goldman Papers

[Summary of Lecture] Another Talk on Anarchism / Emma Goldman. — p. 8 ; 43 cm.
In The Pittsburg[h] Post. —(Nov. 23, 1896).

Permission to reproduce or quote in any form must be obtained from the University of Pittsburgh Libraries. Institutional Location: Darlington Memorial Library.

...ssue. Small dodgers announcing ... a lecture on "Anarchism in America" would be delivered, were scattered about in some of the most densely populated portions of the city. As a result the audience was composed chiefly of the employes of sweatshops and toby factories, the Hebrew faith predominating by a large majority. There were about 100 chairs in the room, which were occupied mostly by women, while the remainder of the audience stood for nearly two hours listening to an exposition of anarchy.

A noticeable feature of the gathering was a continual stream of people coming and going. They did not come to hear the lecture, but to get a glimpse of the speaker. After listening for a short time they would retire, evidently satisfied with knowing what Emma Goldmann looked like and her mode of expression. The visiting class were from the higher walks of life, who had read much of the woman anarchist. Unlike the evening previous, there was no smoking permitted, and the audience was cleaner and much better dressed.

The lecture was delivered in English. Although a foreigner, she has excellent command of the language, and her efforts at word-painting made her at times eloquent. She spoke with an earnestness that at once enlisted the sympathy of her audience, and frequent were the approvals of sentiments uttered by cheers and applause. This was especially the case when she poured volleys of bitter censure on Andrew Carnegie. She graphically reviewed the incidents leading to the Homestead strike and the disastrous results. She said that the Pinkerton detectives were hired to shoot down workingmen, which was contrary to law and civilization. After it was found that their efforts to drive the strikers into submission proved futile, the militia was called out. She argued that no military could ever be called out to defend the workingmen, but, according to the laws made by monopolists, it was called out for monopolistic protection only. And for this, she claims, the workingmen paid the cost.

She referred to the time of slavery, when the negroes were the property of rich men. She said the black slaves were better cared for then, because they were of money value to their owners. Now, she said, it is all different. She compared the workingmen to slaves, and said the time would come when they would all be released from bondage.

She said there were some persons in the audience who would like to hear her utter something of a revolutionary nature, in order that she might be arrested and thrown into prison. She claimed that as anarchists, they were not in favor of bombs, dynamite and violence. Just how to accomplish their ends she failed to state. She maintained that a revolution was approaching. If there was a gallows on every street corner it would not prevent the assertion of the rights of the workingman, which, she said, was bound to occur in the future. She said the labor question would be settled by blood, and that was the only way it would be settled. She berated all the political parties, claiming that when officers were elected, in a few months after they had warmed their seats, they would forget that there was such a thing as laboring men's rights.

She made an appeal for Alexander ...mann. She said he was unjustly ...nced to a term of 22 years in the ...ntiary, when the maximum limit ... for the offense committed was ...ten years. She asked for funds ...hase for him some comforts ...e would be allowed to enjoy. ...d a hat through the audience ... was dropped into it.

...ZART CONCERT.

...cial Event of the Week ...To-Morrow Night.

...social events have been ...morrow night to make ...ening concert of the ... club season, which ...ne importance in the ... and will probably ... the limit. The list ... for this year is a ...patrons have been ...summer months, ...ost solid business ...ine for the sup- ...ran musical or- ...f the first bal- ...en place for ..., brilliant ap- ... of various ... in evening ...thout hats. ...s will be ...ow morn- ...rchestra ...s hall.

...OOPED IN BY OUR BUY...

AND TO BE OFFERED TO PITTSBURG CLO...

All last week twenty-seven men were kept as busy ... order to facilitate matters as much as possible, both for ... quality, into as few lines as possible. This, in spite of th... help of a much increased sales force, will assure prompt ...

Choice From All $8, $9, $10 an...

Overcoats and Ulsters for Only

Every garment in this line is strictly All-Wool, and of this season's ... simeres and Cheviots, and the Overcoats and Ulsters are made of Kers... fit perfectly. The rule is: First come, first served. Come at once, an...

ONLY $5.75

All $14, $15 and $16 Men's Suits, Ove...

coats and Ulsters, Included in These Pu... chases, Thrown in Our Famous Line at ...

The advantage thus accruing to men who w... from our reinforced $8.65 line during the next fe... derful. This same price of $8.65 will give the... after counter of first-class Melton and Kersey Ove... ford and Cheviot Overcoats, first-class Chinchilla a... extra quality Frieze, Chinchilla and Shetland U... table of perfectly fitting and finished finest Ameri... Serge, Cassimere, Worsted and Diagonal Suits, i... approved by fashion, and in all different sizes.

MEN'S SILK DRESS VESTS,
Also English Corduroy Vests, custom tailor-made, full line of patterns, all sizes; worth $3 and $4, at $1.77

MEN'S CASSIMERE PANTS,
Also Cheviot Pants, in new dark patterns, well made and trimmed, all sizes; worth $1.50 and $2, at..... 77c

All S...

BEST COPY AVAILABLE

890313007

The Emma Goldman Papers

[Excerpt from Lecture] Goldman's Cry Against Society / Emma Goldman.— p. 3 ; 43 cm. In The Pittsburg[h] Post. —(Nov. 27, 1896).

Permission to reproduce or quote in any form must be obtained from the University of Pittsburgh Libraries. Institutional Location: Darlington Memorial Library.

ement was started two years that time a real fox hunt was and the animal was run down
nds. Only tame foxes can be for this purpose, and many of the riding club thought the el, not to mention unsports-
The real fox hunt was con-
It was attended by only five or Last year a steeplechase was but it was found that neither horses nor horsemen were to this degree of equestrianism, fair was a melancholy failure.
he paper chase local society has the proper equestrian sport.
e yesterday was a complete
The only unsportsmanlike
the hunt was the bicycle at-
This seemed unnatural, and never be repeated. Local much pleased at the success per chase, and it is likely an-be arranged for next year, and sooner. The sport will be the introducing a better class of ses into this city, as the presers used so much are unfit for ork. All things considered, it an assured fact that paper
the future sport for Pittsburg
rsemen and horsewomen.

HEARTS MADE HAPPY.

nnual Distribution of sgiving Supplies at
's—Gave Away More Than

s of poor families who might hered yesterday at cheerless ere made happy by Mrs. J.
through her annual contriburkeys. Not only turkeys, but cranberry sauce, were includgenerous gift. A stock of aln hundred birds, all dressed,
sed of in a few hours.
as 6:30 o'clock the crowd be-ther. Tickets had been given Vincent de Paul societies of ral and of Father Tobin's par-point, to the Allegheny Reation and the Association for vement of the Poor, so that the deserving ones would be
It was a peculiar gathering.
e little tots, certainly no more rs old, two or three of them basket; decrepit old men and ith thin, wan countenances,
s of suffering from hunger;
d, but not in years, cares of a ttle ones weighing them down.
ashamed of having to ac-ty upon this day of days, and ew faces were traces of tears.
omen wore heavy veils.
e door was opened there was ush, and it was found necesthem come in installments.
ed the door, walked to the window where the food had d and passed out by another they approached the window was taken and the applicant
w many the food was desired upply was regulated accord-le were, for the most part,

suming folk, who accepted
given them, uttered a word and passed out. They ap-he window eagerly expectant away happy, often weeping
y. But the inevitable kicker nd. As the stock became low one of those with square a firm mouth, came up. She a turkey, but did not like the want that," she said, and at-climb in the window in order

r the stock. "Give me a big lingered after the cranberries had been thrust upon her,

hey wouldn't give her a chip

, half-starved looking little e up, followed by a big, red-h lady."
a family of nine," she said,
ing voice.
't believe 'er. I know she's ree," came from the rear,
e little woman's surprise and ment. She turned around, the disciple of the tub ex-yer parding, ma'am; it's a made."

woman got supplies for her n the big woman landed she
. She likely found her food if she told the truth, for the rge were not inclined to be ith her.
turks disappeared at a rapid

GOLDMAN'S CRY AGAINST SOCIETY.

NOTED FEMALE ANARCHIST DEPLORES THE FATE OF THE HAYMARKET MURDERERS.

BOMBTHROWER'S NOBLE ACT.

Doesn't Believe in What She Calls the Ballot-Box Swindle.

A COLLECTION FOR BERKMANN.

Not much edified with the condition of anarchism in Allegheny county, but still hoping for the best, Emma Goldman left the city last night for the west. Emma's last words formed an appeal to local anarchists to join together and carry on the "good work," and to forget all personal differences and cease from bickering.

The famous anarchist's address was made in a hall at 1012 Penn avenue. The attendance was but sparse, applause was rare and there was not much enthusiasm. Once when Miss Goldman told what a shame it was that workingmen starved and were scantily clad while the store windows were filled with things good to eat and wear, that they might take by simply reaching out their hands, utter silence followed her remark. Pittsburg anarchists seem to approve of a law against taking what belongs to someone else, and they were not prepared to go to the length of taking unlawfully what is not theirs. So they did not applaud that part of Miss Goldman's speech.

Miss Goldman was introduced as one who would discuss the "murder of November 11, 1887," namely, the execution of the anarchists. Miss Goldman is a petite, blonde, good looking woman, to whom a pair of spectacles give a professorial look. She advanced to the platform and plunged right into her subject. Her address was in German.

"Jesus was crucified, Huss was burned, Bruno was killed," she said, "because they were opposed to the order of things existing in their day and dared to advocate the rights of humanity."

"The execution of the Chicago anarchists November 11, 1887," she continued, "was a horrible crime. What had those men done? Had they made widows and orphans, had they murdered, had they robbed?"

They Committed No Crime.

"No," she continued, "I do not believe that anybody can say with a clear conscience that the Chicago anarchists committed a crime. They did one thing, a thing that from time immemorial had been punished by society with death and prison—they dared to think. They explained to the people in a popular way the writings of Rosseau, Paine and Jefferson, that all men are created free and equal and have equal rights. They were simply anarchists, and because they were anarchists they were dragged to the scaffold on November 11, 1887.

"They were on a great strike for an eight-hour day, and patiently they waited to have their wrongs righted. They held a demonstration in the Haymarket. They were workingmen, they were quiet and they were peace-loving citizens. After most of the workingmen had gone home, and when nearly all the speeches were finished, Inspector Bonfield and his men threw themselves upon these men and began to shoot them down.

"Although no one knows who threw that bomb, although the closest investigation has failed to displose his identity, I must confess that I hold that he who threw the bomb did a deed that was great and holy. And that bomb was an echo of the miserable condition in which the workingmen of America find themselves.

Eight policemen fell. Society doesn't care for the police. It considers them as its servants and slaves, but society thought: 'To-day they threw a bomb at the police; to-morrow they may direct a bomb at society itself.' Society knows it is sitting on a volcano; it knows that to-morrow the storm may break forth she said. "Of course an intelligent being admires intelligence. We sympathize with an intelligent man like Bryan. He is also energetic, and we must honor those qualities in anybody. Who could respect the little-souled McKinley, Mark Hanna's echo? Nevertheless, the election of Bryan would not have benefited us anarchists, as the old order of society would have been maintained under him as well as under McKinley.

"Why is it that while flour, groceries, meat and clothing are plentiful the workingman starves? He sees plenty everywhere. The stores are full of it. All the workingman needs is to stretch out his hand for it and take it, and yet he is such an ass that he does not grasp it, but says instead: 'There is no food, no clothing for me and my family.'"

Director J. O. Brown's determination to arm the firemen and teach the police to shoot straight Miss Goldman ascribed to a desire to enable them to hit striking workingmen. She spoke of the "old, played out" cry that the ballot-box would right all ills, and remarked:

"I prophesy that the time will come when the workingmen will throw this whole ballot-box swindle overboard and right their wrongs in another way."

The collection for Berkmann amounted to $6 47, and Miss Goldman ordered that another be taken up, as the expenses of the hall in which the meeting was held had to be met.

After her speech Miss Goldman invited anybody who desired to defend the "ballot-box swindle" to step forward. She issued the invitation several times, but as no one accepted the meeting was adjourned.

To-morrow a meeting will be held in Turner hall at McKeesport. Herr Johann Most, the king bee of anarchists in this country and a noted advocate of the gold standard, will speak.

WAS A POPULAR PROGRAM.

Thanksgiving Matinee of the Pittsburg Orchestra Was a Success.

The Thanksgiving matinee of the Pittsburg orchestra was better attended than the preceding afternoon concerts, and the audience was more than usually enthusiastic and demonstrative. The program was essentially popular, and with the one exception of the Mendelssohn overture was lighter in quality throughout than is usual at the orchestra concerts; presumably on account of its being a holiday performance.

Goldmarck's symphony, "Rustic Wedding" (Laendliche Hochzeit), which might be more intelligently called a "suite," was delightfully played. The second movement, a bridal song, was very dainty, and in the third movement, the "Serenade," the wood-winds did some very beautiful work. The fifth and last movement was a curious commingling of gaiety and color, with a tender, plaintive little melody coming in quite as a surprise from the preceding garden scene.

Madame Vizay was heard for the first time in the well-known cavatina from "Robert le Diable," which was a change from the program as announced last week. She made a good impression in this number, but a still better one in the three lovely German songs which she sang after the intermission, and to which Mr. Archer played a particularly pleasing piano accompaniment. She was recalled a number of times, and can have no fault to find with the reception given her by her Pittsburg audience, who seemed quick to recognize her artistic merit, her singing being decidedly the best we have had here this season.

Bizet's Egyptian dance carried the audience straight to the Orient and held them there under an enchanting spell. The "Lohengrin Vorspiel" having been omitted by reason of the unusual length of the program, the most important number left on it was Mendelssohn's overture to the "Hebrides," one of the most interesting works of the great master and one of the most beautiful things the orchestra has yet played. Even people who are not analytically musical or in the least imaginative can hardly fail to get into the spirit of this marvelous achievement of suggestive rather than descriptive writing.

Lacombe's "Aubade Printanniere" was bright and pleasing, and in the "Sabre" march the audience, as is the custom at all orchestra concerts, received the usual signal for dismissal, a blare of trumpets and resounding taps on the bass drum.

LAST DAY.

Final Opportunity for That Great Encyclopedia Bargain.

Some time during the day the last one of those valuable sets of the New National Encyclopedia will be claimed, and hereafter it will not be possible to secure the work except at the regular

Daily Doings of the Socially Inclin

The marriage of Miss Margaret Grea daughter of M. J. Grealish, comman of the arsenal, to Charles Gustave took place yesterday morning at 10 o'c in Sts. Peter and Paul's Roman Cat church, East End. The ceremony preceded by a solemn high mass, at w Rev. Father Makin, of Rock Island, assisted by Rev. Father Werner, o Philomena's, and Rev. Father Suehl Sts. Peter and Paul's, were the offici The music, which was of a very elab character, was under the direction Prof. John Vogel, and consisted of a lected quartet, Mrs. Agnes Vogel Rob Mrs. A. H. Seidel, Joseph Breil an Victor Laurent, and a chorus of 60 vo The organ was in charge of Prof. M gold, and in addition there was a p phony orchestra, of 30 pieces. A det ment of soldiers from the arsenal s ranged in the middle aisle, and as bridal party passed toward the altar silent order of "present arms" gav military brilliance to the event. bride, who is tall and of the brun type, wore a gown of white m trimmed with duchess and point lace, the bridal veil, which clouded the time, was fastened with orange blos and a diamond star. Her maid of ho Miss May O'Bryan, daughter of J O'Bryan, of the East End, wore pale satin and a picture hat trimmed plumes. Little Maud Grealish, siste the bride, was the flower girl. She white organdie and blue ribbons over silk, and the little page, Master R Heath, son of Captain Heath, was court costume of pale blue satin. A the reception a breakfast was serve the home of the bride, and a recep followed from 4 to 6, after which the ple left for New York, and from t will sail to Florida, where the honeym will be spent. They expect to retur Pittsburg about the first of the new y and will later depart for Europe, w some months will be spent in travel, Moll is a wealthy, retired business m and has in the past years done a g deal of entertaining on musical and a tic lines in his bachelor apartments South Highland avenue. He is pop and has a large social circle, as atte by over 1,000 invitations, which were sued for the wedding, chiefly among personal friends, as the bride's family comparative strangers here, having w in the past couple of years come f the south to this city. The crowd at church was the largest ever seen a Pittsburg wedding, fully 5,000 people b in attendance, and there were at l 1,000 more who could not gain admissio

* * * *

Miss Margaret Ann Young Robb, dau ter of Attorney and Mrs. John S. R was wedded last evening to John drew Donaldson, of Cleveland, a o'clock, at "High Cliff," the beau home of the Robbs at Emsworth. special train leaving the Allegheny d at 7:15 o'clock bore a large numbe Pittsburg and Allegheny guests to scene of the festivities. The 200 inv tions extended brought guests from W moreland, Washington and Beaver co ties, and a special car from Clevel accommodated the 25 guests who w present from that city. The officia clergyman was Rev. W. S. Harper, D., of the Emsworth Presbyte church. Dr. Harper's good Presbyte theology has never been brought question. The alleged heterodox vi of his cousin, W. H. Harper, presid of the University of Chicago, have b widely discussed lately. The bride's tendants were her two sisters, M Mary Evans Robb and Miss Cam Hemingray Robb. Two little cous Elizabeth Foster Robb and Mary Am Robb, were the flower maidens. best man was Andrew Mark Robb cousin of the bride, and A. H. Clark Cleveland, was an additional groo man. The ceremony was performed the large drawing room of the ho The wedding colors were green white, and in one corner was plac massive palm, one of Mr. Robb's ch collection. Its height reached the ceiling, and clustered around it were le palms and white chrysanthemums. side this embankment the bridal pa stood while the ceremony was perfo ed. The bride's gown was of he white satin, of the creamy tint of magnolia petal, trimmed with lace corsage was high, with a lace yoke satin stock. The sleeves were sh Empire puffs, and she carried a bou of white roses. Over the whole wa filmy veil of tulle, fastened with aigulette of pearls and diamonds, groom's gift. The bridesmaids w gowns of the sheerest white organ made low in the neck and trimmed

890313007

The Emma Goldman Papers

[Excerpt from Lecture] Goldman's Cry Against Society / Emma Goldman.— p. 3 ; 43 cm. In The Pittsburg[h] Post. —(Nov. 27, 1896).

Permission to reproduce or quote in any form must be obtained from the University of Pittsburgh Libraries. Institutional Location: Darlington Memorial Library.

but the deserving ones would be ited. It was a peculiar gathering. were little tots, certainly no more 5 years old, two or three of them ing a basket; decrepit old men and n, with thin, wan countenances, g tales of suffering from hunger; n, old, but not in years, cares of a of little ones weighing them down. were ashamed of having to ac- charity upon this day of days, and t a few faces were traces of tears. al women wore heavy veils.

en the door was opened there was ger rush, and it was found neces- to let them come in installments. entered the door, walked to the o the window where the food had stored and passed out by another As they approached the window icket was taken and the applicant or how many the food was desired the supply was regulated accord-people were, for the most part, unassuming folk, who accepted was given them, uttered a word anks, and passed out. They ap- hed the window eagerly expectant went away happy, often weeping eir joy. But the inevitable kicker n hand. As the stock became low man, one of those with square and a firm mouth, came up. She given a turkey, but did not like the of it.

on't want that," she said, and at- ed to climb in the window in order k over the stock. "Give me a big still lingered after the cranberries celery had been thrust upon her, if they wouldn't give her a chip t.

poor, half-starved looking little n came up, followed by a big, red- "wash lady."

ave a family of nine," she said, rembling voice.

don't believe 'er. I know she's ut three," came from the rear, to the little woman's surprise and rassment. She turned around, upon the disciple of the tub ex- med:

egs yer parding, ma'am; it's a ke I made."

little woman got supplies for her When the big woman landed she leven. She likely found her food shy, if she told the truth, for the n charge were not inclined to be us with her.

noble turks disappeared at a rapid and at 9 o'clock it was decided to until all tickets had been taken in hen turn the rest of the supplies to the many applicants who had without tickets. More food was out this year than ever before. ecullar feature of the affair was mber of Armenians who applied. are evening matters up.

TRIARCH AND HIS FLOCK.

y-Two-Year-Old John Hamil- ton Enjoys Himself.

Hamilton, an aged and respected nt of Shousetown, held a family re- yesterday to celebrate his 82d birth- which falls on the 30th inst. This reunion is according to a custom d by Mr. Hamilton for years. Hamilton was born near Waddock's and has been living and keeping at his present place for over fifty Mrs. Mary H. Bateman, a daugh- es with him.

g the 50 guests the following were at the reunion: J. D. Hamilton, gist of Coraopolis, with his family; I. Cooper, merchant, of Cochran- nd family, a son-in-law; George on, a son, of the county commis- oner of Mercer county, with his Mr. and Mrs. Geo. E. Alverson, of on, Ky.; Mr. and Mrs. J. W. of Shousetown; Mrs. J. J. Ander- Monongahela; Mr. and Mrs. Q. C. nbek, of Idlewood; Mrs. E. J. Kurns, and Dr. E. Porter.

Hamilton was postmaster for many He is a staunch Republican and Methodist, regular in his church He is cheerful, happy and re- and enjoys an ideal old age.

G BRYAN MAJORITIES.

l Figures From Missouri and nown Results in Texas.

ERSON CITY, Mo., Nov. 26.—The ry of state has completed the of the vote for presidential elec- Missouri. It shows a total vote 674,018, divided as follows: Dem- 363,652; Republican, 301,940; Pro- n, 2,199; Socialist Labor, 610; Pal- ckner, 2,355; National Prohibition, ynn's electors had 58,712 votes than McKinley and 53,286 more ll combined.

LAS, Nov. 26.—It is evident hat Texas at the election of No- 3 cast more than 550,000 votes, hat the plurality of Bryan and over McKinley and Hobart is nt 50,000. If the Bryan and Watson

Miss Goldman was introduced as one who would discuss the "murder of November 11, 1887," namely, the execution of the anarchists. Miss Goldman is a petite, blonde, good looking woman, to whom a pair of spectacles give a professorial look. She advanced to the platform and plunged right into her subject. Her address was in German.

"Jesus was crucified, Huss was burned, Bruno was killed," she said, "because they were opposed to the order of things existing in their day and dared to advocate the rights of humanity."

"The execution of the Chicago anarchists November 11, 1887," she continued, "was a horrible crime. What had those men done? Had they made widows and orphans, had they murdered, had they robbed?"

They Committed No Crime.

"No," she continued, "I do not believe that anybody can say with a clear conscience that the Chicago anarchists committed a crime. They did one thing, a thing that from time immemorial had been punished by society with death and prison—they dared to think. They explained to the people in a popular way the writings of Rousseau, Paine and Jefferson, that all men are created free and equal and have equal rights. They were simply anarchists, and because they were anarchists they were dragged to the scaffold on November 11, 1887.

"They were on a great strike for an eight-hour day, and petitioned to have their wrongs righted. They held a demonstration, peaceably. They were workingmen, they were poor and they were [illegible]. After most of the workingmen had gone home, and when nearly all the speeches were finished, Inspector Bonfield and his men threw themselves upon the men and began to shoot them down.

"Although no one knows who threw that bomb; although the investigation has failed to disclose the identity, I must confess that I believe the man who threw the bomb did a deed that was great and holy. And that bomb was an echo of the miserable conditions in which the workingmen of America find themselves.

Eight policemen fell. Society doesn't care for the police. It considers them as its servants and slaves, but society thought: 'To-day they threw a bomb at the police; to-morrow they may direct a bomb at society itself.' Society knows it is sitting on a volcano; it knows that to-morrow the storm may break forth that will hurl it to destruction. Therefore, and for no other reason, it punished the Chicago anarchists."

Bombthrower's Noble Deed.

Miss Goldman's statement that the men gathered in the Haymarket were peace-loving citizens, followed by her praise of the man who threw the fatal bomb, coupled with the knowledge of the audience that the anarchists were hung, not because they had thrown the bomb, but because their teachings and speeches were directly responsible for the deed, proved a little too illogical for her auditors to stomach, and silence followed her remarks. She continued:

"Our murdered brothers now rest in Waldheim, but, as Spies predicted, their silence in the grave is mightier than their speeches were upon earth. Anarchy will live until society of to-day has been shattered to pieces and freedom reigns."

Miss Goldman then took up the case of Alexander Berkmann, who shot H. C. Frick. She said it was his belief that if the capitalists used Winchester rifles and bayonets on workingmen they should be answered with dynamite Berkmann, she said, picked out the man who was responsible for the trouble at Homestead, the man who had hired the Pinkertons. She said Alexander Berkmann did not succeed in his attempt, and yet he was sent to the penitentiary for 22 years, although for his deed the laws of Pennsylvania prescribed a punishment of not more than seven years.

While a collection was being taken up for Berkmann, Miss Goldman said he had not stepped into the breech for love of notoriety, but that it was his love for workingmen that led him to his deed. Whether his motives were noble or not, she claimed, it must be admitted that from the standpoint of law his sentence was unjust and excessive.

She spoke of the last election and the "patriots" who, with a full stomach and clad in broadcloth, had a good time calling on the poor to suffer patiently the ills of this life so that they could enjoy with greater zest the glories of the kingdom to come.

"It would make no difference to us anarchists if Bryan had been elected,"

[illegible] afternoon concerts, and the audience was more than usually enthusiastic and demonstrative. The program was essentially popular, and with the one exception of the Mendelssohn overture was lighter in quality throughout than is used at the orchestra concerts, presumably on account of its being a holiday performance.

Goldmark's symphony, "Rustic Wedding" (Landliche Hochzeit), which might be more intelligently called a "suite," was delightfully played. The second movement, Pastoral, was very dainty, and in the third movement, the "Scherzo," the wood winds had some very skillful work. In this and last movement was a curious contrast of gayety and color with a tender, pensive little melody coming in quite as a surprise from the preceding garden scene.

Madame Vizay was heard for the first time in the well-known [illegible] from Robert le Diable. While [illegible] the [illegible] work [illegible] a good impression [illegible] the audience. [illegible] [illegible] [illegible]

871117007

The Emma Goldman Papers

Marriage / E[mma] Goldman. – p. 2 ; 40 cm. In The Firebrand [Portland]. – Vol. 3, no. 24 (July 18, 1897).

Permission to reproduce or quote in any form must be obtained from The New York Public Library, Astor, Lenox and Tilden Foundations. Institutional Location: Rare Books and Manuscripts Division.

Marriage.

How much sorrow, misery, humiliation; how many tears and curses; what agony and suffering has this word brought to humanity. From its very birth, up to our present day, men and women grown under the iron yoke of our marriage institution, and there seems to be no relief, no way out of it.

At all times, and in all ages, have the suppressed striven to break the chains of mental and physical slavery. After thousands of noble lives have been sacrificed at the stake and on the gallows, and others have perished in prisons, or at the merciless hands of inquisitions, have the ideas of those brave heroes been accomplished. Thus have religious dogmas, feudalism and black slavery been abolished, and new ideas, more progressive, broader and clearer, have come to the front, and again we see poor downtrodden humanity fighting for its rights and independence. But the cruelest, most tyranical of all institutions—marriage, stands firm as ever, and woe unto those who dare to even doubt its sacredness. Its mere discussion is enough to infuriate not only Christians and conservatives alone, but even Liberals, Freethinkers, and Radicals. What is it that causes all these people to uphold marriage? What makes them cling to this prejudice? (for it is nothing else but prejudice). It is because marriage relations, are the foundation of private property, ergo, the foundation of our cruel and inhuman system. With wealth and superfluity on one side, and idleness, exploitation, poverty, starvation, and crime on the other, hence to abolish marriage, means to abolish everything above mentioned. Some progressive people are trying to reform and better our marriage laws. They no longer permit the church to interfere in their matrimonial relations, others even go further, they marry free, that is without the consent of the law, but, nevertheless, this form of marriage is just as binding, just as "sacred", as the old form, because it is not the form or the kind of marriage relation we have, but the thing, the thing itself that is objectionable, hurtful and degrading. It always gives the man the right and power over his wife, not only over her body, but also over her actions, her wishes; in fact, over her whole life. And how can it be otherwise?

Behind the relations of any individual man and woman to each other, stands the historical age evolved relations between the two sexes in general, which have led up to the difference in the position and privileges of the two sexes to day.

Two young people come together, but their relation is largely determined by causes over which they have no control. They know little of each other, society has kept both sexes apart, the boy and the girl have been brought up along different lines. Like Olive Schreiner says in her Story of an African Farm "The boy has been taught to be, the girl to seem." Exactly; the boy is taught to be intelligent, bright, clever, strong, athletic, independent and selfreliant; to develop his natural faculties, to follow his passions and desires. The girl has been taught to dress, to stand before the looking glass and admire herself, to control her emotions, her passions, her wishes, to hide her mental defects and to combine what little intelligence and ability she has on one point, and that is, the quickest and best way to angle a husband, to get profitably married. And so it has come that the two sexes hardly understand each others nature, that their mental interest and occupations are different. Public opinion seperates their rights and duties, their honor and dishonor very strictly from each other. The subject of sex is a sealed book to the girl, because she has been given to understand that it is impure, immoral and indecent to even mention the sex question. To the boy it is a book whose pages have brought him disease and secret vice, and in some cases ruin and death.

Among the rich class it has long been out of fashion to fall in love. Most of society marry, after a life of debauchery and lust, to build up their ruined constitution. Others again have lost their capital, in gambling sports or business speculation, and decide that an heiress would be just the thing they need, knowing well, that the marriage tie will in no way hinder them from squandering the income of their wealthy bride. The rich girl having been brought to be practical and sensible, and having been accustomed to live, breathe, eat, smile, walk and dream only according to fashion, holds out her millions to some title, or to a man with a good social standing. She has one consolation, and that is, that society allows more freedom of action to a [illegible]

riage she will be in a position to gratify her wishes otherwise. We know, the walls of boudoirs and salons are deaf and dumb, and a little pleasure within these walls is no crime.

With the men and women among the working-class, marriage is quite a different thing. Love is not so rare as among the upper class, and very often helps both to endure disapointments and sorrows in life, but even here the majority of marriages, last only for a short while, to be swallowed up in the monotany of the every day life and the struggle for existence. Here also, the workingman marries because he grows tired of a bordinghouse life, and out of a desire to build a home of his own, where he will find his comfort. His main object, therefor, is to find a girl that will make a good cook and housekeeper; one that will look out only for his happiness, for his pleasures; one that will look up to him as her lord, her master, her defender, her supporter; the only ideal worth while living for. Another man hopes that the girl he'll marry will be able to work and help to put away a few cents for rainy days, but after a few months of so called happiness he awakens to the bitter reality that his wife is soon to become a mother, that she can not work, that the expences grow bigger, and that while he before managed to get along with the small earning allowed him by his "kind" master, this earning is not sufficient to support a family.

The girl who has spent her childhood, and part of her womanhood, in the factory, feels her strength leaving her and pictures to herself the dreadful condition of ever having to remain a shopgirl, never certain of her work, she is, therefore, compelled to lookout for a man, a good husband, which means one who can support her, and give her a good home. Both, the men and the girl, marry for the same purpose, with the only exception that the man is not expected to give up his individuality, his name, his independence, whereas, the girl has to sell herself, body and soul, for the pleasure of being someone's wife; hence they do not stand on equal terms, and where there is no equality there can be no harmony. The consequence is that shortly after the first few months, or to make all allowance possible, after the first year, both come to the conclusion that marriage is a failure.

As their conditions grow worse and worse, and with the increase of children the women grows despondant, miserable, dissatisfied and weak. Her beauty soon leaves her, and from hard work, sleepless nights, worry about the little ones and disagreement and quarrels with her husband, she soon becomes a physical wreck and curses the moment that made her a poor man's wife. Such a dreary, miserable life is certainly not inclined to maintain love or respect for each other. The man can at least forget his misery in the company of a few friends; he can absorb himself in politics, or he can drown his misfortune in a glass of beer. The woman is chained to the house by a thousand duties; she cannot, like her husband, enjoy some recreation because she either has no means for it, or she is refused the same rights as her husband, by public opinion. She has to carry the cross with her until death, because our marriage laws know of no mercy, unless she wishes to lay bare her married life before the critical eye of Mrs. Grundy, and even then she can only break the chains which tie her to the man she hates if she takes all the blame on her own shoulders, and if she has energy enough to stand before the world disgraced for the rest of her life. How many have the courage to do that? Very few. Only now and then it comes like a flash of lightening that some women, like the Princess De Chimay, has had pluck enough to break the conventional barriers and follow her heart's desire. But this exception is a wealthy woman, dependent upon no one. The poor woman has to consider her little ones; she is less fortunate than her rich sister, and yet the women who remains in boudage is called respectable: never mind if her whole life is a long chain of lies, deceit and treachery, she yet dares to look down with disgust upon her sisters who have been forced by society to sell their charms and affections on the street. No matter how poor, how miserable a married woman may be, she will yet think herself above the other, whom she calls a prostitute, who is an outcast, hated and despised by everyone, even those who do not hesitate to buy her embrace, look upon the poor wretch as a necessary evil, and some goody goody people even suggest to confine this evil to one district in New York, in order to "purify" all other districts of the city. What a farce! The reformers might as well demand that all the married inhabitants of New York [illegible] out because they certainly do not stand morally higher than the street woman. The sole difference between her and the married woman is, that the one has sold herself into chattel slavery during life, for a home or a title, and the other one sells herself for the length of time she desires; she has the right to choose the man she bestowes her affections upon, whereas the married woman has no right whatsoever; she must submit to the embrace of her lord, no matter how lothsome this embrace may be to her, she must obey his commands; she has to bear him children, even at the cost of her own strength and health; in a word, she prostitutes herself every hour, every day of her life. I can find no other name for the horrid, humiliating and degrading condition of my married sisters than prostitution of the worst kind, with the only exception that the one is legal, the other illegal.

I cannot deal with the few exceptional cases of marriage which are based on love, esteem and respect; these exceptions only verify the rule. But whether legal or illegal, prostitution in any form is unnatural, hurtful and despicable, and I know only too well that the conditions cannot be changed until this infernal system is abolished, but I also know that it is not only the economic dependence of women which has caused her enslavement, but also her ignorance and prejudice, and I also know that many of my sisters could be made free even now, were it not for our marriage institutions which keep them in ignorance, stupidity and prejudice. I therefore consider it my greatest duty to denounce marriage, not only the old form, but the so-called modern marriage, the idea of taking a wife and housekeeper, the idea of private possession of one sex by the other. I demand the independence of woman; her right to support herself; to live for herself; to love whomever she pleases, or as many as she pleases. I demand freedom for both sexes, freedom of action, freedom in love and freedom in motherhood.

Do not tell me that all this can only be accomplished under Anarchy; this is entirely wrong. If we want to accomplish Anarchy, we must first have free women at least, those woman who are economically just as independent as their brothers are, and unless we have free women, we cannot have free mothers, and if mothers are not free, we cannot expect the young generation to assist us in the accomplishment of our aim, that is the establishment of an Anarchist society.

To you Freethinkers and Liberals who have abolished one God and created many whom you worship; you Radicals and Socialists, who still send your children to Sunday school, and all those who make concessions to the moral standard of to day; to all of you I say that it is your lack of courage which makes you cling to and uphold marriage, and while you admit its absurdity in theory, you have not the energy to defy public opinion, and to live your own life practically. You prate of equality of the sexes in a future Society, but you think it a necessary evil that the woman should suffer at present. You say women are inferior and weaker, and instead of assisting them to grow stronger you help to keep them in a degraded position. You demand exclusiveness for us, but you love variety and enjoy it whereever you can get a chance.

Marriage, the curse of so many centuries, the cause of jealousy, suicide and crime, must be abolished if we wish the young generation to grow to healthy, strong and free men and women.

E. Goldman.

New York, July, '97.

Note and Comment.

Comrades Pope, Bloserve, the Little Anarchist and myself celebrated the fourth of July by picking and putting up twenty-five quarts of wild blackberries. Who spent the "glorious fourth" more pleasantly or profitably?

* * *

The philosophy of the Statists would, if carried to its logical ultimate, claim the wild blackberries as the property of the community, and the "masters"—land committee I presume—would tell the people when they might pick them, and how to dispose of them when picked. Would not that be nice?!

* * *

It may seem rediculous to talk of the State claiming the control of wild blackberry picking, but it is a logical ultimate of the claim of the State to the ownership of the land, for if the State owned the land it would surely own all that is produced spontaniously thereon. If it owned the timber that grows on the land then it would own the blackberries, and have as much right to control the picking of wild blackberries as the cutting of timber.

July 18

BEST COPY AVAILABLE

881018005

The Emma Goldman Papers

[Summary of Lecture] Joy at the Death of Canovas / Emma Goldman.— p. 1 ; 43 cm.
In The New York Times. —(Aug. 17, 1897).
Obtained from the University of California, Berkeley. Institutional Location: Doe Library.

claimed the dispensary system would diminish drunkenness, protect the health as well as the morals of the people by furnishing them with only chemically pure liquors. Furthermore, it was said the system would pay $1,000,000 yearly into the State Treasury—more than enough to run the State Government and public school system. In short, it would relieve the taxpayers of State taxes.

Received with Disfavor.

Despite this argument the institution was received with the reverse of favor. The Conservative, or anti-Tillman, element refused to see anything good in what Tillman had done, and thousands of them registered vows never to take a drink of "Tillman's liquor." The papers took up the constitutional and moral questions involved, and with few exceptions denounced the new system.

The "reformers" even resented having to sign their names to applications for pints and half pints of corn whisky as a restriction and an infringement on their liberties. As a result "blind tigers" were opened in every town.

The consequence was what Tillman had foreseen when he drew up the bill and provided for a dispensary constabulary. The State was placed under semi-martial law. In every town and village two or three constables paraded the streets armed to the teeth with rifles and revolvers.

They had almost unlimited powers, which included the right to enter and search private houses where liquors were known or supposed to be stored, also to examine the baggage of passengers on railroad platforms.

Occasionally in searching a house a woman was insulted, and occasionally in examining baggage a woman's trunk was opened and the crowd treated to a sight of dainty silks and muslins tumbled in a heap on the ground.

The newspapers kept track of these occurrences and served them up to their readers under appropriate headings until at the next session of the General Assembly they had made the institution so unpopular that the salary of the State dispenser was raised on account—as his friends said in open debate—of the "odium" attached to the office.

The constables, recruited from a class whom "odium" could not deter, were as insolent as Claverhouse's dragoons. Women who barred entrances to private apartments were slapped in the face while their husbands "covered" with pistols looked on helpless.

Violence of Constables.

The majority of the people submitted quietly to the exactions and impertinences of the constables, but there were conflicts. At Darlington there was a pitched battle in which two constables and two citizens lost their lives. Near threescore persons have been killed by the constables since the enforcement of the law began, but none of those guilty of the taking of life has been punished.

The reformers probably would have abandoned Tillman and his scheme years ago but for the affair at Darlington. They already had begun to grow tired of being dragooned by the constables, and the high price of the dispensary liquors added to their discontent.

But Tillman was too astute a politician to let the opportunity pass the opportunity he found in the Darlington affair. As it happened, the fight at Darlington was between the constables on one side and Conservatives on the other. Tillman immediately denounced it as an anti-Tillman uprising, and made a great display of fearing assassination; having himself guarded, first in the Governor's mansion and then in the State Penitentiary.

The reform papers took up the cry, and in an amazingly short time had convinced their readers that the dispensary was a "reform measure" to be defended with their lives. Excitement ran high and Conservative militia companies which had refused to obey the Governor's orders were replaced by companies of enthusiastic Tillmanites who gave expression to their devotion by dubbing themselves "Ben Tillman Rifles," "Ben Tillman Volunteers," and "Ben Tillman Guards."

The absorption of dispensary whisky became a test of loyalty to the cause, and for a time the blind tigers had to depend upon the Conservative element, while their enemies bankrupted themselves out of pure patriotism.

Meanwhile the courts had been appealed to until so many conflicting opinions rendered that no one could pretend to keep the run of them. But at length, a short time after the Darlington war, the Supreme Court decided the law unconstitutional. This closed the dispensary and reopened the barrooms.

Remodeled the Court.

But at the next session the Legislature changed the complexion of the Supreme Court and passed a new Dispensary bill. The [illegible] was reversed, of course, and since that time the institution has been running full blast. But it has never been out of trouble in the courts.

Tillman during his last term as Governor had the Legislature pass a bill empowering the Executive to appoint metropolitan police over towns and cities which failed to enforce the dispensary law. He held it over Charleston to the end of his term, but did not use it.

Charleston had been unusually submissive before, the metropolitans were put in charge, but since then has spared neither money nor pains to uproot the system. The State courts being hopelessly closed against the Charleston people, they have appealed

The [illegible] as "premeditated murder," court to impose the death penalty.

Lieut. Gorris, whom the Court had assigned as counsel for Angiolillo, urged that the prisoner was demented at the time of the shooting, and made a strong appeal to the benevolence of the Judges. While his counsel was presenting this plea, Angiolillo listened in silence. Then he asked permission to speak for himself, which was granted. He thanked Lieut. Gorris for his efforts and denied that he had any accomplices or that he was an accomplice of those who committed the bomb-throwing outrage at Barcelona, or that he had participated in secret gatherings of Anarchists. When he began to discuss Anarchist theories, the President of the court interrupted him and threatened to stop him if he pursued that line of remark or touched upon any matters not connected with the trial.

Angiolillo persisted in speaking of politics and of the wars in Cuba and the Philippines. The President said: "All that has nothing to do with your crime." Angiolillo replied: "I must justify myself." The President retorted: "That is no justification. Moreover, you can convince nobody in that way."

Angiolillo began again, but the President declared the trial ended, and ordered the court room cleared.

After the prisoner had been conducted to his cell the Judges deliberated for an hour and then announced the sentence of the court.

JOY AT THE DEATH OF CANOVAS.

Emma Goldman and Her Friends Loudly Praise the Assassin Golli.

Emma Goldman was the leading spirit at the Anarchist mass meeting last night at Clarendon Hall to celebrate the assassination, or "removal," of Canovas del Castello. About forty policemen and detectives, under command of Acting Capt. Dimond, were scattered through the hall to prevent a riot. Emma did not like this, and when she got a chance she said so.

She was in her element among "reds" of half a dozen nationalities, Germans, Italians, Spaniards, Frenchmen, and people from North and South America and the West Indies. She wore a bright pink waist, and ruled the Chairman and the speakers and everybody else. There was an absence of red flags or other emblems in the hall, and only two portraits were visible, that of Casserio, who "removed" Carnot, and of the Spanish Anarchist, Pallas.

A mild-looking young Irishman by the name of H. M. Kelly took the chair and opened the meeting. He showed an inclination to do all the talking himself, but the woman leader pulled his sleeve and whispered to him to give the others a chance. Kelly subsided and introduced one speaker, and when he had finished started out on another harangue. Again Emma pulled his sleeve and scolded him, and he again subsided. He kept repeating himself, but the gist of his argument was that Canovas was a very bad man who had tortured and killed Anarchists, and consequently his "removal" was good riddance to bad rubbish. All Anarchists should feel happy.

The first speaker was introduced as Abelardo Moscoso. He was a very dark Frenchman from San Diego, and had very little to say besides telling the audience that he had once received a poinard thrust for freedom and was willing to die for liberty. He, also, was happy at Canovas's death. S. Pallavecini, the delegate from the Italian Typographical Union, lauded Golli, and said that he was so affected by the reading of the suffering of the Anarchists in Spain that he would have killed any hundred of Canovases if they were before him.

Emma Goldman was warmly greeted when she got up to speak. She said that every sensible person ought to feel glad over the death of a monster, and she really wondered that some Cuban had not removed the Spaniard before. She talked in this strain for some time, and then remarked that the United States seemed to sympathize with Canovas because it had sent so many policemen and detectives to the meeting. However, she sympathized with them, because they also were workingmen. Then she added: "They are the kind of workingmen who are too lazy to work in factories for $6 a week, but find it easier to stand on a corner swinging a club."

HAVANA TO HONOR CANOVAS.

Funeral Services to be Held in the Cathedral To-day.

HAVANA, Aug. 16.—Funeral services in honor of the late Premier of Spain, Señor Canovas del Castillo, will be held at the Cathedral here to-morrow. All the Government offices will be closed and the business houses will also close for the day as a mark of respect for the dead.

JUSTICE FIELD'S LONG TERM.

Over Thirty-four Years of Service on the Supreme Court Bench.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 16.—Justice Stephen J. Field of the United States Supreme Court to-day established the record for longest service on that bench. Until to-day the service of Chief Justice John Marshall had been the longest in the history of the court, covering thirty-four years.

The [illegible] case used in the [illegible] made it a little [illegible] did not think it was intended [illegible] railways, although perhaps it was [illegible] of that interpretation. He advised [illegible] Canadian press to keep cool about [illegible] ter, because, he added, it would be [illegible] enough for Canadians to adopt a [illegible] tion when the authorities at W[illegible] interpreted the clause as some [illegible] parties were anxious to have it interpreted.

A PHOTOGRAPHER AND A CALF.

The Latter Took Umbrage at a Red Kite and Spoiled a Picture.

NEW BRUNSWICK, N. J., Aug. 16.—A calf frustrated an attempt to take a bird's-eye view snapshot of this city last Saturday. George H. Parsell, an architect, who is an enthusiast in photography, made the attempt to photograph New Brunswick from the clouds. A box kite was to convey the camera high in the air, and then, by means of a string, Mr. Parsell was to click the camera.

A crowd of young people went out to see the flight, and when the party entered a field on the Canburt turnpike they never noticed that a half-grown bull calf was pasturing there. The architect had made the mistake of constructing the kite from red cheesecloth, and this fact aroused the calf's ire. Mr. Parsell made his preparations, all the time blissfully ignorant of the fact that the calf was preparing for a charge. But just as the architect started to throw the kite skyward without the camera on a trial trip the animal made his rush.

There was a shriek as the young people fled from the scene, a rush of something, and then Mr. Parsell saw from his recumbent position on the turf a calf speeding out of the field with a kite trailing behind him. Pursuit was useless. Mr. Parsell said he was thankful that he had not sent up the camera. Later the calf was found amusing itself by demolishing the remains of the kite. Although the attempt was a failure, Mr. Parsell will try again with a different pasture and a different colored kite.

ATLANTA'S NEW PROFESSOR.

W. E. B. Du Bois Appointed to the Chair of Economics and History.

ATLANTA, Aug. 16.—Atlanta University has just appointed W. E. B. Du Bois, Ph. D., to the Professorship of Economics and History left vacant by the death of Prof. John H. Hincks. Dr. Du Bois is a member of the race for whom Atlanta University is chiefly doing its work.

After two years of post-graduate study he received from Harvard the degree of Ph. D., one of the few ever conferred by that institution for work in economics and history. Dr. Du Bois then went to Germany, where he continued his studies for two years. Returning to America he taught for two years in Wilberforce University, Ohio, and then was called a year ago by the University of Pennsylvania to undertake a statistical investigation among the negroes of Philadelphia, upon which he is still engaged.

Dr. Du Bois is the author of "A History of the Suppression of the Slave Trade in the United States," which has been published by Harvard University as the first volume of its "Historical Series." He is a contributor to the Annals of the American Academy of Social Science and other periodicals. The August number of The Atlantic Monthly contains an article from his pen.

Woodcock and Partridge Plenty.

MIDDLETOWN, N. Y., Aug. 16.—Local hunters in quest of woodcock and partridge had splendid success to-day, the first day on which the hunting of these birds is allowable under the game laws of the State. Half a dozen hunters returned to-night with their game bags well filled.

THE WEATHER.

The local forecast may be found at the top of this page to the right of the title.

The storm has moved from Ontario to the St. Lawrence Valley, giving showers to the whole country east of the Mississippi River.

The pressure is high off the Middle Pacific coast, and a ridge of high pressure extends from Southern Florida to Alberta.

[illegible] in the Atlantic States, has risen in the Upper Mississippi Valley and the Rocky Mountain regions, and has generally fallen elsewhere.

The record of temperature for the twenty-four hours ended at midnight, taken from THE NEW YORK TIMES's thermometer and from the thermometer of the Weather Bureau, is as follows:

	—Weather Bureau.— 1896.	1897.
3 A. M.	70	[illegible]
6 A. M.	70	[illegible]
9 A. M.	72	74
12 M.	74	[illegible]
4 P. M.	76	[illegible]

881018007

The Emma Goldman Papers

[Excerpt from Lecture] Anarchy in Spain and in New York / Emma Goldman. – pp. 1-2 ; 43 cm. In The World. – (Aug. 17, 1897).

Obtained from the University of California, Berkeley. Institutional Location: Doe Library.

SDAY, AUGUST 17, 1897. PRICE [illegible]

ANARCHY IN SPAIN AND IN NEW YORK.

Golli, Assassin of Canovas, Condemned to the Garrote.

HE TRIED TO HARANGUE.

But the President Cut Him Off and Brought the Trial to an End.

HORRIFIED BY THE SCAFFOLD.

Angiolillo Expected that He Would Be Shot Like Other Anarchists.

HIS TRIAL WAS SUMMARY.

Government Ordered It Hastened—Great Precautions Taken Against an Outbreak.

(Copyright, 1897, by the Press Publishing Company, New York World.)

(Special Cable Despatch to The World.)

VERGARA, Spain, Aug. 16, via Bayonne, Aug. 16.—Angiolillo, the anarchist who shot Prime Minister Canovas, has been sentenced to die by the garrote in the middle of the week, within the walls of Vergara prison.

The Government suddenly determined on Saturday to hasten the trial and execution of Angiolillo. Telegrams from the War Office were sent to Vitoria and San Sebastian that obliged the members and president of the court martial and the public prosecutor, to start from that garrison in the middle of the night, arriving at Vergara about daybreak.

The local authorities, also instructed, hurried preparations in the Civil Courthouse. A strong guard was posted all around. Other precautions were taken. All suspicious-looking foreigners and strangers were closely watched, because the authorities of Vitoria had arrested on Saturday two Germans, alleged workmen on a tramp in quest of work, but who had anarchist and socialist papers on their persons, and could not satisfactorily account for their movement.

All the members of the court, according to custom, first heard mass in the principal Vergara church. Then they proceeded, in full uniform, with an escort, to the Hall of Justice.

The court-room was not large, but was well lighted by several windows. At the upper end, with back to the wall, sat in the centre the President, Colonel of Artillery Elicegui, a severe-looking officer, having on his right and left six captains of infantry and artillery, while the public prosecutor, Capt. Auditor, sat on the right of the judges. Counsel for the defense, Lieutenant of Artillery Gorria, sat on the left, looking grave, under the difficult task assigned to him by the authorities because the prisoner refused to select counsel from a list of six officers proffered to him.

Civil guards, soldiers, with fixed bayonets, stood at the doors. Comparatively few people were present except officials, though everybody in Vergara knew the trial was taking place.

Curiosity centred in the prisoner, whom priests again visited early Sunday morning, in an endeavor to shake his resolute obstinacy.

When the prison officials informed him he was wanted for trial he stood up as erect as his irons permitted, made his toilet, had his cravat set right and his coat cleaned, and spouted out more than usual about his anarchist ideas, though his jailers reminded him that he must behave himself. With their assistance he was speedily conveyed to a room near the court, where he was closely watched by a strong escort with loaded muskets and fixed bayonets under a captain.

EMMA GOLDMAN.
Addressing an Anarchist meeting last night.

Anarchists Here Applaud the Assassination of Canovas.

GOLLI HAILED AS A HERO.

Emma Goldman Excites Cheers by a Wild, Bloodthirsty Harangue.

THE POLICE LISTEN INACTIVE.

"I Glory in the Murder of Canovas," Screamed the Frantic Woman.

PRESIDENT M'KINLEY ASSAILED.

"We Are Enemies of Government. Government Is Tyranny," the Goldman Woman Said.

"President McKinley and Mark Hanna are shedding crocodile tears over the killing of Canovas del Castillo. In their own hearts they are saying 'Perhaps I will be the next.'

"I do not advise anybody to kill, but whether I advise it or you advise it fortunately makes no difference. Heroes like Golli do not ask permission of me or of anybody else to do their duty as they see it.

"So long as tyrants oppress mankind Gollis will be found to execute them.

"We are not enemies of society. We are enemies of government, for government is tyranny."

One thousand men and women cheered this sentiment uttered by Emma Goldman, the Anarchist, at a meeting held at Clarendon Hall, Thirteenth street, between Third and Fourth avenues, last night.

The crowd was not one upon which the hand of poverty seemed to rest very heavily. They were, as a rule, more than comfortably dressed, and they looked well fed.

Such a crowd could not have been brought together in any other American city than this. They listened to speeches in five languages—English, French, German, Italian and Spanish—and they interrupted the speakers with expressions not only in those languages, but in a variety of patois and dialects.

Celebration of a Crime.

A circular that had been widely distributed brought the crowd together. The circular was really an invitation to rejoice over an assassination. It read:

MASS-MEETING TO CELEBRATE
THE DEATH OF THE
LEADING DESPOT OF SPAIN,
CANOVAS DEL CASTILLO, EXECUTED BY
ANARCHIST MICHEL ANGELO GOLLI.

The meeting was the first at which the spirit of anarchy as it exists in this city has dared to show itself with any strength since Herr Most, High Priest of the Order of Disorder, was made to serve a term in the penitentiary. He [illegible] night.

Police Were Informed.

The police were fully informed of the purpose of the meeting, and Acting Captain Diamond, of the Fifth Street Station, was present with twenty men, who had to stand by to hear themselves called "dogs and thieves," the meeting was not broken.

Emma Goldman evidently hoped it would be, and did her utmost to [illegible] something that would cause the police to act.

The Goldman woman [illegible]

SHOT A MAN, THEN PRAYED.

One Deputy Mortally Wounds Another in a Fight and Asks God's Forgiveness.

(Special to The World.)

PITTSBURG, Aug. 16.—Deputy Sheriff Stober Kerr was shot and fatally wounded by Deputy Frank Anderson at the Plum Creek Mines of the New York and Cleveland Gas Coal Company this afternoon.

Anderson had been placed temporarily in charge of the squad of officers protecting miners from violence at Plum Creek. He ordered Kerr to go on what is known as the noonday relief.

The men had some words, and Kerr refused to carry out Anderson's orders. He cursed the chief deputy, and the latter struck him in the face. Kerr knocked Anderson down. Anderson tried to argue with Kerr, but was knocked down again. As Kerr came over to kick him Anderson shot Kerr in the abdomen.

Anderson arose, handed his revolver

WARRIOR TO BECOME A PRIEST.

Gen. Olmsted, Who Raised the First New York Regiment for the War, a Catholic Convert.

(Special to The World.)

LA PORTE, Ind., Aug. 16.—Living in priestly seclusion at Notre Dame University is Gen. W. A. Olmsted, who enlisted with the New York troops at the outbreak of the civil war and retired from the service a commissioned brigadier-general.

Gen. Olmsted, in his declining years, has become a convert to the Catholic religion. The faculty of the university is reticent concerning him, but it is known that he will be ordained a priest before leaving the college.

Gen. Olmsted raised at Troy the first company of volunteers in New York for the late war and it became Company B, Second Infantry. He was promoted to colonel June 10, 1863, and later given command of the Second New York Regiment. He commanded this regiment at the battle of Chan[illegible]

881018007

The Emma Goldman Papers

[Excerpt from Lecture] Anarchy in Spain and in New York / Emma Goldman.— pp. 1-2 ; 43 cm. In The World. —(Aug. 17, 1897).

Obtained from the University of California, Berkeley. Institutional Location: Doe Library.

ered It Hastened—utions Taken Outbreak.

Press Publishing Company, rk World.) patch to The World.)
n, Aug. 15, via Bagiolillo, the anarchist
inister Canovas, has die by the garrote in eek, within the walls

suddenly determined asten the trial and illo. Telegrams from e sent to Vitoria and obliged the members
he court martial and or, to start from that idle of the night, ar-
about daybreak.
ities, also instructed,
ns in the Civil Court-guard was posted all
caut.ons were taken.
king foreigners and
sely watched, because Vitoria had arrested
ermans, alleged work-n quest of work, but t and socialist papers and could not satis-
for their movement.
of the court, accord-
st heard mass in the church. Then they uniform, with an esof Justice.
was not large, but was veral windows. At the back to the wall, sat
President, Colonel of a severe-looking of-his right and left six antry and artillery.
prosecutor, Capt. Au-right of the judges.
defense, Lieutenant of sat on the left, looking difficult task assigned uthorities because the
to select counsel from
ers proffered to him.
ldiers, with fixed bay-
the doors. Comparawere present except everybody in Vergara
as taking place.
ed in the prisoner,
ain visited early Sun-
an endeavor to shake
nacy.
son officials informed ted for trial he stood irons permitted, made his cravat set right
ened, and spouted out
l about his anarchist
s jailers reminded him behave himself. With he was speedily con-
near the court, where atched by a strong es-muskets and fixed bay-
aptain.
in Angiolillo gazed de-curiously scrutinizing
g for somebody.
s were conducted rapid-ts of witnesses and doc-n conclusions were read
d quickly by the clerk.
cutor read his sternly
the crown, based upon onfession of premedita-rous lying in wait, his ing out the deed, anarand complicity in othrcelona, finally asking ence Angiolillo to death

the prisoner, who ext like other Anarchists, nd horrified. The counnse read a brief argu-
to show that his client imploring indulgence of sat with hard, unmoved

then asked Angiolillo say. He stood up and ar voice, with resolute timing to show that he ordinary murderor, but tor and avenger of his ts who were shot and rcelona.

his protests and gestic-shing eyes and excited
e a strange aspect to
tures, uncombed beard
as the guards led him confinement, from which y to be led to death be-of Vergara Prison. Anr nothing of the outer body but the priests.
cleared for half an hour

on Second Page.)

EMMA GOLDMAN.

Addressing an Anarchist meeting last night.

SHOT A MAN, THEN PRAYED.

One Deputy Mortally Wounds Another in a Fight and Asks God's Forgiveness.

(Special to The World.)

PITTSBURG, Aug. 16. Deputy Sheriff Robert Kerr was shot and fatally wounded by Deputy Frank Anderson at the Plum Creek Mines of the New York and Cleveland Gas Coal Company this afternoon.

Anderson had been placed temporarily in charge of the squad of officers protecting miners from strikers at Plum Creek. He ordered Kerr to go on what is known as the noonday relief.

The men had some words, and Kerr refused to carry out Anderson's orders. He cursed the chief deputy and the latter struck him in the face. Kerr knocked Anderson down. Anderson tried to argue with Kerr, but was knocked down again. As Kerr came over to kick him Anderson shot Kerr in the abdomen.

Anderson arose, handed his revolver to other deputies and telephoned to Sheriff Lowry. Then he went to a platform where religious services are held. Getting on his knees he prayed that Kerr's life would be spared.

With the other deputy sheriffs gathered around him, their heads bowed and uncovered, and the dying man not a hundred feet away, he asked the forgiveness of God, saying he had to kill Kerr to save his own life.

TAUGHT HER MUSIC AND LOVE.

A New Orleans Belle Rides Away from Her Bicyclist Lover to Marry a Violinist.

(Special to The World.)

BRIDGEPORT, Conn., Aug. 16.—There came from New Orleans, a year ago, Miss Flossie Tomlinson, eighteen years of age and very comely. With her mother she visited in Derby, and fell in love with a fine young man. They rode bicycles together and showed signs of desiring to wheel through life on Love's tandem.

But alas! That tandem, like every other, is not proof against the accidents.

Miss Tomlinson took lessons on the violin of Prof. McDougal, leader of the orchestra in the Stirling Opera-House, at Derby. As the lessons progressed the old love faded and a new love came. But they never told of it to others.

Last night teacher and pupil crossed the Sound to Port Jefferson, and Pastor Peck, of the Presbyterian Church, united them. They went back home to Shelton and kept the marriage secret. But to-day the announcement was made.

And the young man of the bicycle—alack, for his hopes, they have had a puncture.

WARRIOR TO BECOME A PRIEST.

Gen. Olmsted, Who Raised the First New York Regiment for the War, a Catholic Convert.

(Special to The World.)

LA PORTE, Ind., Aug. 16.—Living in priestly seclusion at Notre Dame University is Gen. W. A. Olmsted, who enlisted with the New York troops at the outbreak of the civil war and retired from the service a commissioned brigadier-general.

Gen. Olmsted, in his declining years, has become a convert to the Catholic religion. The faculty of the university is reticent concerning him, but it is known that he will be ordained a priest before leaving the college.

Gen. Olmsted raised at Troy the first company of volunteers in New York for the late war and it became Company B, Second Infantry. He was promoted to colonel June 10, 1861, and later given command of the Second New York Regiment. He commanded this regiment at the battle of Chancellorsville.

He became Colonel of the Fifty-ninth New York Veteran Volunteers, and later was assigned to command the first brigade of the second division, second corps of the Army of the Potomac. He remained in this command until the final year of the war.

Gen. Olmsted is sixty years of age and remarkably well preserved.

GIRL'S FATHER SAVES ASSAILANT.

Tells Would-Be Lynchers that He Prefers to Let the Law Take Its Course.

(Special to The World.)

DALTON, Ga., Aug. 16.—Miss Sallie Jones was assaulted by a negro near Lafayette last March and for three months was in peril of death from her injuries. Many colored men were taken before her, but her assailant was not among them. Recently a photograph of William Phillips, a negro, was sent from Arkansas, and she said he was the man.

Phillips was brought here to-day and an effort to lynch him was stopped by Miss Jones's father, who said that as the county court would meet this week he preferred to let the law take its course.

Phillips was placed in jail, but there is still some talk of lynching.

CROSS SAVES A FAST TRAIN.

(Special to The World.)

POUGHKEEPSIE, N. Y., Aug. 16.—John Cross, a laborer on the Vanderbilt mansion, at Hyde Park, discovered a broken rail on the Hudson River Railroad while on his way to work.

He reported it at Hyde Park. Then he returned to the spot and stopped the fast mail, preventing almost certain accident.

[illegible] Wyman said:

"President McKinley and Mark Hanna are shedding crocodile tears over the killing of Canovas del Castillo. In their own hearts they are saying 'Perhaps I will be next.'

"I do not advise anybody to kill, but whether I advise it or not, to-day will certainly make no difference. Heroes like Golli do not wait permission of me or of anybody else to do their duty as they see it.

"So long as tyrants oppress mankind Golli will be found to execute them.

"We are not enemies of mankind. We are enemies of government, for government is tyranny."

One thousand men and women cheered this sentiment uttered by Emma Goldman, the Anarchist, at a meeting held in Clarendon Hall, Thirteenth street, between Third and Fourth avenues, last night.

The crowd was not one upon which the hand of poverty seemed to rest very heavily. They were, as a rule, more than comfortably dressed, and they looked well fed.

Such a crowd could not have been brought together in any other American city than this. They listened to speeches in five languages—English, French, German, Italian and Spanish—and they interrupted the speakers with expressions not only in those languages, but in a variety of patois and dialects.

Celebration of a Crime.

A circular that had been widely distributed brought the crowd together. The circular was really an invitation to rejoice over an assassination. It read:

MASS-MEETING TO CELEBRATE
THE DEATH OF THE
LEADING DESPOT OF SPAIN,
CANOVAS DEL CASTILLO,
EXECUTED BY
ANARCHIST MICHEL ANGELO GOLLI.

The meeting was the first at which the spirit of anarchy as it exists in this city has dared to show itself with any strength since Herr Most, High Priest of the Order of Disorder, was made to serve a term in the penitentiary. He has been quiet a while and was not present last night.

Police Were Informed.

The police were fully informed of the purpose of the meeting, and although Acting Captain Diamond, of the Mott Street Station, was present with twenty men, who had to stand by, and hear themselves called "dogs and thieves," the meeting was not broken up.

Emma Goldman evidently hoped that it would be, and did her utmost to say something that would cause the police to act.

The Goldman woman entered the big hall after it was crowded, accompanied by young and pretty girls, who seemed to idolize her. They were followed by as many young men, who wore red neckties and vainly tried to look unconcerned.

Cheers for Goldman swelled into frantic shouts of approval as she went to the platform and hung up two pictures. One was a picture of Pallas, the Barcelona bomb thrower. The other was a picture of Santo, who assassinated President Carnot, of France.

Red Flag Not Displayed.

The red flag was not displayed in the hall, for the police had ordered that it should not be, but scores of the women wore flaming red shirt waists and the men waved red handkerchiefs.

One queer feature of the meeting was that several of the women carried babies in arms and there were a great many boys and girls there.

A consumptive little man named H. M. Kelly was called upon to preside. He tried to make a fierce, bloodthirsty speech, but his feeble piccolo voice was not equal to the task, and the crowd shouted for something stronger.

He Did His Best.

Kelly struggled on though, and, among other things, said:

"We are here to-night as Anarchists to express our emphatic indorsement of the execution of Canovas by Golli on Aug. 8.

"We are so anxious to have peace all over the world that we celebrate and rejoice over the death of the Spanish despot. Canovas has gone! May his like never be seen again!"

A German made a short speech in which he called Canovas "a beast" who was "only fit for slaughter."

He was followed by a dark-bearded and dark-skinned man from Porto Rico

86

BEST COPY AVAILABLE

881018007

The Emma Goldman Papers

[Excerpt from Lecture] Anarchy in Spain and in New York / Emma Goldman.– pp. 1-2 ; 43 cm. In The World. –(Aug. 17, 1897).

Obtained from the University of California, Berkeley. Institutional Location: Doe Library.

named Richards ... in Spanish. His ... that the tortures inflicted upon the men arrested in connection with the Barcelona bomb throwing had of inhumanity signed the death warrant of Canovas and that Anarchists everywhere should rejoice that the warrant had been executed.

Went Into Mysteries.

An Italian named Pallavencini claimed to speak as the delegate of the Italian Typographical Union. He became so excited in his speech that at times he laughed and cried hysterically. His countrymen in the hall went quite as wild.

"They say that we Anarchists are ferocious beasts, who should not be allowed to exist," he said. "Not so! Canovas was a beast, and had no right to live in this enlightened age. I have seen documentary proof of his heinous acts.

"The man who killed Canovas is a martyr to the cause of humanity and progress. The police knew fifteen days before the execution that the act was decreed, for they know that anarchy works with precision and with certainty.

"Just Retribution."

"The killing was an act of just retribution. The day of the emancipation of the world is not far away. Anarchists do not fear the guillotine or the gallows. Anarchy will soon be the religion of the world.

"Anarchists think it is better to kill a ruler who is a tyrant than to have a revolution in which thousands have to die because of his acts.

"All honor to the Italian people for furnishing the assassin. They call us all assassins. Well, Italians do sometimes try their hand at that game.

"I am a peaceable man, but when I read of the torture of the Anarchists of Barcelona my blood boiled, and if there had been one hundred Canovases I would have rejoiced to have killed them all."

After Blood-Money.

The feeble voiced Kelly got up and plaintively announced that it cost money to hold Anarchist meetings, that bills for rent and printing had to be paid. He asked for $100. The rent of the hall alone was $40.

The pretty girls passed the collection baskets, with Emma Goldman directing them. When they got through and counted up they found that they had only $12.80.

Emma Goldman looked savagely through her gold-rimmed glasses at the big crowd, which just then was cheering the statement of a Spaniard named Arrango, who said that the killing of Canovas by Golli was the act of a slave rising against long oppression.

Emma Goldman Speaks.

Goldman was introduced. The woman talks with wonderful speed in a high pitched, harsh voice with a strong German accent. Although a small woman she is very masculine in her actions and manner, and seems to delight in saying risqué as well as blood-thirsty things in order to evoke applause.

"Some people think it cruel that we should celebrate the death of such a great and noble man as Canovas," she said. "Those who have read history and know what Canovas has done to the people of Spain, of Cuba and of other Spanish colonies will know, however, that we are perfectly justified in rejoicing over the death of such a beast.

"If it was an honest workingman who was dead we would be sorry for him, or sorry for his family, but we cannot even be sorry for the family when the dead man was nothing but a monster. He has spent his whole life devising methods of torturing and killing men.

"I Glory in the Death of Canovas."

"I glory in the death of Canovas. I am ashamed of the Cuban patriots that they did not execute this monster long ago. I glorify the killing of Canovas by Golli, the hero, because it removes an obstacle from the path of progress.

"They tell us that Canovas was really not to blame for it all; that he was but an instrument in the hands of others. I say he—Canovas—was the tyrant and the tans of thousands of Spanish soldiers were his instruments. Down with all such!

"The tyrants of men are all cowards. Look at President Faure, of France. He hired a man to throw a bomb in order that he might become notorious, and then used his miserable scheme to try and punish and kill innocent men.

"They tell us that by despatching one tyrant we will not change society: that another tyrant will take his place. Yes, my friends, that is true, and another Golli will come up to meet every such new tyrant. Wherever there is a Caesar been allowed to live so long. His atrocious acts, inhuman almost beyond conception, against Cubans and Americans, deserve death. He murdered Dr. Ruiz, an American citizen. What is America going to do about it? Sue Spain for $50,000. Shame on such a cowardly country, I say!

Woe Unto Tyrants!

"Do not think that if they kill the brave Golli they will put down Anarchy! The silence of the martyred anarchists of Chicago in their graves is more eloquent than were their voices when they lived. Woe unto the tyrants of the world! We have thousands of Gollis!"

The crowd had cheered itself hoarse by the time that the Goldman finished speaking, but many remained to hear speeches by a Frenchman and another Spaniard. When Chairman Kelly got up to adjourn the meeting a big man got up and shouted in English:

"Long live Anarchy!"

The crowd echoed the sentiment in all tongues as it filed out of the hall.

ANARCHY IN SPAIN.

(Continued from First Page.)

of deliberation. Sentence of death was passed unanimously.

The people hissed the assassin with visible indignation.

WHAT ANGIOLILLO SAID.

His Speech in the Court-Room—When Cut Short He Said He Wanted to Justify Himself.

VERGARA, Aug. 16.—Angiolillo, heavily manacled, sat between two gendarmes and immediately in front of his judges at his trial. On a table nearby lay his revolver and other material evidence of his crime.

A written statement of the prisoner was read among other papers by the clerk of the court. Angiolillo in the course of the statement said that he left Foggia in October, 1886, and went to Marseilles and Barcelona, where he took the name of Jose Santos. At first he had no thought of becoming an Anarchist, but while at Coromina he began to be interested in Anarchist doctrines. He then returned to Marseilles, and after his expulsion from that city he went to Belgium and London, where he passed most of his time in the society of Anarchists.

When the execution took place at Barcelona on May 4 of five of the Anarchists convicted of participation in the bomb outrage at the feast of Corpus Christi he conceived the idea of assassinating Canovas. Without seeking an accomplice he proceeded to Spain and carried out the resolution.

Angiolillo went on to say that the passion for vengeance led him to commit the crime. As he was unacquainted with the manufacture of explosives, he used the revolver.

While his counsel was presenting in his behalf a plea of insanity, Angiolillo listened in silence. Then he asked permission to speak for himself, which was granted.

He thanked his counsel for his efforts. He denied that he had any accomplice, or that he was an accomplice of those who threw the bombs at Barcelona, or that he had participated in secret gatherings of Anarchists.

When he began to discuss Anarchist theories the President of the court interrupted him and threatened to stop him if he pursued that line of remark or touched upon any matters not connected with the trial.

Angiolillo persisted in speaking of politics and of the wars in Cuba and the Philippines.

The President said, "All that has noth-

PLEADED FOR THEIR HOME.

Mrs. Kelly Was Too Poor to Support Her Two Little Boys.

ASKED TO HAVE THEM SENT AWAY

But Children Clung to Their Mother in a Brooklyn Court and Would Not Go.

Two boys, one five years old and the other seven, clung to their mother yesterday in the Lee Avenue Court, Brooklyn, E. D., while she implored Justice Kramer to place them in an institution where they might be cared for until they arrived at an age when they could aid in supporting their mother and other members of the family.

The woman said she was Mary Kelly and that she lived at No. 146 Grand street. She was unable to support the boys, as her husband had been an invalid from cancer in the face for seven years.

Mrs. Kelly said she had three other children, the elder a girl of seventeen, who earned $4 a week with a firm in New York. Little of this was left after paying ferriage and carfare. The other children earned nothing.

Mrs. Kelly told Justice Kramer that if the two boys were put away she would be able to care for her husband and the others.

Two little ones clung to their mother's garments and implored her not to send them away.

"I will be a big boy soon, mamma," said Willie, the elder, "and I will work to support you."

Tears rolled down the little fellow's cheeks, and even Justice Kramer drew a handkerchief across his eyes.

"Judge," said little Joseph, "I am only five years old. Don't let my mother put me away. If she will keep me a few years I will go to school, and when I am big enough I will give her all the money I earn."

Agent Meyer, of the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Children, said he believed the boys would be better cared for in some institution than at home. The woman he knew worked hard, but was unable to support her family.

Justice Kramer said he would place the boys in the care of the Children's Society. Agent Meyer advanced to take the children from their mother, but they resisted and refused to go with him.

Their mother tearfully pushed the sobbing children from her and hurried from the court-room.

GAMBLER DIVED TO DEATH.

Excursionists on the City of Worcester Say Heffernan Had Lost Heavily at Roulette.

The Norwich line steamboat City of Worcester made an excursion from Greenport, L. I., to Newport on Sunday. Most of those who went on the excursion were from Brooklyn. Passengers who returned yesterday said that a young man named Heffernan, crazed by drink and heavy losses from playing at roulette, jumped overboard into Long Island Sound on the way back.

A boat was lowered, and the steamer's searchlight was turned on the water for an hour, but nothing more was seen of the man.

The manager of the excursion said that Heffernan had attempted to jump into the walking-beam opening, and that his friends promised to look out for him.

FOUGHT AN ANGRY BEAR.

Thrilling Struggle of a Guide and a Texas Youth in the Catskills.

HURLED OVER A CLIFF.

Wounded Bruin, Defending Her Cubs, Falls to Her Death in a Charge on the Hunters.

(Special to The World.)

TANNERSVILLE, N. Y., Aug. 16.—Exhausted and bleeding from many wounds, two men staggered into the grocery store and post-office here Saturday afternoon and sank upon a bench. They were Frank B. Knight, jr., of Austin, Tex., a youth, and "Jim" Deutcher, a Catskill guide.

The crowd of loungers gazed wonderingly at the men, who carried guns and looked as if they had undergone some terrible experience.

Early that morning, they said, they had started out from the Hotel Kasterskill to hunt small game and incidentally explore the far-famed Stony Clove. They found game scarce and after shooting ten gray squirrels decided to return home.

Turning their steps towards the rugged old Kasterskill Mountain they started homeward. They had walked several miles when the guide slipped on a loose stone and fell. He arose, but uttering a yell sank back again. He had sprained his ankle.

After a brief rest he was assisted to his feet by Knight. Leaning on his young companion's shoulder the guide hobbled on slowly and painfully.

Suddenly Deutcher grasped Knight's arm excitedly and telling him to remain quiet pointed to a log at the right of them. The log was decayed and had been torn asunder, the pieces of dry punk being scattered about the ground for several feet.

"Some animal has done that," whispered the old guide. They circled about the log in search of traces.

"Bear?" queried young Knight with suppressed excitement.

"Bears! Three of 'em, an old un and two young uns," said the guide. "I'd like to take a big bear skin back with me when I go," said the youth eagerly.

"Well, I dunno. Might as well try for a shot at the peaky critters," replied the guide.

The trail of the bears was found and followed cautiously. The black bear of the Catskills will run from a man if it has the chance to escape. If it is cornered, and especially if it has young, it will fight to the death.

In the excitement of the chase the old guide forgot his injured ankle. The trail led to a spring hole and there, in the soft and spongy ground around the hole could be plainly seen the huge footprints of the old bear and the smaller tracks of cubs.

After an hour or so of exhausting effort the hunters arrived at the foot of a cliff that rose above them 200 feet, apparently barring further progress.

[illegible] diotions on his unhappy plight the mountaineer said:

"We'll climb the rock, Knight. I mean to try for a shot at the old bear if kin get near her."

Toiling upward they scaled the cliff. As they stood on a rocky plateau resting for a moment the growl of a bear was heard. Not fifty feet from them the hunters saw her. She was standing upright with her legs outstretched. Her big yellow teeth showed in sharp relief against the dull red of her heavy jaws. Close to the bear was an old pine, up which the cubs had climbed at the first warning growl.

Behind the hunters, as they faced their enemy, was a precipice. For both the man and the bear retreat was cut off.

87

BEST COPY AVAILABLE

881018007

The Emma Goldman Papers

[Excerpt from Lecture] Anarchy in Spain and in New York / Emma Goldman.— pp. 1-2 ; 43 cm. In The World. —(Aug. 17, 1897).

Obtained from the University of California, Berkeley. Institutional Location: Doe Library.

alone was $40.

The pretty girls passed the collection baskets, with Emma Goldman directing them. When they got through and counted up they found that they had only $12.60.

Emma Goldman looked savagely through her gold-rimmed glasses at the big crowd, which just then was cheering the statement of a Spaniard named Arrango, who said that the killing of Canovas by Golli was the act of a slave rising against long oppression.

Emma Goldman Speaks.

Goldman was introduced. The woman talks with wonderful speed in a high pitched, harsh voice with a strong German accent. Although a small woman she is very masculine in her actions and manner, and seems to delight in saying risque as well as blood-thirsty things in order to evoke applause.

"Some people think it cruel that we should celebrate the death of such a great and noble man as Canovas," she said. "Those who have read history and know what Canovas has done to the people of Spain, of Cuba and of other Spanish colonies will know, however, that we are perfectly justified in rejoicing over the death of such a beast.

"If it was an honest workingman who was dead we would be sorry for him, or sorry for his family, but we cannot even be sorry for the family when the dead man was nothing but a monster. He has spent his whole life devising methods of torturing and killing men.

"Glory in the Death of Canovas."

"I glory in the death of Canovas. I am ashamed of the Cuban patriots that they did not execute this monster long ago. I glorify the killing of Canovas by Golli, the hero, because it removes an obstacle from the path of progress.

"They tell us that Canovas was really not to blame for it all; that he was but an instrument in the hands of others. I say no. Canovas was the tyrant and the tens of thousands of Spanish soldiers were his instruments. Down with all such!

"The tyrants of men are all cowards. Look at President Faure, of France. He hired a man to throw a bomb in order that he might become notorious, and then used his miserable scheme to try and punish and kill innocent men.

"They tell us that by despatching one tyrant we will not change society; that another tyrant will take his place. Yes, my friends, that is true, and another Golli will come up to meet every such new tyrant. Wherever there is a Caesar there must be a Brutus.

A Shot at the Police.

"It seems to me that this glorious and free country is in great sympathy with Canovas. Otherwise, they would not send so many policemen and detectives here to watch us to-night. I do not blame the policemen. They find it easier to stand around a corner twirling a club and watching for a chance to crack some honest man's skull with it than they do to go to work in the shops for twelve or fourteen hours a day. Some of them may be good men. There is honor even among thieves, you know.

"The authorities of this country, including President McKinley and Mark Hanna, who promised you prosperity a few months ago but are giving you starvation, are shedding crocodile tears over the death of Canovas. In their minds they are perhaps saying to themselves, 'Maybe I will be the next.'

Assails the President.

"This man McKinley said he had Cuba's cause at heart before he was elected. Now he is expressing his sorrow over the death of this Canovas who has killed thousands of our Cuban friends.

"If this man Canovas believed in a heaven he is probably sitting on the right hand of the throne now telling the angels all about his life. All tyrants go there, I believe. All of us Anarchists, free-thinkers, revolutionists and philosophers go to hell, and we have a lively time there. When I die I would rather go to hell than to heaven.

"It is a shame, I say, that we cannot hold a peaceable meeting here unmolested. Look at the watchdogs around you. I understand that they are here to make an arrest if they find any excuse for doing it. Well, I will not bridle my tongue one bit, even at the risk of having one of them put his [illegible] hand on my shoulder and say 'Come with me.'

Murders Predicted.

"Canovas is not the only man who will have to die violently before the social revolution is accomplished. There are hundreds of people all over the world only waiting for the opportunity to show that they are tired of despotism and tyranny.

"It seems to me queer that such a contemptible wretch as Gen. Weyler has

of deliberation. Sentence of death was passed unanimously.

The people hissed the sentence with visible indignation.

WHAT ANGIOLILLO SAID.

His Speech in the Court-Room—When Cut Short He Said He Wanted to Justify Himself.

VERGARA, Aug. 16.—Angiolillo, heavily manacled, sat between two gendarmes and immediately in front of his judges at his trial. On a table nearby lay his revolver and other material evidence of his crime.

A written statement of the prisoner was read among other papers by the clerk of the court. Angiolillo in the course of the statement said that he left Foggia in October, 1895, and went to Marseilles and Barcelona, where he took the name of Jose Santos. At first he had no thought of becoming an Anarchist, but while at Coromjoa he began to be interested in Anarchist doctrines. He then returned to Marseilles, and after his expulsion from that city he went to Belgium and London, where he passed most of his time in the society of Anarchists.

When the execution took place at Barcelona on May 4 of five of the Anarchists convicted of participation in the bomb outrage at the feast of Corpus Christi he conceived the idea of assassinating Canovas. Without seeking an accomplice he proceeded to Spain and carried out the resolution.

Angiolillo went on to say that the passion for vengeance led him to commit the crime. As he was unacquainted with the manufacture of explosives, he used the revolver.

While his counsel was presenting in his behalf a plea of insanity, Angiolillo listened in silence. Then he asked permission to speak for himself, which was granted.

He thanked his counsel for his efforts. He denied that he had any accomplice, or that he was an accomplice of those who threw the bombs at Barcelona, or that he had participated in secret gatherings of Anarchists.

When he began to discuss Anarchist theories the President of the court interrupted him and threatened to stop him if he pursued that line of remark or touched upon any matters not connected with the trial.

Angiolillo persisted in speaking of politics and of the wars in Cuba and the Philippines.

The President said, "All that has nothing to do with your crime."

Angiolillo replied, "I must justify myself."

The President retorted, "That is no justification. Moreover, you can convince nobody in that way."

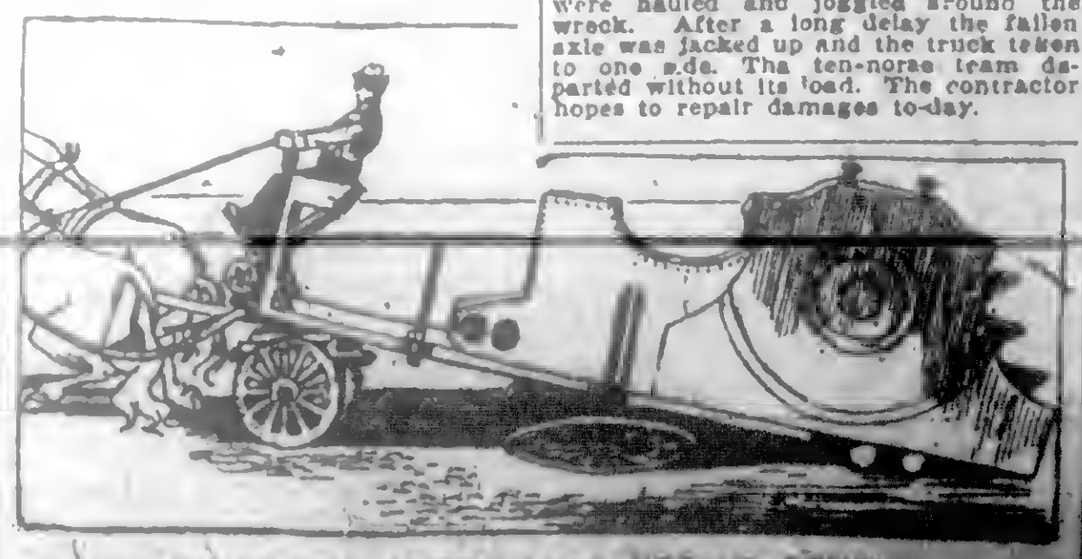
Angiolillo began again, but the President declared the trial ended and ordered the court-room cleared.

YOUTH CUTS HIS MOTHER'S THROAT.

Then Sets Fire to the House—Says He Intended to Spend Insurance Money on a Variety Actress.

GALVESTON, Tex., Aug. 16.—Mrs. Kate Gallagher, for twelve years a school teacher in this city, who lived with her son Virgil, was found dead to-day with her throat cut and her body charred beyond recognition.

After killing her the murderer had set fire to the bed.



The son Virgil, who is twenty years old, was arrested and confessed that he murdered his mother to get money to spend on a variety actress.

The young man had packed his trunk and had had the furniture insured, and with the money he expected to leave Texas as soon as the fire insurance could be adjusted.

Honest Cabman Has a Lost Watch.

John Wackarman is the name of an honest hack driver at West Brighton, Coney Island. For two weeks past he has been trying to find the owner of a diamond-studded watch, left in his coach at Manhattan Beach.

He can't sleep and take care of it, he says.

M'LARNON'S 22-TON LOAD BREAKS DOWN.

Mrs. Kelly said she had three other children, the eldest a girl of seventeen, who earned $5 a week with a firm in New York. Little of this was left after paying ferriage and carfare. The other children earned nothing.

Mrs. Kelly told Justice Kramer that if the two boys were put away she would be able to care for her husband and the others.

Two little ones clung to their mother's garments and implored her not to send them away.

"I will be a big boy soon, mamma," said Willie, the elder, "and I will work to support you."

Tears rolled down the little fellow's cheeks, and even Justice Kramer drew a handkerchief across his eyes.

"Judge," said little Joseph, "I am only five years old. Don't let my mother put me away. If she will keep me a few years I will go to school, and when I am big enough I will give her all the money I earn."

Agent Meyer, of the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Children, said he believed the boys would be better cared for in some institution than at home. The woman he knew worked hard, but was unable to support her family.

Justice Kramer said he would place the boys in the care of the Children's Society. Agent Meyer advanced to take the children from their mother, but they resisted and refused to go with him.

Their mother tearfully pushed the sobbing children from her and hurried from the court-room.

GAMBLER DIVED TO DEATH.

Excursionists on the City of Worcester Say Hefferman Had Lost Heavily at Roulette.

The Norwich line steamboat City of Worcester made an excursion from Greenport, L. I., to Newport on Sunday. Most of those who went on the outing were from Brooklyn. Passengers who returned yesterday said that a young man named Hefferman, crazed by drink and heavy losses from playing at roulette, jumped overboard into Long Island Sound on the way back.

A boat was lowered, and the steamer's searchlight was turned on the water for an hour, but nothing more was seen of the man.

The manager of the excursion said that Hefferman had attempted to jump into the walking-beam opening, and that his friends promised to look out for him.

The officials of the Norwich line said yesterday that no gambling is allowed on their boats.

Mrs. Letts, who keeps a cafe at No. 33 Clinton street, thinks the young man was Michael J. Hefternan, who was formerly employed by her as a bartender.

An official report of the suicide is expected when the City of Worcester arrives from New London to-day.

M'LARNON'S LUCK PURSUES HIM.

Big Machinery Truck Breaks Down Again on Familiar Ground Under 22 Tons of Load.

"McLarnon's Bad Luck," they call the block on Seventh avenue between Thirty-second and Thirty-third streets. It seems a fatal block for him.

McLarnon is the man who carts the heavy stones and machinery about the city. He had a champion load last night. It was a steel casting, weighing twenty-two tons, the bed plate for the machinery which will make power for the Fourth Avenue underground trolley line.

With his strongest truck and ten horses, McLarnon came up Thirty-seventh street to Seventh avenue, from the dock to the power-house, and then turned onto the downtown street car tracks.

At "McLarnon's Luck," a bind wheel of the truck went all to smash, the casting was thrown down and the front wheels tilted two feet in the air.

Here was a pickle! The drivers cursed, but this didn't restore the wheel. Crowds gathered and watched the fun. Cars piled up behind the truck, but were hauled and joggled around the wreck. After a long delay the fallen axle was jacked up and the truck taken to one side. The ten-horse team departed without its load. The contractor hopes to repair damages to-day.

had [illegible] from the Hotel [illegible] erskill to hunt small game and particularly [illegible] far-famed [illegible] They found game scarce and after shooting ten gray squirrels decided to turn home.

Turning their steps towards the rugged old Kaaterskill Mountain they started homeward. They had walked several miles when the guide slipped on a loose stone and fell. His arms, but uttering a yell sank back again. He had sprained his ankle.

After a brief rest he was assisted to his feet by Knight. Leaning on his young companion's shoulder the guide hobbled on slowly and painfully.

Suddenly Deutcher grasped Knight's arm excitedly and telling him to remain quiet pointed to a log at the right of them. The log was decayed and had been torn asunder, the pieces of dry punk being scattered about the ground for several feet.

"Some animal has done that," whispered the old guide. They circled about the log in search of traces.

"Bear?" queried young Knight with suppressed excitement.

"Bears! Three of 'em, an old un and two young uns," said the guide. "I'd like to take a big bear skin back with me when I go," said the youth eagerly.

"Well, I dunno. Might as well try fer a shot at the pesky critters," replied the guide.

The trail of the bears was found and followed cautiously. The black bear of the Catskills will run from a man if it has the chance to escape. If it is cornered, and especially if it has young, it will fight to the death.

In the excitement of the chase the old guide forgot his injured ankle. The trail led to a spring hole and there, in the soft and spongy ground around the hole, could be plainly seen the huge footprints of the old bear and the smaller tracks of cubs.

After an hour or so of exhausting effort the hunters arrived at the foot of a cliff that rose above them 200 feet, apparently barring further progress.

Gritting his teeth and uttering maledictions on his unhappy plight the mountaineer said:

"We'll climb the rock, Knight. I mean to try for a shot at that old b'ar if I kin get near her."

Toiling upward they scaled the cliff. As they stood on a rocky plateau resting for a moment the growl of a bear was heard. Not fifty feet from them the hunters saw her. She was standing upright with her legs outstretched. Her big yellow teeth showed in sharp relief against the dull red of her heavy jaws. Close to the bear was an old pine, up which the cubs had climbed at the first warning growl.

Behind the hunters, as they faced their quarry, was a precipice. For both the men and the bear retreat was cut off.

"Quick; fire after I do, my boy," said the guide, as he raised his gun.

Knight, trembling and excited, caught the trigger of his gun in the branches of a small bush and exploded it. The guide fired immediately point blank at the bear and she charged at the hunters. The guide dodged and escaped. Knight was struck a glancing blow by one of the forepaws of the infuriated animal and hurled perilously near the edge of the cliff.

A snarl from the cubs in the tree caused the old bear to turn. As she did so Deutcher fired his second barrel at her, the heavy charge of shot striking her in the right flank. Knight, who had regained his feet, took careful aim at the brute and fired, striking her in a vital spot.

Wounded to the death the shaggy animal charged at Knight, who stood his ground. She struck him on the shoulder with her claws, tearing his coat sleeve and deeply lacerating his arm. So great was her momentum that the animal lost her equilibrium and fell headlong over the cliff.

The hunters descended the cliff safely and made their way to Tannersville. A party of hunters started for the scene in hopes of meeting the male bear. They failed to find him, but skinned the dead bear and brought the skin home to young Knight. The cubs were not found, although the hunters searched long for them.

KAHN-KAHN IN TRENTON.

Two Sisters Marry Two Brothers and the Family Name Goes All Around.

TRENTON, N. J., Aug. 16.—Samuel and Jacob Kahn, haberdashers here, surprised their friends two months ago by announcing their engagement to two New York women of the same name. The brothers had declared themselves for bachelorhood. But early in May, the two pretty and accomplished daughters of Elkan Kahn, a New York music dealer, living at No. 179 East Eighty-fifth street, visited Trenton and soon [illegible] suicidal course.

On Sunday Miss Emma Kahn was married to Samuel Kahn, and Miss Jennie Kahn was married to Jacob Kahn. The families are not related.

Sought Death for More Wages.

Louis Reitmeyer, forty years old, No. 297 First avenue, fearful that he could not support his wife and three children because his wages as a weight puller in a Bleecker street [illegible] had been [illegible] cut, [illegible] sulphuric acid. [illegible]

88

BEST COPY AVAILABLE

88012005

The Emma Goldman Papers

[Excerpt from Lecture] Emma Goldman: Rochester Anarchist Has Broken Out Once More / Emma Goldman.— p. 10 ; 29 cm. In The Rochester Union and Advertiser. — (Aug. 21, 1897).

Obtained from the Rochester Public Library, Rochester, NY.

Aug 21, 1897
p10
Vol 72 No. 198

10 THE

EMMA GOLDMAN

Rochester Anarchist Has Broken Out Once More.

Addressed a Big Meeting That Celebrated the Assassination of Canovas.

Gloried in the Death of the Spanish Leader, Denounced President McKinley and Predicted Murders.

Emma Goldman, Rochester's representative in the ranks of the Anarchists of New York, has broken out again and is advocating murder and carnage as a cure for the great evil of government and law. The woman has been quiet for some time, but has seized upon the assassination of Canovas in Spain as a chance to once more attract attention to herself and doctrines.

She first attracted attention in this city when she lived on Hebard avenue with her parents at the time of the anarchist riots in Chicago. In wild harangues at that time and at meetings held in the rooms of the Liberty men and women who believed that the gang of Reds in Chicago and the prisoners at the Haymarket were martyrs and martyrs. A little later she went to New York and became identified with Herr Most and the A. of his kind, making speeches nightly at their meetings and denouncing law and order without stint. She got into trouble with the police and finally had a row with Most, after which she came to this city and was very quiet for a time. Lately however, she went to New York again and now she is one of the king bees of the anarchists there. The woman can speak, and is therefore a leader.

Her last appearance was made a few nights ago when she made a rabid speech at a meeting held in Clarendon Hall in Thirteenth street for the purpose of "celebrating the death of the leading despot of Spain, Canovas del Castillo, executed by Anarchist Michael Angelo Golli." It was a big meeting. The police were present, but did not interfere. The red flag was not displayed. The speakers called the police "dogs" and "thieves," but the officers said nothing. The Goldman woman evidently wanted the officers to interfere, for she was especially violent in her language toward them.

A consumptive little man named H.

Events of To-

Cook Opera House— "
Jack Turner's—Bag p contest between Louis Geisler Kennedy.

been allowed to live so atrocious acts, inhuman almend conception, against Cubans Americans, deserve death. He mur Dr. Ruiz, an American citizen. America going to do about it" ain for $50,000. Shame on such ly country, I say!

"Do you think that kill the brave Golli they will put Anarchy! The silence of the mart archists of Chicago in their gra were eloquent than were their they lived. Woe unto of the world! We have thousa Gollis!"

The crowd had cheer hoarse by the time that the G finished speaking. When Chairm got up to adjourn the meeting man got up and shouted in Engl

"Long live Anarchy!"

The crowd echoed the ment in a.. tongues as it filed out of the hall.

AMONG THE CENTUR -FIENDS.

The Best Saddle for the Seeker After a Chain of Century Bars.

New York Journal.

It would be imagined that of all bicycle riders none would seek comfort more assiduously than the confirmed century crank. Each week or each fortnight it is his pleasure to trundle fifty miles out of the city and back to gratify his craving for a chain of century bars. Encountering all kinds of roads nothing would be more natural than to take it for granted he would seek to make the trip at the least possible discomfort to himself. The kind of saddle therefore that the average centurian rides naturally interests wheelmen in general.

On a ferryboat crossing the East river not long ago about 100 bicycles were leaning against the sides of the deck house. They were covered with mud and dust. They appeared to have seen hard service during the day. Appearances were not deceptive, for all of them had just returned from a century run along the route of Long Island's south shore. A tour of inspection was made of the double line of wheels to gratify curiosity as to the kind of saddles used. In all the bunch there were but three padded saddles. The remainder were the ordinary plain leather affairs, sold with the average wheel, jockey saddles, etc. In these instances, broad women's saddles on wheels ridden by men blessed with more than usual weight.

A week or two after another inspection

QUBBR OC

People Who Ga in Original

This City Produced Dressmakers, the
and the Fren

The Professional
"Cheerer"—Paid
the Hands an

Rochester has al
rank in the matter
who follow queer
the first men dres
try was a Rochester
a business in this cit
When it was seen th men dressmakers places. The lady prodection to a great
she never became
she was a success,
cities have since go
of shaving and hai
a novelty, they do a
as a rule they can ha as a man. Another was that of the man idea. This startled and caused the p heard.

Rochester is not
and pole climbers,
sentatives of this
ons of Chauncey J Sloody. This occup to wears new, is
and the representati
to attract attention
peculiar part of th
climber's occupation to speak, on poles
the city and not fall
ers who they need

Not many years a dime novel was in de who liked story tale few young men who ence by writing thr
bishers would send print of a cut that front page of the
was to write a story which certainly made fation a queer one.

The list of queer city will be almost ed and it will

BEST COPY AVAILABLE

88012005

The Emma Goldman Papers

[Excerpt from Lecture] Emma Goldman: Rochester Anarchist Has Broken Out Once More / Emma Goldman.— p. 10 ; 29 cm. In The Rochester Union and Advertiser. — (Aug. 21, 1897).

Obtained from the Rochester Public Library, Rochester, NY.

Dark
Next and other nothing
nightly at their meetings and would be more natural than to take it without stint, for granted he would ask to make th and amused the peopl
pear d.
without and
and
and 88012005

The Emma Goldman Papers

[Excerpt from Lecture] Emma Goldman: Rochester Anarchist Has Broken Out Once More / Emma Goldman.— p. 10 ; 29 cm. In The Rochester Union and Advertiser. — (Aug. 21, 1897).

Obtained from the Rochester Public Library, Rochester, NY.

...t's glory.'

am ashamed of the Cuban patriots ... they did not execute this monster long ... I don't like the killing of Canovas ... the tyrant and ... of Spanish sol... diers ... to his ... Down with ... such.'

... are ... Weyler ... Prince of France ... hired ... a beer ... in order ... the notorious ... scheme to try ... and kill Gomez.

... they expect ... we will ... that ... the tyrant will take his place. Yes, my friends, that is true, and another ... will come up to meet every such ... tyrant. Wherever there is a Caesar ... must be a Brutus.

It seems to me that this glorious and free country is in great sympathy with Canovas. Otherwise they would not send so many policemen and detectives here to watch us to-night. I do not blame the policemen. They find it easier to stand around a corner talking a club and watching for a chance to crack some honest man's skull with it than they do to go to work in the shops for twelve or fourteen hours a day. Some of them may be good men. There is honor even among thieves, you know.

"The authorities of this country, including President McKinley and Mark Hanna, who promised you prosperity a few months ago but are giving you starvation, are shedding crocodile tears over the death of Canovas. In their minds they are perhaps saying to themselves: 'Maybe I will be the next.'

"This man McKinley said he had Cuba's cause at heart before he was elected. Now he is expressing his sorrow over the death of this Canovas, who has killed thousands of our Cuban friends.

"If this man Canovas believed in a heaven he is probably sailing on the right hand of the throne now, telling the angels all about his life. All tyrants go there, I believe. All of us anarchists, free-thinkers, revolutionists and philosophers go to hell, and we have a lively time there. When I die I would rather go to hell than to heaven.

"It is a shame, I say, that we cannot hold a peaceable meeting here unmolested. Look at the hatchetmen around you. I understand that they are here to make an arrest if they find any excuse for doing it. Well, I will not bridle my tongue one bit, even at the risk of having one of them put his delicate hand on my shoulder and say 'Come with me.'

"Canovas is not the only man who will have to die violently before the social revolution is accomplished. There are hundreds of people all over the world only waiting for the opportunity to show that they are tired of despotism and tyranny.

"It seems to me queer that such a contemptible wretch as Gen. Weyler has ...

"Then you do not consider long distance riding a source of pleasure?"

"No, certainly not. The ... of pleasure ... of interest or distress ... the Prince ... Imperial ... riding a ... swimming to his ... the unfortunate ... of a ... perishing another century.

But to return to the subject under discussion. Why is it, do you think, that the ... the long distance riders like the hard saddle?"

It is soon told. All long distance men as I intimated before ... a great deal on their pedals. At the slightest ... inattention ... roughness on the road they are up and out of the saddle and do not permit the body to receive the shock. Naturally, therefore, they care very little whether or not the bicycle seat is padded. Probably no reason, however, unless it is a question of weight, influences riders more than the matter of heat. On a hot day a padded saddle is not so comfortable as a hard seat. So far as weight is concerned, you know there are some riders who would sit on a lath if it could only be made strong enough, in order to be rid of a pound or two on the machine."

Dusty Dan—Yer seem ter be purty solid wid dat cook over dere. Wot's de reason?

Roving Rufe—You see we both rides de same make of wheel

Don't Miss Glen Haven To-Day or Sunday.

Balloon ascension, by Prof. Allen; King of the Black Wire Prince Schuman; sensational acts on wheels, skates and stilts, Albert Waltz. All free. Go from your home. The Glen Haven cars run direct to the Glen.

Reduced Rates to New York State Fair

August 23d to 28th, both dates included, the New York Central will sell reduced rate tickets to Syracuse and return, including admission to the grounds. Tickets good on all but limited trains.

... Rochester has its pr... tainer. The man ent... perintendent's fair the ... men's for the affair ... sible for the enjoyme... ment of the guests, a... such himself. The w... does present; the same ... her other duties that ... the arrangements of the ... ing of salads, and ... kind; she plays the p... desired, starts games ... and keeps the ball rollin... last guest has departed ... tal when she started ... was a couple of hands... delightful manner; now ... extensive wardrobe, h... bank and is making ... tended European tour.

BEST COPY AVAILABLE

881018003

The Emma Goldman Papers

[Excerpt from Lecture] Meeting of the Anarchists / Emma Goldman. – p. 2 ; 28 cm.
In The New York Times. – (Aug. 23, 1897).
Obtained from the University of California, Berkeley. Institutional Location: Doe Library.

stories high. The horses were saved. The loss is $1,200

Drowning Man Rescued by Bathers.

James Moran, who lives at 433 West Forbeth Street, was rescued from drowning at Coney Island yesterday by two fellow-bathers. Moran was one of a number who hired suits at the Corbett pavilion soon after noon yesterday. He ventured beyond the life lines, was seized with cramps, became unconscious, and was drowning when William Shenton of Hopkinson Avenue and Park Place and James Cavanagh of Bloomfield, N. J., rescued him and summoned Dr. Cullen of the seaside ambulance service, who restored him to a condition to reach home.

One of a Fishing Party Lost.

ELIZABETH, N. J., Aug. 22.—When the Elizabeth Anglers left this city last night to go to the fishing banks, one of the excursionists was Archibald Stalker. When off Romer Shoals he fell overboard and was drowned. He was missed shortly after he fell overboard and the boat put about and the rest of the night was spent in searching for his body. Early this morning the party returned to this city. Stalker was a popular man and a leading member of the Chas Gordon, U. S. C.

Boat Capsized and a Woman Drowned

MONUMENT, Mass., Aug. 22.—Miss Mary Kelleher, forty-five, a domestic in the employ of B. E. Jones, a Summer resident here, while getting into a small rowboat from a yacht yesterday was thrown into the water by the boat capsizing and was drowned. Her body was washed ashore this morning. Another woman of the party fell into the water, but was rescued by Robert Burgess.

Heavy Rain in Bridgeport.

BRIDGEPORT, Conn., Aug. 22.—A shower of unusual severity passed over this city this morning between 2:30 and 4 o'clock, the rainfall in an hour being 1.97 inches. Much damage was done, and many cellars were flooded on account of sewers being unable to carry away the water. In many places the streets were badly washed.

Her Bicycle Slipped.

Just after it rained last evening, Nellie Sweeney, nineteen years old, tried to ride along Madison Avenue on the wet asphalt. At Sixty-eighth Street the bicycle slipped, and the young woman fell, her nose was broken. She was removed to her home at 42 East One Hundred and Thirty-second Street.

Bishop McDonnell's House Struck.

In the storm last night, lightning struck the three-story brick dwelling at 171 Twenty-seventh Street, Brooklyn. The house is occupied by Mrs. Catherine Healy and was damaged to the extent of $30. It is owned by Bishop McDonnell.

EVIL OF PELAGIC SEALING

Commissioner Jordan Tells of Continued Shrinkage of Herds on Breeding and Hunting Grounds.

PREDICTIONS ALL VERIFIED

Decrease Sure to Continue Until 1900 —Branding of Young Females to Begin After the First of September.

PORTLAND, Oregon, Aug. 22.—Dr. David Starr Jordan, Commissioner in Chief of the fur seal investigations, and George A. Clark, Secretary of the commission, arrived in Seattle on the revenue cutter Rush, Capt. W. H. Roberts commanding, and passed through here to-day, going to San Francisco. The party left Unalaska on the morning of Aug. 13. Dr. Jordan reports the satisfactory completion of the Summer's investigations by the Commissioners.

Mr. Macoun, the Canadian Commissioner, had already left the Pribilof Islands, and the British Commissioner, Prof. Thompson, was about to leave on H. M. S. Ampion. Mr. Lucas of the American Commission remained behind for a week or ten days and will go direct to San Francisco on the steamer Del Norte. President Jordan said, speaking directly regarding the results of his latest investigations. "The breeding grounds show a shrinkage of about 15 per cent. over the conditions of last season, the hunting grounds a shrinkage of 33 per cent. This is about what was predicted by the American Commission last year, and its conclusions are fully vindicated in all important regards.

"The primary cause of shrinkage of females on the breeding ground is the pelagic catch of last Fall and this Spring. To this is added the loss due to starvation of orphaned pups in 1894, which should this year have lived to give birth to their first pups. This starvation in 1894, affecting, as it did in a like measure the male herd, is the cause of the diminution of the killable seals on the hunting grounds.

"The decline of the herd is everywhere more distinctly marked than it was last year owing to the effects of the resumption of pelagic killing in Bering Sea after the modus vivendi of 1893. For 1898 the shrinkage will be still greater. The evil effects of pelagic sealing in any particular year are still more clearly felt three and four years after. Even if pelagic sealing should be stopped at once, the decline of the herds must go on until after 1900.

MEETING OF THE ANARCHISTS.

Emma Goldman Glorifies Golli's Assassination of Canovas del Castillo and Says He Deserved Death.

The meeting held last Monday night in Clarendon Hall to glorify the death of Canovas by Golli, the Anarchist, was discussed last night at 1,524 Avenue A. There were twenty-five persons present, a majority of whom were Anarchists. The most prominent one was Emma Goldman, who made a speech in which she reiterated her statement that she was glad that Canovas was dead.

There were several discussions as a result of the topic which was presented by C. B. Cooper. He declared that in his opinion it was not right to glorify the death of any one, not even Canovas, whom he believed to be a despot. The speaker said he thought that it was the opportunity to advance the propaganda of the Anarchists and not open the subject for attack. Anarchy, he said, stood for truth and not bloodshed, as the people at large believe, and the ideas should be made clear.

A. R. Welker agreed with the previous speaker in the matter.

Miss Goldman stood by the action of the speakers last Monday night.

"The object of Anarchists is to tell the truth," said she, "and there is no doubt that a majority of the people are satisfied with the death of Canovas. Now, if they are pleased, why not say so in public? That is what I always do, and we ought to. It is strange that Anarchists should pay any attention to the criticisms of the press, or our enemies. We have spoken the truth and are bound to have opposition. Golli's act was humanitarian because Canovas deserved the death he met.

"I am an Anarchist from head to foot. We must and do resist things that do not satisfy us. We expect our meetings to be broken up and prohibited. I do not care for the police or opposition, and the more I have the more I will work for my cause. They may kill Anarchists, but not Anarchy."

DAY OF BLOODSHED AT UNITY.

Three Fights and a General Riot to Wind Up in a Pennsylvania Negro Camp.

PITTSBURG, Aug. 22.—Unity, a camp of Negro workmen employed in building the new Pittsburg, Bessemer and Lake Erie Railroad, is keeping up its reputation for riot and bloodshed. The report comes from there to-night of a small riot during the day and three or four individual fights, in which one man was fatally shot and wounds inflicted on a large number of others. It is said that nearly all the men in the camp

SILVER MEN IN SESSION

Progressive Democrats Appoint Delegates and Name Campaign Committee.

SECRETARY CASSIDY OUSTED

Plea for Reconciliation Between Two Factions Not Heeded—Democracy Must Indorse Chicago Platform—Only Few Tammany Delegates Present.

The anti-Tammany faction of the Progressive Democratic League, which walked out of Flannery's Hall when President Saunders adjourned the meeting in the midst of a fight on Sunday, the 15th inst., tried to hold a love feast yesterday afternoon at Teutonia Hall, in Third Avenue, near Sixteenth Street. The Oliver-Tammany faction remained behind in Flannery's Hall at that time, reopened the meeting after the bolt, and punished President Saunders by declaring the office of President vacant. Yesterday the anti-Tammany faction retaliated by doing the same with Secretary Cassidy, who had remained with the Tammanyites, and also declared him expelled from the league.

Only a few of the Tammany delegates attended the Teutonia Hall meeting yesterday, and when one of them ventured to express the opinion that it was an irregular meeting, he was forced to sit down, and a motion was made to put him out of the hall. He was, however, allowed to remain, a mute spectator.

The meeting began in a very harmonious spirit, and President Saunders, in his opening address, congratulated the delegates upon the absence of the disturbing element. Then he denounced the leaders of the Tammany faction, characterizing them as short-sighted, foolish, and vain men, who are itching to see their names in print as officers; ambitious men, whose only thoughts are of themselves, and who, when they cannot rule, try to ruin. In meetings they will repeatedly rise to points of order and create cliques, rings, and factions to carry their points.

President Saunders's Exhortation.

The expression of these sentiments was applauded, and the Chairman proceeded to exhort those present to stand by the banner of the league until death. He then told them that the row on the previous Sunday

MATRIMONIAL [illegible]

Many Clerks and Few Lawyers are Unhappily Married in England—Singular Divorce Statistics.

From The London Telegraph.

Statistics of matrimonial infelicity are melancholy reading, but, since it is only by a careful study of them that the various classes of the community can discover the comparative force of—and so, perhaps, eventually resist—the impulse which urges them respectively in the direction of the divorce court, all married couples ought, no doubt, to nerve themselves for an examination of the figures. To clerks and their consorts in particular is this advice applicable, for clerks, we are sorry to say, head the list of suitors in matrimonial cases, though builders and carpenters, bracketed equal, run them a pretty good second. There were thirty-eight of the former calling in the cause list for 1895, and thirty each of the two latter. Publicans and merchant seamen and officers follow next with twenty-one, soldiers and naval seamen with eighteen, farmers with sixteen, coachmen, cabmen, and carters with fifteen, and commercial travelers with twelve. The professions, it is encouraging to notice, come far behind the trades. There are only ten physicians and surgeons, only five solicitors, and only two schoolmasters and two journalists, while the rear of the list is brought up by a solitary barrister. This last item of information is, perhaps, not surprising. The bar, if not actually behind the scenes—as some of them in each case must be—sit too near the stage to find the drama of matrimonial litigation attractive. Perhaps even this solitary barrister was not a voluntary litigant. He may have been a co-respondent, and this brings us, by the way, to what is by far the most surprising feature in the whole of these statistics—so surprising, indeed, that we should not wonder if by one of the two sexes it were pronounced incredible. We refer to the fact that the aggrieved party in a matrimonial suit proves nearly three times out of five to be the husband. Only 220 wives found occasion to petition the court for release from the connubial bond, whereas the same application had to be made by as many as 853 husbands. What does the advanced woman who pleads for relief from the tyranny of the marriage law say to that? The wives, at least, seem very well able to correct the hardship of their lot by taking the law into their own hands.

BAIREUTH UP TO DATE.

Famous and Fashionable Audiences Have Blemished the Charm of the Musical Shrine.

From The London Chronicle.

"The curse of the Ring," [illegible] tor," has fallen on Bayreuth, where is played the great [illegible] convention is now besieged by [illegible] the conventionalities. The [illegible] life of the

BEST COPY AVAILABLE

890112000

The Emma Goldman Papers

[Excerpt from Lecture] Her Comrades Rebuke Emma Goldman / Emma Goldman.— p. 10 ; 28 cm. In The New York Tribune. —(Aug. 23, 1897).

Obtained from the University of California, Berkeley. Institutional Location: Doe Library.

A HOBOKEN PARTY CALLS FOR AID AND IS RESCUED BY A FISHING-SMACK CAPTAIN.

Superintendent A. K. Bonta, of the Hudson Electric Light Company, of Hoboken, and Mrs. Bonta and a party of friends, ten in all, left that city on Saturday for a trip around Staten Island. Captain Swinburne lost his bearings at 9 p. m., and the yacht, the Adele, went ashore. The whistles were blown for an hour and twenty-two minutes, and attracted the attention of the captain of the fishing smack S. B. Miller, who took Mr. Bonta and his guests aboard and conveyed them to Thirty-ninth-st., this city. The Adele was floated at 2 o'clock yesterday morning and was towed to Hoboken, where she will go into drydock. Her bottom was scraped and her steering gear was disarranged.

HER COMRADES REBUKE EMMA GOLDMAN

SHE STANDS ALONE AT AN ANARCHIST MEETING IN GLORIFYING THE ASSASSINATION OF CANOVAS.

An Anarchist meeting held last Monday night in Clarendon Hall to glorify the assassination of Canovas del Castillo was discussed last night at No. 1,524 Avenue A. There were twenty-five persons present, a majority of whom were Anarchists. The most prominent was Emma Goldman, who made a speech in which she reiterated that she was glad that Canovas was dead. There were a number of discussions as a result of the topic, which was presented by C. B. Cooper. He declared that in his opinion it was not right to glorify the killing of any one, not even Canovas, whom he believed to be a despot. The speaker said he believed that this was the opportunity to advance the propaganda of the Anarchists and not lay them open to attack. Anarchy, he said, stood for truth and not bloodshed.

A. R. Welker agreed with the speaker. "It was bad taste," he said, "to glorify Canovas's death, and it is foolish to advance any argument for his taking off, as it does not help our case. While it is true if men stand in the way of progress, they should be removed, we gain nothing by gloating over it."

Miss Goldman stood by the action of the speakers last Monday night. "The object of Anarchists is to tell the truth," said she, "and there is no doubt but what a majority of the people are satisfied with the death of Canovas. If they are pleased, why not say so in public? That is what I always do. It is strange that Anarchists should pay any attention to the criticisms of the press of our enemies. Golli's act was humanitarian, because Canovas deserved the death he met. I am an Anarchist from head to foot. We must and do resist things that do not satisfy us. We expect our meetings to be broken up and prohibited. I do not care for the police or opposition, and the more I have, the more I will work for my cause. They may kill Anarchists, but not Anarchy."

There were several other addresses, but Miss Goldman was the only one to advocate the principle of publicly glorifying the Spanish Premier's assassination. Other speakers expressed the belief that a better end would have been accomplished if the doctrine of Anarchy had been explained and the causes for Canovas's removal through his tyranny made clear.

HANGED FROM A BRIDGE.

Williamsburg, Ky., Aug. 21.—Elcany Sullivan, convicted yesterday of criminal assault on Sarah Lawson, and sentenced to twenty years in the penitentiary, was taken from jail last night by a mob and hanged on the timbers of the county bridge across the Cumberland River. The lynching occurred at 1 o'clock this morning.

declared, and every patriotic Spaniard feels with him, that the fate of the country must not depend upon the life or death of any man. The man may die, but the political doctrines which he represents survive. The political doctrine which Canovas represented—constitutional liberty for the people and the maintenance of the national integrity—is the doctrine of all patriotic Spaniards to-day, which is the same as saying that it is the doctrine of the nation. For this reason the Government of the Queen Regent, which also represents this doctrine, has the support of the nation, including Republicans and even Carlists, for Mr. Cortina will not deny that Queen Christina counts to-day among her stanch friends and supporters former ardent advocates and defenders of the Carlist cause. And Castelar, the leader of the Republican party, has emphatically declared his adhesion to the present Government, as that best calculated, under existing circumstances, to secure the prosperity and the happiness of Spain.

What is deeply to be regretted, however, and what must always continue to be matter for regret, is that Señor Canovas did not live to see the work of political emancipation for Spain and for Cuba which he did so much to further, crowned by the inauguration in Cuba in November next, as he had planned, of autonomic rule.

M. S.

New-York, Aug. 14, 1897.

THE COMPLAINTS OF BARREN ISLAND

To the Editor of The Tribune.

Sir: On the 4th inst. I wrote Colonel Waring thus:

My Dear Colonel: The residents from Barren Island recently [illegible] a pleasant run on a harbor. I am told that they resent from the treatment of New York garbage and are within your jurisdiction. How is it? He replied that he would go down and see about it. If he did so he has not communicated to me the result of his visit; but I saw the statement you printed in the 12th. As the subject of our correspondence is of public interest, I am not content to leave the matter here.

I wrote the Colonel more fully on the 14th and have no reply. That a man of intelligence upon no better grounds than a clear statement of facts should proceed deliberately to adjudge thousands of his fellows as intelligent as himself to be no better than simple fools, is to take a large contract, a contract which will grow larger as time goes on. I have lived here in this house, for twenty-two years. When I came here I found that the stenches of Barren Island had come long before me and I know that they have ever since been an established and familiar institution here. They come not continuously, but at very irregular and sometimes at widely separated intervals, but when they do come they are here in their might. No Egyptian plague ever occupied bed-chambers and closets more effectively. Every sense seems assaulted at once. Colonel Waring would hardly confront us at such a moment; to insist that not one of us all has either a nose or a brain—that he alone has these. Nor has there ever been more room to doubt the origin of this atrocity than there was to doubt the origin of the unmentionable offal with which for so many years the city's dumping scows daily decked our bathing beaches. We had officials in those days, also, who gayly told us that we imagined the unmentionable offal.

It is but a few weeks ago that I read a printed account, which it might be worth the Colonel's time to contradict if he can. It appeared in a reputable journal, and purported to give the facts found by its reporter at the Colonel's Barren Island works. It asserted that he found them and there all the stenches complained of, and it proceeded to explain just how these stenches resulted from the processes then used. It asserted that the stenches thus found were not only admitted but explained, by his representatives then in charge, who evidenced the sincerity of their regrets by the assurance that improved processes were soon to be tried, with the hope that the just grounds of complaint might be largely diminished. And it is a fact that since I wrote the Colonel my first note with politeness which really the intention was far from what is printed. In local matters this is serious, but in international affairs it becomes disastrous. Statements made by men in official position should bear their signature. There would be fewer thoughtless or hasty speeches.

Toledo, Ohio, Aug. 16, 1897. G. E. POMEROY.

DR. STIMSON LIKES THE NORTHFIELD REPORTS

To the Editor of The Tribune.

Sir: I want to thank the Tribune for the Northfield reports. I hear from numbers of my congregation of different classes and widely scattered in the summer that they have been unprecedentedly read.

HENRY A. STIMSON,
Pastor Manhattan Congregational Church, Eighty-third-st. and Boulevard.

Gloucester, Mass., Aug. 18, 1897.

ELEIS CHOATES PIGEON WING

From The Harrisburg (Pa.) Spirit.

In the long ago and-before-the-war days, when Southern statesmen made the summer headquarters at the noted Virginia springs, where the planters came up from the Carolinas, Kentucky, Georgia and Mississippi in their carriages, with great baggage trains and a retinue of servants, and when they came June 1 and stayed until frost fell, those were gay old times at the mountain resorts, which life was worth the pain of living.

Beginning with the first register in 1835 and coming down to 1850, one finds a succession of historical names. There are the Bonifers, the Dickenses and the Hamiltons of the Carolinas, the Clays and Marshalls and Crittendens, of Kentucky, Corwin and Ewing and Trimble, of Ohio, the Choates and Websters and Pierces, of New-England, Dickinson, Marcy and Dallas, of the Middle States, Cass and Douglas and Benton, from the far West, the Rhetts, Calhoun, Prestons and a galaxy of bright names from Virginia, the Carrolls from Maryland, and a host of others whose names have rendered American history illustrious. Here these old notables came in their shad-bellied coats and sideboard collars and a proper, dignified time they had of it, as they imbibed their sulphur water and mint juleps together and talked politics. It was away back in 1835, when there must have been something in the wind of importance to the Whig party, on a musty old page of the hotel register of that year, in that fine, almost feminine handwriting that is familiar to all who read this inscription: H. Clay, Kentucky; while among the next day's arrivals are Rufus Choate, Massachusetts; Thomas Corwin, Ohio; William C. Rives, Virginia, and Millard Fillmore, New-York.

Those were the days when the making of a julep was an art as well as a domestic accomplishment. The night before Mr. Clay's departure from the springs he gave a banquet in his cottage to his friends. Fortunately, there is still a living eyewitness to that entertainment, and if his description can be relied upon it was a gala event that transcends all modern showouts. Old Uncle Jimmie Patterson, the venerable gatekeeper, who has been an attaché of the White Sulphur from time immemorial, was the floor servant on the row in which the Clay cottage was located, and helped to serve the banquet. He says that the deportment of the host and the guests was eminently proper until about the hour of midnight, but from that time of the night until morning dawned there was a high old time on the premises. When the cloth had been removed and the Powhatan pipes were brought in—the degenerate practice of cigar and cigarette was not in vogue in those days—some one called for music, and a messenger was sent for a negro fiddler who soon appeared with his old-fashioned instrument. The old fiddler started in with "Money Musk," and then played "Sugar in the Gourd," but when he touched up "Miss Lelpi Hawyar," Mr. Clay stepped into the middle of the floor and gave them a Kentucky breakdown. This was a fair challenge to Mr. Choate, who followed with a New England pigeon wing. When the old negro struck the chord of "Old Virginia Never Tire," the courtly Rives, afterward Minister to France, felt that the reputation of the Old Dominion was at stake, and shedding his coat, executed the double shuffle with a skill that would make a minstrel weep with envy. And thus the fun grew fast and furious until the gray dawn peeped over the mountain tops.

sum was realized from the efforts of the s[illegible]

MOUNT VERNON.

The large fireproof building which is being erected for the use of the city at Depot Place and Fourth ave. is nearly completed, and it is expected that it will be ready for occupancy late in September.

The Union Athletic Club will hold a carnival of games on next Saturday afternoon at the club grounds, at Union ave. and Sixth-st. Prizes are to be given to successful competitors.

The Mount Vernon Driving Club will hold three races for trotting horses at the Allendale track on next afternoon, open to the 2:32 and 2:50 classes. A big programme is being prepared for Labor Day.

The young women of Pelham will give a fair on next Thursday afternoon and evening in the Town Hall. The receipts will be given to the Pelham Athletic Club for uniforms and apparatus.

The assessors of Mount Vernon are in continuous session, and expect to have the roll ready for inspection about September 1, or as soon after that date as possible. The Board announces that there will be some advance in real property, and a considerable advance in personal property, as it is using every means to ascertain the amount of personal property owned by every citizen.

PEEKSKILL.

The Board of Assessors of this town will give a public hearing in the Town Clerk's office this morning at 10 o'clock for Mr. Lloyd, tax agent of the New-York Central and Hudson River Railroad. The Board will also examine some people who they have asked to come before them. On Friday night they acted upon about fifty additional applications.

The Equalization Committee of the Board of Supervisors visited Somers on Wednesday, Yorktown on Thursday and Bedford on Friday of last week. This week the committee will visit New-Castle, North Castle and Harrison.

MAMARONECK.

The women of St. Thomas's Episcopal Church will give a festival and lawn party in the parish hall on the night of Thursday, August 26. A feature of the affair will be a bicycle show, at which prize will be given for the best-decorated wheel.

S. H. Mowbrey, of Mount Vernon, has been engaged as organist in St. Thomas's Church, and will begin on September 1. Mr. Robinson, whom he succeeds, has accepted a similar place in St. Bartholomew's Parish, New-York City.

RYE.

The Rye Protective Association has been reorganized by the election of the following officers: John R. Parsons, president; Charles A. Gould, vice president; C. Stewart Schenck, secretary; H. da Parsons, treasurer, and William H. Parsons, William A. Reed, J. Howard Wainwright, Arthur Delwyne, David S. Coles, Clarence Beckett, George R. Read, Clarence Day and J. Mayhew Wainwright, members of the Executive Committee. The object of the association is to provide necessary measures whereby the rights of residents and property-owners may be protected. The association has for its members all the well-known residents of Rye and Harrison, who pay dues not to exceed $1 a year. It is probable that its aid will be invoked to secure a reduction of the assessments of those members, whose aggregate properties have been assessed for more than $1,000,000 by the boards of these towns.

NEW-ROCHELLE.

The New-Rochelle Athletic headquarters, in Lawton-st., has been thoroughly equipped with the gymnasium apparatus recently given by Adrian Iselin, and the club anticipates a busy season. The election of officers will take place on the night of Thursday, September 2.

The fresh-air stations established by the physicians of the village have been in use one month, and in

BEST COPY AVAILABLE

890210010

The Emma Goldman Papers

[Excerpt from Lecture] Anarchy / Emma Goldman.— p. 2 ; 28 cm. In The Evening Bulletin [Providence]. —(Sept. 4, 1897).

Obtained from the Providence Public Library, Providence, RI.

...the principal markets, we now show about every ...
...t the poorest is a bargain at what we ask for it. Seeing's believing; then come and let us show you the goods.

THE WINNER

at Charter Oak ght Heats.

WIRE HALF A IN EACH HEAT.

3-4; 2:03.—The ted at the Slow
General Belief
Were Not Driven Could Go.—The
ents.

Sept. 2.—To-day's er Oak Park was before dark. Two to bring to an end
not, seven heats ned Wednesday).
first heat to-day
he second in 2:18¼
Town Lady got Time third and

y fought and most day was the 2:14
expected to win
and Quick Turn
ge. Ambulator fin-that third, while Turn were dis-
beat by Quantigo,
knowing ones by Prince Alan
the race other apparently speed of Abbott won the heats. He seemed owned the second but Lady Carr

she was not equa-

from Joe Patchen had been agreed alternate at the
a penalty handed that position. Mr.
Star Pointer, who record deal, when Pointer had to
to get to the wire
was done in 2:08¾,
a length ahead in

trotted in the 2:30
day was fine, and large, about 10,000

ning will begin at
and will be made to scheduled for the
has passed a mile 2:09¾.
disappointed in the Pointer and Joe three heats the
the mile and, by first half a length
seventh and keeping race was without and there was a
the horses were not
by Direct Hal. There at the new time owners when it was ers
others were united

RELIGIOUS INTELLIGENCE.

Alves: Christian Church, Hammond street—Prayer, 10; preaching 10.45 and 7:30 by W Pitt Warrecker, Conn. S S 12:30.

Allen Chapel, A street, W M Warrick, pastor—Preaching 10:30 a m, 7:45 p m by pastor. S S 12:30 p m

Asbury M E Church, J A L Rich, pastor—Prayer 9:30; preaching by pastor 10:45, S S 12:15, E L 7; evening service 7:30.

Academy Avenue Congregational Church—Preaching 10:45 a m and 7 p m by the Rev W A E Smalley. S S 12:15. J C E 4:30 p m, C E 6 p m.

A M E Mission, 430 North Main street, Rev S H Jackson, pastor—Preaching 10:30 by Mr Bazard. S S 1 p m; preaching 7:30.

Armenian Evangelical Church, at Beneficent Church—Preaching by Rev K Der Kasparian 6:30, Subj, "The Books of the Christian," S S 12:15.

All Saints Memorial Church—Morning prayer, sermon and Holy Communion 10:45.

Broadway United Presbyterian Church—Preaching by Rev H F Given 10:45, by the pastor 7:30; S S 12, Y P C U 6:45.

Branch Avenue Baptist Church—Preaching 10:45 a m and 7 p m, by Rev Josiah Tyler, Lumberton, N J. S S 12:15.

Bethel A M E Church, Meeting street, Rev S Hammond, pastor—Song and prayer services 10:45 a m; S S 1 p m, Communion of Lord's Supper 2:45 p m; E L P 6:30 p m; preaching by pastor 7:45 p m.

Bethany Gospel Mission, 24 South Main street—Meetings 3 and 7:45, speaking by Joel Bacon, evangelist.

Beacon Universalist Church, Capitol Hall, 204 Westminster avenue, during fall, Rev J D Tillinghast, pastor—Morning 10:45, S S 12, Y P C U 6:30.

Beneficent Congregational Church—The pastor, Rev James G Vose, will preach 10:45 a m, mission S S 12:15 p m; C E S 6:30 p m.

Broadway Baptist Church, Rev J V Osterhout, pastor—S S 10:45 a m; preaching by the pastor 7 p m; evening service 7:15 p m.

Bell Street Chapel—Service 3 p m, discourse by pastor, Rev Anna Garlin Spencer, upon "Great Leaders and Great Eras of Progress." S S resumes Sept 12 1:30.

Bethel Christian Mission, 98 Wickenden street—Praise service 7:30; preaching 7:45, violin music by B Coyle.

Broadway M E Church, J O Randall, pastor—Communion 10:45 a m; sermon by pastor 7:30, subject, "Paul's Vision."

Broad Street Christian Church—Preaching by pastor 10:45 and 7:30; S S 12:15; Y P S C E 6:30. Communion at close of evening service.

Columbia Hall, Weybosset street—Providence Spiritual Society will open their meetings Sept 4 2:30. Arthur Devlin of New York speaker; 7:30, Debbie Wood and others.

Champlin Hall, 285 Weybosset street—3 p m, subject, "The Judging of Others," by Prof Charles A Jaynes.

Christ Church, Eddy and Oxford streets—S S 9:30 a m, morning service, sermon and Holy Communion 10:45 evening prayer 7:30.

Central Congregational Church, Angell street—Services 10:45 a m and 7:30 p m. Prof George F Moore, D D, of Andover Seminary will preach.

Cranston Church, corner Orchard and Wayland avenues—10:45, services and sermon, 12, S S, 3, service and sermon; Rev E P Sakal will preach morning and evening.

Church of the Epiphany—Morning prayer 10; litany, sermon and Holy Communion 10:45; S S 1 special evening service for deaf mutes with sermon by Rev M Searing of Boston.

Church of Emmanuel, 935 Westminster street—Prayer 9:30, preaching by Rev Williams McDonald of Boston; S S 12:15, Gospel 7 p m.

Church of the Mediator (Universalist), Cranston and Burgess streets, Rev W C Selleck, pastor—Service 10:45, subject, "The Internal and Formless of Religion;" Communion 12, S S 12:30; Y P C U 6:30.

Cranston Street Baptist Church—The pastor will preach 10:45 a m; S S 12:15 p m; evening service 7.

Church of the Messiah, Westminster street and Broadway—S S 9:30 a m, Holy Communion 10:45 evening 7:30.

Central Baptist Church—No services Sept 5, repairs not quite completed.

Church of the Redeemer—Morning prayer 10; Holy Confirmation and sermon 10:45; S S 2:30; evening prayer and sermon 7:30.

Chestnut Street M E Church, Rev A J Coultas, pastor—10:45 a m, Sacrament of the Lord's Supper, 12:15, S S; 2:30 p m, E L; 7:30, [illegible] pastor will officiate.

Pilgrim Congregational Church—The pastor, Rev Edward Cummings, will preach 10:45 a m; S S 12:15 p m; C E S 6:30 p m.

Pawtuxet Congregational Church—Preaching by pastor 10:45 a m and 7:30 p m; S S 12:15; C E 6:30 p m.

Pilgrim Methodist Church, Rev J W Bashford, pastor—Preaching 10:45 a m and 7:30 p m; S S 12:15; Y P S C E 6:30; chorus choir, H B Shaw leader, will sing at both services.

Plymouth Congregational Church, S H Woodrow, pastor 10:45 a m, Communion service; 7:30 p m, preaching, subject, "A Man Who Missed a Dime: Opportunity;" S S 12:15 p m.

Providence Church of Christ (Scientists), 41 Hudson street, service 11:30 a m

Providence Gospel Mission—Pure in heart service 9:30 a m, prayer and testimony 4 p m, preaching 7 p m, H B Avery in charge

Roger Williams F W Church, Westminster and Knight streets—10:45, service and Lord's Supper, 12:15, S S 6:30, Y P S C E, 7:30, service and sermon by pastor, Rev G E Case.

Rugbies Street P M Church—10:45 a m, theme, "A Stream from the Rock," 7 p m, song service and sermon; 12 m, S S; 4:30 p m, Y P W L.

Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of L D S, Benevue avenue—Sacrament meeting 10:45 a m, S S 12:30, preaching 7:30 p m by Elder George W Kibbey

Randall Square Gospel Mission—Breakfast revival 8:45 by D R Hinckley 9:30 to 12, S S 3, Miss N H Chaning, superintendent, C W conference 3:45, revival 7:30, Mrs L Fenetir and Hadley Gospel Singers.

Stewart Street Baptist Church—Preaching by pastor, Rev Edwin Bromley, 10:45, subject, "The Old Book Jesus Used;" S S 12:15, Gospel concert 7:30, sermon, "Where He Is We Shall Be," Lord's Supper after sermon.

St Stephen's Church—Celebration of the Holy Communion 7 and 8 a m, morning prayer 10, litany, sermon and celebration of the Holy Communion 10:45; evening prayer and sermon 7:30, S S 9 a m.

Second Presbyterian Church, Harris avenue—Communion service 10:45, evening service 7 by the pastor, J Reynolds Mackay.

St John's Church—S S 9:45; morning service, sermon and celebration of Holy Communion 10:45.

St Paul's Church, Holden street—Celebration 7:30; litany, second celebration and sermon 10:45; S S 2:30; evening prayer and sermon 7:30.

Second United Presbyterian Church, Young and Chalkstone avenues—Preaching by Rev M S McCord, D D, 10:45 a m; by pastor 7:30 p m, S S 11:30 a m; Y P C U and J C C 6:30 p m

Seventh Day Adventists, Olney Street Church vicary—S S (Saturday) 2 p m, Bible reading and social service 3 p m.

St Thomas Church, Douglas avenue—S S 10; morning service and Holy Communion 11; evening service 7

St Paul's M E Church, Prairie avenue—Prayer 10:15; Sacrament, 10:45; S S 12:15; E L 6:30; sermon by pastor, W S McIlvire, 7:30 p m.

South Baptist Church, Ocean street—Public worship with sermon by Rev S D Morley of Bristol; S S 12.15; evening missionary service 7:30.

St James Church—Morning service and celebration of the Holy Communion 10:45; children's service 3; evening prayer and sermon 7:30.

Second F B Church, Pond street—11 a m, preaching, subject, "Summing for Life;" 1 p m, S S; 6:30, Y P S C E, 7:45, preaching, subject, "The Wonderful."

Second A M E Zion Church, Rev C O Waters, pastor—10:45, preaching; 1:30, S S; 7:30, preaching, subject, "Conversion, Or the New Birth."

St Andrew's Church, Mt Pleasant—S S 9:30 a m; litany, sermon and Holy Communion 10:45; evening prayer and sermon 7:30.

Trinity M E Church—James M Tator, pastor, will conduct Sacramental service 10:45, and preach 7:30; S S 12 15.

Union Baptist Church—Preaching by Rev James K Ewer 10:45 and 7:30, Communion 11:30; S S 12:15; Y P S C E 6:30.

Union Congregational Church, Broad and Stewart streets—Worship 10:45 and 7:30, Rev Forrest F Emerson, formerly of Newport, preaches; Y P S C E 6:30.

Union Gospel Mission, 22 Lonsdale street—Services 3:30 and 7:30, Mrs G H Simmons will speak.

Union Sea and Land Mission, Rev Charles H Plummer, superintendent, Day's wharf—3 p m, Messrs Pierce, Turner, Cobb and Talty will speak.

Volunteers of America, 775 Westminster street—Capt Major of Malden, Mass, conducts services 10:30 a m and 3 and 8 p m, assisted by Capt Moore.

Westminster Unitarian Church, Mathewson street, Herbert Mott, minister—Public worship

ANARCHY.

Emma Goldman Held Forth on Olneyville Square Last Night.

ADDRESSED HER "FELLOW SLAVES" IN IDEAL STRAIN.

There Were Rival Attractions, but They Were Completely Eclipsed by the Little Duck-Complexioned Woman Mounted on a Dry-Goods Box. Who Said Long Hair Was Not Necessary to be an Anarchist.

There were rival attractions on Olneyville square last night. They were the gospel wagon, a gentleman who sold everything from a shoestring to a complete shaving outfit and threw in a ventriloquistic entertainment free of charge, a series of pictures and advertisements thrown on a screen and finally Emma Goldman, whose Anarchistic beliefs are too well known to need much further description.

The gospel wagon was doing pretty well until the ventriloquist, alias shoestring salesman, arrived. When that gentleman proceeded to converse with a wooden dummy and exchange compliments with an invisible personage on a nearby roof the fickle crowd deserted the gospel wagon and flocked to the fakir's standard.

As soon as the dummy began to grow less voluble in his remarks and the peddler began to cry his wares the crowd gazed at the panoramic mixture of advertisements and pictures, principally advertisements, that were thrown on a screen stretched above the roof of a building.

Then Miss Goldman arrived. It was nearly 9 o'clock, and the crowd was looking for some new excitement. A packing box was improvised into a platform, and John H. Cook of this city mounted upon it. Mr. Cook did this principally to draw the crowd. It did not draw very well at first. The fakir had renewed his seductive conversation with a gorgeously bedecked doll whose lower jaw worked on a hinge. It was a last effort to keep the crowd around him. The doll's lower jaw flapped to and fro frantically, and the ventriloquist wiped drops of perspiration from his forehead, although the night was cool.

Yet one by one the crowd went to the place where Mr. Cook was setting forth the object of the meeting.

Finally a little woman, with a complexion that many of her sisters with less unpopular ideas might envy, and clad in a dress of some dark material, stepped upon the platform with head uncovered. Immediately the crowd, as a body, deserted the ventriloquist and surrounded the Anarchistic teacher.

The gospel wagon was doing. The pictures on the screen appeared in indignation because of the lack of attention to their artistic details.

Miss Goldman's salutation was characteristic.

"Fellow slaves," she said. "I think you will all be indignant because I call you slaves." If any one was he did not say a word. Not even a boulder was forthcoming. The crowd was made up almost entirely of men. There were only

A GRUESOME "JOKE."

A. S. P. C. A. Agent Personifies a Dead Man—$13 Collected for the "Widow."

New York, Sept. 3. (Special.) Several members of the Jersey City Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals were electrified by a grim sort of joke on Thursday night. George M. McCarthy, President of the society, who in his leisure moments is a theatrical advertising agent, was the prime mover in the affair. He called at the society's office and told Agent Arthur McDonald that Alonzo Calhoun, another agent, was dead. As Calhoun had been ill with gastric fever, McDonald supposed the statement was true. He at once started out to inform the other officers of the society and also to make a collection among them for the benefit of the widow and family of the dead man.

In the meantime President McCarthy, finding his alleged joke going so well, called Calhoun up on the telephone and asked him to take part in the "sell." Calhoun, who lives at 541 Ocean avenue, over the undertaking establishment of Zelsler Brothers, where he is employed as embalmer, at once carried a handsome burial casket to his rooms. He placed a number of lighted candles about the casket, and just before the committee arrived, carrying the $13, Calhoun prepared to do the honors.

Abraham Brown went up to the room in which the casket was placed but presently he dashed downstairs, asserting that the corpse had deliberately winked at him. His companions, McDonald and Alexander Whitmore, supposing he had been frightened, compelled him to go upstairs again with them. They found Calhoun apparently as dead as a last year's leaf. He did not seem disposed to work at them.

This time the farce went very well until McDonald pressed the $13 and tendered it to Mrs. Calhoun, who sat at the head of the coffin with her face buried in her handkerchief—not to hide her tears, however. Then Calhoun sat up in his coffin and I handed half of the money. It was decided to use the money for a funeral supper, which was eaten to-night with the ghost at the head of the table. President McCarthy was the guest of honor. It is understood that the next death reported among the Society's agents will be investigated before the collection is taken up.

DONE WITH PREACHING.

Rev. Frank B. Vrooman Going to the Klondike.

Chicago, Sept 3.—(Special.)—"I have been frozen out of the Presbyterian Church and starved out of the People's Church all in the year and I am through with preaching," said the Rev. Frank B. Vrooman, co-pastor of the People's Church. "I am going to the Klondike."

Mr Vrooman, who has been associated with Dr H W Thomas in the pulpit of the fashionable People's Church for some time, has turned his back on the pulpit for good and has projected and partly organized on a large scale a mining company for the Klondike region.

"This scheme originated with me," he said, "but is backed by my brother in St Louis. Our company has not been incorporated nor named yet, but it will be run fully as large a scale as the Cudahy-Weare enterprise, and will be capitalized at $10,000,000. We thought at first that we would need only $30,000 to start with, but having decided to pro-

OAKDALE BUT

Absolutely PURE and FRESH daily. Every... thoroughly Sterilized and Chilled by Artificial R... FIRST Premium at the Rhode Island State Fa... Acknowledged all over the world to be the Best...

OAKDALE STAND
TRADE MARK

See that the above trade mark is on the paper wra... or stamped in the contents of every tub ... you... market or grocer, send your order to the OAKDA... ING COMPANY, 156-176 South Water St., Provid...

OAKDALE MFG

...24 ... 215 Pond St...

MOST ATTRACTIVE SEPTEMBER BARGAINS

As Always, at the New England Gro...

93 to 101 Weybosset St., Providence.—Also P...

The busy month of September is here and many people ... We are fully prepared to meet the pressing demands of all ... Special Bargains now offered in our highest grade canned ... sold at less than cost to make room for our new stock soon to ... toes, Salmon, etc., all as good as new. A favorable time for par... Fruits for Preserving—Peaches, Plums, and Bartlett Pears ... low. Also Lightning Fruit Jars, best ever made. Plain Sha...

Dairy Products.—Superb line of Cream, Butter Cheese, etc., fr... the makers. All can be suited.

A great Variety of Brooms Brushes, Feather Dusters, Tubs ... Rug Beaters, Dust Pans, etc., at prices that will interest economica...

Teas & Coffees.—Largest and best stock of both that we have ... grades and varieties most popular. No advance in prices.

Best of service in all Departments. Free Order Postals ... 1304 and 1313.

MEDICAL.

BLACK & ASHTON'S

PAINE &

BEST COPY AVAILABLE

890210010

The Emma Goldman Papers

[Excerpt from Lecture] Anarchy / Emma Goldman. – p. 2 ; 28 cm. In The Evening Bulletin [Providence]. –(Sept. 4, 1897).

Obtained from the Providence Public Library, Providence, RI.

Central Baptist Church—No services Sept 5; rooms not quite completed.

Church of the Redeemer—Morning prayer 10; Holy Communion and sermon 10.45; S S 2.30; evening prayer and sermon 7.30.

Chestnut Street M E Church, Rev A J Coultas, pastor—10.45 a m Sacrament of the Lord's supper; 12.15, S S; 6.30 p m, E L; 7.30, preaching, pastor will officiate.

Cranston Street M E Church—10.45, "Christianity in Earnest, or Do Christians Mean What They Say?" 7.30, "Our First Love."

Congdon Street Baptist Church—10.45, preaching by Rev Russell H Conwell of Philadelphia, Pa, 1.30 p m, S S; 6.30 p m, Y P S C E; 7.45 p m, preaching by pastor, Rev J H Presby, subject, "Something We Ought to Forget."

Door of Hope Mission, 44 Cranston street—Preaching 3 by Rev Robert Cameron; Gospel service 7.30.

Elmwood Temple—Preaching by the pastor, Rev Edward T Root, 10.45 a m, subject, "Christ's Vacation Year." S S 12.15; 7.30 p m, subject, "Jesus Wept."

Ebenezer Baptist Church, A street—Prayer and conference meeting 10.30; S S 1 p m; preaching 2.45 by Rev Addison Clark; preaching 7.30 by Rev J M Lehner.

Elmwood Avenue F B Church—Preaching 10.45 by the pastor, Rev S A Blaisdell; S S 12.15; C E 6.30; general service 7.30.

First Congregational Church, Benefit and Reformed streets—Public worship with Communion at 10.45 a m, the minister, Rev A M Lord, will preach.

First Church of Christ, Scientist, No 250 Broadway—Service 10.45 a m.

First Universalist Church, Rev H J Cushman, D D, pastor—Public worship 10.45 a m, by Thomas will preach; Holy Communion 12 m; S S 12.30 p m.

Fourth Baptist Church—Preaching 10.45 and 7.30 by the pastor, Rev Robert Cameron; S S 12.15; B Y P U 6.30.

Friendship Street Baptist Church, Edward Hayman, pastor—Public worship 10.45 and 7.30; S S 12.15; Y P S C E 6.30; subject, morning, "Meet for the Master's Use," with communion, evening, "Days Works" or "The Christ for the Workingman." Miss Charlotta Hanson will sing at both services.

First Baptist Church, Rev H N King, D D, pastor—Public worship with sermon 10.45 a m and 7.30 p m; S S 12.15 p m.

First F B Church, Plainfield street; Rev J M Lowden, pastor—10.45 a m, morning worship with sermon by pastor; 12 m, communion; 12.15 p m, S S; 7 p m, union Gospel service.

Friends Meeting, corner North Main and Meeting streets—11 a m.

First Presbyterian Church, Clifford street, Rev C A Campbell, pastor—Services 10.45 and 7.30; S S 12; Y P S C E 6.30.

First A M E Zion Church, Wintar street, Rev P H Hill, pastor—10.45, praise service, 12.45 Holy Communion; 7.45, sermon, subject, "Humble Believers," by the pastor; 1, S S, 6.30 Y P S C E.

German Evangelical Lutheran service at M E Tabernacle, Olneyville square—3 to 4 p m, by Rev Kaufmann, pastor.

Grace Church—9.45, S S; 10, Holy Communion; 10.45, service and Holy Communion; 6.30 C E; 7.30, service and sermon; Rev J A Ernsberg will preach morning and evening.

German Evangelical service at First Presbyterian Church—3 p m, conducted by Rev Augustus Dober.

Gospel Mission (Interdenominational), Eddy and Washington streets, Charles W Rider, pastor—services 10.30 a m and 7 p m; good music.

Hope Street M E Church, J S Bridgford, pastor—Sacramental service 10.45 a m; preaching 7.30; S S 12.15; E L 6.15 p m.

Hebrew Mission, 450 North Main street—Services by I M Goldberg to Jews of Jesus of Nazareth as their Messiah 2 p m.

Harris Avenue F M Church—10.30, address and communion, 11.45; S S, 1, preaching, "Sanctification."

Highland Congregational Church—Morning 10.30, preaching by C D Harp; S S 12.45; evening 7.30, address by Mr Robert P Gifford, special music.

Italian Gospel Mission, 607 Charles street—Services 3 p m.

Lexington Avenue Baptist Church—2.45, S S.

Lorimer Street Church—Preaching 11; S S 12.30; 7.30, preaching by Elder Purnell.

Mission of the Coming King, 827 Broad street—Prayer 10.45 a m; Bible class 1.30 p m; preaching 2.45 p m by Mrs A E Curtis, conference 7.30 p m.

Mary Magdalene Rescue Mission, 17 Clemrance street—Services every night 7.45, Sunday 3.45.

Mt Pleasant M E Church, Rev C A Lockwood, pastor—10.45 a m, Communion and baptisms, service with address by pastor; 12 m, S S; 3 p m, pentecostal service.

Mathewson Street M E Church—10.45, Holy Communion and reception of members; 12 M, S S; 7.30, gospel service, preaching by the pastor, A S Kaufman, Ph D.

Union Sea and Land Mission, Rev Charles H Plummer, superintendent, Day's wharf—3 p m, Messrs Pierce, Turner, Cobb and Talty will speak.

Volunteers of America, 725—Westminster street—Capt Major of Malden, Mass, conducts services 10.30 a m and 3 and 8 p m, assisted by Capt Moore.

Westminster Unitarian Church, Mathewson street, Herbert Mott, minister—Public worship 10.45 a m.

Wanskuck M E Church—10.15, class meeting; 11, preaching by Robert Clark and Sacrament of the Lord's Supper, 12.15 p m, S S, 6 p m, E L, 7 p m, praise and preaching.

Wayland Chapel, South Angell street and Wayland avenue—S S 3 p m, evening service omitted.

Young Women's Meeting—The Evangelical Young Women's Christian Association will hold the first service in their new building on Washington street, corner of Jackson street, at 4.45 p m; an address will be given by Miss Mina K Price of Chicago, International Secretary of Y W C A work; Mrs S S Chaffe will sing; the public are cordially invited.

Y M C A Building—9.30 a m, consecration service; 4.30 p m, men's meeting, address by Rev S G Ivory, open air service same hour on Dexter Training Ground, address by Mr W R Wilson; Gospel service for all this (Saturday) evening 8, address by Rev W S McIntire.

Auburn—Messiah's Church—Preaching 10.45 by pastor, Rev E Streeter, theme, "Conversion of Children;" S S 12.15; J A 4; Communion 7 p m, followed by Gospel service.

People's Church, Wesley C Hazard, minister—Sermon 11, followed by Holy Communion, S S 12.30; Y P S C E 6.30, lecture 7.30.

Church of the Ascension—Holy Communion 7.30, morning prayer 10; S S catechising and service 12.30; evensong 7.30.

Apponaug—St Barnabas Church—Morning prayer and sermon 11, evening prayer and address 7.30; S S 10 a m.

Barneyville—Free Baptist Church, Rev S S Barney, pastor—Sermon by pastor 11 a m; S S 12.15, evening service 7.

Bettenwood Beach—Chapel—Preaching 8.30 p m by Rev Augustus M Lord.

Cranston—St Bartholomew's Church—S S 3; evening prayer and sermon 4; Rev H O Dana will officiate.

Centredale—M E Church—S S 12; open air meeting at band stand 3:30, address by Rev A J Myers; class meeting 6; song service 7:15; preaching by Rev A J Myers 7.30.

Edgewood—Church of the Transfiguration—Litany and celebration of the Holy Communion 11; S S 3, evening prayer 3.30.

East Providence—Haven M E Church—10.45, Holy Communion; 12.15, S S; 7 p m, E L and preaching by pastor, subject, "The Decisive Choice."

Universalist Church—Rev H W Rugg, D D, will preach 11 a m.

United Congregational Church—Preaching by Mr D G Wolcott 10:45 a m; S S 12:12 p m, Y P S C E 6, evening service 7.

St Mary's Church, Rev C H McLane, rector—S S 10; morning service and Holy Communion 11; evening service 7.30.

Georgiaville—Universalist Church, Rev Ira Eddy, pastor—Services resumed Sunday 1.30 p m.

Johnston—Belknap District Chapel—S S 2 p m; preaching 3 p m.

Dyer Avenue Baptist Chapel—S S 1:45 p m; evening service 6.

Knightsville—Congregational Church, Phenix avenue—S S 3 p m, preaching service 7:30 p m, subject, "The Holy Spirit."

Luther's Corners—Worship with preaching by Rev Robert C Hay 11 a m; S S 12.15 p m, evening service by Y P S C E 7:30.

Lakewood—S S 10.45; preaching by R E Storey 2.30, report of San Francisco Convention. Alva N Fisher.

Manton—Baptist Chapel—Mr Cottrell will preach 10.45 and 7:30; morning subject, "Forgetfulness;" evening, "The Price of Silk."

North Providence—Farmers Baptist Church—S S 10:45 a m; B Y P U 6.30; preaching 7.30 by Rev George Bixby, followed by Lord's Supper.

Riverside—M E Church, Rev A Sharman, pastor—Preaching services 2:15 and 7 p m; S S 1 p m.

River View—Services will be held in Casino 3:45 p m, Rev F G Williams of Pontiac is expected to officiate.

Silver Hook—Primitive Methodist Church—2:30, S S; 7, preaching by John Wilson.

Thornton—Congregational Church—S S 2.30 p m, praise service with preaching by Mr Harris K Haw 6:15.

Warwick—Friends Meeting for divine worship meets at their Warwick Meeting House 3.15 p m.

Shawomet Baptist Church, Rev W H Lane, pastor—Preaching 11 a m and 7 p m by the pastor, Y P S C E 6:15 p m; S S 12 15.

The Roger Williams Savings Fund and Loan Association,

No. 96 Westminster street, Room 5. Established in 1881 to encourage the building of homes in Providence and vicinity, and to aid in clearing them from debt. Those desiring loans on real estate security should seek information at the office as to the terms and advantages which this institution offers.

Assets, July 14, 1897 ..... $698,847 79

WM. H. HAWKINS, Secretary.

To Recover Commission.

Bradford F. Pierce has attached the property of Albyn Stebbins and wife for $1000 to recover the commission which he says is due on the exchange of a house and lot in Worcester for a yacht, an exchange that he effected as broker for Mr. Stebbins. No money passed in the transaction, the equity in the real estate being made equivalent to the price of the yacht, and now Mr. Pierce has discovered that the yacht is not worth the price agreed upon.

"This scheme originated with me," he said, "but is backed by my brother in St. Louis. Our company has not been incorporated nor named yet, but it will be on fully as large a scale as the Cudahy-Weare enterprise, and will be capitalized at $10,000,000. We thought at first that we would need only $30,000 to start with, but having decided to provide our own boats, we saw that $60,000 would be needed, and the whole of that amount is already in sight.

"I came in yesterday on the Manitou from a cruise extending from Mackinaw down below Harbor Springs, and have sold $20,000 worth of stock almost without an effort, and my brother has probably sold much in St. Louis. I am going to Alaska to work in the mines for a living. The People's Church pays me nothing and I am getting into a necessitous condition."

Labor Day Discourse.

By Rev. Walter E. Bentley of St. Peter's church, Bainbridge, N. Y. Service the condition of sustenance.—Sunday Journal.

Contract Annulled.

Washington, Sept. 3.—The War Department has annulled the contract of J. S. Flynn of New York to furnish 25,000 tons of stone for the Duck Island, Conn., breakwater for failure to fulfill the conditions of the contract.

A Mighty Difference

Between Evidence in Providence and Testimony from Toledo.

If you don't know, you can readily verify what Cornelius McMillen of 676 and 678 Potter's avenue, says, because it's evidence in Providence. Here it is:

"I am a stone cutter, but I am unable to get steady employment, and I have to follow other occupations when my trade is slack. This work involves heavy lifting and that may be the cause of my sore back. Sometimes the pain across my kidneys was so bad I could not stoop to tie my shoes, and I often had to force myself to go to work. I got a box of Doan's Kidney Pills at F. L. Lothrop's drug store on Westminster street. They helped me so much that I bought a second one. I do not like to say that I will be permanently benefited, for I have tried a great many remedies, but one thing I do know Doan's Kidney Pills have acted as no other medicine ever acted before, and if I continue to improve I will again be like myself. I unhesitatingly recommended their use to all sufferers such as I was."

The reader in Providence can't verify the following statement from Toledo, although it is none the less true. But you can verify Providence testimony, and that's what backs every box of Doan's Kidney Pills.

F. W. Merrill, residing at 1330 Nevada street, says. "I brought my kidney trouble with me from the war. I also suffered very much from a lame back, pain across my loins and frequent desires to urinate. I have had also headiness with feelings of depression and weariness, but Doan's Kidney Pills which I got at I. N. Hoode's Sons's drug store drove it all away. They are the very best kidney remedy that I ever obtained. I have tried many. I have no hesitancy in recommending to those that have any trouble of that kind to give them a trial."

Doan's Kidney Pills, 50 cents a box. For sale by all dealers; sent by mail on receipt of price. Foster-Milburn Co., Buffalo, N. Y.

grades and varieties meet Best of service in all 1804 and 1313.

MEDICAL.

BLACK & ASHTON'S
A-1 Pile Cure

A speedy and permanent cure, guaranteed to cause no pain or inconvenience. Price 75 cents. BLANDING & BLANDING, 68 WEYBOSSET STREET, Wholesale Agents, Providence, R. I.

DR. JUDSON, SPECIALIST.

Unparalled success for 28 years in curing BLOOD, SKIN, NERVOUS, KIDNEY, BLADDER and SPECIAL diseases of both sexes. Consultation free and confidential.

BLOOD and skin diseases, swollen glands, wasty growths and all skin blemishes cured perfectly with safe and sure remedies.

NERVOUS exhaustion, loss of memory, physical or mental weakness cured by latest-telling scientific methods.

STRICTURE, Piles, Fistula, Varicocele and diseased discharges cured by long-tested expert treatment.

CATARRH, all forms, Head, Throat and Lung troubles cured in shortest possible time.

FEMALE troubles, acute, too free or painful menses, weak back, sterility and womb displacements treated by expert methods, giving quick relief and permanent cures.

E. W. JUDSON, M. D.,
241 and 243 Butler Exchange,
Providence, R. I.

Hours: 9 to 12 a. m., 2 to 4 p. m. and 7 to 8:30 p. m. Closed Sundays.

J&BTSTuSly

CONSULT DR. Z. J. LEWIS!

CANCER

DRUNKENNESS

EYESIGHT—SAVE IT.

PAINE &

Insuranc

61 WESTMI

are prepared to han lines in the stronges
Marine, Plate Glass,
cle and Employers'

TELEPHO

"FORBID A FOOL A WILL DO."

SAP

FAIRY SOAP

Pure
White
Floating

The

Soap of the

BEST COPY AVAILABLE

890302002

The Emma Goldman Papers

[Summary of Lecture] Emma Goldman, Anarchist / Emma Goldman.— p. 7 ; 44 cm.
In The Boston Daily Globe. —(Sept. 6, 1897).
Obtained from the Cornell University Libraries and Archives.

EMMA GOLDMANN, ANARCHIST.

She Lectures in This City, Criticising Existing Social Conditions And Explaining the Theories of Her Cult.

EMMA GOLDMANN AND SOME TYPES IN HER AUDIENCE.

Existing social conditions were mercilessly criticised by Miss Emma Goldmann, the celebrated New York anarchist, last night, in her lecture on "Must We Become Angels to Live in an Anarchist Society?" She delivered this lecture under the auspices of the Hebrew educational club at 49 Bennet st.

The hall in which the meeting was held was all too small for the number of persons who desired to see and hear the famous young woman, and she is worth seeing and hearing, for she herself is a most extraordinary and picturesque production of the conditions which she criticised with such bitter words last night—words that were evidently the result of careful reading and much thought along certain sociological lines.

It is safe to say that she talked a bit over the heads of a good many of her auditors, for only a student would be apt to comprehend the full significance of all of her allusions. It was when she spoke of Golli, the anarchist who killed [illegible] Canovas del Castillo, that the

a slight bang which inclines toward the left side of the forehead, and which she is continually brushing to one side. She has the face of the student, and the glasses intensify this feeling. These glasses she is also continually adjusting while she talks.

The eyes show traces of hard work over books during the wee sma' hours, when she has burned the midnight oil. She has a slight German accent, but she has a perfect command of English, and only occasionally does she slip up in the tense of a verb, as most German Americans are apt to do when speaking under a strong mental strain.

She is a remarkable product of the condition under which she has apparently been brought up, and she has evidently thought long and bitterly over the hard conditions of those who labor in the New York sweat shops and other such places. Familiarity with such conditions has intensified her hatred, and puts bitterness into her words—a galling, unanswerable bitterness at times. Where so much of misery has crept into her life it has eliminated all but the stubborn facts of existing conditions in that life.

She knows well her ground, and no namby-pamby sentimentalist wants to tackle her on that ground by offering [illegible] remarks, all emphasized with illustrations of present unhappiness among the lower classes.

At the conclusion of her lecture she invited any of those present who desired to ask questions, one at a time and in as brief a manner as possible.

The first questioner got a little mixed in his effort to state the problem which he had on his mind, and there was some laughter, when one old gentleman arose and said:

"Let him speak. This is a free country and every man has a right to speak."

Miss Goldmann immediately jumped up and said: "I beg your pardon. This is not a free country, but this is a free meeting and he has a right to speak here."

She resumed her seat amid some laughter and applause, and the first questioner struggled on. The lecturer was acute enough to see the drift of his thought, and she answered him. The man claimed that present social conditions had necessarily transformed many men into thieves and liars, and he wanted to know how about these under anarchy.

Miss Goldmann claimed that in a different environment they would change again.

890302002

The Emma Goldman Papers

[Summary of Lecture] Emma Goldman, Anarchist / Emma Goldman.– p. 7 ; 44 cm.
In The Boston Daily Globe. –(Sept. 6, 1897).
Obtained from the Cornell University Libraries and Archives.

EMMA GOLDMANN AND SOME TYPES IN HER AUDIENCE.

Existing social conditions were mercilessly criticised by Miss Emma Goldmann, the celebrated New York anarchist, last night, in her lecture on "Must We Become Angels to Live in an Anarchist Society?" She delivered this lecture under the auspices of the Hebrew educational club at 49 Bennet st.

The hall in which the meeting was held was all too small for the number of persons who desired to see and hear the famous young woman, and she is worth seeing and hearing, for she herself is a most extraordinary and picturesque production of the conditions which she criticised with such bitter words last night—words that were evidently the result of careful reading and much thought along certain sociological lines.

It is safe to say that she talked a bit over the heads of a good many of her auditors, for only a student would be apt to comprehend the full significance of all of her allusions. It was when she spoke of Golli, the anarchist who killed Premier Canovas del Castillo, that the full force of the woman's nature was evident; then she was bitter with the whole of a woman's bitterness. She justified the shooting of Canovas, whom she claimed hounded and persecuted the innocent, and who was to her mind the archtype of all present governmental and official conditions—the possibility toward which all government was drifting.

A good sprinkling of women—mostly young women—was in the audience, and many of the men were young, but many prominent local socialists and anarchists were present to hear the young woman.

It was a sympathetic audience, and every one present listened eagerly. The faces were types, many of them, such as one would expect to find in a gathering in Paris or Berlin; the room was low studded and not too brilliantly lighted by a half-dozen gas jets. On one end was a little platform and a plain pine table with a chair behind it, and leaning against the wall were an American flag and a red flag.

Miss Goldmann was the sole occupant of the little platform, as she said she does not like to have the chairman of a meeting sitting behind her while she is talking; it annoys her, so she had the little platform all to herself.

She is rather a striking personality herself, especially while speaking, but she never would be picked out in a crowd as a woman of unusual character in any direction.

She is about 25 years of age, of medium hight and build, with brown hair and a slight bang which inclines toward the left side of the forehead, and which she is continually brushing to one side. She has the face of the student, and the glasses intensify this feeling. These glasses she is also continually adjusting while she talks.

The eyes show traces of hard work over books during the wee sma' hours, when she has burned the midnight oil. She has a slight German accent, but she has a perfect command of English, and only occasionally does she slip up in the tense of a verb, as most German Americans are apt to do when speaking under a strong mental strain.

She is a remarkable product of the condition under which she has apparently been brought up, and she has evidently thought long and bitterly over the hard conditions of those who labor in the New York sweat shops and other such places. Familiarity with such conditions has intensified her hatred, and puts bitterness into her words—a galling, unanswerable bitterness at times. Where so much of misery has crept into her life it has eliminated all but the stubborn facts of existing conditions in that life.

She knows well her ground, and no namby-pamby sentimentalist wants to tackle her on that ground by offering some theoretical medicine other than the kind which she has in her own mind. Several tackled her last evening, to their sorrow. She has studied deep into social conditions, and she has an answer for every questioner.

Her lecture last night was in the nature of an answer to the general criticism that the people of this world are not prepared for anarchy. She was careful to explain that anarchy meant freedom of the individual in the exercise of his "inalienable" rights, a freedom which all existing forms of government she claimed tended to restrict.

The general criticism to this philosophy is that what one individual would consider his rights another might not, and hence there would be a conflict. She claimed that if people were given the opportunity there would be no conflict, and no necessity for any such organized systems of government as at present exist; that the individual would naturally respect the rights of others; but that present government conditions tended to make a governing class, distinct and separate from the working classes, who in reality supported the governing class, and that the tendency with the latter was to impose its power and authority more and more on the former, by all the known means of governmental authority, such as police, soldiers, courts and prisons.

All these could be dispensed with under anarchy, and everybody would and could work and there would be no unemployed. This was the tenor of her remarks, all emphasized with illustrations of present unhappiness among the lower classes.

At the conclusion of her lecture she invited any of those present who desired to ask questions, one at a time and in as brief a manner as possible.

The first questioner got a little mixed in his effort to state the problem which he had on his mind, and there was some laughter when one old gentlman arose and said:

"Let him speak. This is a free country and every man has a right to speak."

Miss Goldmann immediately jumped up and said: "I beg your pardon. This is not a free country, but this is a free meeting and he has a right to speak here."

She resumed her seat amid some laughter and applause, and the first questioner struggled on. The lecturer was acute enough to see the drift of his thought, and she answered him. The man claimed that present social conditions had necessarily transformed many men into thieves and liars, and he wanted to know how about these under anarchy.

Miss Goldmann claimed that in a different environment they would change again.

Then the old gentleman who had said this was a "free country" arose and stepped to the front of the hall. He announced that he had seen a great deal in his lifetime and that he was old enough to be the father of most of those present, and he believed the United States was the greatest country in the world. But he sympathized with this desire for change, only his observation had led him to believe that men were born into this world who were not fit to govern themselves.

Miss Goldmann got back at him all right in "a few well-chosen remarks." She thought he was blind to the many imperfections of present governmental conditions.

The next speaker claimed that he was both a socialist and an anarchist, but he thought the world took a great stride forward when the fathers of this country promulgated the declaration of independence and the constitution.

This man had barely sat down when a man in the back of the hall jumped up and said:

"That man is not an anarchist!" Miss Goldmann quickly said: "I don't care what he is. He is sincere, and he has a right to be heard here."

She then announced that she would take up a collection for the refugees who were being persecuted by the Spanish authorities and being hounded all over Europe, many of them ignorant of any crime or any wrong whatever. She passed the hat around herself.

HAD DISTINGUISHED VISITORS.

Lieutenant Governor of Quebec and Chepleau and wife and the aid-de-camp left for Boston, on their way to Salem. The other visitors left for Haverhill later. They will return Monday evening for the banquet.

DEMONSTRATION IN LOWELL.

United Laboring Men, Forming Trade

97

891215034

The Emma Goldman Papers

[Excerpt from Lecture] More Anarchy / Emma Goldman. – 28 cm. In The Providence Daily Journal. – (Sept. 6, 1897).

Permission to reproduce or quote in any form must be obtained from The New York Public Library, Astor, Lenox and Tilden Foundations. Institutional Location: Rare Books and Manuscripts Division.

...MONDAY, SEPTEMBER 6, 1897.

...UDS.

...ed for with-
...ificate.
...ecial.)—The ar-
...5 Fifth avenue,
...noon, charged
...sion certificate
...army veteran,
...of a crusade
...Recently Foss
...orties that Mc-
...A special ar-
...and demanded
...t was Govern-
...ter refused to
...Foss owed him
...which he was
...as security. A
...y obtained and
...in $500 bail for

...is sey there are
...city similer to
...are determined
...McCaul and put
...ension shylock-
...overed that in
...has been regu-
...keepers, even
..., and that there
...sion certificates
...le who have no

...rias of arrests
...ll, 26 years old,
...ong Island City.
...ll for examina-
...aimed that the
...ng a pension as
...oldier, when the
...Warrants are
...sons connected
...ers are said to
...nine cases simi-
...woman. There
...the fraude have
...hree years and
...for two years
...he signature of
...forged on the
...witnessed by
...w much money
...the New York
...dent claims has
...t, but it is be-
...will reach into
...nds of dollars.
...any cases have
...raudulent claims
...10 years, and
...r 15 years. The
...swindlers are be-
...n both cities.

AT HOME.

...cKinley Spent

...—President and
...ing a delightful
...The weather is
...went to church
...ded by his aged
...Mrs. Osborne of
...nt and Mrs. Mc-
...the latter's sis-
...and spent most
...e Barber home.
...ley went to his
...d with a few
...n, and after a
...took lunch, and
...ening at the old

THE CONCORD TRAGEDY.

Condition of the Murderer and His Surviving Victim.

CHANGE FOR BETTER OR WORSE LIABLE AT ANY MOMENT.

Physicians Unable to Remove the Bullets in Either Case.

HARRIS, THE MURDERER, REFUSES TO TALK.

His Business Career in Boston and New York.—Head of a Paint and Oil Commission House, Which Paid Him $15,000 a Year.—Ruined by Gambling.

Concord, Mass., Sept. 5.—The terrible tragedy yesterday wherein John M. Harris shot and killed Mrs. George E. Butters, and shot her son and then nearly ended his own life, hung like a pall over this town to-day.

State Detective J. H. Whitney was again in town looking after the State's interests in connection with the Butters murder of yesterday, but stated to-night that absolutely nothing of public interest had developed. A police guard was kept at the Butters residence all last night, but to-day the premises may have been turned over to the family.

There has been no great crowd around the neighborhood, although the number of the curious who have visited the house during the day would be considerable in the aggregate. Besides those who came out of mere curiosity, several relatives of the family have called at the house to condole with the bereaved husband, and do whatever was possible to relieve his distress and also assist in looking out for the domestic arrangements.

Mr. Butters is completely broken down over the terrible affair, and his mental condition was such this morning that opiates were administered to him by his physicians, with favorable effects.

Lieut. Jason W. Butters of Boston police headquarters, a brother of the afflicted man, was expected here to-day, but was detained at his home in Charlestown by illness in his own family. Two other brothers and a brother-in-law were here, however, and assisted in straightening out matters to the best of their ability.

State officer Whitney said to-day that no arrangements had yet been made for holding an inquest and that the date of such hearing would depend upon the

...

...

...

891215034

The Emma Goldman Papers

[Excerpt from Lecture] More Anarchy / Emma Goldman. – 28 cm. In The Providence Daily Journal. – (Sept. 6, 1897).

Permission to reproduce or quote in any form must be obtained from The New York Public Library, Astor, Lenox and Tilden Foundations. Institutional Location: Rare Books and Manuscripts Division.

cases simiman. There rauds have years and two years
nature of ged on the nessed by uch money
New York claims has it it is be-reach into of dollars.
cases have ient claims
years, and years. The lers are beh cities.

tey Spent sident and a delightful weather is t to church

by his aged Osborne of nd Mrs. Mc-latter's sisspent most arber home.
went to his ith a few and after a lunch, and at the old friends and ay their rea, the Presi-will remain

ning, when et, Pa., the cKinley, the remain there
main longer.
on the latter

NDIKE.

at Keep the
f.

.—(Special.)—
that another an Klondike
the present
ir men. One weeks ago others will own mining e of those in ive, from the nt back, that h to the new een to Klon-

s been made became that ed by an in-feet and gave e way back e ground as

This is to esting. ( ok the other

—Miss Flora
had been ill
ertain, a baby ompanied an an unknown

interests in connection with the murder of yesterday, but stated to-night that absolutely nothing of public interest had developed. A police guard was kept at the Butters residence all last night, but to-day the premises may have been turned over to the family.

There has been no great crowd around the neighborhood, although the number of the curious who have visited the house during the day would be considerable in the aggregate. Besides those who came out of mere curiosity, several relatives of the family have called at the house to condole with the bereaved husband, and do whatever was possible to relieve his distress and also assist in looking out for the domestic arrangements.

Mr. Butters is completely broken down over the terrible affair, and his mental condition was such this morning that opiates were administered to him by his physicians, with favorable effects.

Lieut. Jason W. Butters of Boston police headquarters, a brother of the afflicted man, was expected here to-day, but was detained at his home in Charlestown by illness in his own family. Two other brothers and a brother-in-law were here, however, and assisted in straightening out matters to the best of their ability.

State officer Whitney said to-day that no arrangements had yet been made for holding an inquest and that the date of such hearing would depend upon the condition of the boy, Carlton T. Butters, who is now in the hospital, as he is practically the only witness for the Government, or at least its most important one.

The funeral of Mrs. Butters will be held Tuesday at 2:30 p. m.

The statement that has appeared to the effect that Mrs. Butters appeared as a witness against Harris when he was sent to jail several months ago for stealing a coat is untrue. Mrs. Butters taking no part in the prosecution.

Boston, Sept. 5.—The report from the Massachusetts General Hospital to-night is to the effect that the condition of Carlton T. Butters and John Harris is such that a turn either for better or worse is likely to occur at any moment.

Examination showed that Harris, in attempting suicide, had lodged a bullet in his head so close to the brain that meningitis is likely to set in if he should suffer a relapse. The physicians have been unable to remove the bullet.

Carlton Butters is suffering from almost exactly similar conditions, save that in his case two bullets have thus far defied extraction. One entered under the eye, the other in the cheek. He, too, may contract meningitis.

Harris positively refuses to talk.

Waltham, Mass., Sept. 5.—Harris, who fatally shot Mrs. Butters and attempted to kill young Butters and himself, was 30 years old. He was in the employ of paint and oil commission house in Boston at one time. The girl obtained a branch in New York and Harris was sent there as head clerk, later becoming manager and finally succeeding to the business, out of which he drew at one time $15,000 a year.

While in New York he married a young lady belonging to one of the old Knickerbocker families. Soon after he began to gamble and his business ly in his mother's lap but as Miss Goldman waxed eloquent in her address he became excited and took a turn or two in the direction of the platform to raise his mind. With every burst of applause from the audience he crowed with delight and finally sat himself down at the foot of the speaker's stand and demanded a drink out of the tumbler of water which was supplied for Miss Goldman's use. He was firm in the expression of his wants and all coaxing and threatening was in vain. His wish was finally gratified and after that he succeeded very remarkably in attracting all attention that was not bestowed on the speaker.

Miss Goldman was not quite ready to commence her address at half-past 2, as announced, and during the interim J. H. Cook, a local Anarchist, took the opportunity to propound a few of the principles of his creed. After a half hour's wait Miss Goldman put in an appearance and without any unnecessary delay began at once upon her theme.

Four-leaf pamphlets with the above title read, "The Modern Inquisition of Spain," had been distributed at the door, and Miss Goldman commenced her remarks by reading extracts from them. She then refered directly to the assassination of Canovas del Castillo, Premier of Spain, making that the text of her discourse.

As she reviewed the occurrence she worked herself into a high state of indignation. The high priest looked serious and mopped the perspiration from their foreheads. Applause was frequent and murmured exclamations were to be heard in different parts of the hall at various intervals. The baby, which up to this time had been sitting in its mother's lap, then became alive to the situation and took the floor. These incidents, however, were soon side issues. The main thing, Miss Goldman's speech, still continued in all its force and power.

"It was the Premier himself, not Golli," she said, "who caused the act of the latter. Golli was simply led on to the step by the persecution inflicted through the instigation of Canovas del Castillo. Golli represented the people in his act and in ridding the world of a tyrant and a persecutor is condemned as a criminal. It is an accepted theory that all the acts of tyranny similar to the Spanish Inquisition are practiced in foreign countries, but if the people of America would take the trouble to investigate they would find that New York, the metropolis of the New World, was stigmatized with acts that would not bear the light of justice."

It was here that Miss Goldman had to moisten her lips with water and it was also here that the baby, who was pacing up and down in front of the platform, caught sight of the glass and set up a cry for it. Nothing else would satisfy the precocious youngster, and his desperate father mounted the platform and secured the desired article, intending to replace it after baby had a drink. But he reckoned without his host, for when baby laid his chubby hands on the tumbler he kept them there despite all entreaties and words of Anarchy were thrown to the winds.

They did not touch its little stomach, however, and with the start that she had made, Miss Goldman was soon deeply engaged in depicting pictures that made her hearers tremble with indignation. She then proceeded to talk of oppression, and alluded to some remarks now and then which proved very effective.

"Man is simply an automaton governed by the present state of environment," she said. "He neither thinks nor acts of his own free will. All are ruled by a system of laws which have their origin in power, the principle of tyranny which ment, rolled over and over and to bottom up in the ditch. Martin P was killed, several other passengers riously injured, and many badly cut bruised. Doctors were summoned Waterville, Clinton, Pittsfield and port, and gave the wounded needed care at the house of Mr. Simpson, w for the time was turned into a hos General Manager Evans and other road officers arrived by a special to personally look after the injured.

There was a wild scramble among passengers to get out and assist those slightly hurt had come from un glass. Those seriously hurt were cri under the weight of people over t
The list of victims is as follows:

Killed.

Martin Payne, aged 31 of Plymo

Seriously Hurt.

Charles Getchell, baggage master
Newport station.
Frank O. Billings, East Newport
Arthur Fish, Dexter.
Mr. J. W. Townsend, Newport.
Joseph Welch, St. Albans.
Oscar Butters, Newport.
W. H. Earle Plymouth.
Mrs. Wilbur Miles, Newport.
James Brigham, Newport.
Fred. Palmer.
Bert Conners of Pittsfield.

All received internal injuries and recovery of several is doubtful.

Slightly Injured.

C. C. Crowell, Corinna; John Park
Palmyra, J. A. Carey, Newport, R
den, Pittsfield; Mrs. Freeman
Lowell, Mass.; A. Dow, J. H. Mar
H. Tilton, J. A. Pray, E. B. Tru
A. Allen and wife, Ernest Partridge
J. M. Kalen, all of Newport, Me.; Sampson, A. B. Pumpe and A. W
rar of Dexter, Alonzo C. Chase,
port; H. A. Ray, Dover, N. H.; R
Abbott; A. N. Hart, East Newport;
Alonzo Miles, Mabel Townsend
Soper, R. Gilman of Newport; C. H
Smith of Greenville and Mrs. L Palmyra. Nearly all have been to their homes.

This is the first serious accident years on the Maine Central. The of the wheel breaking is not kn
The track was not at all obstructed traffic proceeded as usual, and the age to rolling stock was not very h

A REMARKABLE CHASE.

Cyclist Carl Nicholas Captur
Runaway After a Brilliant

Carl Nicholas, who looks after wheels of the Park cycle house teaches the ignorant the ways o bicycle, stopped a runaway horse i Park yesterday after a remar chase. A Mr. Watties about 1: left his horse and team near the pon while he inspected the little p within the wires.

For some cause sufficiently the excited animal, it moved off the hill at a rate of speed far away ahead of what Mr. Watties succeeded in getting out of his pre
The horse increased his rate, turned toward the Broad street ent Many were teams and visitors in there directly in his path, but he in some manner avoided them all.
Carl Nicholas from the bicycle,
the old state emporium down shores of the lake, saw the runaway

BEST COPY AVAILABLE

891215034

The Emma Goldman Papers

[Excerpt from Lecture] More Anarchy / Emma Goldman. – 28 cm. In The Providence Daily Journal. – (Sept. 6, 1897).

Permission to reproduce or quote in any form must be obtained from The New York Public Library, Astor, Lenox and Tilden Foundations. Institutional Location: Rare Books and Manuscripts Division.

at Present Keep the tem Secret.

Sept. 5.—(Special.)— n Juneau that another
t richer than Klondike
ered. At the present
ert of four men. One Pass two weeks ago
place. The others will

A well-known mining ert, is one of those in e is positive, from the old brought back that reater rush to the new ers have been to Kloncation has been made

imed Polk became that was rescued by an In-p on his feet and gave
s. On the way back from the ground an of gold. This, it is Lake Testing. He
and took the other confidence.

THREATENED.

Mace Bemad, Gagged Assaulted.

Sept. 6.—Miss. Helen n, who has been in l at Millington, a small alem, was gagged, tied saulted by an unknown
ing place in that village
ing the absence of the n. She had a terrible
r assailant, but was he floor insensible. The d of a small sum of g parties are scouring threats are made that n will be lynched. The deputy sheriffs have will aid in the search.

OLOMON ISLANDS.

ion Sailed from San isco Friday.

Sept. 5.—A secret gold n left this city on Fri-ion Islands, where, it up, are said to be ab-
is mines of gold quartz.
Sophia Sutherland. In ith Sea Commercial Co.,
ch is to seek the treas-
the cupidity of traders lands has been excited crude gold ornaments
tives. Several expedi-overed to land on this
he source of the gold.
nstrations have driven away. The Sutherland
r is months.

WEDDING TOUR.

Celebrate Start On One Built for Two.

Sept. 5.—(Special.)—Fif of five weeks' honey
the Minute Introduction
did, were married this bicycle trip. The bride
chief inducement
for all other bicycle having for a wedding
three of a dozen and a trousseau was

Boston, Sept. 5.—The report from the Massachusetts General Hospital to-night is to the effect that the condition of Carlton T. Butters and John Harris is such that a turn either for better or worse is likely to occur at any moment.

Examination showed that Harris, in attempting suicide, had lodged a bullet in his head so close to the brain that meningitis is likely to set in if he should suffer a relapse. The physicians have been unable to remove the bullet.

Carlton Butters is suffering from almost exactly similar conditions, save that in his case two bullets have thus far defied extraction. One entered near the eye, the other in the cheek. He, too, may contract meningitis.

Harris positively refuses to talk.

Waltham, Mass., Sept. 5.—Harris, who fatally shot Mrs. Butters and attempted to kill young Butters and himself, was 50 years old. He was in a wholesale paint and oil commission house in Boston at one time. The firm opened a branch in New York and Harris was sent there as head clerk, later becoming manager and finally succeeding to the business, out of which he drew at one time $15,000 a year.

While in New York he married a young lady belonging to one of the old Knickerbocker families. Soon after he began to gamble and his business rapidly went to ruin.

To make up his gambling losses he became involved in the robbery of a lot of diamonds from a New York woman and was sent to Sing Sing for two years.

A WILD WEST INCIDENT.

An Indian Boy Thrown from a Horse and Injured.

The exhibition of the Wild West show at Crescent Park Saturday afternoon very nearly terminated in a fatality through the stumbling of a horse during a wild dash across the field. It was at the conclusion of the general introduction to the spectators, when in the midst of a hurry scurry one of the horses stumbled. On his back was perched Johnny Hemlock, the 12-year-old son of one of the Indians. When the horse stumbled the little fellow was thrown over the animal's head, fortunately landing in a deep gully made by the old driveway into the ball grounds. This undoubtedly saved the lad's life, for before he could pick himself up or the horse recover his footing the big animal pitched by Mexican Tobe struck against him, knocking him down. The crowd outside the fence were horrified to see the [illegible] as it went down full [illegible] fully into which the latter had [illegible] from being crushed to [illegible] he was knocked un[illegible] to be taken to the [illegible] Indian headquarters, [illegible] that the boy had [illegible] C. Force was summoned [illegible] examination found that [illegible] been wrenched and that the [illegible] layered about the [illegible] were broken, and [illegible] there was no [illegible] in his act and in the [illegible] of a tyrant and a persecutor is condemned as a criminal. It is an accepted theory that all the acts of tyranny similar to the Spanish Inquisition are practiced in foreign countries, but if the people of America would take the trouble to investigate they would find that New York, the metropolis of the New World, was stigmatized with acts that would not bear the light of justice."

It was here that Miss Goldman had to moisten her lips with water and it was also here that the baby, who was pacing up and down in front of the platform, caught sight of the glass and set up a cry for it. Nothing else would satisfy the precocious youngster, and his desperate father mounted the platform and secured the desired article, intending to replace it after baby had a drink. But he reckoned without his host, for when baby laid his chubby hands on the tumbler he kept them there despite all entreaties and words of Anarchy were spoken from dry lips.

They did not cease in their utterance, however, and with the start that she had made Miss Goldman was soon deeply engaged in drawing pictures that made her hearers tremble with indignation. She not only recounted tales of oppression, but also indulged in apostrophe now and then which proved very effective.

"Man is simply an automaton according to the present acts of government," she said. "He neither thinks nor acts of his own free will. All are ruled by a system of laws which give those in power the privilege of tyranny which they do not fail to exercise. If there were no laws there would be no people to break the laws."

Miss Goldman then ran off at a tangent and touched upon all the phases of Anarchy, closing with an impressive apostrophe, in which she pictured the country lost to the rule of the capitalists and monopolists and that becoming monarchical.

The address had lasted an hour and a half, and when she closed there was an immediate break for the door. Miss Goldman was not so exhausted by her remarks, however, that she could not get to the door first to take up a collection in the interests of those who, she said, were suffering under the heel of power. The baby had gone to the window to cool off and a handful of the audience remained to ask questions.

This part of the programme was necessarily cut short, however, for Miss Goldman had to take the early train to Boston, where she spoke in the evening.

Her services have been secured for to-day, however, by the local Anarchists and she will speak at Crescent Park and Rocky Point. She also intends remaining in the city till Wednesday night, during which time she will make further addresses.

LEFT TO DROWN.

Two New York Policemen Chase a Fireman Into the River.

New York, Sept. 5.—[illegible] James Welsh, a fireman of the Cunard steamship Etruria, was drowned in the North river, at the foot of Clarkson street, Saturday night. [illegible] With the officers close at his [illegible] Welsh, in his frenzy, [illegible] the young [illegible] and was [illegible] with a [illegible] for help. [illegible] to the [illegible] of two [illegible] with the police. [illegible] the pier in the darkness, making no effort to save his life [illegible] It is said he [illegible]

to their
This i years ag
of the
The trac traffic pl age to f

t'yetta
Mumaw
Carl wheels teaches bicycle.
Park
chase.
left his pon whi within

For a the cou
the hill away a succeede
The hor turned i
There w hers dro in some Carl M
the old shores o
and its slope started gust of such st lead ma
At the runaway direction reached the hors
It was
It family
Meyerfeld knowing a runni failed t brought

The Ru

Viele gave P Shaugn ton of up to a tra
the hill
by no lead it buddie
in the drive
by H.
Tighma
on the times
One gravel the t pegw rained direct lead
ma

BEST COPY AVAILABLE

890210012

The Emma Goldman Papers

[Interview] Told to Get Out / Emma Goldman.— pp. 1,9 ; 43 cm. In The Evening Bulletin [Providence]. —(Sept 8, 1897).

Permission to reproduce or quote in any form must be obtained from Providence Public Library.

NDREWS'S LETTER.

tification to Brown Corporation He Will Not Withdraw His Resignation.

BY THE SECRETARY THIS MORNING.

etween Dr. Andrews and the Executive Committee Mainly Devoted to a Discussion of the Form of the ction Looking Toward the Selection of a Successor. Several Very Able Men Mentioned in Connection with ndrews's letter, stat- thdraw his resigna- ency of Brown Uni- d this morning by derson, Secretary of stated in the Jour- is is the President's tter. Within a short e his labors at the devote his attention terests of the paper by John Brisben f the Cosmopolitan asked this morning

President's letter t out," he said. "You r Andrews for it." cause either the con- or the events of yes- of the advisory and ee one about a successor asked the reporter the Corporation to to give a notice a days before a special direction from that of the local institution, and that considering the amount of discussion which had been created by his letter of resignation there was much doubt as to his usefulness in the event of his remaining at the head of Brown University.

So strong was his feeling on this subject that there was practically no attempt at the meeting to dissuade him from his intention of adhering to his original letter of declination. The only question, therefore, was as to the phraseology of the communication to the Secretary. This being finally settled, the meeting adjourned, and within a few weeks President Andrews will be succeeded by an educator more in harmony with the spirit of the institution. The men talked of for the place include Benjamin Ide Wheeler nr Cornell, Benjiah Whitman of Columbian, Rev. W. H. P. Faunce of New York and Dr. Thomas D. Anderson. These men have been in the public mind for some time as eligible for the Presidency, but it may be that the Corporation will have to go outside their number in making their selection.

The question of a successor to Dr. Andrews, however, did not come before the committee at its meeting yesterday. Dr. Andrews's ultimatum was the only topic considered.

The whole committee was not present. Those who were there included Dr Andrews, Dr. George L. Collins, Robert I. Gammell, Rev. Thomas D. Anderson, Cornelius S. Sweetland and Oscar Lapham. Of the remaining five members of the committee, Rowland Hazard was in Europe, J. C. B. Woods was in New London and Judge Durfee and Arnold B. Chace were unable to be present.

Dr. Andrews, who in his capacity as President of the university is Chairman of the committee, presided over the first part of the meeting. Later he withdrew and Hon. Oscar Lapham was chosen Chairman.

The members who were present at this meeting of the committee uniformly refused to disclose what was done by them, or in what way the subject of Dr. Andrews's resignation was brought up, though they did go so far as to rashly declare that the resignation was talked of at the meeting. "It was only a conference," said Dr. Anderson, the Secretary of the Corporation, and all the rest of the members dodged questions by giving about the same answer to all inquiries that were made.

The only statement made in regard to the meeting was that no formal action of any kind relating to Dr. Andrews's resignation was taken. The affair was wholly a conference and nothing more was to be said.

"I ask to be excused from talking," said Mr. Sweetland when questioned. "I really have no information to give out. When the proper time comes all will be made known."

Hon. Oscar Lapham, who was Chairman of the meeting when Dr. Andrews withdrew, would say nothing further than that the matter would be made public in two or three days. Dr Collins and Mr Gammell declined to say anything at all touching the resignation.

The only formal business transacted by the committee was a vote to appropriate a sufficient sum to have a stone laid in the foundation of the memorial church at Phillips Academy in Exeter, N. H. Further action to be taken by a number of colleges and Brown will have its stone with them.

TOLD TO GET OUT.

Anarchist Emma Goldman Ordered to Leave the City.

WAS ARRESTED LAST NIGHT BY ORDER OF THE MAYOR.

And Spent the Night in a Cell at the Station.

TOLD TO-DAY THERE WAS NO ROOM FOR HER HERE.

Her "Herald," Cook, Given to Understand That It Will be Best for Him to Keep Quiet If He Desires to Remain in the City.—Miss Goldman Left Town Without Delay.

Emma Goldman, the woman Anarchist was sent out of the city early this afternoon by the Mayor. She is not to return here and in order to ensure her absence the charge of revelling which was made against her will be continued three months. It will be pressed if she again visits this city.

It was by order of the Mayor that the police acted in the case. After reading her first speech here, in which she defied the authorities and exalted assassination, Mr. McGuinness came to the belief that the orderly people of the city ought not to be compelled to suffer the dissemination of such doctrine by New York Anarchists. He instructed the police to put a stop to it.

The captain of the 4th precinct was evidently not over prompt in acting, and two more of the ranting speeches of Miss Goldman went before the public. The Mayor's instructions when he learned of this were decidedly more emphatic in tone, with the result that when the advocate of free love appeared in the central precinct last night she was promptly taken in custody by the officers.

She cannot be said to have enjoyed herself during the night, although a cell is no new place for her. With the drunks and the revellers she was haled before the Police Court at 8 o'clock this morning charged with revelling. She denied her guilt, and was held in $100 bonds for trial Friday. Her friends, who were so much worked up over her arrest that they rushed into the Journal office last night and dictated the substance of a bulletin they wanted posted in the window announcing the arrest, apparently left her to her fate.

This morning she was cheerful, although indignant that she should not be allowed to see the newspapers or send a telegram to her friends in New York. She had had no breakfast, and this did not tend to put her in a better mood. Besides this, she had an evident misunderstanding over the offence she was charged with, and altogether her opinion of the police of this city was not complimentary. She dodged this when a Bulletin reporter asked her the question, saying she would reserve her opinion until she got out.

"It's a shame that I cannot communicate with my friends," she said, looking trim and neat in a blue dress and a jaunty Alpine hat as she sat in the cell. "They do not know that I need them

BOSTON STORE

CALLENDER, McAUSLAN & TROUP COMPANY

School Time

IS

Rain Time.

School Umbrellas—2 26-inch — natural han paragon frames—the se season leader at 50c.

Carola Umbrellas - inch, close roll, cases tassels, natural hand, special at 1.00

Another lot — you them — our famous Umbrellas—26 and 2 —handsome natural ha and pure silk Taffeta c

1.15

HENRY H. FAY.

The Ex-Lieutenant Governor Died at Newport This Morning.

HE WAS POSTMASTER IN THAT CITY UNDER PREST. HARRISON.

Had Also Been a Member of the General Assembly.

WAS DELEGATE TO CONVENTION THAT RENOMINATED LINCOLN.

For a Number of Years He Served on the School Committee of Newport and Was Chosen Superintendent of Schools, While Occupying That Position.—Early in Life He Was a Noted Teacher.

Hon. Henry H. Fay, Postmaster of Newport for four years under President Benjamin Harrison, and Lieutenant Governor of the State from 1876 to 1878 and a prominent citizen of Newport and of the State, died this morning after a long illness.

Hon. Henry H. Fay, son of Rev. Elipha Fay, late President of Waterville College, Maine, was born at New Paltz Ulster county, New York, in 18[illegible]. In 1856 he received the degree of Master of

PROVIDENCE MA

Michael Leonard in a Affray at Hyde P

HE RECEIVED A D WOUND IN THE AB

Now at Massachusetts G pital in a Precarious C

A MAN HELD BY THE SUSPICION.

Leonard Left His Hom terday to Go to Wor but Did Not Return Night.—He Has a Wi Children Living o Street.—Detective Par Is Well-Known at F

Hyde Park, Mass., Sept. ous and probably fatal s occurred here about midn Leonard, a middle-aged m thought, lived at 70 Ko Providence, was shot in and was taken to the General Hospital in a dan Hon James A. Cronnick in custody on suspici Leonard.

The shooting occurred on Up to 10 o'clock this morn known of the circumstanc dents of Eastern avenue, and John H. Frazier, he fired a few minutes bef They ran towards the which the reports came, one or two others who h on the streets in the v where Eastern avenue an met a man who afterw be Michael Leonard was suffering from a bullet ho men.

As soon as the police of the shooting Dr Holt physician, was called H Leonard for some time in extracting the ball, wh was successful. The ball had [illegible] partner, and it [illegible] doubtful if the man could [illegible] he was taken to the General Hospital.

The police promptly be gation last night was unf his assailant was as the by the fact that [illegible] [illegible] Pa [illegible] to be [illegible] dog bark. Two shots w [illegible] the [illegible] James A [illegible] and [illegible]

101

BEST COPY AVAILABLE

890210012

The Emma Goldman Papers

[Interview] Told to Get Out / Emma Goldman.— pp. 1,9 ; 43 cm. In The Evening Bulletin [Providence]. —(Sept 8, 1897).

Permission to reproduce or quote in any form must be obtained from Providence Public Library.

President's letter.
it out," he said. "You Dr. Andrews for it."
discuse either the con-er or the events of yes-of the advisory and
ittee.
done about a successor
?" asked the reporter.
or the Corporation to

ary to give a notice a
of days before a special
."

attended to at the Cormeeting. Adjournment
t to a call from the Secssue a notice of a meet-which seems to be most meeting, however, will hin a week, for I have that such action would

ent. Dr. Andrews is still ke it, and I find others
h me in the view, and he his successor is chosen."
this Dr. Anderson would but referred the reporter s for all information.
was seen and asked if he
a copy of his letter.
d, "I cannot do it."
ined to discuss his resig-

text of the document
the public, its intent known. The letter

ernoon between Dr. An-committee of the trusn University. Before the President of the univerd at a decision regarding d much of the time of the taken up in a discussion language in which the
Dr. Andrews should be information was developed
s, after considering the
, held to the opinion was in another

be that the Corporation will have to go outside their number in making their selection.

The question of a successor to Dr. Andrews, however, did not come before the committee at its meeting yesterday. Dr. Andrews's ultimatum was the only topic considered.

The whole committee was not present. Those who were there included Dr. Andrews, Dr. George L. Collins, Robert I. Gammell, Rev. Thomas D. Anderson, Cornelius S. Sweetland and Oscar Lapham. Of the remaining five members of the committee, Rowland Hazard was in Europe, J. C. B. Woods was in New London and Judge Durfee and Arnold B. Chace were unable to be present.

Dr. Andrews, who in his capacity as President of the university is Chairman of the committee, presided over the first part of the meeting. Later he withdrew and Hon. Oscar Lapham was chosen Chairman.

The members who were present at this meeting of the committee uniformly refused to disclose what was done by them, or in what way the subject of Dr. Andrews's resignation was brought up, though they did go so far as to rashly declare that the resignation was talked of at the meeting. "It was only a conference," said Dr. Anderson, the Secretary of the Corporation, and all the rest of the members dodged questions by giving about the same answer to all inquiries that were made.

The only statement made in regard to the meeting was that no formal action of any kind relating to Dr. Andrews's resignation was taken. The affair was wholly a conference and nothing more was to be said.

"I ask to be excused from talking," said Mr. Sweetland when questioned. "I really have no information to give out. When the proper time comes all will be made known."

Hon. Oscar Lapham, who was Chairman of the meeting when Dr. Andrews withdrew, would say nothing further than that the matter would be made public in two or three days. Dr. Collins and Mr. Gammell declined to say anything at all touching the resignation.

The only formal business transacted by the committee was a vote to appropriate a sufficient sum to have a stone laid in the foundation of the memorial church at Phillips Academy in Exeter, N. H. Similar action is taken by a number of colleges, and Brown will have its stone with them.

THE WEATHER.

Record of the Journal Thermometer for the Past 24 Hours.

Highest, 1:30 p. m. to-day..... 69
Lowest, 6 a. m. to-day..... 61

The Bulletin's Special Prediction.

R. I. College of A. and M. A., Kingston, R. I., Sept. 8, 11:30 A. M.—Weather forecast for the next 24 hours: For Rhode Island, fair weather.

Washington, Sept. 8.—For New England: Fair to-night and Thursday; warmer in interior; southerly winds.

Boston, Sept. 8, 8 A. M.—For Boston and vicinity, fair to-night and Thursday; warmer during Thursday; south to southwest winds.

Weather Conditions—The weather is fair throughout the country this morning, but it is cloudy and somewhat unsettled in districts bordering on the coast from New England southward to New Jersey. This cloudiness does not result from any conditions portending storm, as the barometer is much above the normal in eastern sections. The barometer is very low in the Northwest, registering below 29.50 in Montana. As yet this depression is not attended by foul weather, its only effect being on the temperature, which in all Western districts in unseasonably high. In the Dakotas, Iowa and Nebraska the general range of morning temperature is slightly above 70. Moderately cool temperatures prevail in the Lake regions and other Eastern districts, with a tendency towards higher figures. The mercury in New England is almost stationary at about 60. The following large amounts of precipitation are reported: Jacksonville, Fla., 2.00 inches; Key West, Fla., 1.88 inches, and these are the only rainfalls worthy of mention within the past 24 hours.

Miniature Almanac, Sept. 8.

Sun Rises.....5:15 | Moon Sets.. 2.28 A.M.
Sun Sets.....6:07 | High Tide.. 5:58 P.M.

A New Lake, 100 Miles Long.

New York, Sept. 8.—A World special from San Francisco says: George Stinson has arrived here from the Copper river region. He visited Cook's Inlet and made his way up Matamooski river, crossing over to Matamooski Divide. "There," he says, "I found a lake 100 miles long at least. You cannot see across it anywhere. This lake is not on any map. I went around the edge of the lake and found a big river, which I followed down into Copper river. There are gold and copper veins of great richness us near the head of Cam[illegible] river."

herself quite the night, which was a ... is no new place for her. With the drunks and the revellers she was haled before the Police Court at 8 o'clock this morning charged with revelling. She denied her guilt, and was held in $100 bonds for trial Friday. Her friends, who were so much worked up over her arrest that they rushed into the Journal office last night and dictated the substance of a bulletin they wanted posted in the window announcing the arrest, apparently left her to her fate.

This morning she was cheerful, although indignant that she should not be allowed to see the newspapers or send a telegram to her friends in New York. She had had no breakfast, and this did not tend to put her in a better mood. Besides this, she had an evident misunderstanding over the offence she was charged with, and altogether, her opinion of the police of this city was not complimentary. She dodged this when a Bulletin reporter asked her the question, saying she would reserve her opinion until she got out.

"It's a shame that I cannot communicate with my friends," she said, looking trim and neat in a blue dress and a jaunty Alpine hat as she sat in the cell. "They do not know that I need them, and may not come to my help. I ought not to have been arrested, anyway. I had done nothing. I have been speaking here some time, and have never been molested before. I spoke in Olneyville and in Burgess square, and when I was here last spring I spoke in Burgess square.

"I didn't bring the crowd," she continued. "It was there when I arrived. A man stood on a wagon selling wares, and he brought the greater part of the gathering. I merely addressed those I found there, and freedom of speech is, or ought to be, assured in this country."

Just here her breakfast arrived. She had sent the janitor out after it, and was hungry.

"I guess they don't think prisoners care to eat in this city," she said. "In New York every prisoner in every station house gets three meals a day, but here you are not allowed to send for anything until 10 o'clock. I want to employ counsel, too, but have not been allowed to send out for a lawyer."

"Your friends will look out for you," said Capt. Matthews.

"That may be," she replied, "but I want to look out for myself in the meantime."

Eventually John H. Cook and a swarthy black moustached individual, who has meekly followed in the train of Miss Goldman since her arrival in the city and has been credited with being the successor to the jailed Berkman in the role of temporary husband, held a conference with the Chief of Police. The Chief conferred with the Mayor and the result was that the party of three were ushered into the office of the Executive about noon.

Miss Goldman's eyes snapped fire while the Mayor talked, but she had little to say. She said she wished to get away to Boston as soon as possible and was very ready to promise not to again set foot in this city. In fact she was anxious to leave at once.

Mr. Cook wanted to know if the Mayor

Continued on Page 9.

Miss Emma Goldman.

The woman Anarchist ordered out of the city.
—From a photograph by S. B. Brown.

Had Also Been a Member of the General Assembly.

WAS DELEGATE TO CONVENTION THAT RENOMINATED LINCOLN.

For a Number of Years He Served on the School Committee of Newport and Was Chosen Superintendent of Schools, While Occupying That Position.—Early in Life He Was a Noted Teacher.

Hon. Henry H. Fay, Postmaster of Newport for four years under President Benjamin Harrison, and Lieutenant Governor of the State from 1880 to 1883 and a prominent citizen of Newport and of the State, died this morning after a long illness.

Hon. Henry H. Fay, son of Rev. Elphas Fay, late President of Waterville College, Maine, was born at New Paltz, Ulster county, New York, in 1835. In 1856 he received the degree of Master of Arts from the University of Rochester, and during that year established a school for boys at Newport, the reputation of which attracted pupils from all parts of the country. This school was carried on successfully by Mr. Fay until 1875, when he retired therefrom.

During that year Mr. Fay was elected to the Rhode Island General Assembly, to which he was annually re-elected until 1880, when he was chosen Lieutenant Governor on the Republican ticket, having been a member of that party from its organization. He was re-elected Lieutenant Governor in 1881. While in the General Assembly he was Chairman of the committee on education and a member of the committee on finance. He was an original member of the State Board of Charities and Correction, serving for three years, when he resigned. He was a delegate from Rhode Island to the Republican National Convention at Baltimore in 1864 when Abraham Lincoln was renominated for the Presidency.

Mr. Fay had also been a member of the school committee of Newport for a number of years, and while serving on that body was a few years ago chosen Superintendent of Schools, serving a couple of years.

He was in 1873 and 1874 the Republican candidate for Mayor of Newport, but was each time defeated, once by the late Mayor James Atkinson, and once by ex-Mayor Slocum. His brother, William W. Fay, has been for many years a professor at the United States Naval Academy.

Mr. Fay married in 1861 Ida Garland of Baltimore. His successful career as an educator and his efficient public service have placed him among the prominent and influential men of the State.

Found a Diamond Mine.

San Antonio, Tex., Sept. 8.—(Special.) Customs Inspectors at Laredo have found an unclaimed valise on a train containing $300,000 worth of diamonds, jewelry and other valuables.

Now at Massachusetts [illegible] pital in a Precarious

A MAN HELD BY THE SUSPICION

Leonard Left His Hom[illegible] terday to Go to Wo[illegible] but Did Not Return Night.—He Has a W[illegible] Children Living [illegible] Street.—Detective Pa[illegible] is Well-Known at P[illegible]

Hyde Park, Mass., Sept. [illegible] ous and probably fatal [illegible] occurred here about mid[illegible] Leonard, a middle-aged [illegible] thought, lived at 70 [illegible] Providence, was shot in [illegible] and was taken to the [illegible] General Hospital in a d[illegible] tion. James A. Cronnick [illegible] is in custody on suspi[illegible] shot Leonard.

The shooting occurred [illegible] Up to 10 o'clock this mo[illegible] known of the circumstan[illegible] dents of Eastern avenue [illegible] and John H. Frazier, h[illegible] fired a few minutes b[illegible] They ran towards the [illegible] which the reports came, [illegible] one or two others who [illegible] on the streets in the [illegible] where Eastern avenue a[illegible] meet, a man who afterw[illegible] be Michael Leonard was [illegible] suffering from a bullet h[illegible] men.

As soon as the police [illegible] of the shooting, Dr. Hol[illegible] Physician, was called. [illegible] Leonard for some time, [illegible] in extracting the ball, [illegible] a revolver. The ball ha[illegible] intestines, and Dr. Hol[illegible] doubtful if the man coul[illegible] a. m. he was taken to th[illegible] General Hospital.

The police promptly h[illegible] gation. Leonard was un[illegible] his assailant was, as th[illegible] by the time that Iro[illegible] reached the scene. The[illegible] previous to the shootin[illegible] dog bark. Two shots w[illegible] immediately after. The[illegible] James A. Cronnick ha[illegible] and had left for home [illegible] minutes before the cho[illegible] had been drinking and [illegible] with him.

Cronnick, after his a[illegible] he did the shooting. He[illegible] home, which is not [illegible] Leonard was found [illegible] were fired. The police [illegible] the revolver with whi[illegible] shot. Iron and Frazier [illegible] nesses.

This forenoon it was a[illegible] ard had told an officer [illegible] taken to the hospital, t[illegible] up by two men and th[illegible] He could not give an[illegible] the men. Leonard is al[illegible]

Leonard's Relative[illegible]

Michael Leonard is [illegible] ployed for the past two [illegible] Brothers, contractors, [illegible] He moved with his wife [illegible] son to 70 Kossuth stree[illegible] street about three wee[illegible] two brothers in the city [illegible] is married, and lives a[illegible] nue, and Charles, a [illegible] boards with his brother [illegible]

Mrs. Leonard was no[illegible] formed by a reporter, [illegible] was not at work yeste[illegible] did not return home la[illegible] the house at the usual [illegible] morning, and his wife [illegible] gone to work.

The man's absence [illegible] night was not consider[illegible] frequently occurred, a[illegible] supposed he might ha[illegible] brother's house, as he [illegible] done before.

Michael did not al[illegible] steadily, and was in th[illegible] or less frequent interv[illegible] away from work for s[illegible] time. He had not be[illegible] week.

It was learned at hi[illegible] that neither of them [illegible] for four weeks. This [illegible] concern as to his welf[illegible] one of them remarked [illegible]

"Mike is big enough [illegible] himself."

None of the man's r[illegible] been notified of his inj[illegible]

Continued on [illegible]

NO AGREE[illegible]

Work at the Nov[illegible] Works Still S[illegible]

[illegible] the operatives of the [illegible] Works here is still on [illegible] riman says that he w[illegible] committee of strikers, [illegible] to see them. Mr. [illegible] that the price of the [illegible] duct has not advanc[illegible] by the employes, but [illegible] terial has advanced. [illegible] the reason of his dis[illegible] cut in wages. He w[illegible] said, either to stop [illegible] money is running t[illegible] this way out of it.

102

890210012

The Emma Goldman Papers

[Interview] Told to Get Out / Emma Goldman.— pp. 1,9 ; 43 cm. In The Evening Bulletin [Providence]. —(Sept 8, 1897).

Permission to reproduce or quote in any form must be obtained from Providence Public Library.

Hospital Service, Sanitary Inspector at Havana complains of number of persons who apply for ...ses to go to the United States ...e are not admissible under the ...ths. He gives the following il...

...nd one family who applied for ...ses to go to Tampa, Fla., bear... which stated that they were ... the province of Pinar del Rio, ...ing questioned stated that they ...d in the country all their lives ...o years ago, when they came to ... They had never had yellow ... When told that they could not ...ampa they left the office, only ...n a few days later, bearing an ...statement that they were born ...ity of Havana, and had resided ... some time. They were again ... when a physician's certificate ...nished that he had attended ...ring an attack of yellow fever. ...ere then rejected for the third ...his is but one of similar cases, ...scribed to demonstrate the diffi... the work here, the persistency ...ople to transgress our sanitary ...nd the facility with which per... get official papers to suit the ...ents of the occasion."

...runner says that yellow fever ...reased slightly over the week

AGAINST UNION R. R. CO.

...menian Laborer Wants Dam... to the Extent of $2000.

...claration has been filed in the ... Pleas Division of the Supreme ... in the case of Peter Joseph Be... against the Union Railroad Com... The plaintiff alleges that he was ... through the negligence of the de... on Aug. 9, and brings suit ... his attorney for the recovery of ...mages.

... was issued and served upon the ...nt Aug. 25. On the date that the ... took place, Behoyan boarded ...at Market square. Finding he ...on the wrong line, he got off at ...ner of North Main street. As ... on the ground to the left of the ...ching for a valise which he had ...away under the seats, a Prairie ... car rounded the corner and ...Behoyan upon the shoulder and ...rowing the former and inflicting ... injuries to the latter.

...laintiff is an Armenian laborer, ...ossessed of considerable linguistic

...ee.

...a to-day.

... speaking Armenian, Greek, Ger... French and English, with appa... ...e and fluency, and can also read ... His case is likely to prove an ...ting one. Jury trial will be had BRISTOL.

Probate Court.

...egular monthly session of the Court ...as held yesterday forenoon. The ...ed of Dr. C. H. H. Iverson, administrator ...estate of Walter A. Caldwell, for al... was continued nisi. The last will ...tament of James T. Pressley was ...ed and the petition to have Augusta H. ... executrix was approved. Mrs. Rich... ...ed bond in the sum of ... The account of ... administratrix on the e... Hope P. Walker was allowed. The ... of George H. Congdon, administrator ...estate of Elizabeth P. Darling, for ... was continued. The petition of ... P. Luther, executrix on the estate ...ohn J. Tillson, for the appointment ...appraisers on inventory was granted. ...ree were appointed. Notice ... Letters ... Town Council

...egular monthly meeting of the Town ...as held yesterday afternoon. The pe... ...tion of [illegible] for the privilege ...reading was continued until the next ...eeting. The petition of Theodora M. ... and others for the adoption of [illegible]

ECHOES OF THE SQUIRT.

Jealousies of Pawtuxet Valley Firemen Lead to Blows.

A NATICK MAN RECEIVED DRUBBING FROM RIVERPOINTERS.

Woonsocket Firemen Claim They Should Have Been Awarded Second Prize, a Mistake Having Been Made by the Judges.

The principal topic of conversation in the Pawtuxet Valley to-day is the firemen's contest at Narragansett Park yesterday, and although the Riverpointe succeeded in sending the water farther than their old enemies, the Naticks, they are still dissatisfied, because they did not take first place.

A lively row occurred at Riverpoint last evening after the return of the firemen from Narragansett Park, between one of the backers of the Riverpoint machine and one of the Natick men, who thought that the Riverpoint man was crowing too much about the result of the contest. The man from the home of the President of the Town Council started with the intention of completely annihilating the whole Riverpoint company, but before the end of the argument he was convinced of the error of his ways and judgment, and started on the run for Natick, apparently in great haste to find a drug store where leeches were kept in stock for the purpose of removing tell-tale facial discolorations.

A Dispute Over the Awards.

According to the awards of the judges in the firemen's contest at the State Fair yesterday, Tekoosnoow, the Woonsocket veterans' machine, played 162 feet 1⅝ inches, and was given fifth place, just missing a prize. Barney Coyle, President of the Woonsocket Veteran Firemen's Association, who was one of the judges yesterday, stated to-day that a mistake had been made, and that the actual play of the Woonsocket engine was 166 feet 1⅝ inches, and that the Woonsocket company should have had second prize.

He also stated that there was a possibility of the award being made that way, as he had received a telephone message from the managers of the fair, asking him to meet with the other judges and go over the whole matter, if he desired to do so. The prize money, he said, had not been paid.

Dayton Cycle Club Meeting.

There was a special meeting of the Dayton Cycle Club at the club rooms on Beacon avenue last evening. The meeting was called to consider the matter of new quarters, and the club voted to secure an entire house, as the membership is too large for the present quarters.

President H. W. Brown and Secretary Chase were in their allotted chairs at the hour of meeting, with a heavy attendance. The statement was briefly made that as the number of men joining the club had made the present quarters rather limited, an entire house would be of advantage before any more new members were elected, and that 15 applications were now before the investigating committee. After considerable discussion as to the advisability of such a step, it was decided that as winter was fast approaching, with the riding season closing, the members would need other attractions than a meeting and reading room to hold them together during the cold months, and that a pool and billiard table and card rooms would be an attraction. The statement was made that a cottage house on Pine street, near Summer street, could be hired by the club, and a committee was appointed to look at it.

After the meeting several of the members visited this house. It is large enough for the purpose, has sizable rooms for a billiard table, a reading room and officers' quarters on the ground floor, good rooms upstairs and a large and dry cellar, which will make an excellent wheel room, with a sizable yard.

Newhall and Bullock, the tandem riders who made the record ride from Providence to New York recently, were in receipt of congratulations on their plucky ride.

Thursday evening the club will have a moonlight excursion on steamer Rambler. Invitations have been extended to other clubs to attend, and over 400 tickets are out, so that the call will be highly enjoyable. The boat will leave the foot of Power street at 8 o'clock. A run was called for Sunday to Rocky Point.

Joe Bowden, the "little flyer," who made a sensational ride last Saturday with the "pros," will race at the meet at Meriden, Conn., Saturday afternoon.

Hubert Martin, the "midget wonder" of this city, the winner of the two road [illegible] yesterday, expects to lower the mile amateur record in a short time, probably on the 15th, at Crescent Park track. He will be paced in his attempt by three tandem teams.

The statement has been printed that would permit Miss Goldman to continue her addresses in halls, and he was informed in reply that nothing of the kind would be permitted. The Mayor said he did not propose to sanction the stirring up of people by the irresponsible utterances of New York denunciators of law and order. Incidentally the head of the police department suggested to Mr. Cook that inasmuch as he had been introducing Miss Goldman to her auditors it would be well for him to conduct himself with more discretion in the future.

TOLD TO GET OUT.

Continued from Page 1.

It was a very subdued trio that marched out of the Mayor's office at the conclusion of the interview. Mr. Cook led the way and opened the gate for the little woman. The swarthy individual brought up the rear. They went in the direction of the depot.

Miss Goldman was arrested on Market square last night. Emma's increasing popularity at Burges square pleased her Anarchistic pride. Like Alexander, she was about to weep for greater for more worlds to conquer, when she conceived the plan of transporting her dry goods box to Market square, and from the top of that eminence of awakening in the hearts of Westminster street paraders a burning and unquenchable desire for liberty, equality, freedom and dynamite.

Mr. Cook, Miss Emma's herald, summoned the crowd in his usual commanding way, and then introduced the heroine. With a loud voice she began to call down the church-goers, the capitalists, the police, and the Government officials.

The Sergeant on the beat notified the young woman that while she might be a good thing in her proper place he would have to push her along if she did not stop her talk, as it was attracting so many people that the street was being closed to the public.

This was a lighted match to gunpowder, for the easy, bitter tongue of the woman achieved feats of oratory.

"What," she demanded, "this a free country? Forbidding free speech, and forbidding the people from assembling!"

Then she let loose a volume of epithets to describe the cruel habits of the powers that be.

Once more the officer approached, and the crowd, which never can resist the excitement of watching a contest between the proletariat and the police, urged on the speaker. Encouraged by these signs, Miss Goldman addressed her audience.

"How many want me to speak?" she asked.

Almost all the people within hearing of the woman put up both their hands, and in their eagerness to listen to the dual debate, shouted "hooray! hooray!"

But the lady came down just about this time from her famous temporary platform and trotted over to the nearest police box. An immense crowd, made up for the most part of curiosity hunters, stood around her. Some of her personal friends sent up a howl, the most prominent words in which were "free speech, liberty, equality, brotherhood, tyranny and despotism, long live Anarchy."

Miss Goldman offered but little resistance to the police after she was taken from her position. In fact, she seemed to rejoice over the event, and to enjoy the martyrdom which her followers said she was enduring. Her backers said that they would make early arrangements to have her released, but up to a late hour the Anarchist was still a prisoner at the Central Station.

Miss Emma Goldman has delivered three addresses in this city. She had begun on her fourth last evening when she was arrested. Last Friday night she began her Providence campaign at Olneyville square. John H. Cook, a local labor agitator and Anarchist, who conducted many meetings in Casino Hall before the last Presidential election in the interests of free silver, was her sponsor. He introduced her that night at Olneyville.

Miss Goldman from the first attracted a great concourse of listeners, and as she continued her labors, her words increased in bitterness. The first evening she called her hearers "fellow-slaves" and claimed that the police and the Government were the tools of the capitalists. She wanted women to have the rights men now have.

Saturday at Burges square Miss Goldman denounced the churchgoers, and [illegible] be no God. Her remarks here greatly stirred up the passions of some of her hearers, and one woman refuted her statements.

Sunday afternoon the Anarchist talked to a crowded house at Casino Hall. It was there she distributed books showing the title: "Inquisition of Spain," and the basis of her talk was the assassination of Canovas del Castillo, the late Premier of Spain. She said it was not Golli that did it, but Canovas himself.

She was engaged to talk at Crescent Park and Rocky Point Labor Day. She had intended to stay until to-night in the city.

YELLOW FEVER.

A Detention Camp Established at Waynesville, Ga.

TENTS FURNISHED BY THE TREASURY DEPARTMENT.

National Authorities Still Doubt Correctness of the Reports.—Fact of 600 Cases and Only 12 Deaths Unprecedented.

Washington, Sept. 7.—The Treasury Department has procured 200 tents from the War Department for use at the permanent yellow fever detention camp which has been established at Waynesville, Ga. There are no fever patients there, but the camp has been established as a precautionary measure.

The officials at the Surgeon General's office are quite anxious that Dr. Guiteras should be on the ground as soon as possible, as they think so much of his opinion in yellow fever cases as to be guided entirely by it in their action. So far their advices are confirmatory of the press reports that the epidemic is of the nature of yellow fever. Still, it is evident that even yet they are not entirely convinced of the correctness of the reports as received, and there is apparently a strong inclination to doubt their accuracy. They say that if the disease is yellow fever it is very strange that out of 600 cases there should have been only 12 deaths.

This afternoon the Marine Hospital received two telegrams from Dr. Wasdin at Mobile, which had been delayed in transmission. One reported that President Oliphant of the Louisiana State Board of Health reported another death from yellow fever in New Orleans and three new cases. The other telegram said that two new cases were reported in New Orleans.

Surgeon Murray, who has been stationed at Mobile, but who has been on leave of absence, has been ordered to return at once and will take charge tomorrow. Surgeon H. R. Carter of Chicago, an expert who had charge of the outbreak at Brunswick, Ga., a few years ago, and Surgeon Oakley of Savannah have also been ordered to Mobile. As the State authorities have yet made no appeal for assistance, the Marine Hospital service must confine its work to preventing the disease from being carried from one State to another. Cordons and detention camps will be established at Ocean Springs and New Orleans. The theory of Dr. Baibacker, the Acting Surgeon General, is that the original disease at Ocean Springs was dengue, and that the case of yellow fever was imparted and superimposed upon the patients suffering from the other ailment.

No Yellow Fever at Edwards, Miss.

Jackson, Miss., Sept. 7.—A telephone message from Dr. McCallum at Edwards, Miss., emphatically denies the existence of yellow fever in or near the town. It is now stated that the Anderson family were suffering from dengue fever, and that they are now recovered. Dr. McCallum says that Hon. Sid Champion, who died at Edwards Sunday evening, was suffering from malarial fever.

No New Cases in New Orleans.

New Orleans, Sept. 7.—Night fell upon New Orleans without a single case of yellow fever having been reported to the State Board of Health. But one important case thus far has been developed here, and death has wiped that out. The Board of Health to-night through its President, Dr. Oliphant, and its President pro tem., Dr. Walmsley, declared that in spite of all reports to the contrary, not one of the many who had come hither from Ocean Springs had been stricken with the dread disease.

Quiet at Biloxi.

New Orleans, Sept. 8.—A dispatch from Biloxi at 10:30 says that the three cases of yellow fever reported last night are the only ones that have so far developed at or around Biloxi. The people there are quiet, and the outlook is for no excitement.

VISITING MILITIAMEN.

Reviewed by City Officials and Left for Home.

The 9th Massachusetts Regiment returned home yesterday afternoon.

While the men were at the rifle range or scattered over the streets of the city, adding color to the crowd with their [illegible] uniforms, the officers visited Mayor McGuinness at the City Hall and were received in the executive department. After greetings from the Mayor, who was for some years an officer of the 2d Regiment, the Massachusetts officers were shown through the departments of the City Hall, and then entertained at luncheon by the Mayor. Invitations from the Park Commissioners to visit Roger Williams Park were necessarily declined, owing to lack of time.

At 1:30 o'clock the 9th Massachusetts, headed by the regimental band, marched down Westminster street and up Exchange place to the roped-off space guarded by a police detail, under Deputy Chief [illegible]. The battalion formed in line in front of the City Hall, [illegible] Mayor McGuinness [illegible] members

THE [illegible]

M. S. Perry Hun... for Murder

Atlanta, Ga., ... hanged for the ... at Decatur toda... place on a sc... DeKalb county ... was pale but c... last. On the sc... innocence of the ... reiterated his a... Lanier to protec... home. The drop ...

Horace Steven... a small grocery ... when he committe... he paid the pena... day. To suppl... coma, Mrs. Perry ... home on Pied... these was Brly ... logical student ... of the Perrys w... had become infa... of questionable ... troubles that a... became involved ... shot and mortall... Court House at ... After lingering ... died. Both ... the shooting ... taken into cust... place Perry ... avowed purpos... to his wife.

Though both ... succeeded in co... sooner had the ... house at Decat... Lanier. Perry ... outraged Mrs. ...

Lanier strenuo... committed the ... death made a sta... Perry was angry ... told Mrs. Perry ... tions with other ...

Perry was tri... the DeKalb ... on Tuesday, Apri...

The case was ... Supreme Court, ... new trial. Stron... brought to bear ... save the condem... granting a respit... to investigate the ... fused to interfer...

NORTH ...

To ...

The first reg... the Town Coun... ning. The petiti... for the removal ... on Smith stree... Sweet reported ... former meetings ... case that there ... pay for the wo... that there are ... the town in t... will have ... granted. ... defends action ... might know ... Gardiner and ... should come ... meeting. Presi... urged that so... made of the ca... moved to gran... which was vo... Fruit Hill ... up, and the ... called upon for ... culty caused ... under consid... has been legali... was referred to ... case of George ... damages to his ... due, was called ... Greene said h... Commissioner ... neer that no c... grade previous ... macadam was ... served upon th... Providence ... pleted June 10, ... therefore ad... Hemingway h... ages. Attorney ... that probably ... matter of cos... cept the ruling ... and he agreed ... ly stated the ... missioner ... that these ... drawn, and he ... ter be made the ... so as to be in ... action. The ... received and o... the committee ... tee on Union ... nothing furth... tinued.

The bill of ... burying ... a destitute ... letter from E. ... Rehoboth, was ... deceased had ... shortly before ... value of $800 ... the son should ... life and the ... to the value ... Sweet and ... opinion that ... titute and that ... pay the bill. ... the statutes ... and view, ... to pay the ... James A. ... leave to ... cussion follo... appoint the ... Board of Abate... suggested that ... right to inter... opinion that To... held. Tax A... that common ... ion that some ... rectify possible ... assessors who ... bility. Mr. ... are a number ... adjustment, ... the matter was ... was voted to ... tax to ...

103

890302004

The Emma Goldman Papers

[Interview] Emma Goldman, the Anarchist / Emma Goldman.— p. 7 ; 43 cm. In The Boston Daily Globe. —(Sept. 9, 1897).

Obtained from the Cornell University Libraries and Archives.

of the decision has as yet
t is paper, and Atty Gen Mc-says that he has not made up his w to decide the question. De-statement, there is ground for that the discriminating clause sustained.

least two of the disputed points have been raised by the opponents the proposed additional tax have settled against them in the mind of torney general. The first of these, the new law is in contravention of treaties containing the most favored on clause, has been determined by attorney general to have no weight, much as all nations are alike affect-by the terms of the statute provided they come within its scope. The d point was quite interesting, and a time seemed likely to be effective.
was that the law was unconstitual because the constitution says all duties and imports shall be uni-throughout the United States.
was claimed that an additional duty percent on articles coming through ada over and above what was col-ed on the same articles arriving at York was in direct opposition to express terms of the constitution.
attorney general, however, has ed the conclusion that this objecis not valid, inasmuch as the effect, merchandise was imported into New under the same conditions which stituted the increased tax at the adian border, it would have to suffer extra penalty, so that in effect the es would be the same at both places.
e fact that both of these arguments been decided in favor of the letter the law shows the bent, to some deat least, of the attorney general's d and affords an indication of what decision is that may be expected.
letter was today sent to Postmaster nas from the postoffice department ng him to name the independent es around Boston that could be tably and advantageously converted sub stations of the Boston post
e.

the letter he was told that his wledge of conditions would be of rial assistance to the department.
he was also told that he would not xpected to cross any large rivers or r natural barriers, except in the case Cambridge. He was also asked to his reply in Washington by next day.

Is Not Exuberant.

nator Harris of Kansas is not so ant in his stories of prosperity as e of the other western men who drifted into Washington during the dull spell. When asked today what the real conditions he replied:
, well, there is a great beating of ns, blowing of horns and perform-on the hewgag by the republi-
, but the people are not overpowwith prosperity. The fact that the ers are getting 80 cents a bushel for wheat is not so phenomenal when ought to be getting $1.20. There is the abnormal crop of wheat in Kan-that some people think, either. We probably have 10,000,000 bushels of t in the state. The corn crop is not rge as it ought to be."

ion Pacific Will be Sold.

have the authority of Senator Foraker for saying that it is not the purpose
the subcommittee on Pacific railroads, which he is a member, and which is now in session here, to interfere in the t with the proposed sale of the Kansas road.

In the first place," said he, "Senators rris, Stewart and myself are only the mmittee, and we could not prevent sale if we would. The circuit court ordered the sale, and when the deis entered nothing can interfere its execution except an appeal by attorney general. I do not know the attorney general desires to en-such an appeal.

I know," continued Senator Foraker, my colleague, Senator Harris, is to prevent the consummation sale, but our subcommittee canter a discussion of that branch of provided for the appointment of a committee to investigate and rethe senate on the issue of pa-for lands of the United States to railroads and the California on railroad. The committee is directed to investigate and report senate the amount due the sink-nd of the Union and Central Pa-on account of subsidies paid the Mail steamship company by and deducted from their gross and charged to the operating
The committee is authorised for persons and papers and ad-

Decks of the warships.

WASHINGTON, Sept 8—Admiral Matthews, acting secretary of the navy, received two messages from the North Atlantic squadron this morning. They were sent from the fleet to the commandant of the Norfolk navy yard by carrier pigeons, then telegraphed to Washington. The first message was as follows:

"Ship New York, 3 p m, Sept 7, 60 miles from Norfolk—Assistant secretary is on board Iowa engaged in witnessing great gun exercise with service charges. Brooklyn and Massachusetts will follow. Subcaliber exercises suspended. Search and other night signal exercises tonight."

The second was as follows:

"Ship New York, 9 a m, Sept 8, southern drill grounds, 60 miles from Norfolk —Commandant Norfolk navy yard:

"The squadron getting under way for evolutions before assistant secretary, who remains on Dolphin. Very successful target practice by Iowa and Brooklyn yesterday. Search light last night and attack on drifting target by six and one-pounders with aid of four searchlights. Weather hazy, light airs from east; sea smooth."

Excellent time was made with this last message, it having been received at the navy department in one hour and 54 minutes from the time the pigeon was released at sea.

EMMA GOLDMAN, THE ANARCHIST.

Tells Story of Her Arrest and Release at Providence—Free Speech Denied Her.

Miss Emma Goldman, the anarchist, who was liberated from the custody of the Providence police yesterday, reached Boston late yesterday afternoon.

Miss Goldman claims that she violated no law nor did she commit any act for which she could have been found guilty in any police court in the land, and she is not at all pleased that she was deprived of the same right to address meetings that is enjoyed by numbers of other people in the city of Providence.

In speaking of her arrest to a Globe reporter Miss Goldman said: "The socialists were holding a public meeting in one of the squares in Providence, and not to interfere with them we decided to take a position upon a platform erected in another square, some distance from where the socialists were speaking.

"From the same platform several others had spoken without interference from the police, but shortly after I mounted the platform an officer rudely pulled me and ordered me to desist. I claimed the same right as others had enjoyed and for that was arrested.

"I sent for counsel the next morning, and was informed that there had been a number of disinterested citizens, none of whom I knew, before the mayor to protest against my arrest as I had broken no law.

"I was asked by the authorities if I would promise to keep away from the city for three months if the would release me, but this I declined to do, and so stated in the most emphatic manner to the police officials.

"I did, however, show them my engagements, which would take me away from this section of the country for several months, and informed them that it wasn't likely that I would visit Providence until after my engagements had been filled.

"I was particular to state that I would visit Providence at the first opportunity, but they concluded to let me go without any further parleying.

"At the time of my arrest there were a number of prisoners in the station under arrest for disorderly conduct, several of whom were women. Not all of them looked as if they had committed crime, but all were obliged to remain without food until after noon of the next day, at the earliest providing. They didn't have money to send out for food.

"The first charge under which I was arrested was for disturbing the peace and obstructing the public highway, but this was changed later to read 'reveling.' I was plainly informed at the station house that I was not arrested for anything I had said, but simply because I was Emma Goldman. My friends were not permitted to see me, although the authorities tried to make me think that none of them had attempted to do so."

Miss Goldman will speak on "Free Speech" in Phenix hall, 724 Washington st, on Sunday morning next, at 10 o'clock, and will leave for New Haven in the afternoon to fill an engagement to deliver an address in that city.

Excursion to Lake Winnipesaukee and Center Harbor.

There is a charming pleasure in the [illegible] especially during the fall season is this excursion doubly interesting. The atmosphere at this time is so clear that the distant mountains are to be plainly distinguished, while the foliage in its bright and magnificent autumn hues is a sight well worth traveling far to see.

The Boston & Maine railroad will run one of its famous Center Harbor excursions on Tuesday, Sept 14, from Boston, by special train, the round trip to cost but $2.

The special train will leave Boston union station at 8.20 a m, connecting at Alton Bay with the steamer Mt Washington for the trip over the lake, which

PROMENADERS AT THE LAWN

The Charlestown club gave a lawn party last evening, and it was a scene of illuminated splendor such as the oldest inhabitant could not remember having seen before.

It was original and unique, and it took place in the garden of the clubhouse on High st, and within the shadow of Bunker Hill monument, and it was an extraordinarily delightful experience for the 500 men and women who participated in the festivities, for many reasons.

In the first place, the lawn on which it was held is one of the finest possessed by any club in the whole United States, embracing half an acre of sod as soft and as rich in color as velvet.

Its beauties were enhanced by 500 Chinese lanterns of various tints and fantastic shapes, and by as many more incandescent electric bulbs of all the various colors known to the electrician's art. The lanterns were festooned all along the fences, the roofs and the windows of the surrounding buildings, and a temporary pagoda, erected over the garden fountain was likewise covered with them.

On one side of the clubhouse was a representation of Bunker Hill monument in electric bulbs, while on the other side, which presented an unbroken surface of 2500 square feet of rich green ivy, was the sentiment, "Charlestown club—Welcome," in dazzling letters of fire. The branches of trees about the grounds were also laden with brilliant electric bulbs, which glistened through the foliage like illuminated fruit.

The lawn, which has a steady, easy slope away from the street, formed a natural amphitheater, the guests sitting in chairs upon the higher portion, while the Salem cadet band was stationed in a hollow near the foot of the garden.

A sort of aurora-borealis-like haze hung over the garden, paling the big full moon and bathing the walls of the surrounding houses, the great flower beds and the hundreds of men and women in a soft, mellow flood of light charming beyond description, the quaint, old fashioned tower of a neighboring church rising out of a cluster of dark trees just beyond the garden and lending a beautiful oriental mosque-like effect to the prospective.

There was certainly nothing set about the way the club ran its pa for the general public had just abou much enjoyment from it as the gu themselves. The street was crowd if for a city fireworks exhibition, there was nothing in the world to p vent anyone from seeing and hear everything that took place.

Small boys and girls, too, swarm along the railing of the iron fence near that they could have plucked flowers from the bonnets of the wo guests had they chosen, and yet th was not the slightest attempt at ann ance or any demonstrations of bad m ners, which is certainly greatly to credit of the exuberant youth of Char town.

From 8 to 10 the band played in garden, so admirably that nearly ev number was warmly applauded. W they were not playing there was da ing in the hilliard hall, to the acc paniment of an orchestra.

Several negro melodies were fir sung by an impromptu chorus made of these members of the club: Cha Shackford, Charles Cobb, Walter P cott, J. Frank Williams, Frank H. bie, R. S. Carven, W. F. Grieves, L. Marston and Howard W. Morse.

Several character songs in the sh of solos were also sung by A. W. T pan, R. S. Carven, Charles Shack and J. Frank Williams, the acc panist being Frank H. Robie.

So admirable an entertainment w rante the publication of the names those comprising the various com tees in charge. They were: House reception, Pres F. A. Downing, Dr E Robbins, Hon E. L. Pilsbury, W. Fitzgerald, Charles C. Caldwell, Geo F. Chapin, B. F. Stacey; decorations R. Tackaberry, L. H. Myrick, Frank Black, Charles W. Cobb; music, J. Fr Williams chairman, F. H. Robie, R Carven, W. C. Prescott, C. B. Ho Charles Shackford, James F. Ginn; d cing, A. V. Lincoln chairman, A. Toppan, L. W Marston; subscription R. Tackaberry, John H. Gibbs tr Frank P. Black sec.

These are some of the people who w present:

Mr G W Brown	Rep J J McCarthy
Mr Chas L Power	Mrs E D Robbins
Miss Edith Castle	Miss Marion Robbin
Miss L T Rohm	Mr Elliot B Robbins
Mr & Mrs G H Morrill	Mr H H Robbins
Miss Nellie Godbold	Mr & Mrs F T Barr

LANCASTER COMING TO BOSTON.

Old Wooden Steamer, Once the Pride of the Navy, Will Leave Montevideo About Sept 10.

NEW YORK, Sept 8—The orders to U S S Lancaster now at Montevideo, Uruguay, direct that vessel to proceed to Boston, Mass. The Lancaster will leave Montevideo not later than Sept 10.

The Lancaster, on arriving at Boston, will transfer all her crew to the receiving ship at Boston navy yard. Those bluejackets who desire to reenlist will be permitted to use the Wabash for a home for three months. At the expiration of that period the men will be available for sea-going ships. During the three-months' lay-off they will be on the full pay of their ratings.

It has been decided to take all the stores out of the Lancaster and place them in the sheds of the Boston yard. The vessel's present battery will also be placed in that yard.

The navy department has had in mind using the Lancaster up as a [illegible]

NAVAL STATION PURCHASED.

Germany Said to Have Acquired a H bor Whence Foo Chow, One of Tr Ports, May Be Watched.

BERLIN, Sept 8—The Frankfort Z ung's New York correspondent says t Germany has purchased the harbor Tung Yung Row, near Foo Chow, f naval station.

CROKER'S BUSY DAY.

Succeeds in Being Noncommittal C cerning His Purpose to Run for Mayoralty.

NEW YORK, Sept 8—Mr Croker in a busy day today. The day began fore 7 o'clock in the morning. In course of time he reached his offi 111 Broadway, and thereafter there stream of political callers.

104

890302006

The Emma Goldman Papers

[Excerpt from Lecture] Advised Strenuous Measures / Emma Goldman.— p. 6 ; 43 cm. In The Boston Daily Globe. —(Sept. 13, 1897).

Obtained from the Cornell University Libraries and Archives.

an.
tory ceremonies began filing out of the sanc-
Patrick Lyons of St
Brighton, cross bearer;
n, a seminarian from urifer, and acolytes of ctuary escorting the shop Williams.
moved down the broad urch, the archbishop
water on either side,
hanted the psalms.
filed outside the
for walls being blessed the archbishop, and g inside, the interior
nce were also blessed dedicatory exercises on of the solemn high

S. Cullen, pastor of rch, Watertown, was
Rev Richard J. Quin-
Mary's church, Hollis-
M. F. Delaney, pastor
Natick, sub deacon,
Sullivan of the church
eart, Lynn, master of

ting priests who occu-sanctuary were: Rev
t of St John Baptist J Keegan, pastor of
h, Woburn; P. H. Cal-
St John's, Newton Low-
Nilan, P R, of St Jo-
; James T. Canavan of
d; E. J. Fagan, assist-
's, Natick; John Don-church of the Sacred tick; Thomas B. Low-urch of the Immaculate riboro; T. F. Cusick, ichael's, Hudson; J. C.
St. Joseph's, Lynn; Rev
an, pastor of St Au-Boston; John Flatley,
r's, Cambridge; Fr Kil-
n's, Boston; T. J. Dan-
's, Newton Upper Falls;
tor of St Columbkille's, Jacques, pastor of St
hituate; P. J. Supplis, er's, Cambridge; James
f St Francis de Sales, ames Gilfeather of the
dy of Perpetual Help, ). Colbert, pastor of the
n. the Evangelist, Hop-Sullivan of the Immac-
n church of Mariboro;
of Sacred Heart church,
Redican of Leicester, son, pastor of Gate of South Boston; James J. of St Patrick's, Water-
illiher, pastor of St Jo-
; John H. O'Brien of n church, South Boston;
Guigan of All Saints'
y; M. J. Doody of the
he Holy Cross, Boston;
Brockton, D. J. O'Farrel
's, Boston; Christopher
r of St Joseph's, Somer-Carthy of Sacred Heart oston; John P. Crowe of aynard.

as of a high order and y the united choirs of St
St Bridget's churches, us of 50 voices, under the liss Minnie J. Sheahan, r of St Stephen's.
s the program:

.....Brosig
.....Battman in E
.....Battman in E
.....Battman in E
arts .....Holden
.....Battman in F
.....Stearns in G
.....Stearns in F
.....Anon
tion, Vivat Leone....Gounod

were Mrs D. A. Desmond Misses Annie Kilgariff, Gertrude Hines and Mar-
nd Messrs Arthur J. Mil-Bowan, Henry O'Donnell,
nd Thomas A. Coyne.
he singing of the Veni
homas I. Gasson, S J, prosophy at Boston college, pulpit and spoke in part on this splendid church,

ands of skilful workmen,
the rich colorings of the ndering over the solemn he triumphal anthems by nple has today been dedi-
ervice of the living God,
n much to make us grato-make us thoughtful and our hearts with gladness
ss blessings this hallowed ring.
uch in today's festival to gratitude, because this in its stateliness a fitting he loyal faith of the Cath-Framingham. It is the n you have made to your pledge of your devotion

ness and its grandeur this ear eloquent testimony to ns yet unborn of your gonour self-den'al.
re, this church is a monu-nergy, the zeal, the virtue have had charge of your fare, whose labors should by you in grateful remem-who should have a claim yers uttered within these this there is matter for de and there is reason
d give expression to the which all who strive to them free of duty, while those who remain at home, if they want the same things, pay the duty to the shopkeeper in the shape of high prices?

"Now, I am going to tell you a secret! Ever since my tariff bill went into effect I have had frequently recurring twinges of conscience in regard to that $100 clause! I am not at all sure that it should have been inserted. In fact, I am convinced that the clause is unjust to those who stay at home.

"Take the poor sewing woman, for example. When she goes to the store to buy some of the things that her more fortunate countrywomen have been allowed to bring in free of duty under that clause, she pays her duty to the government uncomplainingly.

"The storekeeper has paid duty on the goods and he is charging her that much more for them. Now, will you tell me why we should let the woman who goes abroad bring in $100 worth of goods free of duty, while we compel the poor sewing woman to pay duty on every $100 worth of goods she buys? As I said before, I don't see that we can do anything but remove that clause."

Mr Dingley sat back in his chair and looked at me more in sorrow than in anger, while I looked back in amusement.

"And so," I said, "it is on the plan that 'from her that hath not, even that which she hath shall be taken away,' is it? Next winter, in congress, you will, perhaps, try to amend the law, trywomen. They will not always p... they will defy you!"

"Defy! How defy?"

"Why, I mean they will smuggle, in spite of the Dingley bill or the $100 clause or no clause at all. The American women will not be trifled with for long. They are organizing anti Dingley leagues all over New York. All the republican women are going to become democrats!"

"They may become democrats, but they won't become smugglers, I'm sure of that," replied Mr Dingley. "I have a higher opinion of the American women and of your sex in general than you seem to have. They will not be dishonest and smuggle—that is, the nice American woman won't. Even if they think I have done them a wrong, they won't sin against Uncle Sam!"

Mr Dingley, in conclusion, said: "The tariff law is creating general prosperity and the women share that prosperity. It makes the working girl's wages higher and gives her an opportunity to buy more clothes than she could last year. It opens the factories and gives work to the husbands and fathers of the American women. You see it does much for them. And the $100 clause which you find so hard has the effect only of keeping our rich people from buying their goods abroad instead of in America. It is the rich people who go abroad. When Mr Astor returned from abroad he brought 60 trunks, and should he not pay duty on them?"

acquit himself like a man in upholding his own integrity and in combatting for the faith he professes.

"Here will the struggles against wayward passion and misguided reason receive the food that nerves the arm for battle and strengthens the soul for victory.

"Here will the wanderer from God bury his burden of iniquity and hear those potent words of forgiveness that blot out the records of crime on the books of the recording angel.

"From here will God's minister journey to the bedside of the dying, to anoint them with the oil of courage and to strengthen them with celestial nourishment in preparation for the last pilgrimage of earthly life.

"Here will men of stanch virtue and maidens of peerless life plight the faith that welds two hearts into one and creates a bond so strong that the most powerful angel at God's throne is powerless to sever it.

"When the spirit has taken flight and sorrowing kinsmen bend low in agony over their departed, to this place will tender hands bring the beloved remains, and here will be performed the last office of Christian love, while fervent hands will be raised in prayer and priestly lips will intone that piercing cry, 'To them, O Lord, grant endless rest, and let eternal light break upon their path.'

"This church will also be an inestimable boon to the town, for surely it is of advantage beyond description for a town to have within its gates a center of intellectual and of spiritual life. Sunday after Sunday in the ever returning circle of the year learned men will discourse to you of the truths which we crave to know.

"It will be a center of spiritual life—of that higher life that directs to good ends the mighty forces within us so strongly drawn to the pleasure of the senses, so easily allured by what is degrading and debasing.

"Finally, this church must of necessity prove a blessing to the nation at large. For if we are to hold together in our present union, if we are to show to other nations the sublime spectacle of self-governing, leading the world in prosperity, contentment, material progress and in the observance of those laws which are engraven upon every man's conscience, then we must regard as national benefactors those who train our citizens in principles of reverence for order and submission to lawful authority.

"Blessed are they whose offerings have helped to build this house of God."

This afternoon at 3.45 high vespers were celebrated with the following musical program:

Psalms .....Gregorian
Laudate Dominum.....Lambillotte
Ave Verum .....Millard
Magnificat .....Peters
Salve Regina.....Stirr
O Salutaris.....Emerson
Tantum Ergo .....Rossi
Laudate Dominum.....Fiske Voluntary.

The sacrament of confirmation was afterward administered to about 300 postulants by Archbishop Williams.

WAS THROWN FROM BUGGY.

Peter Dolan Was Badly Bruised in a Runaway.

Peter Dolan was driving a horse attached to a buggy owned by Joseph J. Franey of 1209 Columbus av through Humboldt av at 8.30 last night, when the animal took fright and ran away. Dolan was thrown out and was badly bruised and shaken up.

The horse dashed through Humboldt av, Warren and Washington sts, and was caught on East Lenox st. The buggy was demolished.

All-Day Rally at Mt Olive Church.

An all-day rally was held yesterday in Mt Olive Baptist church in aid of the coming national convention of colored ADVISED STRENUOUS MEASURES.

Emma Goldmann Denounced Shooting of Miners and Advocated Resort to Arms to Obtain Rights.

Miss Emma Goldmann talked on "The Rights of the People" before 500 people in Phenix hall yesterday forenoon, and delivered a characteristic anarchistic address, which was liberally applauded.

She denounced the attack upon the striking miners at Hazleton by the deputy sheriffs, and condemned the social system, advising strenuous measures to put it down, and crying out for revenge.

"When I think of this latest legalized murder," she began, "it seems like a mockery to the dead miners today to talk and talk, when it is necessary to act. The workingmen were fired upon because they were human beings who wanted bread for their children and homes for their families. They have been kept starving by the authorities and then fired upon because they peaceably asked for bread.

"You do not have to be an anarchist. If you want bread you are an enemy to society and must be put down. The order to kill the workingmen was given because they asked peaceably for the necessaries of life. If such a thing is a crime against society then society should be attacked and put down.

"I feel that nothing short of action is to be done today. If I am not with the widows of those miners today extending my sympathy to them it is because I have not the money to pay the railroad kings to take me there.

"My friends, you have free speech just so long as you say what the authorities desire that you should say, and they determine what constitutes free speech. You have this same kind of free speech in darkest Russia, in Germany, or even under the sultan, just as in enlightened America, where men are shot down like dogs. But I can tell you if this had been done in Russia the sheriff would not have lived 24 hours. Laws here are made by the capitalists and monopolists and enforced in the interest of capitalists and monopolists, against the people.

"If those strikers had been Americans the sheriff would not have dared to fire upon them. But they were foreigners, and foreigners do not amount to anything. The foreigner is good enough to build your elegant houses and your roads, sew your clothes and do everything for your comfort, but he is not good enough to enjoy the advantages that belong to the heads of the government. If you want to get your rights you must go armed; you must meet your oppressors with the sword. If that sheriff had known those miners were armed he would not have dared to act as he did. He would have feared the consequences. But he knew they were unarmed. They were Hungarians and Poles, and no one knew or understood what they wanted or for what they were peaceably asking.

"It is time to act. I know how hard it is to arouse the Anglo-Saxon race. They are so phlegmatic, so cold, so slow to action. It is only when 100 of them are shot down that they will rise to defend themselves."

The greater part of Miss Goldmann's address was given to excoriations of the wealthy, the depicting of the attitude of the employer towards his workmen as a slave driver crushing a serf, and to a general denunciation of the laws and their enforcement. The militia, the police officers and every representative body charged with the enforcement of the statutes were the objects of her caustic criticism.

PLYMOUTH.

Last night policeman Manter arrested E. Jones at Ship pond and brought him in the Plymouth station house. There

Evelyn's whereabouts ... mored that she was seen in Natick, but her brother visited that place yesterday, and outside of the fact that a person answering her description had been seen nothing further was learned.

Mrs Robinson is strongly of the opinion that Evelyn is at present in this city, and intends to leave no stone unturned in an endeavor to locate her.

She was greatly desirous of stating through the columns of The Globe that if her daughter will only communicate with her, either personally or by letter, as to her whereabouts she will visit her immediately and that all will be forgiven.

PARKER HAS A RECORD.

Boarding House Thief Has Operated in Various Cities, and is Eligible to a 25-Year Sentence.

Charles H. Parker, the thief who is now in custody charged with having robbed a score or more fashionable boarding houses in this city, has been identified as Frank Manning, one of the most successful sneak thieves known to the police of this country.

CHARLES H. PARKER, alias Frank Manning, Notorious Boarding House Thief.

Having served two terms of more than three years in prison, he is eligible to a 25-year sentence under the Massachusetts habitual criminal act.

Manning is an English thief. He was born 36 years ago and has been in this country at least 16 years, and possibly longer. He has traveled under the names of Adams, Cross, Morrisson, Morris, Chatterton, Frank Evans and Harris. He has also posed as H. L. Osgood, editor of the Albany Argus.

He made his appearance in New York city in the spring of 1886, and went about from one to the other until he had lodged in every fashionable boarding house on 5th av. Sometimes he posed as an editor, at others as a student, and at others as a professional man. He would never engage lodgings in a house where there were children, giving as his reason that he had to sleep late and children disturbed him.

His operations were made usually while boarders were at breakfast or dinner. If the doors of the rooms were not open he opened them, always carrying with him a complete set of skeleton keys and saws, which always made access possible. In no case did he remain in a house more than 36 hours. Thousands of dollars' worth of property were stolen by him before the police of New York city apprehended him. On March 24, 1886, he was sentenced to eight years in Sing Sing.

On his release he operated in Baltimore, and was caught and sentenced to six years in prison, being released on Aug 12 last.

He arrived here several days after his release. What work he did here was done between Aug 17 and Sept 1, for it was on that latter date that he found himself in custody again. In that short period the police say he stole at least $5000 worth of property.

LEG FRACTURED, BODY BRUISED.

Michael Diviney Badly Injured in Runaway at Chestnut Hill.

NEWTON, Sept 12—On South st, Chestnut hill, near the Boston line, at 8 this evening, Michael Diviney and Thomas Gormally of Lake st, Brighton, were driving in the direction of their home, when the horse suddenly became unmanageable and ran away.

Mr Diviney, the owner of the horse, clung to the reins until the carriage was overturned. Both men were thrown out and the carriage was completely demolished.

Mr Diviney's right leg was fractured in three places and his body was terribly bruised. His companion sustained less serious injuries to the left leg and side.

105

881006007

The Emma Goldman Papers

[Summary of Lecture] Emma Goldman / Emma Goldman.— p. 324 ; 36 cm. In Lucifer, The Light-Bearer [Chicago]. —no. 680 (Oct. 13, 1897).

Permission to reproduce or quote in any form must be obtained from the State Historical Society of Wisconsin. Institutional Location: John R. Commons Papers.

LUCIFER, THE LIGHT-BEARER

M. HARMAN, EDITOR AND PUBLISHER.

Eastern Representative, E. C. Walker, 244 W. 143d st., N. Y.

European Represeatatives, Arthur Wastall, Cranbrook House, High Road, Chiswick, Londou. William Gilmour, 73 Cedar st., Glasgow, Scotland.

Our Name.

"LUCIFER: The planet Venus; so-called from its brightness."—Webster's Dictionary.

The name LUCIFER means LIGHT-BRINGING or LIGHT-BEARING and the paper that has adopted this name stands

For Light against Darkness—
For Reason against Superstition;
For Science against Tradition—
For Investigation and Enlightenment against Credulity and Ignorance—
For Liberty against Slavery—
For Justice against Privilege.

LUCIFER'S specialty is Sexology, or Sexologic Science, believing this to be the Most Important of all Sciences, because Most Intimately Connected with the origin or Inception of Life, when Character, for Good or Ill, for Strength or Weakness, for Happiness or Misery, for Success or Failure, is stamped upon Each Individual.

Published weekly. One dollar per year. Three months for twenty-five cents. Foreign subscribers will please add the postage to their respective countries.

Make all orders payable to Moses Harman, 1301 W. Congress St., Chicago, Ill.

LUCIFER CIRCLE will meet at 1304 Congress St., Thursday evening, Oct. 14. The well-known phrenologist, William Windsor, will address the meeting. Subject, "The Physical Basis of Love."

Emma Goldman.

Seating room at Lucifer Circle, Oct. 7, was again filled to overflowing to hear Emma Goldman give her views on the subject of "Free Love," or of freedom against slavery in the realm of the affections. Her discourse, as on the previous occasion, was a well-considered and strongly-worded protest against the rule of authority, or of man-made law, whether of church or state, in the sex life of human beings. As usual in our meetings the lecture was followed by discussion, several physicians and one lawyer taking part therein. Our limited space prevents further notice here. The following brief notes by Miss Goldman, herself, will give the reader some idea of the work in which she is engaged Her lectures are chiefly devoted to economic and governmental questions, and especially to the defense of the victims of unjust prosecution and imprisonment.

"Started on my tour the 2nd of September. Had four meetings in Providence and a conflict with the police authorities, but came out safely. Had two meetings in Boston. One in New Haven, Conn. One meeting in New York to protest against the Hazelton outrage. Four very successful meetings at Philadelphia. One near Pittsburg, at Monaca, Pa. Four meetings so far in Chicago and three more to address—besides the convention that I attended two days, but withdrew at the close of the second day because I came to the conclusion that the convention was only intended to serve a few petty political parties, but not the cause of the working class.

"The resolution that I introduced, and that according to my views was very tame, was tabled on account of its too radical utterances. This was sufficient proof for me that the delegates had no idea of the seriousness of the time, and after I had expounded my views and denounced the behavior of the delegates during the sessions, I withdrew, and with me many more of the radical element."

On next Wednesday evening, Oct. 13, a meeting will be held at Zepf's Hall, corner Des Plains and Lake streets, in the interest of the imprisoned editors of the "Firebrand,"—speakers, Emma Goldman, Max Baginsky, Lucy Parsons and M. Harman. From Chicago Miss Goldman will go to St. Louis, Kansas City, Denver, and perhaps to the Pacific coast

The Portland Outrage.

We had hoped, until too late for insertion in this week's issue, to receive more definite information in regard to the arrest and imprisonment of the editors and publishers of the "Firebrand," at Portland, Oregon, so that we could, with a better understanding of the facts, make an appeal to the friends of liberty and justice in behalf of these victims of church-state despotism—for such we are reasonably sure is the character of this prosecution.

If the information furnished by the report of the "Oregonian," from which report we quoted last week, be correct, then the prosecution is a persecution—a persecution for opinion's sake; neither more nor less. No crime is charged, the accusation being that certain articles published in the "Firebrand" are "obscene." "Obscenity," as every one knows, is a law-made offense, not a crime, in the nature of things. Obscenity means that which is offensive to "purity or chastity of mind." It depends then upon what is in the mind of the beholder or hearer, as to whether any object or word is obscene or not. There is no obscenity except to the mind that perceives it as such. Naturally, then, the more filthy the mind of the beholder or hearer, the more obscenity he will perceive. Evil to him who evil thinks. To the mind of the pure minded philosopher there is no such thing as obscenity, in the technical sense. Perversion, abnormality, there is in abundance, but the philosopher, the rightly instructed person, whether adult or child, views these as the physician views the signs or symptoms of disease, and is in no danger of being corrupted by them. The cure for abnormality is better education and better environment, not suppressive or repressive laws.

At our Lucifer circle, Oct. 7, Emma Goldman made a brief appeal in behalf of the imprisoned editors, which appeal brought four dollars in cash. And now, in addition, we send five dollars as the contribution of Lucifer's office. Lucifer is itself often on the ragged edge, financially,—as a result of too much McKinley prosperity,—but the publishers of the "Firebrand," and especially our old-time friend, A. J. Pope, helped to keep Lucifer afloat while its editor was in prison, and now justice demands that we do what we can to help them in like circumstances even though we must struggle harder, and economize still more closely to do this.

Money can be sent to A. J. Pope or to Henry Addis, Portland, Oregon. It is sincerely to be hoped that all friends of liberty and of human progress will help in this fight for freedom of press and of public mail. "An injury to one is the concern of all."

M. H.

Liberty the Means, not the End

Lucifer's management has often been criticized, sharply criticized, for devoting its space mainly to sexologic questions —to woman's emancipation from sex slavery and to discussion of "ideals" relating to sex. They say, "Fight for liberty, and all else will follow." "Given liberty, marriage will take care of itself." "The sex question is a matter of detail—a secondary or third rate question; industrial freedom, economic equity, is first in importance." "Let us work for liberty and not quarrel about chickens before they are hatched," etc., etc.

To these friendly critics I beg leave to make a brief reply:

First. Let me ask, What is liberty? and why do we want liberty? Is it a goddess to be worshiped? A master to be unquestioningly obeyed? Is it a good thing in itself considered? Is it an end or object to be desired as such? An object to fight for, to bleed and to die for?

To my thinking liberty is none of these. Liberty is a means to an end, not the end itself. Liberty is a matter of detail, not the main question. Liberty is not a good thing in or of itself, any more than knowledge is a good thing, in or of itself. Liberty is not a thing, at all!—not an entity at all. Liberty is simply a condition, a necessary condition, to or for growth, for development, for embodiment, for endowment, for differentiation or individualization of things—of entities or of realities.

The question, then, the "previous" question, is and must always be, "Why do we want liberty?" "What would we do with it?"—if we had it.

881020003

The Emma Goldman Papers

[Excerpt from Lecture] Anarchy Her Theme / Emma Goldman.– p. 22 ; 44 cm. In St. Louis Post-Dispatch. –(Oct. 17, 1897).

Obtained from the University of California, Berkeley. Institutional Location: Doe Library.

n business structure
nd built so as to cover on shows a sale of N n Sixteenth and Mary B. Heebe
ranty deed, for l of valuation on this y & Co.

ports sales as follows.

ine boulevard, new two-fourteen rooms, modern 48x263 feet, from Capt.
W. A. Rutter. Vice-ristopher Simson Archi-Foundry Co., for $17,500, for a home and will street, two-story eight-ise with hall, bath, etc.;

5,000, from W. A. Rutter ippi avenue, two-story rooms in flats of four h, gas, etc., from Joseph Culp; price $5,000.

ground on the south side ce, west of King's highand William Culp to o will improve same;
. Culp were represented & Co. ark avenue, two-story
house of seven rooms,
e, hot and cold water,
ery respect; lot 29½x125
$4,600 cash, from Joseph Study, who bought for a

Salena street, nice brick oms; lot 25x84 feet, from Texier; price $1,450. Mr.
same for a home.
Page avenue, nice new rick front house of nine bath, gas, hot and cold
modern in every respect;

of ground renting for $1,000 per year, for $30,000.

In part payment the grantors took a block of ground in the Mount Auburn addition having a frontage of 123 feet on the north side of North Market street and 122 feet on the south side of Garfield avenue, between Rodiamont avenue and the Suburban right-of-way, for $5,500.

The D. B. Brennan Real Estate Co. was represented in this transaction by J. Wallace Brennan, Secretary of the company, and Thomas Grace represented Mr. Schlueter.

Watkins & Waldeck.

This firm reports the following business during the past week:

Sold 4812, 4812A, 4814, 4814A Delmar boulevard, four 5-room flats on lot 60x145 to alley; each flat has all modern improvements, including hot and cold water, furnaces, etc., and are rented for $100 per month. The consideration was $11,000, from A. Meglitsch to Robert B. Snow, who purchased as investment. M. R. Collins, Jr., & Co. represented the purchasers.

Also lot on south side of Vernon avenue, 250 feet east of Walton, containing fifty feet front, from Levin H. Baker to A. Meglitsch. The consideration was $2,000.

They also report making $9,000 in loans of different amounts.

Love & Sons.

This firm reports the following sales for last week:

House 3123 Adams street, between Compton and Cardinal avenues, a six-room, brick, on a lot 25x140 feet, was sold for $2,500 cash, from William Lewis to C. Stephenson, who purchased for investment.

Also on Minerva avenue, south side, between Academy and Union avenues, a lot 94x190 feet, was sold for $40 per foot, or $3,760, from Mary Morrissey to William B. Sparrow, who will improve at once with dwellings to cost $15,000.

Also house 5079 Page avenue, between

ANARCHY HER THEME

EMMA GOLDMAN, LEADER OF THE REDS, DELIVERS HER FIRST ST. LOUIS LECTURE.

ASSASSIN GOLLI A MARTYR.

She Thinks All Rulers Should Be Removed, With the Exception of President McKinley.

Emma Goldman waved the red flag of anarchy yesterday afternoon for two hours in Harugari Hall at Tenth and Carr streets.

When she concluded damning governments in general and the United States Government in particular she had her uncle, Mr. Sendlein, who lives in St. Louis, pass the hat for a collection for Alexander Bergmann, who is now in the Pennsylvania State Prison for shooting H. C. Frick, the Pittsburg iron magnate, five years ago.

Miss Goldman's audience was more generous in applause of her declarations than in response to her calls for financial assistance. The collection netted $3.65.

The speech was delivered in German. She will speak this afternoon at 3 o'clock in Ohlman's Hall at Seventh and Arsenal streets, again using her native tongue. She is engaged to speak every evening this week, but the halls have not yet been selected. After Wednesday's speech she intends to deliver all her addresses in English.

Miss Goldman arrived in St. Louis yesterday morning. She is on a tour of agitation in the West and she may go as far as the Pacific Coast, preaching her creed. After a week in St. Louis she will go to Kansas City for a week, thence to Topeka, Kan., and then on to Denver, Colo.

During her stay in St. Louis Miss Goldman will visit her aunt, Mrs. Lena Sendlein, at 1722 Oregon avenue.

Miss Goldman said nothing in her speech Saturday afternoon that other anarchists have not said. She clothed her sentiments in well constructed sentences and put them forth with a peculiar magnetism, holding the attention of her audience every moment of the two hours. Nothing she said escaped notice. Nothing she said will soon be forgotten by those who crowded the hall to hear her. A convincing manner is one of Emma Goldman's strongest points. Her eloquence is of that crude but ever effective stamp which arouses the type of people from which she draws her following.

Once during her speech yesterday she was interrupted. A workingman in the rear of the hall spoke up when she was in the midst of a tirade against the United States Government.

"You speak of priests as leeches upon society," he shouted. "Do you not have leeches in your own ranks?"

The break in her impetuous delivery did not disconcert Emma Goldman. She looked at the speaker calmly and then lowering her voice, said:

"Oh, I suppose you mean Most. Well, we may have leeches among us, but for every one you show me among the anarchists I'll point out ten to you in the Social Democracy."

The mention of the Social Democracy suggested Eugene V. Debs to the queen of anarchy and she straightway branched off on her opinion of the bald-headed leader of the great strike of 1894.

"Debs is an ignorant fellow," she declared. "He is not a thinker. His ideas are all wrong. He believes in the ballot-box as the means for righting the condition of a down-trodden people. Bah! The ballot-box, indeed! If Debs had his way, he might banish certain of the plutocrats who now hold the whip over our people, but the same existing order of things would soon come about again.

"Burn your ballot-boxes. What we want is liberty, and we cannot have liberty and laws at the same time.

"We are coming nearer the crisis every day of our lives. Revolution is brewing surely and will burst upon us ere long. The people are coming to their senses at last. Well may the plutocrats tremble."

Turning from this subject, Miss Goldman

She told of his hardships in the Pennsylvania penitentiary and declared the treatment he received amounted to persecution.

The speaker explained the movement formulated by the anarchists to procure Bergmann's freedom. The would-be assassin is in prison for twenty-two years, five of which have been served. He was convicted upon five counts and sentenced upon each a certain number of years, making the aggregate twenty-two. This, she says, is illegal. An attorney has been engaged and he will soon bring the matter before the Pennsylvania Pardoning Board.

Miss Goldman was in good spirits when she concluded her talk. She stood upon the platform and held a reception, many of the COLORADO POTATOES.

Finest in the world. Nothing like them in the market.

GERBER FRUIT CO., SOLE AGENTS.,
910 and 912 N. THIRD ST.

THE GRAIN MARKETS.

BREAK IN THE DROUGHT DID NOT MAKE THE BEARS EAGER TO SELL.

THE WHEAT SUPPLY IS SHORT.

Farmers Who Are Holding On, However, May Lose Money by Their Caution.

The grain markets last week were dul and dragging, and the volumn of busines unsatisfactory. Trading was light and al most entirely of a scalping nature.

The breaking of the long drought, and th heavy increase in the world's visible sup ply of wheat, given by Bradstreet as 8,200, 000 bushels, rendered the bulls more cau tious, but on account of the comparativel light stocks, and the falling off in the loca receipts the bears were afraid to sell shor very extensively and kept close to cove After a break which was much smalle than was generally expected there was rally, and part of the loss was recovere Both sides lacked confidence, but while th market was narrow there were enough fluc tuations for a fair scalping business. Ou side orders were few.

Day after day the statement is made tha local stocks of wheat have all been ordere out, and yet there is only about 30,0 bushels less contract wheat in St. Lou elevators than there was Oct. 1 and th milling demand is daily growing lighter, the flour trade is practically at a standst both in regard to foreign and domest trade.

The output of flour from the mills of St Louis and vicinity for the week was 74,1 barrels, as compared with 63,900 barrels f the previous week and 86,000 barrels for t corresponding week last year.

The corn market is very dull and wea on account of the heavy stocks and th falling off in the cash demand, but th foreign markets are firm and the outlo is for better prices.

Oats have been dull and weak for se eral days and speculation is almost at standstill. The receipts continue hea and the cash demand is very light.

The situation when viewed from all star points does not appear nearly so strong it did a week ago and the cash demand daily growing less urgent, nothwithsta ing the falling off in the local receipts.

The export clearances continue heavy, b as the season advances it becomes mo apparent that a rigorous economy in t consumption of wheat is being practic both at home and abroad and althou stocks are apt to run low by the end the season, there will be a sufficient amou of wheat to meet all requirements in sp of the heavy shortage in the Europe

That this is realized by the trade is sho by the fact that May wheat has been s ling nearly 3 cents under December.

The extent to which the forced econo in the use of wheat is being practiced t season may be judged by the fact that, n withstanding a shortage in the Fre crop, which is variously estimated at fr 35,000,000 to 96,000,000 bushels, and smal shortages reported from several other co tries, the supplies of wheat in store in E rope on Oct. 1 were 400,000 bushels lar than they were on Oct. 1, 1896, while t aggregate supplies of wheat and flour the United States and Canada showed increase for the month of September o bels, as compared with the new Westminster Presbyterian Church, at the corner of Texas

RESBYTERIAN CHURCH.

s.
of the handsomest houses of worship in the southwestern part of ist of the large auditorium, Sunday-school room, and pastor's . Kitchen, toilet-rooms and pantries.
of granite, brick, stone and terra cotta, and it will be very hand-church, but Weber & Grable, who do a great deal of church build-building will be completed by Jan. 1.

o $4,300, from Robert Ful-la Chapman. Mrs. Chap-vestment.

ociation News.

cretary, reports that the
a regular monthly meetmpany has $1,300 surplus with the Union Trust were no applications for was passed raising the r cent to 7 per cent on ock, and notices to that o the stockholders that members would receive n their stock. This asso-s is now maturing in 100
a series will be opened ociation has over $100,000

Building and Loan Asso-its regular meeting Oct.
no applications for King's highway and Academy avenue, a nine-room stock brick, on a lot 25x143 feet, was sold for $4,300, from C. B. Stephenson to J. Lewis who purchased for a home.

J. H. Terry & Sons.

Sales reported by John H. Terry & Sons are as follows:

Eleonore J. Bayles sold to T. T. Lings the elegant twelve-room residence No. 4390 Lindell boulevard; lot 68x213; consideration $35,000.

T. T. Lings sold to Eleonore J. Bayles seven eight-room houses situated on the northwest corner of Delmar avenue and Sarah street; lot 73x145; consideration $45,000.

Mathews Realty Co.

The Mathews Realty Co. sold to Polk Brown, from Mrs. Elizabeth Clark, house No. 3528 Chestnut street, a three-story, twelve-room dwelling, for $10,000.

107

BEST COPY AVAILABLE

881020003

The Emma Goldman Papers

[Excerpt from Lecture] Anarchy Her Theme / Emma Goldman.— p. 22 ; 44 cm. In St. Louis Post-Dispatch. —(Oct. 17, 1897).

Obtained from the University of California, Berkeley. Institutional Location: Doe Library.

...street, nice brick ... lot 25x81 feet, from ... Texler; price $1,450. Mr. ... same for a home.

...Page avenue, nice new ... brick front house of nine ... bath, gas, hot and cold ... modern in every respect;

This firm reports the following sales for ...

...street, between Comp... avenues, a six-room brick, ... was sold for $2,500 cash, ... Louis to C. Stephenson, who ... investment.

Also on Minerva avenue, south side, between Academy and Union avenues, a lot 94x190 feet, was sold for $40 per foot, or $3,760, from Mary Morrissey to William B. Sparrow, who will improve at once with dwellings to cost $15,000.

Also house 5079 Page avenue, between ...

ESBYTERIAN CHURCH.

...e new Westminster Presbyterian Church, at the corner of Texas ...S,
...of the handsomest houses of worship in the southwestern part of ...
...st of the large auditorium, Sunday-school room, and pastor's ... kitchen, toilet-rooms and pantries.
... granite, brick, stone and terra cotta, and it will be very hand... church, but Weber & Grable, who do a great deal of church build... building will be completed by Jan. 1."

$4,500, from Robert Ful... Chapman. Mrs. Chap... sement.

ociation News.

...retary, reports that the ...g and Loan Associa... regular monthly meet... pany has $1,300 surplus ... with the Union Trust ...ere no applications for ...was passed raising the ...cent to 7 per cent on ...k, and notices to that ... the stockholders that ...mbers would receive 7 ... their stock. This asso... is now maturing in 109 ... series will be opened ...ation has over $100,000

...uilding and Loan Asso... regular meeting Oct. ...g no applications for ... the treasury was or... drawing members. One ... loans have been made ... It has five successful ...h shares of $50 each, ...$189). President Charles ...sociation is arranging ...ndike and will be away ...his association had a ...Inst., but the property ...y Insurance.

...iemenz, Jr.

...r., reports the follow...

...avenue, northeast cor... a new modern two... ...l-room brick dwelling, ...ed in hardwood, cab... ...t the floor bath-room, ...cellar, etc., lot, 37½x121. ...emenz, Jr., was sold to ...r $6,500.

...southwest corner Van... ..., 212½x124. Owned by ...as sold to the Argyle ...ny for $7,400. Messrs. ...n represented the pur...

...lot, 100x124. Owned by ...as sold to George Korte

...avenue, a new modern, ...m brick dwelling, re... ...ellaret, cemented cellar, ...wned by John G. Zim... C. Edward Bauer for

...emmelmann.

...and report the follow...

...northeast corner of ... Queen Anne

...Sendlein, who lives in St. Louis, pass the hat for a collection for Alexander Bergmann, who is now in the Pennsylvania State Prison for shooting H. C. Frick, the Pittsburg iron magnate, five years ago.

Miss Goldman's audience was more generous in applause of her declarations than in response to her calls for financial assistance. The collection netted $3.65.

The speech was delivered in German. She will speak this afternoon at 3 o'clock in Ohlman's Hall at Seventh and Arsenal streets, again using her native tongue. She is engaged to speak every evening this week, but the halls have not yet been selected. After Wednesday's speech she intends to deliver all her addresses in English.

Miss Goldman arrived in St. Louis yesterday morning. She is on a tour of agitation in the West and she may go as far as the Pacific Coast, preaching her creed. After a week in St. Louis she will go to Kansas City for a week, thence to Topeka, Kan., and then on to Denver, Colo.

During her stay in St. Louis Miss Goldman will visit her aunt, Mrs. Lena Sendlein, at 1722 Oregon avenue.

Miss Goldman said nothing in her speech Saturday afternoon that other anarchists have not said. She clothed her sentiments in well constructed sentences and put them forth with a peculiar magnetism, holding the attention of her audience every moment of the two hours. Nothing she said escaped notice. Nothing she said will soon be forgotten by those who crowded the hall to hear her. A convincing manner is one of Emma Goldman's strongest points. Her eloquence is of that crude but ever effective stamp which arouses the type of people from which she draws her following.

Once during her speech yesterday she was interrupted. A workingman in the rear of the hall spoke up when she was in the midst of a tyrade against the United States Government.

"You speak of priests as leeches upon society," he shouted. "Do you not have leeches in your own ranks?"

The break in her impetuous delivery did not disconcert Emma Goldman. She looked at the speaker calmly and then lowering her voice, said:

"Oh, I suppose you mean Most. Well, we may have leeches among us, but for every one you show me among the anarchists I'll point out ten to you in the Social Democracy."

The mention of the Social Democracy suggested Eugene V. Debs to the queen of anarchy and she straightway branched off on her opinion of the bald-headed leader of the great strike of 1894.

"Debs is an ignorant fellow," she declared. "He is not a thinker. His ideas are all wrong. He believes in the ballot-box as the means for righting the condition of a down-trodden people. Bah! The ballot-box, indeed! If Debs' had his way, he might banish certain of the plutocrats who now hold the whip over our people, but the same existing order of things would soon come about again.

"Burn your ballot-boxes. What we want is liberty, and we cannot have liberty and laws at the same time.

"We are coming nearer the crisis every day of our lives. Revolution is brewing surely and will burst upon us ere long. The people are coming to their senses at last. Well may the plutocrats tremble."

Turning from this subject, Miss Goldman took up the case of Alexander Bergman. She told of his hardships in the Pennsylvania penitentiary and declared the treatment he received amounted to persecution.

The speaker explained the movement formulated by the anarchists to procure Bergman's freedom. The would-be assassin is in prison for twenty-two years, five of which have been served. He was convicted upon five counts and sentenced upon each a certain number of years, making the aggregate twenty-two. This, she says, is illegal. An attorney has been engaged and he will soon bring the matter before the Pennsylvania Pardoning Board.

Miss Goldman was in good spirits when she concluded her talk. She stood upon the rostrum and held a reception, many of the men and women coming forward to congratulate her and express their approbation of all she had said.

Emma Goldman haranguing a lot of grizzly anarchists and Emma Goldman to-a-tele are two entirely different persons. Her manner is extremely gracious, and she is an exceptionally pleasing conversationalist. Occasionally, the innate vanity of woman will assert itself.

Miss Goldman shrugs her shoulders when she speaks of her year's imprisonment on Blackwell's Island for her incendiary speeches in New York City. She says her ideas are not changed, but all the same she is a little more guarded in her expressions. This was instanced in private conversation when she reiterated that Golli was quite right in "executing" Senor Canovas.

"Do you think Canovas should have been executed because he was Canovas or because he was the head of the Spanish Government," she was asked.

"Both," she promptly replied. "As Canovas, he entertained principles which stood in the way of progress, of liberty and of the enlightenment of the world. As the Primate of Spain he was in a position to put his ideas into effect."

"Then you favor the execution of all heads of governments?"

"Yes, if you please to put it that way."

"Do you think Mr. McKinley should be removed—or, as you call it, executed?"

"McKinley—pooh! He is only a tool, a mouthpiece for Mark Hanna. I don't consider McKinley."

THROWN FROM A HAY WAGON.

Ex-Judge Harturt of Black Jack Painfully Injured.

Ex-Judge Harturt of Black Jack, St. Louis County, was thrown from a hay wagon and painfully injured yesterday morning [illegible]

Farmers Who ... ever, May ... Their Co...

The grain markets last week ... and dragging, and the volume of ... unsatisfactory. Trading was ... most entirely of a scalping nature.

The breaking of the long drought, ... heavy increase in the world's visible supply of wheat, given by Bradstreet as ... 000 bushels, rendered the bulls more cautious, but on account of the comparatively light stocks, and the falling off in the local receipts the bears were afraid to sell short very extensively and kept close to cover. After a break which was much smaller than was generally expected there was a rally, and part of the loss was recovered. Both sides lacked confidence, but while the market was narrow there were enough fluctuations for a fair scalping business. Outside orders were few.

Day after day the statement is made that local stocks of wheat have all been ordered out, and yet there is only about 30,... bushels less contract wheat in St. Louis elevators than there was Oct. 1 and the milling demand is daily growing lighter, as the flour trade is practically at a standstill both in regard to foreign and domestic trade.

The output of flour from the mills of St. Louis and vicinity for the week was 74,10... barrels, as compared with 63,900 barrels for the previous week and 86,000 barrels for the corresponding week last year.

The corn market is very dull and weak on account of the heavy stocks and the falling off in the cash demand, but the foreign markets are firm and the outlook is for better prices.

Oats have been dull and weak for several days and speculation is almost at a standstill. The receipts continue heavy and the cash demand is very light.

The situation when viewed from all standpoints does not appear nearly so strong as it did a week ago and the cash demand is daily growing less urgent, notwithstanding the falling off in the local receipts.

The export clearances continue heavy, but as the season advances it becomes more apparent that a rigorous economy in the consumption of wheat is being practiced both at home and abroad and although stocks are apt to run low by the end of the season, there will be a sufficient amount of wheat to meet all requirements in spite of the heavy shortage in the European crops.

That this is realized by the trade is shown by the fact that May wheat has been selling nearly 3 cents under December.

The extent to which the forced economy in the use of wheat is being practiced this season may be judged by the fact that, notwithstanding a shortage in the French crop, which is variously estimated at from 35,000,000 to 95,000,000 bushels, and smaller shortages reported from several other countries, the supplies of wheat in store in Europe on Oct. 1 were 400,000 bushels larger than they were on Oct. 1, 1896, while the aggregate supplies of wheat and flour in the United States and Canada showed an increase for the month of September equal to 18,362,000 bushels, as compared with an increase equal to only 12,485,000 bushels during September, 1896, and the total supplies in all positions on Oct. 1 were only 1,200,00... bushels less than on Oct. 1, 1896.

The comparatively light farmers' deliveries will leave large stocks of wheat in the farm reserves, which are apt to come out at any time when the holders awake from their dream of "dollar and a quarter wheat."

The high prices at the beginning of the season and the confirmation of the reports of short crops in Europe have given the farmers an exaggerated idea of the value of wheat, and they have become very independent and prefer to hold their wheat rather than accept prevailing prices, but they will be very apt to repeat their former performance of holding at the top and selling at the bottom.

There have been sharp accumulations at the principal centers in this country of late and the European markets are far from satisfactory, responding much more readily to our declines than to our advances, and as the present rate of increase in the world's visible it will soon be larger than it was a year ago.

[illegible] but the fact that it is selling for less than half the price of wheat would seem to indicate that as yet there is no great scarcity of breadstuffs, to say nothing of the extremely low prices of corn.

The estimates of the exportable surplus of Argentine are gradually being enlarged and if present conditions continue the amount may yet reach the figures predicted in this column at the beginning of the season, 50,000,000 bushels.

Advices from India and Australia grow more encouraging as the season advances and it is now reasonably certain that both of these countries will have a fair amount for export. The farmers' deliveries of [illegible]

$4,300, from C. B. Stephenson to J. Lewis who purchased for a home.

J. H. Terry & Sons.

Sales reported by John H. Terry & Sons are as follows:

Eleonore J. Bayles sold to T. T. Lings the elegant twelve-room residence No. 4390 Lindell boulevard; lot 68x213; consideration $35,000.

T. T. Lings sold to Eleonore J. Bayles seven eight-room houses situated on the northwest corner of Delmar avenue and Sarah street; lot 73x145; consideration $45,000.

Mathews Realty Co.

The Mathews Realty Co. sold to Polk Brown, from Mrs. Elizabeth Clark, house No. 3528 Chestnut street, a three-story, twelve-room dwelling, for $10,000.

A CIRCULAR ABOUT CRIPPLES

An Alleged Meeting of the Brotherhood Called for Next Sunday.

"The National American Brotherhood of Cripples" is out in a circular announcing that a meeting of the organization will be held Sunday, Oct. 31, at headquarters, room 4, 511 Pine street, at 9 a. m., to "discuss matters of vital interest to the members."

The address given is a cork leg factory. The proprietor hadn't heard of the meeting yesterday and said he didn't see how the Brotherhood of Cripples could meet in his shop without his knowledge, as he carried the key himself.

The call for the meeting contains the startling assertion that: "One can hardly walk a block in a great city without encountering some poor fellow who has suffered the loss of one or both limbs soliciting alms."

The police seem to have overlooked this, for no one has been arrested in this city for chopping off the legs or arms of mendicants. Sometimes the brusque citizen "saws off" the beggar, but not literally.

The call is signed, "William R. Trower, President, and William Warner, Jr., Grand Chief and Legal Adviser of the National Brotherhood of Cripples."

These gentlemen spread a report several weeks ago that there would be a great convention of cripples in Grand Music Hall. Mayor Ziegenhein was asked to speak and he promised [illegible] He didn't deliver his [illegible] anybody to [illegible]

108

BEST COPY AVAILABLE

8811120008

The Emma Goldman Papers

[Interview] Police Prevent the Anarchist Meeting at the Grant Statue / Emma Goldman.– p. 10 ; 43 cm. In St. Louis Post-Dispatch. –(Oct. 20, 1897).

Obtained from the University of California, Berkeley. Institutional Location: Doe Library.

POLICE PREVENT THE ANARCHIST MEETING AT THE GRANT STATUE.

There Was a Clash, in Which Night Sticks Were Drawn, and for Two Hours the Crowd Was Kept Moving.

EMMA GOLDMAN DID NOT APPEAR.

She Says That She Will Willingly Go to Jail After an Address and Promises a Hot One for To-Night at Walhalla Hall.

St. Louis is not a healthy place for anarchists.

Instead of a meeting of the reds at Twelfth and Olive streets Tuesday evening, there was a meeting of the police; instead of Emma Goldman standing in the shadow of the Grant monument and delivering a harangue to "the masses," a blue-coat stood on the spot and all about him was vacancy, for his brother blue-coats chased away those who tried to assemble.

One was reminded of a woman "shooing" chickens from a flower bed. When two or three gathered together a Central District officer approached, swung both hands forward from his sides and said: "Move on, gentlemen! Move on!" They moved.

There was never so much movement at the corner of Twelfth and Olive streets. No one could even linger and gaze at the stars.

Assistant Chief Kiely was in command. As aids were Chief of Detectives Desmond and Capt. Michael O'Malley. The latter had twenty-five men of the Central District force under him and Desmond had nearly all his detectives on the spot. The uniformed men were posted at the corners and at intervals along the pavement and the detectives mingled with the moving crowd—for there was a crowd, though the component parts were never allowed to remain at one point more than half a minute.

Emma Goldman did not appear near the Grant Monument. Several local anarchists were on Twelfth street—moving up and down as were others. Two were overheard discussing the situation. One, evidently much disgusted at the miscarriage of the plans, bitterly denounced the police.

"You should not blame them," said his companion. "They are but hirelings and do as they are ordered. It is the men who give the orders with whom we have to combat. The policemen would be with us could they learn our principles. But our day will come."

Soon after 8 o'clock there was a diversion from the monotony, for even the kaleidoscopic action becomes monotonous after a time. A crowd of perhaps 500 ran west on Olive street. They saw four policemen hurry in that direction and those who had the bump of curiosity well developed followed. The policemen went as far as the Ex., then stopped and conferred. The crowd waited ten minutes, and as nothing happened, dispersed.

This was a maneuver ordered by Chief Kiely, who thought the crowd at the corners of Twelfth street was growing, and conceived the idea of a diversion.

At 8:30 o'clock there was a brief clash between the police and several hundred persons. It was caused by the ubiquitous "Gen." Frye of Coxey Army fame, who considered the time opportune for a speech. He walked near the Grant monument and began an address. From all points of the compass men rushed toward him. The blue coats massed under Chief Kiely, night sticks were drawn, a flying wedge was formed and a charge made. No one was hurt. A few shoves were given and the crowd was soon moving. The "General" disappeared.

At intervals during the evening a patrol wagon was driven up and down Twelfth street and the clanging gong sounded notes of warning.

Shortly before 9 o'clock several anarchists distributed hand-bills that announced Emma Goldman would speak at Walhalla Hall on Tenth street and Franklin avenue on "Why I Am an Anarchist and Communist."

It was 9:30 o'clock before the crowd left the place, but many police remained in the neighborhood until midnight.

Emma Goldman slept late Wednesday morning. At 9 o'clock a Post-Dispatch reporter, who called at 1728 Oregon avenue, the home of Anarchist Lingblom, was told Miss Goldman was still in bed, but would be down in [illegible]

"But I will have my say upon this subject at Walhalla Hall to-night."

Just then a woman called to see Miss Goldman. The anarchist politely excused herself by declaring women should always be before the men.

"But the Bible says men were made first and should have the preference," the reporter suggested.

"Huh! the Bible?" she snapped. "I don't believe one word there is in the Bible."

While the police kept the crowds clear near the Grant monument, the House of Delegates placed itself on record against the preaching of anarchy in St. Louis by Emma Goldman and others of her ilk.

A resolution was submitted by Mr. Burke (Dem.) of the Fourteenth Ward, but it was not passed until after a heated and in some respects ludicrous discussion, which brought out the fact that the "Reds" have more friends in public office than the good people of St. Louis have been able to find out heretofore. Even the Speaker of the House voted against the resolution, on the grounds that he "was not afraid of a woman."

There were twenty-five out of the twenty-eight members present, and the aye and no vote showed sixteen for and nine against the resolutions, which were as follows:

Whereas, A notorious Anarchist is visiting the city of St. Louis, with the avowed purpose of inculcating in the minds of the unthinking a contempt for law and the officers of the law; and

Whereas, Such teachings are un-American, unpatriotic and condemned by all good citizens; and

Whereas, This teacher of anarchy insists on haranguing the people on the public streets of the city, and the Mayor and police have forbidden such public gatherings, therefore be it

Resolved, That this House heartily approves the course of the Mayor and Police Department, as acting for the peace and honor of this city.

As Clerk George Martin uttered the last word of the resolution Madera of the Fifth Ward, who holds extreme socialistic views, jumped from his chair and shrieked:

"Mr. Speaker, I am surprised that any man in this House should present such an outrageous resolution as this. This is a free country, and if it is the purpose of this resolution to stifle free speech then we are not representing the people. We confess ourselves cowards when we say we are afraid of the 'small, weak voice' of a woman.

"This resolution has no place in this proceeding. It is the business of the Mayor and the police. If they are not afraid they can arrest this teacher of anarchy or anybody else that disturbs the peace. But I deny that she proposes to disturb the peace. She has opinions just as you and I have, and she is as much entitled to express them. The streets of this city belong to the people, and if they propose to gather at every street corner in the town to listen to public speeches it is their business and not ours. We have enough police power in this city to regulate such things. Let the Mayor and police attend to their business and we to ours. I move the resolution be laid on the table."

Mr. Burke said that he expected such an outburst from the Fifth Ward Delegate. He did not doubt he expressed his inmost convictions and that was just what he proposed the whole House should do.

"The question was whether the teaching of anarchy in all of its hideous disregard for law, order and peace, in St. Louis, should be condemned or not. If as the representatives of the people the House did not have the manhood and patriotism to speak out on the question, then St. Louis was to be pitied.

"That man," pointing his finger at Madera, continued Burke, "says this is none of our business, and still he prates about us representing the people. It is our business and if we do our duty to the people we will protect them from the dire consequences which this notorious woman and her kind would engulf them in.

"I repeat, that the issue here is: Does or does not this House indorse the preaching of anarchy on the public highways of this city."

Mr. Watson moved that the resolution be [illegible]

THE CORPULENT T[illegible]
Unknown Woman Risks a Water Lily V[illegible]

FOR AN INHERITANCE.

FOURTH TRIAL OF THE SUIT OF HOSPES AGAINST JOSEPH W. BRANCH.

WAS GUARDIAN, THEN TRUSTEE.

Charged That He Failed to Account for Alice Crooks' Money Left by Her Father.

The suit of Hospes vs. Branch is on trial in Division 4 of the Circuit Court before Judge Fisher for the fourth time. The suit forms the basis for three Supreme Court decisions and is peculiar in many respects.

Prior to 1875 Alice Crooks was a minor and received a legacy under her father's will. Joseph W. Branch, who was associated with Miss Crook's father in the firm of Branch, Crooks & Co., was appointed her guardian and gave bond as such, and received the legacy in April, 1875.

Alice Crooks attained her majority Feb. 25, 1882. Branch made a final settlement of his curatorship in the Probate Court July 19, 1884.

There was reported due his ward $19,832.15, which was ordered paid to the trustee of the ward when appointed. In January, 1886, Alice Crooks filed her petition in the Circuit Court, stating that Branch, as curator, was ready to pay the money over to the trustee, and asking that Branch be appointed trustee, to receive and hold the [illegible]

[illegible] for, received the re-

HE

POLI
Cl

HE

Mrs.

The equal room.
charg
Wals
The
the w young arms. street
her l chase street
To
of the
"At ago,"
and,
for h
"Bo
He c bed kicke

109

BEST COPY AVAILABLE

881020108

The Emma Goldman Papers

[Interview] Police Prevent the Anarchist Meeting at the Grant Statue / Emma Goldman.— p. 10 ; 43 cm. In St. Louis Post-Dispatch. —(Oct. 20, 1897).

Obtained from the University of California, Berkeley. Institutional Location: Doe Library.

crowd for there was a crowd, though the component parts were never allowed to remain at one point more than half a minute.

Emma Goldman did not appear near the Grant Monument. Several local anarchists were on Twelfth street—moving up and down as were others. Two were overheard discussing the situation. One, evidently much disgusted at the miscarriage of the plans, bitterly denounced the police.

"You should not blame them," said his companion. "They are but hirelings and do as they are ordered. It is the men who give the orders with whom we have to combat. The policemen would be with us could they learn our principles. But our day will come."

Soon after 8 o'clock there was a diversion from the monotony, for even the kaleidoscopic action becomes monotonous after a time. A crowd of perhaps 500 ran west on Olive street. They saw four policemen hurry in that direction and those who had the bump of curiosity well developed followed. The policemen went as far as the Ex., then stopped and conferred. The crowd waited ten minutes, and as nothing happened, dispersed.

This was a maneuver ordered by Chief Kiely, who thought the crowd at the corners of Twelfth street was growing, and conceived the idea of a diversion.

At 8:30 o'clock there was a brief clash between the police and several hundred persons. It was caused by the ubiquitous "Gen." Frye of Coxey Army fame, who considered the time opportune for a speech. He walked near the Grant monument and began an address. From all points of the compass men rushed toward him. The blue coats massed under Chief Kiely, night sticks were drawn, a flying wedge was formed and a charge made. No one was hurt. A few shoves were given and the crowd was soon moving. The "General" disappeared.

At intervals during the evening a patrol wagon was driven up and down Twelfth street and the clanging gong sounded notes of warning.

Shortly before 9 o'clock several anarchists distributed hand-bills that announced Emma Goldman would speak at Walhalla Hall on Tenth street and Franklin avenue on "Why I Am an Anarchist and Communist."

It was 9:30 o'clock before the crowd left the place, but many police remained in the neighborhood until midnight.

Emma Goldman slept late Wednesday morning. At 9 o'clock a Post-Dispatch reporter, who called at 1722 Oregon avenue, the home of August Sendlein, was told Miss Goldman was still in bed, but would be down in half an hour. The little anarchist was punctual. She wore a blue and white striped dressing sack, belted with a red ribbon over a dark woolen skirt. Her hair was brushed back, and her fair skin glowed under the vigorous rubbing it had received. She didn't look a bit dangerous or bloodthirsty, but in conversation her blue eyes have a way of viciously snapping and she grinds her teeth.

"The police," she began, "have made much ado about nothing.

"If Mr. Sendlein went to the Mayor and asked permission for me to speak last night he did so without my knowledge or consent, for I certainly had no intention of speaking there. What I have to say I will say at Walhalla Hall, Tenth and Franklin avenue, to-night.

"Those who know me know that if I had wanted to speak the policemen wouldn't have frightened me off. I am not that sort of a woman.

"Had I said I was going to speak no God nor devil could have stopped me, let alone a few minions of the law.

"What is the jail to me compared with my principles?

"What is my life itself, or the lives of any individual, compared to the great humanity saving cause in which we are interested? Nothing.

"No, I don't like jails, for I have had experience in them. When I go to jail, I want to go for something I have said, not for something a law hireling thinks I am going to say.

"When I have had my say, the seeds have been planted and I don't care what the police do to me, because good to the cause will come of my words.

"But no good can come of being arrested before I have said anything. Had I attempted to speak last night I would have been arrested before I could open my mouth. I can be a martyr for my principles, but those principles are not being helped if I have to go to jail before I can enunciate them.

"If I could do my cause any good, as I said before, heaven nor hell, if those things exist, could not stop me. I will be in St. Louis until Saturday, and will then continue my tour of agitation. I will make no open-air speeches here, because, as I said before, the police would arrest me. If they will promise to let me finish my speech I will address the people at the Grant statue and then cheerfully go to jail for it afterwards.

"What do I think of the Mayor forbidding me to speak? It's on a par with the injustice and oppression which make anarchists necessary. Where is the constitutional right of free speech? Under an oppressive system such as that how are we free agents?

---

and

Whereas, Such teachings are un-American, unpatriotic and condemned by all good citizens; and

Whereas, This teacher of anarchy insists on haranguing the people on the public streets of the city, and the Mayor and police have forbidden such public gatherings; therefore be it

Resolved, That this House heartily approves the course of the Mayor and Police Department, as acting for the peace and honor of this city.

As Clerk George Martin uttered the last word of the resolution Madera of the Fifth Ward, who holds extreme socialistic views, jumped from his chair and shrieked:

"Mr. Speaker, I am surprised that any man in this House should present such an outrageous resolution as this. This is a free country, and if it is the purpose of this resolution to stifle free speech then we are not representing the people. We confess ourselves cowards when we say we are afraid of the 'small, weak voice' of a woman.

"This resolution has no place in this proceeding. It is the business of the Mayor and the police. If they are not afraid they can arrest this teacher of anarchy or anybody else that disturbs the peace. But I deny that she proposes to disturb the peace. She has opinions just as you and I have, and she is as much entitled to express them. The streets of this city belong to the people, and if they propose to gather at every street corner in the town to listen to public speeches it is their business and not ours. We have enough police power in this city to regulate such things. Let the Mayor and police attend to their business and we to ours. I move the resolution be laid on the table."

Mr. Burke said that he expected such an outburst from the Fifth Ward Delegate. He did not doubt he expressed his inmost convictions and that was just what he proposed the whole House should do.

The question was whether the teaching of anarchy in all of its hideous disregard for law, order and peace, in St. Louis, should be condemned or not. If as the representatives of the people the House did not have the manhood and patriotism to speak out on the question, then St. Louis was to be pitied.

"That man," pointing his finger at Madera, continued Burke, "says this is none of our business, and still he prates about us representing the people. It is our business and if we do our duty to the people we will protect them from the dire consequences which this notorious woman and her kind would engulf them in.

"I repeat, that the issue here is: Does or does not this House indorse the preaching of anarchy on the public highways of this city."

Mr. Watson moved that the resolution be adopted.

Mr. Murrell seconded the motion of Madera to table.

Mr. Debrodt, supporting the resolution, said: "Is it possible that there are men in this House who have the effrontery to oppose a resolution of this kind. If there are we cannot come to a vote too soon. So the people may understand what manner of men they have sent here to make laws for them and protect the life and property of this great city.

"The Mayor and police could not have acted otherwise, and if they had I believe that an indignant people would have driven them from the places they fill.

"This woman, who the Mayor has refused to permit to stand on the street corners and curse and revile all law, all morals, and even civilization itself, is a dangerous character who has been in jail time and again for her efforts to stir up strife and bloodshed. She has been a prisoner in the Tombs and on Blackwell's Island. We want none such here, and the Mayor is right when he says she can't speak on the streets. There are plenty of halls; let her have one, and I will add that the police ought to be there to hear what she says."

Mr. Bersch said that he wanted it understood that he was in favor of upholding the Mayor's hands, but he did not think the House had anything to do with such a resolution, and he should vote against it.

Mr. Watson demanded a vote on his substitute, and Burke called for the ayes and noes.

When the roll was finished Speaker Lehmann rose and gravely said: "Gentlemen, I am not afraid of a woman. I don't see any use every time some official does something in this House, indorsing him. This resolution does not belong here. It is not our business to say whether people shall harangue on the streets or not, and I don't propose to get mixed up in it. I vote no."

The vote was as follows:

Ayes—Messrs. Burke, Coudrey, Debrodt, Decker, Hartmann, Henning, King, Pauley, Ritter, Robertson, Schuler, Sweeney, Wander, Watson, Weeke and Wittenberg.

Noes—Messrs. Bersch, Gutke, Helms, Hirth, Madera, Murrell, Schaefer, Willmore and Speaker Lehmann.

Delegate Schaefer, who entered as the roll was finished, was called, but said he did not know what the resolution was, or how to vote.

"Vote aye," called out Debrodt from across the House.

"How did you vote?" inquired Schaefer.

"I voted aye," replied Debrodt.

"Then I vote 'No'" responded Schaefer.

Helms, who had voted 'aye' changed his vote to 'no.'

THE [illegible]

Unknown Woman Ri[illegible]

FOR AN INHERITANCE.

FOURTH TRIAL OF THE SUIT OF HOSPES AGAINST JOSEPH W. BRANCH.

WAS GUARDIAN, THEN TRUSTEE.

Charged That He Failed to Account for Alice Crooks' Money Left by Her Father.

The suit of Hospes vs. Branch is on trial in Division 4 of the Circuit Court before Judge Fisher for the fourth time. The suit forms the basis for three Supreme Court decisions and is peculiar in many respects.

Prior to 1875 Alice Crooks was a minor and received a legacy under her father's will. Joseph W. Branch, who was associated with Miss Crook's father in the firm of Branch, Crooks & Co., was appointed her guardian and gave bond as such, and received the legacy in April, 1875.

Alice Crooks attained her majority Feb. 25, 1882. Branch made a final settlement of his curatorship in the Probate Court July 19, 1884.

There was reported due his ward $10,832.15 which was ordered paid to the trustee of the ward when appointed. In January, 1886, Alice Crooks filed her petition in the Circuit Court, stating that Branch, as curator, was ready to pay the money over to the trustee, and asking that Branch be appointed trustee, to receive and hold the money for her use.

Joseph Branch, as curator, received the receipt of Joseph Branch, trustee, for the sum named, and Joseph Branch, curator, was formally discharged from his curatorship.

The suit was filed against the sureties on the bond of Branch as curator, charging that he had converted the funds to his own use before he turned them over to himself as trustee. In two cases appealed to the Supreme Court it was charged Mr. Branch had put the money into his business before he took charge as trustee. In the last suit appealed it was charged that he had appropriated the funds after he became trustee.

Miss Crooks filed a suit to have Branch removed and Richard Hospes was appointed trustee in his place. He as trustee, sued Branch on his bond as trustee, and it is that suit that is now being tried over again in the Circuit Court.

OSCEOLA STREET INCIDENT.

Mrs. Graff and Mrs. Thomas Quarreled and Paid for It.

Mrs. Freda Graff, 3113 Osceola street, and Mrs. Mary Thomas and the latter's 8-year-old daughter, Lena, 3115 Osceola street, were in the Carondelet Police Court Wednesday morning on cross charges of disturbing the peace. The women were fined $5 each and the little girl was discharged.

The testimony showed that on Sept. 28 Lena made faces at Mrs. Graff. Mrs. Graff crossed over to the Thomas back yard and pulled Lena's ears. Then she went home and stood on her back porch to see if Lena would offend any more.

Lena told her mother what had happened and Mrs. Thomas took a position on her back porch. She looked across and saw Mrs. Graff. Then she called her "Rough on Rats," "Chicken Poisoner" and other names which Mrs. Graff did not like.

WEISMAN UNDER BOND AGAIN.

Finally Settled That Missouri Shall Try Him First.

At 2 o'clock Wednesday afternoon William Weisman, charged with burglary, was released from jail on a bond signed by C. H. Grote—the same surety who surrendered Weisman to the Sheriff a few days ago.

Weisman is also wanted by the Belleville authorities on the charge of taking stolen property into the State of Illinois. The [illegible] authority has been settled by Gov. Stephens, who has written a letter, saying that the Missouri courts must have the first stroke at the defendant.

Weisman's bondsman surrendered him pending settlement of the controversy between the two States.

Panic Stricken Children.

While a festival was in progress at St. Boniface's School Hall, Michigan avenue and Schirmer street, Tuesday afternoon, a draped chandelier caught fire. The children became panic-stricken and rushed from the hall, but none were injured.

Will Be Taken to the Asylum.

SAYS BREWER ROBBED HIM.

Michael Otley Wants a Man From Springfield Arrested.

Michael Otley called at police headquarters Wednesday and asked for the arrest of Tom Brewer, a gambler from Springfield, Ill. Otley says that he received a note Tuesday to go to Al Canty's saloon at Fourteenth and Pine streets and see Brewer on a matter of business.

He says that when he met Brewer [illegible]

HE SPOKE TO THEM.

Mayor Ziegenhein Addresses the Western Catholic Union.

John J. Starr and Herman Schumacher of the Western Catholic Union reception committee called on Mayor Ziegenhein Wednesday morning and invited him to address the Union, which is convention in Capital Hall, Ninth and Allen streets. The Mayor readily consented to do so, which accounted for his absence from the City Hall in the forenoon.

110

BEST COPY AVAILABLE

881020013

The Emma Goldman Papers

[Interview] What Is There in Anarchy for Woman? / Emma Goldman. — p. 9 ; 43 cm.
In St. Louis Post-Dispatch. — (Oct. 24, 1897).
Obtained from the University of California, Berkeley. Institutional Location: Doe Library.

PART TWO. SUNDAY MORNING

WHAT IS THERE IN AN

BY

"WHAT does anarchy hold out to me—a woman?"

"More to woman than to anyone else—everything which she has not—freedom and equality."

Quickly, earnestly Emma Goldman, the priestess of anarchy, exiled from Russia, feared by police, and now a guest of St. Louis Anarchists, gave this answer to my question.

I found her at No. 1722 Oregon avenue, an old-style two-story brick house, the home of a sympathizer—not a relative as has been stated.

I was received by a good-natured, portly German woman, and taken back to a typical German dining-room—everything clean and neat as soap and water could make them. After carefully dusting a chair for me with her apron, she took my name back to the bold little free-thinker. I was welcome. I found Emma Goldman sipping her coffee and partaking of bread and jelly, as her morning's repast. She was neatly clad in a percale shirt waist and skirt, with white collar and cuffs, her feet encased in a loose pair of cloth slippers. She doesn't look like a Russian Nihilist who will be sent to Siberia if she ever crosses the frontier of her native land.

"Do you believe in marriage?" I asked.

"I do not," answered the fair little Anarchist, as promptly as before. "I believe that when two people love each other that no judge, minister or court, or body of people, have anything to do with it. They themselves are the ones to determine the relations which they shall hold with one another. When that relation becomes irksome to either party, or one of the parties, then it can be as quickly terminated as it was formed."

Miss Goldman gave a little nod of her head to emphasize her words, and quite a pretty head it was, crowned with soft brown hair, combed with a bang and brushed to one side. Her eyes are the honest blue, her complexion clear as a white. Her nose though rather broad and of a Teutonic type, was well formed. She is short of stature, with a well-rounded figure. Her whole type is more German than Russian. The only serious physical failing that she has is in her eyes. She is so extremely near-sighted that with glasses she can scarcely distinguish print.

"The alliance should be formed," she continued, "not as it is now, to give the woman a support and home, but because the love is there, and that state of affairs can only be brought about by an internal revolution, in short, Anarchy."

She said this as calmly as though she had just expressed an ordinary every-day fact, but the glitter in her eyes showed the "internal revolutions" already at work in her busy brain.

"What does Anarchy promise woman?"

"It holds everything for woman—freedom, equality—everything that woman has not now."

"Isn't woman free?"

"Free! She is the slave of her husband and her children. She should take her part in the business world the same as the man; she should be his equal before the world, as she is in the reality. She is as capable as he, but when she labors she gets less wages. Why? Because she wears skirts instead of trousers."

"But what is to become of the ideal home life, and all that now surrounds the mother, according to a man's idea?"

"Ideal home life, indeed! The woman, instead of being the household queen, told about in story books, is the servant, the mistress, and the slave of both husband and children. She loses her own individuality entirely, even her name she is not allowed to keep. She is the mistress of John Brown or the mistress of Tom Jones; she is that and nothing else. That is the way I think of her."

Miss Goldman has a pleasant accent. She rolls her r's and changes her r's into v's and vice-versa, with a truly Russian pronunciation. She gesticulates a great deal. When she becomes excited her hands and feet and shoulders all help to illustrate her meanings.

"What would you do with the children of the Anarchistic era?"

"The children would be provided with common homes, big boarding schools, where they will be properly cared for and educated and in every way given as good, and in most cases better, care than they would re-

881020013

The Emma Goldman Papers

[Interview] What Is There in Anarchy for Woman? / Emma Goldman. — p. 9 ; 43 cm.
In St. Louis Post-Dispatch. —(Oct. 24, 1897).
Obtained from the University of California, Berkeley. Institutional Location: Doe Library.

SUNDAY MORNING—ST. LOUIS—OCTOBER 24, 1897.

ERE IN ANARCHY FOR W

BY EMMA GOLDMAN.

From photographs taken by the Sunday Post-Dispatch photographer for whom 881020013

The Emma Goldman Papers

[Interview] What Is There in Anarchy for Woman? / Emma Goldman. – p. 9 ; 43 cm.
In St. Louis Post-Dispatch. – (Oct. 24, 1897).
Obtained from the University of California, Berkeley. Institutional Location: Doe Library.

CTOBER 24, 1897. PAGES 9—16.

"Papa" Burkhart's View of Matrimony.

Remarkable Profile of Olive Street.

RCHY FOR WOMAN?

OLDMAN.

by the Sunday Post-Dispatch photographer for whom ceive in their own homes. Very few mothers know how to take proper care of their children, anyway. It is a science only a very few have learned."

"But the women that desire a home life and the care of their own children, the domestic woman, what of her?"

"Oh, of course, the women that desire could keep their children home and confine themselves as strictly to domestic duties as they desired. But it would give those women who desire something broader, a chance to attain any height they desired. With no poor, and no capitalists, and one common purse, this earth will afford the heaven that the Christians are looking for in another world."

She gazed contemplatively in the bottom of the empty coffee cup, as though she saw in imagination the ideal State, already an actuality.

"Who will take care of the children?" I asked, breaking in upon her reverie.

"Every one," she answered, "has tastes and qualifications suiting them to some occupation. I am a trained nurse. I like to care for the sick. So it will be with some women. They will want to care for and teach the children.

"Won't the children lose their love for their parents and feel the lack of their companionship?" A thought of the affectionate little darlings being relegated to a sort of an orphan asylum crossed my mind.

"The parents will have the same opportunities of gaining their confidences and affections as they have now. They can spend just as much time there as they please or have them with them just as often as desired. They will be the children of love—healthy, strong-minded—and not as now, in most cases, born of hate and domestic dissensions."

"What do you call love?"

"When a man or woman finds some quality or qualities in another that they admire and has an overweening desire to please that person, even to the sacrificing of personal feeling; when there is that subtle something drawing them together, that those who love recognise, and feel it in the inmost fiber of their being, then I call that love." She finished speaking and her face was suffused with a rosy blush.

"Can a person love more than one at a time?"

"I don't see why not—if they find the same lovable qualities in several persons. What should prevent one loving the same things in all of them?

"If we cease to love the man or woman and find some one else, as I said before, we talk it over together and quietly change the mode of living. The private affairs of the family need not then be talked over in the courts and become public property. No one can control the affections, therefore there should be no jealousies.

"Heartaches? Oh, yes," she said, sadly, "but not hatred because he or she has tired of the relations. The human race will always have heartaches as long as the heart beats in the breast.

"My religion," she laughingly repeated. "I was of the Hebrew faith when a girl—you know I am a Jewess—but now I am an atheist. No one has been able to prove either the inspiration of the Bible or the existence of a God to my satisfaction. I believe in no hereafter except the hereafter that is found by the physical matter existing in the human body. I think that lives again in some other form, and I don't think that anything once created ever is lost—it goes on and on in first once shape, then another. There is no such thing as a soul—it is all the physical matter."

Pretty Miss Goldman finished speaking, and a delicate flush mounted to her cheek as I asked her if she intended to marry.

"No; I don't believe in marriage for others, and I certainly should not preach one thing and practice another."

She sat in an easy attitude with one leg crossed over the other. She is in every sense a womanly looking woman, with masculine mind and courage.

She laughed as she said there were fifty police at her lecture on Wednesday night, and she added, "If there had of been a bomb thrown I would surely have been blamed for it."

BEST COPY AVAILABLE

881107000

The Emma Goldman Papers

[Summary of Lecture] "Reds" in a Calm / Emma Goldman. – p. 5 ; 43 cm. In The Chicago Tribune. –(Nov. 12, 1897).

Obtained from the University of California, Berkeley. Institutional Location: Doe Library.

"REDS" IN A CALM.

Their Celebration of "Martyr Day" a Tame Affair.

MRS. PARSONS IS STILL.

Police Injunction Has a Quieting Effect Upon Her.

RED FLAGS FILL THE HALL.

Emma Goldmann Makes the Usual Anarchistic Appeal.

WALDHEIM GRAVES DECORATED.

The "Reds" finished their celebration of "Martyr day" last night by a mass-meeting at the West Twelfth Street Turner Hall. It was ten years ago that the Anarchists expiated their conspiracy on the gallows. The announcement that these would be a program of unusual merit was sufficient to crowd the hall to the doors.

Everything went off quietly. Lucy Parsons did not speak, but she was there. She had evidently gotten her usual warning from the police in the person of Captain John Wheeler and a posse of plain clothes men.

The features of the evening's entertainment were a personal letter from Captain Black, who defended the Anarchists; an address by L. S. Oliver, a local "Red," and Miss Emma Goldman of New York, an imported specimen of the anti-law and order forces. Miss Goldmen gave capital an old-fashioned "roasting." Mr. Oliver bitterly arraigned the execution of the Anarchists, denouncing their trial and punishment as a crime against humanity.

Flags and Pictures in the Hall.

Five blood red flags adorned the hall, and the pictures of various slayers of foreign rulers adorned the platform. The allied German singing societies sang several songs and there was orchestral music.

A funeral march by the orchestra was the opening feature, and then Mrs. Nellie Quinn read the letter from Captain Black. The Captain said the time had gone by for him to discuss the trial, as his opinion was well known. He felt it appropriate to give some personal reminiscences of the men who perished on the gallows and he briefly talked of the last days of Spies, Parsons, Lingg, Fischer, and Engel, paying to each of them a tribute.

Captain Black said that the men were undoubtedly sincere whether their opinions were right or wrong. Personally they were men of fine character, and were willing to die for the cause. During the eulogy of Parsons Mrs. Parsons wept bitterly and retired from the stage.

L. S. Oliver said that the Anarchists died for the sake of humanity. He laid the blame of the haymarket massacre upon John Bonfield and the police. He went over the old story again, but insisted that the memory of these men would grow stronger each year, and that they still lived, though their voices had been stilled in death.

Emma Goldmann Speaks.

Emma Goldmann spoke in German. She is a strong and vigorous speaker. Irony, sarcasm, invective, and denunciation rolled in a steady volume from her lips. She spoke of the undying force of an idea. She said that while the so-called Anarchists were struggled to death, it was impossible to struggle their ideas, and these were constantly growing. She deplored the supineness of the laboring classes who were legitimately entitled to the riches of the earth, as they produced them.

She told them that these riches were theirs to take and the sooner they did so the sooner they would come into their own. As long as laboringmen begged for their rights, that long would they be oppressed. They must rise up in their might and manhood and take their rights by force. She "roasted" the Chicago police in regular "red" fashion, after which the meeting adjourned.

GARLANDS AT THE MONUMENT.

Flowers, Wreaths, and Eulogistic Words Placed Upon the Graves of the Anarchist Quintet.

A small group of men and women stood in silence before the Anarchists' monument in Waldheim Cemetery at noon yesterday. It was the committee appointed by representatives of thirty-five trades unions and workingmen's societies. There was no attempt to hold exercises of any sort. Flowers were placed at the foot of the monument and wreaths were laid at its base. The Economic Educational club of Milwaukee avenue and two or three trades unions were the only English speaking organizations represented.

The predominating color in the floral tributes was red, as usual. The position of honor was given to a standing piece fully seven feet high, which was presented by the Memorial committee. It sustained a floral representation of the scriptural "broken wheel" of white and red roses, the spokes being formed of the names of the five whose bodies lie there: August Spies, Albert R. Parsons, Louis Lingg, Adolph Fischer, and George Engel. The piece was dedicated to the "Labor Martyrs," the dates "November, 1887-1897" being woven in the foot rest.

The Englewood Turngemeinde sent a wreath of white roses, chrysanthemums, and [illegible] by a wreath of red roses, chrysan[illegible], and farns with its name in flowers [illegible] the center. Red streamers were in[illegible] "Derr Hass, der euch vernichten [illegible] or weihte euch der Unsterblichkeit." [illegible] dedication was to "Dem Opfern der [illegible]." A clock of white and pink [illegible] bore the legend, "Murdered, but not [illegible] was inscribed in German [illegible] "The German Painters' [illegible] of red [illegible] "Ideen [illegible]

IN DUMAS' GREAT DRAMA.

MODJESKA APPEARS IN "CAMILLE" AT THE GRAND OPERA-HOUSE.

Contrast of Her Portrayal of the Character with the Renditions of Davenport, Nethersole, and Duse—The Second Act—The Death Scene—Analysis of Portions of the Play—Joseph Haworth in the Role of Armand—The Company.

There have been many versions of "Camille" presented in Chicago in the last two seasons, both in French and English, but none of which could surpass the rendering given last night at the Grand Opera-House by Mme. Modjeska. Whenever Dumas' play is given by one of the three greatest actresses of the present time one is inclined to think that it is really a drama of great value.

Modjeska's reading of the character is like a musical poem perfectly played. There is not a nuance of expression which is overlooked, not a note which does not ring absolutely true. If the character is impossible or the whole play unnatural and sentimental, the fault is the author's. As far as interpretation can go the actress has said the last word.

Compared with Modjeska, the other actresses who have essayed the part in English are hopelessly inadequate. Miss Davenport is robust and blatant; Miss Nethersole is like a schoolgirl playing the courtesan. Neither of them is able to enlist the sympathies of the audience while yet retaining the marks of Camille's unfortunate position in the world.

Duse is probably the most pathetic Camille on the stage, but with Duse it is rather hard to remember that the heroine is not a pure woman.

Art of Modjeska.

Modjeska steers between the two extremes with a marvelous art that makes the character perfectly plausible and yet most engaging. She never leaves the audience in any doubt as to her social standing, but having once made that clear, she is, before everything else, a woman who loves and who has to suffer in consequence—always a pathetic figure either in real life or on the stage. Miss Nethersole has always insisted so much upon the vulgar side of the woman's nature that it is impossible to feel a very genuine sorrow for her unhappy end. But after all it is absurd to make the comparison.

Modjeska reached a height in the second act last night to which no woman upon the English speaking stage can hope to attain. That the illusion was not perfectly sustained was due to long waits and indifferent acting upon the part of the rest of the company. In any case, however, the second act is by far the best in the play when the actress is capable of doing it justice. It presents every opportunity for the most delicate exposition of character and hardly a line which is not perfectly natural.

The third act, especially at the end, is inclined to be foolish because the mechanical devices are so apparent. Indeed, it is hard to refrain from smiling when Armand walks about the sitting-room wringing his hands instead of starting out to look for Camille, as he certainly would have done in real life.

And then the fourth act is not only exceedingly melodramatic, but it is certain always to be spoiled by the bad acting of the minor characters. They are too unimportant to be intrusted to competent actors and actresses, and the result is a total absence of the necessary atmosphere. Besides it is very hard for any one but a Frenchman, and a Paul Bourget at that, to appreciate the dastardly conduct of Armand as the curtain falls. A man may grossly insult a woman upon the stage, but the playwright ought not to let it be understood that in so doing he is covering himself with glory.

The Death Scene.

With a bad third and an indifferent fourth act the ardor of the audience is likely to die down before the fifth act begins. For that reason the death scene is robbed of its effectiveness. It is a scene, however, which few people ever care to see twice unless they are very sentimentally inclined. Modjeska's reading of her part in the last act is exceptionally fine in its perfect simplicity and restraint. There is no long drawn out agony and no attempt to portray the horrors of the death chamber. She fails, perhaps, to convey any feeling of the dread of death which must surely come to most participators to such a scene; she inspires pity but not terror. Yet even that may commend itself to those who are afraid of ultra realism upon the stage.

Take it at its best, however, and the last act falls far short of the second from every point of view; and the second act so suits the talents of the actress that the climax is reached too soon. As soon as the curtain falls upon the union of Camille and her lover it is certain that there must be a reaction, and the reaction is so strong that the audience never quite recovers from it.

Mr. Joseph Haworth is a fairly good Armand. But he is much better in older parts than he is as the youthful lover. No one ever has played Armand to the satisfaction of any audience, unless it were a French one, because the character is so utterly distasteful to the Anglo-Saxon mind. At the end of the fourth act Mr. Haworth rose to the occasion, because he can act melodrama when he likes; but for the most part he was a very stilted kind of lover. The chief difficulty with the rest of the company seems to lie in their inability to recollect their lines.

GETS LESSONS FROM NORDICA.

Mr. Frantz Proschowsky Attracts the Prima Donna's Attention as a Tenor.

Mr. Frantz Proschowsky is a fortunate tenor. He is the only one to whom Mme. Nordica has given lessons in Chicago. It was in the first of these, given last winter, that she told him that he was a tenor and not a baritone, under which impression he had been previously studying. She also told him

Yesterday she heard him sing again and pronounced him ready to take a church position. She expressed, furthermore, great satisfaction in his progress, and, although she had passed the major part of the day in a dentist's chair and had a piano rehearsal for possible encores this afternoon in immediate prospect, not to mention the concert itself, the lesson she insisted upon.

"You know he is my pupil," she said. So everything stood still until Mr. Proschowsky sang.

Mme. Nordica is energetic about lesson giving, as she is about everything else. One [illegible] she would be seated in her chair, [illegible] in the middle of the floor, and the [illegible] on the piano stool playing an [illegible] from memory. As she [illegible] the room the long silk and lace [illegible] seated straight in the [illegible] rise upon the world every [illegible]

NAME R. T. LINCOLN.

Pullman Directors Choose Him to Act as President.

DEFER FORMAL ELECTION

Create an Executive Committee to Be in Charge.

PRESENT STATUS OF STOCK.

Robert T. Lincoln has been chosen to act as President of the Pullman Palace Car company until the election of a President can take place. The position he will hold is pro tempore only, and it is still uncertain who is to be the permanent successor to George M. Pullman.

Directors Marshall Field, J. W. Doane, Normen Williams, Henry C. Hulbert of New York, and Henry P. Reed of Boston, who included the whole Pullman directory with the exception of O. S. A. Sprague, who is in California, were present at the first meeting held since Mr. Pullman's death. It was at once decided to elect a successor to Mr. Pullman in the directory, and Robert T. Lincoln was so elected and summoned to the meeting.

Executive Committee Formed.

It was also decided to organize an Executive committee of three to have general administrative direction over the affairs of the company such as had previously been left to Mr. Pullman alone. Marshall Field, H. C. Hulbert, and Robert T. Lincoln were delegated to serve on this committee. By votes of Mr. Hulbert and Mr. Field, Mr. Lincoln, the only one of the three who at present could devote much time to the affairs of the company, was elected chairman of the committee. This will give him authority to sign the documents of the company and be its official head until a President is elected.

The directors decided that choice of a President be delayed until careful consideration could be given to the subject. It is possible that some railroad man may finally be elected to the position. It was recently stated that Mr. Lincoln had declared he would not accept a permanent election to the Presidency. It can be said authoritatively, however, that Mr. Lincoln never made the statement imputed to him.

Power in the Directory.

The constitution of the Pullman company vests practically all power in the directory. So great was the confidence and trust in the wisdom of Mr. Pullman that, while he was living, the directors left matters entirely to him, and never questioned his judgment. In the Executive committee created yesterday will now be vested the responsibilities which were assumed by Mr. Pullman. The general organization of the company will not, however, change, and as contracts with the railroads are on long time, nothing is liable to come up which will greatly affect the status of the company's business.

The prestige which Mr. Pullman's name gave to the company was, however, very great, and this loss has already proved serious as affecting the temper of investors and the value of the Pullman stock. On the Monday before Mr. Pullman died Pullman stock closed at 175½—representing a value of $35,000,000 on a capitalization of $30,000,000. Yesterday the stock closed at 152, which represents a value of $30,804,000—a net loss of $2,280,000. As nearly half of the Pullman stock is owned in trust for charitable and benevolent organizations, and is a favorite "widow's" investment stock, such a shrinkage in value is serious. The stock has always possessed previously a record for steadiness and non-fluctuating qualities.

Text of Resolutions.

The following resolutions were adopted by the Pullman company directors in memory of Mr. Pullman:

By a dispensation of divine providence the President of this company, George M. Pullman, has been suddenly called to his eternal home.

We feel it appropriate in place upon the records of the company, in our own behalf and that of the stockholders we represent, our appreciation of him as an officer and as a man, and a declaration of our sense of the irreparable loss to us and to the company.

The idea of the company and of the business it was created to perform was peculiarly and distinctively his. The success it has attained, both in the way of material benefit to its stockholders, and in ministering to the wants and comfort of the traveling public, has been due more to his genius, industry, and untiring devotion than to all other causes combined, during the thirty years of his uninterrupted service.

Personal Tributes of Directors.

It is for others to judge of the extent of the loss, great as we believe it to be, to the traveling public, to the railway systems with which he had established relations, to the people in whose interest he conceived the town that bears his name and to the city in which he lived, but to us as directors the close of this useful and honorable life has a significance far beyond the mere severance of official relations. It has not only withdrawn from the board a member whose experience, judgment, and fertility of resource it will be impossible to replace, but it has also bereaved us of a companion and dear friend whose loss will be a lifelong sorrow.

To put in permanent form our appreciation of the life and character of our lamented President; our profound sense of personal loss, and our sympathy for his bereaved family, it is ordered that this memorial be spread upon the records of the company, and that an engrossed copy of it be transmitted to Mrs. Pullman and her family.

BECKWITH STILL IN THE DARK.

New Husband of the Daughter of Mr. Lincoln Does Not Venture to Claim His Wife.

The whereabouts of Warren Beckwith, [illegible] daughter of Mr. Robert T. Lincoln last Wednesday, is still a matter of surmise merely. It is understood he is not at the residence of Mr. Lincoln, 60 Lake Shore drive, where his bride has remained since her return from Milwaukee after the hurried marriage ceremony; and Mr. Lincoln maintains that all reports of a prospective reconciliation are without foundation.

"I have nothing whatever to add to what has already been said," Mr. Lincoln said yesterday. "My daughter is at home. I have not seen the young man, and shall not extend my pardon to him."

The marriage ceremony in Milwaukee was performed by the Rev. Orlando P. Christian, a Methodist Episcopal minister. The couple first, however, went to the Pfister, where Beckwith registered as Warren Wallace. They were driven immediately afterwards to the residence of the Rev. Mr. Christian. Mrs. Christian and Mrs.

CALL FOR MORE WATER.

ILLINOIS CLUB TAKES ACTION IN REGARD TO THE MATTER.

Resolutions Are Adopted and a Committee of Fifty Appointed to Present Them to the Mayor and Other City Officials—West-Siders Pay Their Share of the Taxes, They Feel That They Have the Right to Demand Better Treatment.

The water supply for many parts of the West Side has for a long time been so insufficient that it has been practically impossible to obtain water for ordinary household purposes. The Illinois club, the leading organization of its kind on the West Side, has taken up the subject. At a special meeting of the club last evening a committee of fifty was appointed to present resolutions to the Mayor and other officials. The resolutions are as follows:

Whereas, For many months the water supply in the West Side has been so entirely inadequate that in many places it has often been impossible, especially in upper stories, to obtain sufficient water for ordinary household purposes, and

Whereas, This condition has become a serious menace not only to the comfort of our homes and health of our families but also to the business, welfare, and prosperity of our part of the city and of the West Side generally; therefore, be it

Resolved, That, speaking for the great West Side, we earnestly protest against the further continuance of this extremely unsanitary and most uncomfortable condition, and submit that, as residents of the West Side have always paid and now pay their just proportion of the water tax of our city, they are justly entitled to a service equal to that enjoyed by residents of the South and North Sides, and we respectfully call upon the Mayor, City Council, and officials responsible for the administration of our Water and Health departments to use every means in their power to correct or remove the evils complained of at the earliest date possible.

Resolved, That a committee of fifty be appointed, of which the President of this club shall be chairman, to present these resolutions to the Mayor, with such additional suggestions as they may consider proper, and that a copy thereof be forwarded to the City Clerk with a request that they be presented to the City Council as a petition or memorial on the subject.

The following committee was appointed to present the resolutions to the Mayor:

Henry H. Maxwell.	Frank Hayes.
General R. J. Smith.	W. H. Aisle.
Alson E. Clark.	John McLaren.
W. J. Wilson.	James Frake.
W. J. Chalmers.	H. A. Eckhart.
C. L. Rising.	Samuel Carson.
General Charles Fitz-Simons.	I. F. Pettibone.
Walter Shoemaker.	William J. Pope.
Dr. Homer M. Thomas.	James T. Rawleigh.
John A. King.	W. W. Norris.
E. Benning.	Francis A. Riddle.
Judge C. C. Kohlsaat.	Charles Shucksford.
W. S. Hegle.	E. B. Dobb.
J. F. Talbot.	H. M. Conger.
Harvey T. Weeks.	F. P. Potter.
Joseph Downey.	W. A. Wells.
George B. Swift.	H. M. Hooker.
A. H. McCourtie.	Benton F. Hales.
Robert L. Tatham.	N. C. McMillan.
C. H. Remeon.	D. J. Avery.
George Bickhoff Jr.	J. K. Stevens.
Dr. T. M. Brophy.	John C. Spry.
A. C. Harbrow.	Clayton Mark.
A. F. Barr.	Dr. Leonard St. John.
W. F. Elliott.	E. A. Hill.

CURFEW'S NOTE IS HEEDED.

Dreaded Sound of Alderman Stow's Zealous Bell Strikes Terror to Youthful Evanstonian Hearts.

Curfew rang for the second time under the new law in Evanston last night, and the small boys who happened to be out of doors when the first peal sounded hied themselves quickly to their homes. Not a child was discovered by the watchful policemen.

It appears that two of the policemen of the classic suburb are antagonistic to the Stow ordinance, either because it necessitates extra labor or because of their friendliness for the innocents of Evanston.

At any rate, the report is believed that certain bluecoats warned youngsters who were out to flee at the first sound of the bells.

ALD. LUDOLPH LAID TO REST.

After Funeral Services, Which City and County Officials Attend, Burial Is at Graceland.

Alderman Henry Ludolph was buried in Graceland Cemetery yesterday afternoon, exercises having been held at Undine hall, Ludolph's flat, 881 Milwaukee avenue, where the Rev. Gottlieb Lambrecht of St. Peter's German Lutheran Church officiated. At one end of the hall were the floral tributes. The active pallbearers were Alderman John Powers, Alderman John J. Coughlin, Alderman Conrad Kahler, Alderman Peter Kiolhasa, Alderman Charles W. Probst, Alderman W. A. Tuite, Alderman John J. Brennan, Alderman William T. Meypole. The honorary pallbearers were the other Aldermen.

G. BEHRING IN CUSTODY AGAIN.

Charged with Forcing His Way Into Mrs. G. M. Pullman's Home and Annoying Her.

Gustav Behring, who has been arrested several times for annoying the Pullman family, was arrested again by the Cottage Grove Avenue police yesterday on a similar charge.

Early this week an abusive note was received by Mrs. Pullman, in which Behring's claims were set forth rather forcibly. The matter was ignored by Mrs. Pullman, and on Wednesday she was startled by the appearance of Behring, who forced his way past the servant at the door and rushed into the presence of Mrs. Pullman, demanding a hearing.

Then he disappeared, but was arrested and will be tried today.

CASHIER READ IS PARDONED.

Governor Tanner Grants Request of Friends, Who Say Grief Unmanned the Prisoner.

Upon the recommendation of the State Board of Pardons Governor Tanner has pardoned George Read, who is now serving an eight months' sentence in the House of Correction at Chicago for embezzlement. He was sentenced at the July term of the Criminal Court of Cook County for embezzling $500 from the Unity company at Chicago while acting as bookkeper and cashier.

Read is 54 years old and the petition for pardon states that he was led to drinking by the news of the death of his wife in England and for a number of weeks before the offence was not responsible for his actions.

AIR LINE T[illegible]

St. Charles People [illegible] Elevate the [illegible]

OTHER ROADS [illegible]

Dooms Fatal Cro[illegible] teenth and [illegible]

TO BEGIN WORK [illegible]

The St. Charles Air L[illegible] elevated and the fatal [illegible] Fifteenth and Clark st[illegible] by next summer be a [illegible] is the chief victory for [illegible] ordinance, as the list o[illegible] Fifteenth street was one of [illegible] originally to securing [illegible] measure.

The four roads owni[illegible] line have squabbled fo[illegible] track elevation and [illegible] which cross the St. Cha[illegible] have refused to take [illegible] their lines at that point [illegible] people acted. The latt[illegible] action and the engineer[illegible] plans for the work.

Tangle of M[illegible]

The St. Charles cros[illegible] roads at Clark street a[illegible] trolley lines. It has be[illegible] a double deck elevati[illegible] being elevated above th[illegible] will be raised the requisite surface of the street. "[illegible] ple are to report within [illegible] plan they favor for el[illegible] and work will begin a[illegible] the spring.

The other roads at th[illegible] Fifteenth streets crossing [illegible] directly in the matter [illegible] ways declared they wo[illegible] work as soon as the [illegible] Charles made it possib[illegible] veys and plans they h[illegible] It is believed they wi[illegible] work as soon as it [illegible] Charles.

Dangers of th[illegible]

The crossing at Si[illegible] streets is the most d[illegible] Four or five trolley li[illegible] work of railroad track[illegible] almost constantly swit[illegible] Any number of fatal ac[illegible] there in years past, an[illegible] abolition of its dange[illegible] by the thousands who [illegible] every day.

The St. Charles cros[illegible] part of the city, running [illegible] the city to the neighb[illegible] street to the western [illegible] Wabash avenue and [illegible] blockades that ensue [illegible] thoroughfares are lim[illegible] frequently happen at b[illegible] many fatalities occur.

Four Roads [illegible]

The St. Charles is [illegible] the Burlington, Illinois [illegible] ern, and Michigan C[illegible] have had some differe[illegible] agreement in regard [illegible] and elevation has be[illegible] three years.

One obstacle in the [illegible] low structure of the [illegible] elevated road has rec[illegible] ing its track high e[illegible] St. Charles being elev[illegible]

Assistant Superinten[illegible] Illinois Central, who [illegible] and the Michigan C[illegible] said.

"The St. Charles w[illegible] in the spring. An ami[illegible] been agreed upon by [illegible] and our engineers [illegible] plans."

J. M. Whitman, who [illegible] western road at the r[illegible]

"The cost of the w[illegible] timated by the eng[illegible] back. Then the exp[illegible] among the four road[illegible]

CHICAGO'S FIR[illegible]

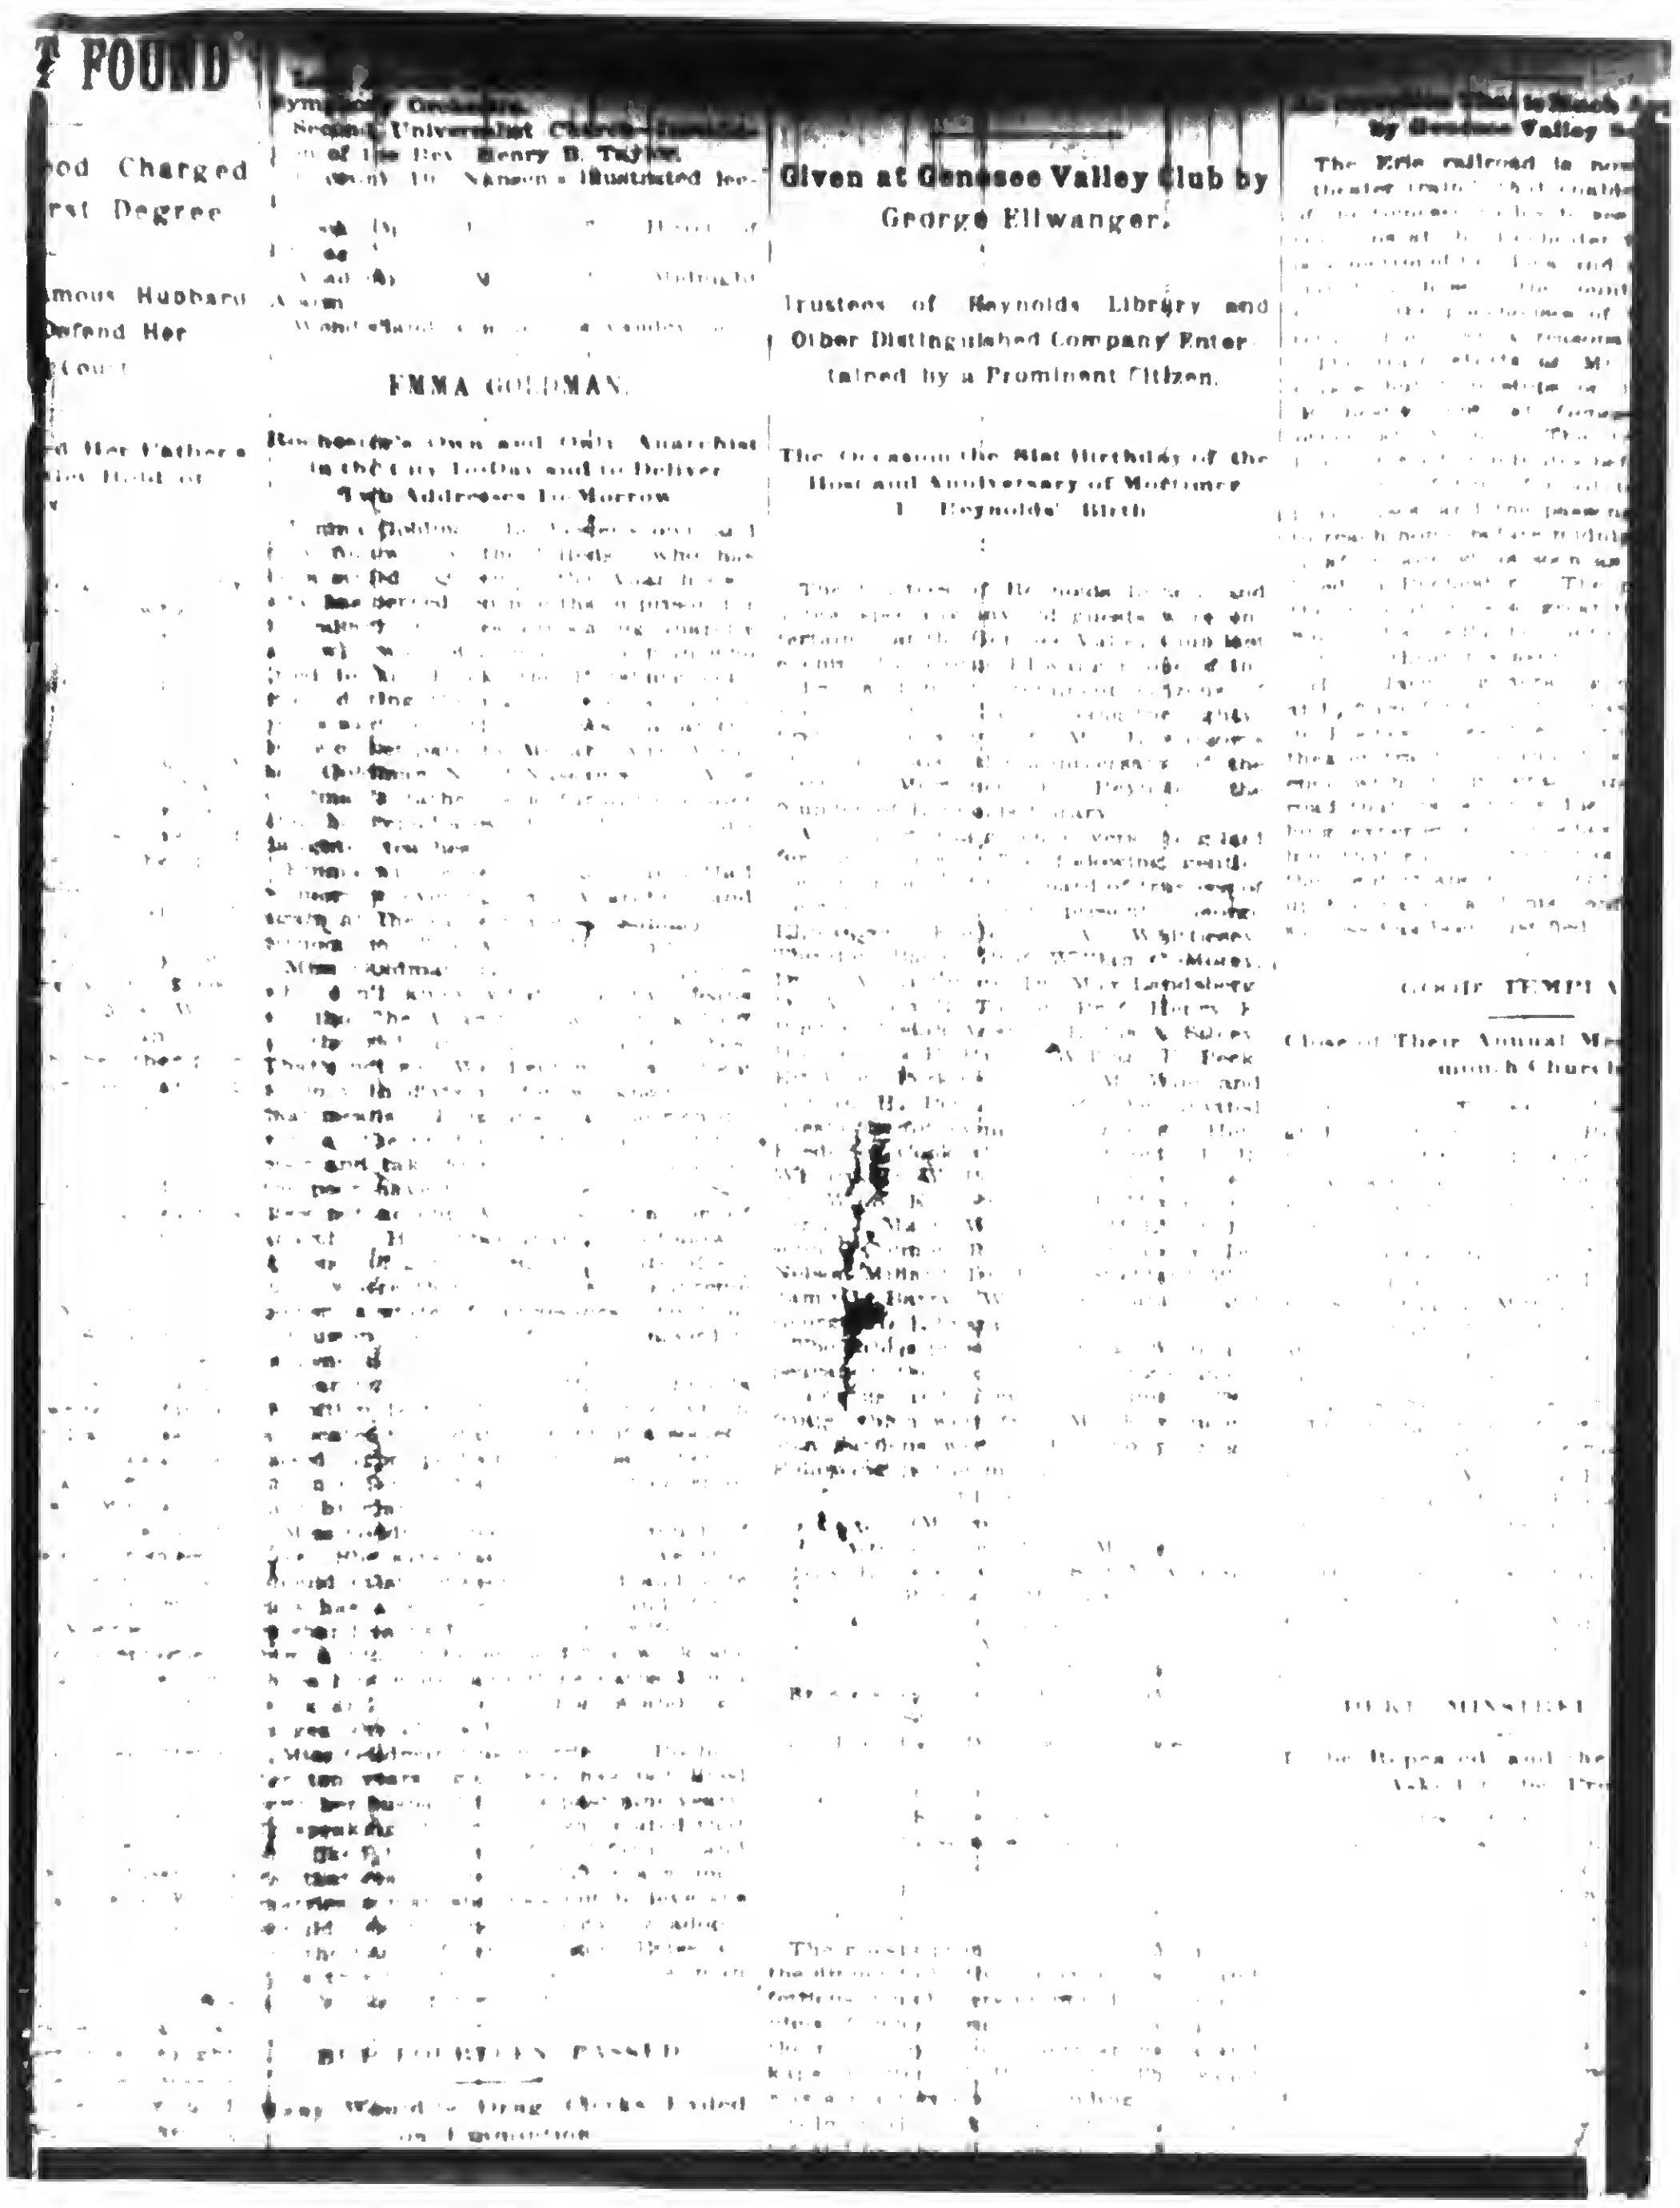
Not Enough Snow [illegible] but Plenty for [illegible] Weight.

It snowed yeste[illegible] enough to inspire ano[illegible] just, but enough to e[illegible] put a mark in their [illegible] the information for [illegible] grandchildren. The [illegible] few minutes, and wi[illegible] ing wind that blew th[illegible] coats and turned fa[illegible] ors.

The danger bulleti[illegible] reau fled up the out[illegible] the heavy sea up tho[illegible] coming fleet from [illegible] which they had run [illegible] night Forecaster Co[illegible] temperature, but cle[illegible] been almost no dama[illegible] of the last two days.

Just out—New kind [illegible] Home, 335 Wabash.

OFFICIAL DE[illegible]



THE FOLLOWING n[illegible] issued by the Health [illegible]
Anderson, Peter, age 31 [illegible]
Brocking, Alva, age 62, [illegible]
Brady, John, age 5, [illegible]
Cournright, Catherine, [illegible] Nov. 10.
Christensen, Magdalena, [illegible] Nov. 9.
Cohen, Bertha, age [illegible] Nov. 9.
Christensen, Christian, [illegible] 10.
Conery, Carrie, age [illegible]
Dingman, James R., [illegible]
Egan, Aloysius, age [illegible]
Florentine, Albert, age [illegible] 10.
Fitzhenry, Lizzie, age [illegible]
Goodrich, Catherine, [illegible]
Farrel, Ida C. R., age [illegible]
Grager, Adolph, age [illegible] 51, Nov. 8.
Hamerik, Katie, age [illegible]
Hallstrom, August, [illegible] Nov. 10.
L. Lillien, age [illegible]
[illegible], Bavaria, [illegible] Charles.

114

880701003

The Emma Goldman Papers

[Interview] Emma Goldman: Rochester's Own and Only Anarchist... / Emma Goldman.— p. 7 ; 29 cm. In The Rochester Union and Advertiser. —(Dec. 3, 1897).
Obtained from the Rochester Public Library, Rochester, NY.

FOUND

...od Charged
...rst Degree
...mous Hubbard
...efend Her

EMMA GOLDMAN.

...d Her Father's

Given at Genesee Valley Club by George Ellwanger.

Trustees of Reynolds Library and Other Distinguished Company Enter tained by a Prominent Citizen.

The Occasion the 81st Birthday of the Host and Anniversary of Mortimer
...Reynolds' Birth

...by Genesee Valley

The Erie railroad is now

...Close of Their Annual Me...
...mouth Church

BEST COPY AVAILABLE

880701005

The Emma Goldman Papers

[Summary of Lecture] The Red Flag Was Waved / Emma Goldman.— p. 6 ; 32 cm. In The Rochester Herald. —(Dec. 6, 1897).

Obtained from the Rochester Public Library, Rochester, NY.

6. THE ROC

HERALD "WANTS" BRING B

THE RED FLAG WAS WAVED

Emma Goldman Rants at Labor Lyceum.

Famous Anarchist Addresses Big Audience.

Rochester Listens to a World Notorious Woman.

Is Opposed to All Kinds of Government and Law.

She Also Delivered Address at Germania Hall.

It is not very often that an avowed Anarchist speaks from a public platform in Rochester. Many speakers may to a certain extent advance Anarchistic principles, but they do not have the temerity to announce or admit that they are Anarchists or that they are arguing for Anarchism. Thus when a woman, boldly declaring that she is an Anarchist, is announced to speak here it is natural to expect that she will be heard by a large audience.

Emma Goldman is probably one of the most notorious Anarchists in this country. Certainly she is the most notorious woman Anarchist. She is a Russian Jewess who came to this country twelve years ago, when admission to the country was much easier to obtain than it is now. For the past eight years she has been before the public as an agitator of Anarchy, demanding the overthrow of all government, the abolition of all laws, and urging in their place what she calls supreme liberty of man.

Yesterday afternoon Miss Goldmnn addressed the Labor Lyceum at its rooms on Rumford Street. This society is composed of Socialists. Their meetings are

LODGE OF SORROW

Annual Memorial Service of the Local Elks.

Held at Cook Opera House Yesterday Afternoon.

Eulogy Delivered by the Rev. Lyman Squires.

Rochester Lodge, 24, B. P. O. E., held its annual Lodge of Sorrow yesterday afternoon at Cook Opera House. It was one of the most impressive memorial services ever held by the organization in this city. Exalted Ruler Frederick Wurts presided, the prayer, memorial eulogy and benediction were delivered by the Rev. Lyman Squires, pastor of First Universalist Church and member of Jamestown Lodge, 283, B. P. O. E. The general eulogy was delivered by Exalted Ruler Frederick Wurts, who incidentally gave an interesting historical sketch of the organization.

The stage was tastefully decorated with palms and in the center were two empty chairs, festooned with smilax, in memory of the two departed members of the lodge, Thomas H. McGuire, who died December 27, 1896, and Dr. F. R. S. White, of Mount Morris, whose death occurred in August.

Music was furnished by a large orchestra under the direction of Edward Kuna and by a double male quartette consisting of J. W. Singleton, J. A. Ryan, George W. Walton, James C. Dillman, C. H. Kingsbury, E. Adreanson, John Louret and Herbert L. Tracey.

In the course of his delivery of the memorial eulogy the Rev. Mr. Squires said:

"To me the most impressive feature of this memorial service occurred when, in the calling of the roll, there came no response to two of the names. I wonder whether, behind the curtain of time somewhere, they were listening and heard their names called and knew they were remembered. It does our hearts good to remember these, our departed brethren; and as the service progresses our hearts and yours will be commemorating others who have gone from us.

"The brothers of this lodge have honored and commemorated these absent ones in other ways than by words of eulogy, but today we turn back the leaves of memory and call their names again and see again in thought the old familiar friends. And

WHAT IT STA

Central Labor U Platform of P

Municipal Owner lic Convenie

Federation Unions Boycot

At the weekly meetin Labor Union, held in th ing yesterday aft noon which was appointed s draft a constitution sub report. The measure wh tee had formulated was ing by Richard Horrigan and then adopted by a u

At the head of the new tears the following pla elites the municipal issu Central Labor Union is

"We demand the mun of street railways, tel electric light plants for tribution of power, h all municipal franchises operated by the munici terest of the people; eig for all employes engage directly on municipal wo work to be performed municipality without th contractors; payment o and equal pay to women performed with men rev fication of all municipal revision and equalizati public officials.

"The object of the Cen shall be to mould public of labor, to act as a bu in labor disputes, to dis all questions affecting th working people; to use e impress upon the vari labor the necessity for and maintenance of prot assist in the formation o societies where none ex honorable means to a which may arise betwe employes."

After the matter of th constitution had Michael Smith, the chai mittee which was recen

BEST COPY AVAILABLE

880701005

The Emma Goldman Papers

[Summary of Lecture] The Red Flag Was Waved / Emma Goldman. – p. 6 ; 32 cm. In The Rochester Herald. –(Dec. 6, 1897).

Obtained from the Rochester Public Library, Rochester, NY.

She Also Delivered [illegible] Germania Hall.

[illegible] often that an avowed [illegible] make from a public platform in Rochester. Many speakers may [illegible] Principles of Anarchist principles but they do not have the temerity [illegible] that they are Anarchists [illegible] that they are striving for Anarchism [illegible] Anarchist is [illegible] natural [illegible] a large audience.

Emma Goldman is perhaps one of the most notorious Anarchists in this country. Certainly she is the most notorious female Anarchist. She is a Russian Jewess who came to this country twelve years ago when a mere child. For the past eight years she has been before the public as an agitator of Anarchy, demanding the overthrow of all government, the abolition of all laws and urging in their place what she calls anarchy, the liberty of man.

Yesterday afternoon Miss Goldman addressed the Labor Lyceum at its rooms on Mumford Street. This society is composed of Socialists. Their meetings are usually well attended but yesterday's gathering was altogether too large for the hall. Emma Goldman's name is well known throughout the country among a certain class of people. She has a number of friends in this city, and her parents reside here. Under these circumstances it was natural to expect a large crowd and it was there.

The hall was uncomfortably packed, almost crowded to suffocation. Breathing room in the hall was hard to obtain, and a big crowd stood around the two doorways and extended out into the anteroom. It was not very long after the meeting opened that the air became foul, no one opened a window, and it was decidedly disagreeable to either sit or stand in the place. But there was no perceptible thinning out of the crowd until the last word had been spoken, and then Miss Goldman was besieged by a crowd who sought the privilege of shaking hands with her. A census of the nationalities of the persons composing the audience would prove very interesting.

Miss Goldman's subject was "The Aim of Humanity." This, she said, was to secure liberty and happiness. It was impossible to obtain either, she said, under the present condition of things. Some of the people of this country thought that they were enjoying liberty, but they were sadly mistaken. They were rapidly becoming absolutely subservient to the government and soon they would be so crushed and trampled upon that they wouldn't know what liberty meant.

Miss Goldman declared that all Government was "rotten." There was no such thing as good Government. The best Government that could be obtained would be nothing but legal thievery. Every public official, from President and Governor down, was an affliction on the mass of people, and was merely in office to execute oppressive and unjust laws. All laws were alike to Miss Goldman, and every law was bad.

The speaker asserted that the standing army of this country, the same as in other countries, was maintained not for protection against an outside enemy, but for the purpose of keeping in subjection [illegible]

[illegible] with palms and in the center were two empty chairs, festooned with smilax, in memory of the two departed members of the lodge, Thomas H. McGuire, who died [illegible] and Dr. [illegible] White of Mount Morris, whose death occurred in August. The [illegible] was furnished by a large orchestra under the direction of Edward Kortz and [illegible] a male quartette consisting of [illegible] Schaefer, [illegible] Ryan, George W. Wolf, [illegible] Hoffman, [illegible] Kingsbury and [illegible] Vaccaro. John Lester and Herbert L. Terry.

[illegible] of his delivery of the [illegible] eulogy the Rev. Mr. Maguire said:

To me the most impressive feature of [illegible] memorial service occurred when [illegible] ring of the roll there came no response to two of the names. I wonder whether behind the curtain of time somewhere they were listening and heard their names called and knew they were remembered. It does our hearts good to remember these our departed brethren, and as the years glide [illegible] our hearts and years will be [illegible] commemorating others who have gone from us.

The brethren of this lodge have honored and commemorated these absent ones in other ways than by words of eulogy, but today we turn back the leaves of memory and call their names again and see again in thought the old familiar friends. And though they do not answer we render once more our tribute of brotherly love. Truly if their faults were written on the sands, their virtues have been engraved on the tablets of love and memory.

This is one of the blessed things in human nature that we do love to commemorate the good and pleasant things that hearts can hold fast their friendship through absence and death, that we feel within the soul that it is not all of life to live here these few brief years of earth, nor all of death to die to a heap of dust in the grave.

Man is a being of large discourse looking before and after, he will not be satisfied with this little span of being. Pope has described him as a strange mixture. * * * "The glory, jest, and riddle of the world."

"Such is man. And yet this creature, glory, jest and riddle of the world, has a spirit in him which will not down. From earliest times he has hungered for immortality, and more than that he has believed in it. Strange forms this faith may have taken, but it has been the prompting of the heart which would not look upon the grave as the end of life but only an emphatic demand for its continuance.

"Hence in some lands, as in Egypt, the outgrowth of this faith is seen in those massive pyramids built to endure for countless ages, vast tombs in which the embalmed body might wait in security the return of the soul from its long journey to the unseen. In Peru the dead were buried sitting with faces to the east, watching for the rising sun. In China images and shrines where dwell ancestral spirits combine the living and the dead in every home. The Indians buried their dead with food and weapons to assist on the journey to the happy hunting grounds.

"It all indicates a soul in man aspiring to immortality.

"Our thought is not of pyramids of stone as after death abiding places, nor of food and weapons on our journey. We have come to think of man as a living soul [illegible] out of the life of the universe, these bodies but the garments of mortality woven in the looms of time, worn out by the passing years and to be thrown aside like cast off clothing when the day of life is done, the grave but a foot-scraper at the entrance to [illegible] this earth but one of myriad

[illegible] and the munic[illegible] of street railways, tele[illegible] electric light plants fu[illegible] tribution of power [illegible]

[illegible] with [illegible] [illegible] [illegible]

880701005

The Emma Goldman Papers

[Summary of Lecture] The Red Flag Was Waved / Emma Goldman.— p. 6 ; 32 cm. In The Rochester Herald. —(Dec. 6, 1897).

Obtained from the Rochester Public Library, Rochester, NY.

of the persons comp[illegible] would prove very interesting.

Miss Goldman's subject was "The Aim of Humanity." This she said was to [illegible] liberty and happiness. It was impossible to obtain either she said under the present condition of things. Some of the people of this country thought that they were enjoying liberty but they were sadly mistaken. They were rapidly becoming absolutely subservient to the government and soon they would be so enthralled and trampled upon that they wouldn't know what liberty meant.

Miss Goldman declared that no Government was 'rotten.' There was no such thing as good Government. The best Government that could be obtained would be nothing but legal thievery. Every public official from President and Governor down, was an affliction on the mass of people and was merely in office to execute oppressive and unjust laws. All laws were alike to Miss Goldman, and every law was bad.

The speaker asserted that the standing army of this country, the same as in other countries, was maintained not for protection against an outside enemy, but for the purpose of keeping in subjection and crushing the enemy on the inside—the people. Soldiers were not for the common people, they were for the protection of the wealthy, they were employed for the purpose of shooting down strikers.

In view of Miss Goldman's feelings towards Governments and law abiding peoples, it did not cause much surprise to hear her say that she was opposed to the enfranchisement of women. She declared that the ballot had done enough harm for men, and it would do just as much for women if they ever got the ballot. Now the women were only whipped by the men, but if they got the ballot they would be whipped by the Government the same as their husbands were.

It is not very surprising, either, to hear Miss Goldman announce that she does not believe in any kind of Christianity, not even in her own religion—the Jewish faith. Christianity seems to be opposed to her ideas of liberty, and so it must go.

At the conclusion of Miss Goldman's address a general discussion took place. The Socialists were in a majority and they took occasion to show wherein Socialism differs from Anarchism and how much better the former is than the latter.

Miss Goldman was given the privilege of closing the debate. She "roasted" all kinds of government and laws, including the government advocated by the Socialists. Miss Goldman said that it made no difference to her whether she was governed by one man or a thousand; all government was bad and against individual liberty. If the Social Democracy controlled the Government, it would only mean an enlargement of the governing power, and therefore it was bad.

Miss Goldman spoke on "Anarchy" at Germania Hall Saturday evening. The hall was packed to the doors. She made a strong plea to her hearers to break down the trammels of nationality and make common cause with the producing classes throughout the world in an effort to sweep away all Government and laws. "The welfare of the laboring people of Rochester depends on that of the laboring people throughout the world," she declared. "When you all unite in this great cause then you will be free."

CHIEF CLEARY BACK ON DUTY.

heart which would not look upon the grave as the end of life, but only an emphatic demand for its continuance.

[illegible] in some lands as in Egypt, the [illegible] of life [illegible] were built to last for ages, while [illegible] might wait [illegible] the [illegible] from the long journey to the [illegible]. Before the dead were placed within [illegible] to the west, where [illegible] the [illegible] Osiris, images of [illegible] shabtis who [illegible] ancestral spirits [illegible] between the living and the dead in every home. The Indians loaded their dead with food and weapons to assist on the journey to the happy hunting grounds.

It all indicates a soul in man aspiring to immortality.

"Our thought is not of pyramids of stone or after death abiding places, nor of food and weapons on our journey. We have come to think of man as a living soul, kindled out of the life of the universe, these bodies but the garments of mortality woven on the looms of time, worn out by the passing years and to be thrown aside like cast off clothing when the day of life is done, the grave but a foot-scraper at the entrance to elysium; this earth but one of myriad worlds fast bound by golden chains to the throne of God; yea rather this earth but one apartment in the many mansioned house, a nursery of spiritual children where the great father and mother God gives us our first lessons in divine things, and from which after all our childish faults and follies, after all our striving and stumbling we shall go forth to the large and real life of the universe, our home. We shall find the tomb not a narrow house fast locked upon us, but rather a covered way that leads to light.

"But if all worlds are one home of the soul, surely all life is of one divine pattern and that which we call the immortal is only the human written large. Perhaps the change which we call death is not so great as we sometimes imagine. Surely to live is the supreme fact in any world. To have a mind to see, a heart to feel must constitute the beauty and joy of being; and this we have here on earth.

"It should teach us to prize our possessions and opportunities. Already we are building our Kingdom of Heaven. Its foundations are laid in human joy and thought and service. Here we have the title page of a book that it will be given us to read in Heaven."

INTERPRES BOARD.

College Editors Organize and Get Ready For Business—Men Who Have Charge of Junior Year Book.

The delegates from the different fraternities who are to publish the junior year book have elected the following officers: Edward S. Atwood, President; Albert F. Dillman, Editor-in-Chief; Wilfrid J. Craig, Business Manager; A. [illegible] H. Izatel, Assistant Manager; James B. Forbes, Secretary; Clarence C. Baldwin, Associate Editor.

Work will be begun at once on the publication, as it is hoped to get it out earlier than usual. The Board of Editors promise something unique in the appearance of this year's Interpres.

SUNDAY SCHOOL OFFICERS

Second Reformed Church Sunday School has elected the following officers for the year: Peter Zeevald, Superintendent; William L. Nelson, Assistant

One of the delegates from [illegible] makers' Union called [illegible] fact that the Secretary [illegible] Union No. [illegible] of Syra[illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [

881006015

The Emma Goldman Papers

Various Voices / Emma Goldman.— pp. 423-4 ; 37 cm. In Lucifer, The Lightbearer [Chicago]. —no. 692 (Jan. 5, 1898).

Obtained from the Stanford University Libraries, Stanford University.

Thought is free of necessity. No one can fetter or bind it, though its utterance may be suppressed.

Love is equally free. You cannot love at will. But each loves as compelled or impelled by circumstances. It is quite time that the hyphenated word, free love, was cleansed of the impurities cast upon it by the ignorant and unthinking; and some more truthful and distinctive term used in place of it by varietists, and those who advocate and practice what is called illegitimate love unions.

While I claim to be a Dianite free lover, I abominate whiskey, dissipation and wrong-doing (see Northcote in No. 690 of Lucifer) as much as any bound lover could do.

I commend Mrs. Swaysgood's plea for more kindly feeling among our writers. Calling hard names and "sitting down upon" our brothers and sisters illy becomes true liberals. Sound and clear argument is the only road to success. Give your ideas in a plain, honest and fair setting and time will place truth upon its throne.

The wonder is always and always How there can be a mean man.

—Whitman.

[In theory Mrs. Slenker does not believe in "calling hard names and 'sitting down upon' our brothers and sisters." In practice, however, she would deny the designation of "free lover" to any person who assumes the right to love more than one person simultaneously. And even love relations which are exclusive are, in her estimation not to be called "free love" unions when they are "what is called illegitimate love unions." "Called" by whom? Who is to have authority to stigmatize any union as "illegitimate"? Or does Mrs. Slenker give the technical meaning to the term, and condemn all illegal unions? If not, what does she mean?

Certainly the "unfailing criterion" which Mrs. Slenker calls for in the opening of the article, is needed when her words are read. If we are to take words in their commonly accepted meaning, she thinks that "free love"—that is, what she calls "Dianite free love"—is pure and good; but that any love which desires manifestation other than Dianism should be denied freedom. We all know what whiskey is, and can understand what she means when she says she "abominates" it But what does she mean by "dissipation"? and what does she consider "wrong-doing"?

I have observed Mrs. Slenker's request to "see Northcote in Lucifer 690" and fail to see that he either advocates or condemns "whiskey, dissipation and wrong doing." He quotes H. L. Green's statements that free love leads to this trinity of evils; but he does not thereby adopt those assertions as his own. L. H.]

VARIOUS VOICES.

Mrs. C. Williams, Newport, Ky.:—Please find enclosed twenty-five cents for Lucifer. Sorry it is not more. Will send more as soon as I have it. It is worth its weight in gold—Lucifer I mean.

—

Wm. Humble, Weir City, Kan.:—I enclose two dollars,—one dollar and fifty cents for Lucifer, twenty five cents for "Helen Harlow's Vow," and twenty five cents for combination offer. I thank you for continuing paper to me, after time had expired. I am no writer but I think the work you are at is the greatest reform of this century.

—

Jennie Wade, Bradford, O.:—Enclosed find fifty cents for subscription to your valuable paper, Lucifer. You sent me a sample copy and I consider it a gem, more precious than diamonds to mothers. Could we only induce the masses to read and become enlightened this earth would become the paradise that they expect in the future.

—

J. G. Hunter, Sheridan, Wyo.:—Some one has kindly sent me three numbers of Lucifer. I am interested in the question of sexual freedom and do not want to study the question at my other person's expense; but am certainly greatly obliged to the party who sent me those copies, as I had made an effort to find out the address of Lucifer and failed. Enclosed please find one dollar and thirty cents for which please send Lucifer for one year; also your Combination Offer, and "Sexual Enslavement of Women."

—

Ira P. Holcomb, Jr., Dinuba, Calif.:—Enclosed find check for one dollar and seventy-five cents for which send me "The Adult" for one year, fifty cents; "Hilda's Home" (paper cover) fifty cents; "Fountain of Life," fifty cents; "Discussion of the Social Question," by Dr. Juliet H. Severance and David Jones, fifteen cents; "What the Young Need to Know," ten cents.

Either I am changing my views or else Lucifer is growing better and better all the time. These are surely questions of vital importance to all of us.

—

Samuel Ragendorf, Cincinnati, O.:—Many thanks for last article by Northcote, "Free Thought and Free Love." In my humble opinion it is one of the very best I have ever read. I notice Warren (city) has Lucifer on sale at his news stands. "Adult" (January issue) will cost more, just what I don't know. I enclose twenty cents for same. Will renew my subscription to Lucifer in a very few weeks.

[The price of the January "Adult" will be twenty cents,—except to regular subscribers who have sent us fifty cents for a year's subscription. For these no additional charge will be made. After January 1 the price will be one dollar per year—twelve numbers. M. H.]

—

B. F. Odell, Flagler, Colo.:—Enclosed I send one dollar for books and subscription, and twenty-five cents for the Portland martyrs. I will take three copies of "Hilda's Home." The story has caused many to read Lucifer who otherwise would not have read it. If possible you should commence another serial story soon. Serial stories will reach many, in this novel reading age, that would pass sober discussions by, and they sow the seed of freedom.

In regard to the Propaganda I am already an active member—not of an organization, but of the great movement for freedom. I was waiting to see whether to enroll my name in the organization that has just been formed, I see but one thing that makes me hesitate. Lucifer has the confidence of all sex reformers and is already the recognized head of the propaganda movement. If Moses Harman had been chosen manager of the Propaganda, I know several who would have added their names. At least I am certain they would have done so.

[The failure to affix my name to the "call" for national organization was not because I disapproved the object or the methods proposed therein. For many years I have been working along the same lines, in my own way, and did not see the need of putting my name to the new organization. If, however, the lack of my signature to that list of names is keeping back others from the work, then this objection shall be removed. The organization is welcome to my name so long as it is managed as I now think it to be. M. H.]

—

Emma Goldman, 50 First St., New York City:—I was glad to see the report of Comrade Lees from Cleveland in last Lucifer. It is to be regretted that I could find no one to report the meetings in Buffalo and Rochester, especially those at Detroit, as I consider them the most important and successful of all the meetings I addressed during my three months' tour. I spoke at two German meetings in Turner Hall, one being the commemoration meeting of the death of our Chicago heroes. Though both meetings were unusually well attended, yet none of my meetings have caused so much comment in the press as the one of Friday, Nov. 18, at the "People's Tabernacle"—a church.

Fancy an Anarchist addressing a congregation from the pulpit! Well, I am generally not conceited but I frankly admit, I am very proud of the success of my lecture in the church on Anarchy. The newspapers have ever since been circulating all

BEST COPY AVAILABLE

881006015

The Emma Goldman Papers

Various Voices / Emma Goldman.– pp. 423-4 ; 37 cm. In Lucifer, The Lightbearer [Chicago]. –no. 692 (Jan. 5, 1898).

Obtained from the Stanford University Libraries, Stanford University.

692.

Do these figures correspond with the number printed on the wrapper of your Lucifer? If so your subscription expires with this number. Please renew for another year.

sorts of stories about that broad minded minister, Mr. McGowan, who had more courage than any other in his profession, but the truth is that his church is now far better attended than ever before. Undoubtedly people go there to find out whether the church is still on the same spot, and whether the devil has not taken up his quarters in it since Emma Goldman spoke there.

The minister certainly deserves all credit for his broad-mindedness and courage.

In Buffalo I also had good meetings; one in the Trade and Labor Council Hall; one in the Spiritualist Temple, and a German meeting. In Rochester, N. Y., I addressed three meetings, two arranged by friends and one in the Labor Lyceum of that city.

Take it all in all I am satisfied with the work done during the three months, and with the hospitality and kindness extended me by comrades, friends and sympathizers all over the country. I hope to start on a tour again, next March or April, and of course, shall then see all the friends at Lucifer Circle again.

Books Worth Reading. FREE!

Send us twenty-five cents for a thirteen weeks' trial subscription to Lucifer and we will present to you your choice of the following books, to the value of 25 cents. Read the list carefully. Every book is interesting and thought-inspiring.

John's Way; a domestic radical story, by Elmina D. Slenker,	.25
Vital Force, Magnetic Exchange and Magnetation; Albert Chavannes,	.25
Human Rights; J. Madison Hook,	.10
Prohibition and Self-Government; E. C. Walker,	.10
Practical Co-operation; " "	.10
The Revival of Puritanism; " "	.10
Love and the Law; " "	.05
Sexual Enslavement of Woman; " "	.05
Motherhood in Freedom; M. Harman,	.05
Digging for Bedrock; " "	.10
In Hell and the Way Out; H. E. Allen,	.10

We have in stock a considerable variety of pamphlets which we have not space to advertise. As we desire to get them off our shelves as soon as possible, we will offer them as premiums with trial subscriptions. In ordering, please state second choice, as some of the works are now out of print, and in any case we do not expect to renew our stock of any in this list.

Religion in the Republic; Mrs. M. A. Freeman,	.05
What Would Follow on the Effacement of Christianity? George Jacob Holyoake,	.10
Vistas Vitae; M. T. Martin,	.10
"Cupid's Yokes" and the Holy Scripture Contrasted. Letter from Parker Pillsbury to E. H. Heywood.	.10
Immortality; Mary S. and James Vincent, Sr.	.10
The Eight Hour Movement; John P. Altgeld,	.10
Science of a Universal Religion; Gabriel Z. Wacht,	.25
Government Ownership of Railroads and Telegraphs; H. L. Loucks,	.25
What Diana Teaches; Count Tolstoi,	.01
How the Devil Beat the Salvation Army,	.10
The True Story of My Parliamentary Struggle; Charles Bradlaugh,	.50
The Economics of Anarchy. A Study of the Industrial Type. By D. D. Lum	.25
God in the State; E. C. Walker,	.10
The Coming Woman; Lillie H. White,	.15

These books are given for new subscriptions only. They will be sent to any address when the order contains 25 cents and the name of a new subscriber to Lucifer. They are given instead of the usual agents' commission.

Inclose two two cent stamps for postage, and address

M. HARMAN, 1282 Congress St., Chicago.

Personal Rights and Sexual Wrongs.

[illegible] to the Legitimation League and the Personal Rights [illegible]. Also, four fine full page portraits of Mrs E. Heywood [illegible] and Lois Waisbrooker, together with sketches of [illegible] work. By Cyrus Bowman. Finely bound in boards. Price [illegible]. Moses Harman, 1282 Congress St., Chicago.

LOVE [illegible] E. C. Walker. A clear, candid [illegible] of many almost [illegible]. An [illegible] pamphlet. Price [illegible] cents.

Elmina's [illegible] and a letter from [illegible] Va.

LIBRARY OF SEXOLOGY

Comprising the latest and best [illegible] relations and the betterment of the [illegible]

What the Young Need to Know. A Primer [illegible]

C. Walker. Startling, [illegible] better book for young [illegible] ever published. .10

Bar Sinister and Legit. Love, by [illegible]. First [illegible] ings of the Legitimation League. [illegible] pictures of Lillian Harman, the [illegible] Edith Lanchester. Bound in boards. .25

Rights of Natural Children, by [illegible] report of the inaugural proceedings of the [illegible] special articles by Gladys Dawson, Esq. [illegible] Wordsworth Donisthorpe. Also, portraits of [illegible] Dawson and Wordsworth Donisthorpe. .25

The Prodigal Daughter, and other papers, by Rachel Campbell. A powerful plea in behalf of outcast women, proving conclusively that legal marriage is the cause of prostitution. .25

The Old and the New Ideal, by E. H. Heckelmach. Discussion of the Sex, Love and Marriage Question. Radical and iconoclastic, striking powerful blows at social and religious superstition; 347 pages. Cloth, $1. Paper, .50

Discussion of the Social Question, by Dr. Juliet H. Severance and David Jones. An able defense of the right of woman to control her own person and to ignore state or church interference. .15

Anything More, My Lord? By Lois Waisbrooker. .10

Fountain of Life, " " paper covers, .50

Perfect Motherhood, " " cloth, gilted, 1.00

Occult Forces of Sex, " " .50

A Sex Revolution, " " .25

Helen Harlow's Vow, " " .25

Woman, Church and State. By Matilda Joslyn Gage, cloth, 2.00

When Love is Liberty and Nature Law, an address by John Badcock, Jr. An excellent plea for freedom in the love relations. .10

Sexual Enslavement of Women, a radical pamphlet showing the fate of countless thousands of legal wives is worse than that of the girls who are forcibly held in the dives of the Wisconsin lumber regions as prostitutes for the lumbermen. .05

Motherhood in Freedom, by M. Harman. A Short Essay or Sermon upon the Rights, Duties and Responsibilities of Motherhood, from the Standpoint of Equal Freedom For All and Special Privileges For None. Per dozen for distribution, 25 cents. Single copies .05

GREAT COMBINATION OFFER!

For a limited time and for the purpose of spreading the light and helping in the battle for Free Womanhood, we will send the following stirring essays on the Sex Problem for only Twenty-five cents:

"The Prodigal Daughter, or The Price of Virtue," By Rachel Campbell.
"Sexual Enslavement of Woman," By E. C. Walker.
"Motherhood in Freedom," By Moses Harman.
"Pioneer Chips," From the private correspondence of Rachel Campbell, By Mary Florence Johnson.
"Will the Coming Woman Marry?" By X.
"Love and the Law," By E. C. Walker.
"What Diana Teaches," By Tolstoi.

Help spread the light by buying and reading these thought-stirring works and lend them to your friends.

Reminiscences OF AN OCTOGENARIAN in the Fields of Industrial and Social Reform, by Joshua King Ingalls. An interesting book by a pioneer in the cause of social and economic reform. Paper, 25 cents. Cloth, 50 cents.

REASONS FOR PARDONING FIELDEN NEEBE AND SCHWAB. By John P. Altgeld, Governor of Illinois. In this work the claim is conclusively proven that the prisoners did not have a fair trial, that they were unjustly condemned and that their imprisonment was an outrage and the Governor has the courage of his convictions. He does not "pardon" repentant criminals, but releases innocent victims of a judicial outrage. The history of the case is gone over from beginning to end and it comprises very valuable information. Price 15 cents.

Ladies who are willing to write to gentlemen on Sex Reform will please address, with stamp, Elmina Drake Slenker, Knoxville, Va.

We a l need comradeship of thought.

C. S. Wood, M. D. [illegible] now and [illegible] case that [illegible] care of women [illegible] Consultation free. [illegible] 121 La Salle st., Chicago, Ill. [illegible]

NIAPON [illegible] Agents wanted.

A Private [illegible] securing an [illegible] with [illegible] Wood, [illegible]

"Isabel's [illegible]

BEST COPY AVAILABLE

890331000

The Emma Goldman Papers

[Letters from a tour. In German] Reise-Briefe. Part 3 / Emma Goldman.— pp. 2-3 ; 36 cm. In Sturmvogel [New York]. —Vol. 1, no. 6 (Jan. 15, 1898).

Permission to reproduce or quote in any form must be obtained from the State Historical Society of Wisconsin, Madison, WI.

STURMVOGEL.

Erscheint am 1. und 15. jeden Monats. Preis: Jährlich 80 Cts., halbjährlich 40 Cts., 1 Expl. 3 Cts.

Alle Briefe und Gelder sind zu adressiren:
C. TIMMERMANN.
o. 80 First Sts. New York City.

(Schluss von: Der Klassenkampf auf der Schaubühne.)

Person des Anarchisten Jean Roule's ist Ihnen ein Führer erstanden, der mit einer grösseren Bildung ausgerüstet die Revolution predigt. Robert Hargand, der Sohn des Fabrikanten, ein Student ist ein Freund der Arbeiterklasse und versucht im ausgebrochenen Strike das Recht der Ausgebeuteten zu verfechten. Von den politischen Phraseuren der Partei im Stich gelassen, brütet der Hunger über dem Bezirk und vom Piedestall eines Crucifix herab predigt Roule seinen Kameraden, dass ihr Heil nur in einer siegreichen Revolution blühen könne. Mit harten Worten lässt der Dichter hier seinen Helden den Stab brechen über die politischen Agitatoren aller, auch der sozialistischen, Parteien, welche die Arbeiter nur als Fusschemel gebrauchen wollen, um sich von ihrem Rücken aus in die Parlamentssitze und andere fette Posten zu schwingen, die schlechten Hirten.—In diesem Act, dem vierten, erscheint Madeleine eine Fackel tragend, als eine Art Louise Michel, an der Seite Roule's als dessen Weib und Kamerad und entflammmt den Muth der verzagten Striker aufs neue: Im letzten Act finden wir die Arbeiter unter Jeans Führung hinter den Barrikaden. Die Fabrik ist in Flammen aufgegangen und Hargand der Ausbeuter hat nach den Truppen telegraphirt. In dem folgendem Kampfe fällt sowohl Robert Hargand, des Fabrikanten Sohn, der sich zwischen beide Parteien geworfen, wie auch Jean Roule, von den Schüssen der Soldateska darniedergestreckt. Die Schlussscene bringt das schreckliche Resultat des Conflicts. Madeleine verwundet, wird auf die Bühne getragen; dann kommt Hargand. der Fabrikant, weinend über den Tod seines Sohnes. Dieser sowie Jean Roule werden von den Ruinen der Barrikade herzugetragen. Ringsum stehen die Verwandten und Freunde Madeleines. Diese, über den Körper ihres Gatten gesunken, erhebt sich plötzlich mit der Anstrengung einer Sterbenden und spricht im Ton einer Prophetin, dass das Kind, welches sie unter dem Herzen trägt, den Tod seines Vaters rächen werde. Unter dem Zuruf: „Mörder!" wankt Hargand von der Scene.

Bild der Freiheit.

Siehst du den Strom, den Bergeshöh'n entquollen,
Die dunklen Wogen majestätisch rollen?
Es steht bei dir, ob er auf seinem Pfad
Dir Segen bringend, ob verderbend naht.

Grab' ihm ein Bett, so wird er deine Auen
Erquicken und zur Fruchtbarkeit bethauen.
Doch stemmst du dich entgegen seinem Lauf,
So geht dein Acker, samt der Frucht, darauf!

F. Hebbel.

REISE-BRIEFE.

Von Emma Goldmann.

III

In Boston sprach ich in zwei gut besuchten Versammlungen; von da ging's nach New-Haven, wo ich ebenfalls eine starke Versammlung adressirte. Von New-Haven fuhr ich nach New-York und von da nach Philadelphia. In N. Y. sprach ich in einer Protestversammlung gegen den Hatseltoner Mord von 21 Strikern. Ach, dieses Protestiren mit Worten nur, es ist die reinste Ironie! Ich möchte mich immer selber ohrfeigen, wenn ich nach einem geradezu bestialischen Gewaltakt, wie der vom Sheriff Martin verübte, nur dagegen r e d e, während jeder Nerv in mir zuckt, solch einen Bluthund zu erwürgen; und wäre es auch nur, um der herrschenden Klasse einen Beweis zu liefern, dass sie nicht immer ungestraft wehrlose Arbeiter morden kann.....

In Philadelphia fanden sehr gut besuchte englische Versammlungen statt, welche von der Ladies Liberal League, Single Taxers und Friendship Liberal League, für mich arrangirt wurden. Von dort ging ich über Washington nach Pittsburg.

In Washington fand keine Versammlung statt, aber ich machte dort Halt, um verschiedene Freunde des „Armen Teufel" kennen zu lernen. Ich konnte nur einige dieser Brüder treffen und ich muss gestehen, dass mich der Abstecher nach Wash. nicht reute, denn ich habe dort ein paar treffliche Menschen kennen gelernt.

Leider bleibt es einem in der Welt nicht erspart, neben wackeren Menschen auch solchen Gesellen zu begegnen, bei deren Zeugung ein unverzeihlicher Irrthum begangen wurde. Diese Lentchen hätten nämlich als Vierfüssler zur Welt kommen sollen; denn als Zweifüssler sind sie weder Menschen noch Thiere.

Da war unter Anderen ein Architekt, alter Abonnent des „A. T.", ein Regierungsknecht, ein Mensch mit einem „Ohrfeigengesicht", wie Freund Reitzel sagt, der nicht begreifen konnte, dass ich als Anarchistin den Sinn für das Schöne und Gute im Menschen erwecken möchte. So ein Staatsverbrechen — der Masse begreiflich machen zu wollen, dass sie auch ein Recht zum Leben hat!..... Es wollte diesem Patron gar nicht in den Schädel, dass ein Anarchist das Predigen von Entbehrung, Opfern, Geduld und Resignation den Pfaffen überlässt, um für den höchsten Genuss in jeder Form einzutreten. Natürlich nicht für den Genuss des Einzelnen auf Kosten der Anderen, sondern für das Wohlleben des Individuums, als auch für das der Gesammtheit. Was versteht übrigens so eine Regierungsseele vom Genuss?

Der Zweite ähnlichen Schlages war ein dicker Bierbrauer aus Cincinnati, ebenfalls ein alter Leser des „A. T.", der sich gerade in Washington aufhielt und im Hotel Fritz Reuter wohnte, wo auch ich abstieg. Dieser schien zwar irgend welche Begriffe vom Genuss zu haben,—seine stark geröthete Nase veranlasste mich, einen solchen Schluss zu ziehen. Ein Riesenkerl mit einem Wanst, bei dessen Anblick ich mir meiner Mängel in der Mathematik bewusst wurde; denn, um das Quantum Bier zu berechnen, das dieses Fass in sich barg, dazu gehörten die mathematischen Kenntnisse einer Kawalewskaja. Sein Schmalzgesicht glänzte nur so, als er hörte, dass ich die E. G. sei, und er traktirte sogleich die ganze Gesellschaft; ich arme Seele aber musste dafür alle seine Familiengeschichten hören, und da er schon Grossvater ist, so kann man sich denken, wie lang dieselben ausfielen. Er vertraute mir sogar die Nummer seines Zimmers an und frug so ganz nebenbei, welches Zimmer ich inne hätte. In der Hitze des Gefechts, oder des Gelages, um die Wahrheit zu gestehen, fiel mir die Frage gar nicht auf und ich sagte ihm meine Nummer.

Nach langem hin und her Discutiren über alle möglichen Tagesfragen, wurde es 2 Uhr Morgens und an der Zeit aufzubrechen. Ich war kaum eine halbe Stunde im Bett, als Jemand ganz leise an meiner Thür klopfte. „Wer da?" rief ich; keine Antwort. „Who is there?" frug ich nochmals, indem ich glaubte, der Klopfer verstehe nicht deutsch. Richtig war's mein dicker Bierbrauer aus Cincinnati. In meiner Empörung schnauzte ich den nicht übel an; höre dann wie der alte Sünder stammelt: „Not so loud, somebody may hear us; excuse me, I only was.

890331000

The Emma Goldman Papers

[Letters from a tour. In German] Reise-Briefe. Part 3 / Emma Goldman. — pp. 2-3 ; 36 cm. In Sturmvogel [New York]. — Vol. 1, no. 6 (Jan. 15, 1898).

Permission to reproduce or quote in any form must be obtained from the State Historical Society of Wisconsin, Madison, WI.

ooking for the chaimbermaid." Diese freche, verlogene Antwort reizte mich noch mehr und ich brauche nicht erst zu betonen, dass ich dem Kerl einen solchen Sack voll Grobheiten sagte, dass er sich schleunigst trollte. Ich hätte die ganze Episode wohl kaum des Niederschreibens werth gehalten, würde dieselbe nicht Betrachtungen trauriger Natur in mir wach gerufen haben.

Seit Jahren liest dieser „ordnungsliebende" Bürger, (er sagte mir ganz stolz, dass er Republikaner und sein Ideal Karl Schurz ist) den „A. T.", pardon, ich wollte sagen, er hält den „A. T." Denn wenn er den Inhalt desselben all die langen Jahre gelesen hätte, müsste doch ein wenig Freiheitssinn haften geblieben sein; er würde dann begreifen, dass eine Frau eben so viel Recht hat allein zu reisen, wie er, ohne Beleidigungen ausgesetzt zu sein. So weit reichen aber die Rechtsbegriffe dieses versoffenen und verspießerten Kerlen eben nicht. — —

Pittsburg — dieses traurige, russige Nest mit seinen modernen Zwingburgen der Arbeit und seinem Gefängniss, weckt immer die trübsten Erinnerungen in mir; — weilt doch in letzterem seit Jahren einer meiner theuersten Freunde, Alex. Berkmann, den eine Bourgeois-Justiz nach einem leider misglückten Vergeltungswerk an einem Scheusal, einer Geissel des arbeitenden Volkes, verdammt hat, seine jungen Jahre hinter grauen Wällen zu verbringen.

In P. wollte man dieses Mal keine Versammlungen für mich arrangiren, weil gerade Freund Berkmann's Angelegenheit vor the Board of Pardon gebracht werden sollte und die dortigen Genossen befürchteten, durch mein öffentliches Auftreten die Sache zu schädigen. Nachdem ich aber in Monaca, 27 Meilen von P., sprechen sollte und ausserdem meine erst kürzlich aus dem Gefängniss entlassenen Freunde, Nold und Bauer, sehen wollte, so beschloss ich, einige Tage in P. zu bleiben.

Während meiner ganzen Fahrt von Washington nach Pittsburg regnete es fortwährend und als ich meinen Bestimmungsort erreichte, goss es nur so, als ob eine zweite Sündfluth auf die Menschheit herniedergesandt werden sollte. Schade wärde es wahrhaftig nicht, denn nur durch solch ein Ereigniss könnte die Welt von allerlei Ungeziefer befreit werden. Unser Nold, der angehende Dichter, (ach, wenn der nur das Dichten unterlassen würde—) und der grosse Bauernjunge mit dem goldenen Herzen, erwarteten mich am Bahnhof. „Bringt mich nur gleich auf mein altes Quartier zu Gordon," bat ich die Brüder, „denn ich bin todtmüde." „Ja, ja, aber zuerst müssen wir einkehren!"

Ich war über das Wiedersehen mit meinen lieben Zuchthausvögeln so erfreut, dass ich nicht nein sagen konnte; sondern war meine Kehle ziemlich trocken und so ging es denn mit Hack und Pack bei gräßlichem Regen in eine Wirthschaft, deren Besitzer für „A. T." Familie gehört; trotzdem fällt ihm aber doch das Herz in die Hosen, wenn ein Anarchist sein Lokal betritt, wie mir Freund N. sagte; mit einer Anarchistin könnte man übrigens schon eine Ausnahme machen, dachte ich mir. Der gute Mann schien über meinen Besuch erfreut zu sein und liess gleich Essen und Trinken auftragen. Er war sehr aufgeräumt, rückte immer näher an meine Seite, zwinkerte mit den Augen, gleichzeitig ängstliche Blicke auf eine gegenüberliegende Thür werfend. „Was ist los, dass Sie immer nach der Thür blicken?" frug ich ihn. Ja, wissen Sie, ich möchte gar zu gerne bei Ihnen bleiben, aber im anstossenden Zimmer sitzt meine Alte mit noch einigen Klatschschwestern und wenn sie erfährt wer Sie sind, dann bin ich verloren. Um Gotteswillen, sprechen Sie nicht so laut." Trotzdem der Mann so gastfreundlich war, konnte ich doch nicht umhin, ihn wegen seiner Feigheit zu strafen; ich sprach und erzählte mit lauter Stimme, bis der arme Kerl es nicht mehr auf seinen Sitz aushalten konnte.

Gegessen und getrunken hatten wir ja, gekostet hatte es auch nichts und dazu noch die Schadenfreude. Die Karawane konnte nun getrost abschieben.

„Jetzt können wir Dich nicht mehr zu G. bringen, es ist zu spät," pustete Bauer, der sich noch immer vor Lachen über das Erlebte schüttelte. Wir gehen jetzt in ein naheliegendes Boardinghouse, dessen Inhaber auch ein „A. T." Leser ist." „Na, hoffentlich nicht so einer als unser Wirth." „O nein, das ist einer von den Radikalen," riefen meine Begleiter unisono. Also los. Dort angekommen, wurden noch einige Gläser hinter die Binde gegossen, während das Bäuerlein mit dem Hauswirth betreffs eines Zimmers verhandelte. Endlich, nach langem Warten, hiess es up stairs gehen. Im Begriffe, von meinen Cumpanen Abschied zu nehmen, höre ich dicht neben mir eine kreischende Stimme; „Wir haben keine Zimmer für Frauenzimmer!" Was war zu thun? Ich konnte doch gegen den Willen der süchtigen Hausfrau nicht dort bleiben. Also Bündel und Begleiter gepackt und weiter geschoben. Der Wirth, dem meine Freunde gehörig den Kopf gewaschen, war ganz trostlos, als er hörte, wer dieses Frauenzimmer eigentlich ist und er bat mich unter vielen Entschuldigungen, ja nur zu bleiben; aber ich hatte keine Lust, eine Keilerei zwischen Ehegesponsen zu verursachen und so blieb ich eben nicht. Wohin jetzt? „Weisst Du — sagte Bauer, der den Mut noch nicht verloren hatte, während der arme weichherzige Nold ganz verzweifelt war — jetzt führen wir dich zu einem Genossen, da kannst Du übernachten." „Meinetwegen in die Hölle, wann ich nur schon ein Unterkommen habe" Auf dem Wege zu diesem Genossen fiel mir mein kranker Freund R. R. mit seinem „A. T." ein. Was der für Augen machen würde, könnte er sich manche seiner Abonnenten aus der Nähe besehen; wüsste er was das für Michel sind, wie wenig Einfluss sein Wirken auf diese Mensch ... angeübt hat. — Natürlich kannte ich bis dahin nur wenige Leser seines Blattes, sonst hätte ich nicht so urtheilen können. Ich habe mich während der übrigen Zeit meiner Reise überzeugt, dass der grösste Theil der Freunde desselben wirklich liebe und feine Menschen sind, die mir durch ihre Güte und Liebenswürdigkeit die unangenehmen Erfahrungen mit „A. T." Lesern in Pittsburg und anderen Plätzen leicht vergessen liessen.

Der Genosse, von dem Bauer sprach, wohnte in einem Zimmer, in welchem sich sein ganzes Eigenthum, Ehebett, Weib und Kind mit eingeschlossen, befand. Die sog. bessere Hälfte, eine aus der Hefe hervorgegangene Deutsch-Amerikanerin, die ich schon von früher her als eine Xantippe kannte, schien nicht sehr erbaut darüber zu sein, dass ihr Mann mir seine Stelle im Bette abtreten sollte. Unter solchen Umständen war mein Bleiben nicht sehr angenehm; aber ich war zu müde und abgespannt um erst lange zu überlegen; ich war froh, mich endlich meiner nassen Kleider entledigen und in ein warmes Nest kriechen zu können, wo ich denn auch gleich in einen erquickenden Schlaf fiel."

Während ich nun von einer herrlichen Zukunft und freien, edlen Menschen träumte, brachte mich ein schrecklicher Lärm in die Öde Wirklichkeit zurück. Ich war zu schlaftrunken, um im ersten Moment die Situation zu erfassen; dazu war es im Zimmer dunkel. Endlich konnte ich am Fussboden zwei Menschen unterscheiden, die sich gegenseitig mit Fäusten bearbeiteten und dazwischen die heisere, rauhe Stimme der Frau hören, die ihren Gatten, den theuren, meinen Gastwirth, in der gemeinsten Weise beschimpfte. Die ganze Situation war so horrend, dabei aber so komisch, dass ich eigentlich nicht wusste, ob ich weinen oder lachen sollte. Ich zog mich rasch an und stürzte in den peitschenden Regen hinaus um zu Bauer zu gehen, der in der Nähe wohnte.

Der arme Kerl, der schon längst schnarchte, kroch schnell in seine Unaussprechlichen und ging mit mir in Nacht und Nebel hinaus, ein Hotel suchen. Die traurige Affäre trug sich in Allegheny City zu, wo keine Hotels zu finden sind. Eine Car nach Pittsburg war um diese Zeit, 3 Uhr Morgens, auch nicht mehr zu haben; also hiess es laufen; eine angenehme Sache bei dem Hundewetter.

Nach zwei Stunden kamen wir endlich an einen Platz, wo man auch für „Frauenzimmer Zimmer" hat. Ich konnte lange Zeit nicht zur Ruhe kommen, denn die Ereignisse des Abends und hauptsächlich die ekelhafte Familienscene, standen noch zu klar vor mir. Eigentlich hätte mich eine derartige Affäre nicht alteriren sollen. Geht es denn bei Eheleuten überhaupt anders zu? Wie ist es möglich, dass zwei Menschen, die absolut nicht für einander passen, ihr elendes Dasein doch zusammen dahinschleppen. Was hält sie denn vereint? Diese Fragen durchkreuzten mein müdes Gehirn. Die Liebe, werden Manche sagen. Lächerlich! Menschen, die so wenig gegenseitig Achtung haben, und sich mit Schmutz und Koth bewerfen, die sich sogar soweit vergessen handgreiflich zu werden; solche Geschöpfe wissen nichts von der Liebe. Es ist nur die verfluchte Gewohnheit und Feigheit des Mannes sowohl wie die der Frau, welches sie die grösste Schmach viel eher ertragen lässt, als aus einander zu gehen, oder lieber den Tod einem solchen traurigen Leben vorzuziehen.

Ich war am nächsten Tage ganz zerschlagen und angeekelt von dem Schlamm, in dem sich die Menschheit wälzt. In diesem Zustande reiste ich nach Monaca, wo es mir in anderer Beziehung nicht viel besser ging.

The Emma Goldman Papers
890117010
[Interview] Free Speech? / Emma Goldman.— p. 8 ; 28 cm. In The Evening Bulletin [Providence]. —(Jan. 22, 1898).
Permission to reproduce or quote in any form must be obtained from Providence Public Library.

FREE SPEECH?

A Practical Illustration of the Favorite Anarchistic Motto.

THE SPEAKERS AT MUSIC HALL HAVE A WORDY COMBAT.

Emma Goldman Is in Town Again and In Battle Array.—Her Appearance at Music Hall Brought About a Clash Between John Cook and George Vaughan Last Night.—Miss Goldman in Reminiscent.

Emma Goldman, the Anarchist who was sent out of the city by former Mayor McGuinness towards the end of his term, is here again. She walked into the Journal office yesterday afternoon with a figurative chip on her shoulder which she is desirous of having the police remove. Then she promises to fight.

Miss Goldman was as aggressive a personality as ever. Since her departure from here—an unenforced departure, by the way—she has been lecturing in a number of cities. She spoke last night in the small Music Hall and will speak again on Sunday at Hedley's Hall, under the auspices of the Wendell Phillips Educational Club. She has all her old dislike for the Central Police Station and for the customs which prevail there.

"I don't consider myself bound to remain away from here by my promise," she said, "because the police had no right to send me away from the city. The only way in which one person can be sent from one State to another is by extradition papers, and I have done nothing for which I could be extradited. If I am arrested again my friends have secured a lawyer and I shall make a fight.

"The police here are very conservative," she remarked, sarcastically. "I have been in 25 cities and they have not bothered me anywhere. True," she remarked, "in St. Louis the Mayor refused me a license to speak, but I didn't ask for it. I don't believe in asking for permission to speak in the open air. One of my friends did, and Mayor Ziegenheim refused. 'What, let Emma Goldman speak here,' he said; 'I guess not.' Then at the meeting there were a score of policemen and six patrol wagons."

Miss Goldman laughed at the recollection. Then she went into reminiscences of her last visit here.

"I should think the Journal would take up the treatment of prisoners at the station here," she said. "It is the worst anywhere, and I have been in police stations enough to know." She smiled at the delicacy of the recollections. "They kept me without food from 8 o'clock at night until 9 in the morning. They told me none of my friends had called, which wasn't so. They had called and were refused permission to see me.

"Then I gave one of the men 25 cents to get me some breakfast and it was so bad I couldn't eat it. I gave it away to the other women who were locked up

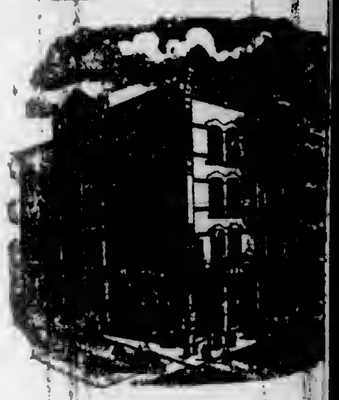
The Best Clothing in th

FOR THE MONEY--OR WE WILL BU

Quality Counts, Particularly Barnaby Quality.

Forty-six years of steady growth—forty-six years of acceptable catering to the clothing needs of the people of Rhode Island—forty-six years of earnest effort and progress—and forty-six years of unparalleled success. YES, QUALITY does count—particularly BARNABY quality. Yet these are the days of greater things—of more aggressive effort. Our aim is to sell you clothing that is far better than "good enough." To satisfy ourselves—to satisfy you—we aim to give you values that are greater and greater and always greater than the year before. To aim to do this is one thing—to accomplish it—another. That we do accomplish our aim—and that we do give you positively, always and absolutely THE BEST CLOTHING IN THE WORLD FOR THE MONEY is amply proven by the immensity of the patronage bestowed upon us.

Your dollar will always buy a doliar's worth of quality here—it will often buy more than a dollar's worth—but NEVER less. Quality counts—you can rely upon BARNABY QUALITY—as you always have in the past—and even more fully can you rely upon it in the future.



A GUARANTEE WHICH INSURES

the quality of our clothing in the broadest and most unmistakable terms to be as we claim—the best in the world for the money—from now on will

Be Given With Every Article of Wearing Apparel BOUGHT AT OUR STORE.

This GUARANTEE will afford you absolute protection against shoddy, seconds, misfits and inferior made goods which are so common now-a-days in many stores. Our name is back of this GUARANTEE—our reputation is back of it. It is a positive and definite guarantee of QUALITY—of BARNABY QUALITY—for FORTY-SIX YEARS THE BEST IN THE WORLD FOR THE MONEY.

You are always welcome here—to come and view the many new styles—you are always sure of attentive service—whether you are ready to buy or not.

The Accompanyin BEST IN
and hereby agre
if the price pa
Fifteen Days
it is any fault
FULL of that any mis
are made by th
they are not Th Money, will
the money back purchased here

DATE

BEST COPY AVAILABLE

890117010

The Emma Goldman Papers

[Interview] Free Speech? / Emma Goldman.– p. 8 ; 28 cm. In The Evening Bulletin [Providence]. –(Jan. 22, 1898).

Permission to reproduce or quote in any form must be obtained from Providence Public Library.

Goldman replied. 'What, let Emma Goldman speak here,' he said; 'I guess not.' Then at the meeting there were a score of policemen and six patrol wagons."

Miss Goldman laughed at the recollection. Then she went into reminiscences of her last visit here.

"I should think the Journal would take up the treatment of prisoners at the station here," she said. "It is the worst anywhere, and I have been in police stations enough to know." She smiled at the delicacy of the recollections. "They kept me without food from 8 o'clock last night until 9 in the morning. They told me none of my friends had called, which I wasn't so. They had called and were refused permission to see me.

"Then I gave one of the men 25 cents to get me some breakfast and it was so bad I couldn't eat it. I gave it away to the other women who were locked up there. These people are human beings, even if they have committed some crime. They wouldn't let my friends see me, but they brought in policemen and detectives to see the animal caged there. I had an engagement to speak in Boston, and that was the reason I was willing to go away. I had a jolly time while I was here after I had been arrested and had been allowed to see my friends."

It was intimated that the same Chief of Police was in power and the principal district of the city was in charge of the same Captain of Police. Miss Goldman said she didn't care for that. She was here to speak, and as long as she didn't create any disorder she intended to stay. She had no engagement until the middle of next month and was not averse to remaining here until that time to fight it out if necessary.

Accompanying her was John H. Cook, formerly President of the Central Labor Union, who was a firm supporter upon the occasion of her last visit to this city. Miss Goldman said that the main result of the attack upon her when here last was to create a more active field for the spread of her propaganda.

Chief Baker said there was nothing for him to do as long as Miss Goldman didn't kick up a row. She might speak in halls if she chose, but the last time she was here she spoke in the open air and made a disturbance. Then her arrest followed.

Bombs were thrown at the meeting in Music Hall last night. They were not the kind usually connected with the thought of an Anarchist, but the ones more commonly used—words. It is an unquestioned fact that this kind can cause a considerable amount of damage. John Cook and George Vaughan indulged in the pastime, incidentally being aided and abetted by Emma Goldman. It all started because Mr. Vaughan persisted in lecturing on Anarchy when he had only been asked to deliver a poem on "Columbia." Vaughan evidently believed that "Columbia" had been done to death, and he could have something original and startling. He had it all right. His rhetorical effort abounded in originality, and his statements, some of them, were of a most alarming nature, or they would be to some people. No one appeared to mind them last night except Mr. Cook and Miss Goldman.

Mr. Cook remonstrated with Mr. Vaughan for not reciting "Columbia," his original poem, long on the assemblage. Mr. Vaughan declined to do it. Then finally, by popular vote, it was agreed that Mr. Vaughan should withdraw and let Miss Goldman tell what there was to be told about Anarchy. This was not done without some protest on Mr. Vaughan's part, but that was the final action.

The meeting opened rather tamely. At first it looked as though there might be some trouble as it seems that last night was the night when the Plumbers' Union was to meet in annual conclave. The hall had been lent to the Anarchists, though. It was a toss-up, "heads I win, tails you lose," and the Anarchists got it. There was some doubt at first whether the discussion would be on Anarchy or the proper method of fixing up a man's plumbing bill so he wouldn't feel called upon to shoot the man who attempted to collect it. The exponents of the former were Lieut. Horton and Sergt. Smith from the Central Station [illegible] on hand to see that there was no

BOUGHT AT OUR STORE.

This GUARANTEE will afford you absolute protection against shoddy, seconds, misfits and inferior made goods which are so common now-a-days in many stores. Our name is back of this GUARANTEE—our reputation is back of it. It is a positive and definite guarantee of QUALITY—of BARNABY QUALITY—for FORTY-SIX YEARS THE BEST IN THE WORLD FOR THE MONEY.

You are always welcome here—to come and view the many new styles—you are always sure of attentive service—whether you are ready to buy or not.

J. B. Barnaby Co.

DATE

SALESMAN'S NUMBER

(Above is a fac-simil

have to come here "to get audiences," said Mr. Vaughan, haughtily, "and I didn't come here because I was particularly desirous of being here. I was billed to speak in New York before thousands and I can go from here and get a larger audience than you've got. This man here (referring to Mr. Cook) is no gentleman. I drew up the bill for this concert and they went and bungled it. Now, everybody that thinks I ought to get out raise their hands."

Not a hand appeared.

"I believe in liberty, I do," shouted Mr. Vaughan, "and I believe in morality and I am a Christian."

Then Mr. Vaughan got down from the platform and gave way to Mr. Cook, Mr. Cook made some statement that aroused Mr. Vaughan's ire, and he shouted from the rear of the hall, "That's not the first lie you have told, Mr. Cook."

Then Miss Goldman came in. She said it was not a gentlemanly action to call a man a liar, and proceeded to try to make Mr. Vaughan out one by saying he had never been billed to speak in New York. Furthermore, she said that Mr. Vaughan was no Anarchist if he was a Christian; he must be one or the other. All this time Mr. Vaughan was in the rear of the hall, but he had a disciple near the platform.

A little woman rose and, interrupting Miss Goldman, shrieked in watery accents, "It's false, it's false. He did have his name on the bill in New York."

Then Mr. Vaughan rushed up the aisle to the rescue.

"Yes," he shouted, "and if it hadn't been for this brave little woman you wouldn't have had this meeting here tonight. Come, dear, let's go home." They went and the piano was rattled noisily as an accompaniment to their retreat.

Then Mrs. Goldman delivered her lecture on "Anarchy; What it is and What it is Supposed to Be," without further interruption. She made the same arguments and advanced the same theories as on her previous visit.

TROLLEY ON THE BIG BRIDGE.

Two Trips Made Last Evening Around One of the New Loops.

New York, Jan. 21.—(Special.)—Two trial trips of trolley cars were made this evening on the Brooklyn bridge and around one of the new loops which run across the Manhattan entrance. Two

PAWTUCKET.

Anniversary of the Birth of Robert Burns Celebrated.

EXERCISES AT THE AUDITORIUM BY CLAN FRASER, O. S. C.

The Formal Programme Was Followed by Dancing.—High School Students in Amateur Dramatics.—Anniversary of St. Joseph's Total Abstinence and Benevolent Society.—"Typos" Banquet.—Annual Ball of Court Love and Truth Foresters of America.

The anniversary of the birth of Robert Burns was celebrated last evening by the members of Clan Fraser, No. 11, O. S. C., by a concert and ball, which was held in the Auditorium and which was a success in every particular. There was a large attendance, including many visitors from out of town, in addition to the members of the local clan.

Among those who were seated upon the platform were Grand Chief William Wallace, Chief James Harvey of Clan Cameron of Providence, Chief George McKenzie, Rev. Alexander McGregor, Ills Honor Mayor John F. Adams, ex-Mayor John W. Davis, David S. Fraser and James Melklejohn.

The concert commenced at 8 o'clock, and the following artists participated: Mr. George Fulton, tenor; Mr. Robert Donaldson, baritone; Mr. John Clegg, cornet soloist; Mr. William Noelle, clarionet soloist; Miss Katherine McLeod, contralto; Miss J. Tait, mezzo-soprano; Miss Agnes Hyde, reader and impersonator, Miss Corina Clegg pianist, Imperial Orchestra, leader, W. Black.

After the Scotch overture, "Robin Adair," by the orchestra, and an address by the Chairman, Chief George sustained by Charles Aumann, being particularly good.

At the close of the entertainment dancing was enjoyed, the music being furnished by Hawes's Orchestra, which also rendered an overture previous to the farce. Prior to the presentation of the piece Mrs. Idimpsey was presented with a silver-mounted mirror as a token of appreciation of her services in preparing the entertainment. The following committee had charge: Ruth Chase, Millicent Lewis, Philip Sherman, Earle D. Sweet, Arthur Newell and Raymond Hood.

St. Joseph T. A. and B. Anniversary.

The 24th anniversary of Saint Joseph's Total Abstinence and Benevolent Society was observed last evening by a concert and ball in the Alcazar and a large number of the members and their friends were present. During the early part of the evening the following programme was rendered:

Overture, Talma Ladies' Orchestra; Helen May Butler, leader; song, Robert J. Casey; cornet solo, "Floriginia's Polka," Miss Sadie A. Bissell; selection, "Popular Medley," Talma Orchestra; song, select d, Master E. de Ryal; selection, "Erminie," Talma Ladies' Orchestra.

At the conclusion of the entertainment dancing was enjoyed until a seasonable hour and the affair proved very pleasurable to all. The festivities opened with a grand march which was led by Charles Ryan and Miss Ida Murphy. The floor was in charge of Charles L. Ryan and his assistant was John T. Banks. The following acted as aids: Miss Lizzie Gorman, Miss Annie Powers, Miss Nellie Tripp, Miss Bertha Devlin, J. O'Connor, M. O'Gara, C. Jackson. The reception committee consisted of Richard McLoughlin, John Goodwin and James McDonnell. The committee of arrangements was as follows: John T. Banks, Chairman, Charles L. Ryan, Secretary; Peter H. Moley, Treasurer; Edward H. Dennehy, John Goodwin, Charles J. Morris, Thomas A. Sullivan and James L. McDonnell.

The "Typos" Banquet.

The members of Pawtucket Typographical Union, No. 212, held a banquet last evening in Havens's Nile room, and in addition to a large numbers of the members several invited guests were in attendance. After doing full justice to the repast which was provided, the furnished by Baker Brothers' Orchestra. The dance orders contained 12 numbers, and at the close of the 11th, there was an intermission for refreshments. The following committees had the affair in charge: Reception Committee—Bernard F. Cummings, Matthew Guntee, John Krowicki; Committee of Arrangements—Joseph McCaffrey, Chairman; Christopher Corrigan, Secretary; Joseph E. Jarvais, Treasurer; John Lawless, Henry Langlois, William W. Bullis, Alex Lapalme; Floor Director James F. Kelley, Assistant Floor Director—John Ashworth, Aids—William McWilliams, R. M. Burns, Charles Hogue, Thomas C. Kavney, Thomas Forestall, William Davis, Thomas Landy.

Funeral of James Lennon.

The funeral of James Lennon was held yesterday from his late residence on School street, and many relatives and friends attended. The remains were conveyed to St. Joseph's Church, where a requiem mass was celebrated by Rev. Henry F. Kinsereay, pastor of the church. The remains were interred at Mount Saint Mary's Cemetery. John Cowley, Frederic Wallace, Michael Murphy and Richard E. Kinkead acting as bearers. There were a large number of handsome floral tokens.

Gentlemen Entertained.

Thursday evening the gentlemen of the Auburn C[illegible] entertained about 60 of the members and invited guests at Aetna Hall, where dancing was enjoyed until the small hours of the morning. A collation was served. The gathering will long be remembered as one of the pleasantest meetings of the club. The music was furnished by George A. Slocum, piano, Charles McClosky, violin, and Mr. T. Dudley, cornet.

Mr. Arthur B. Griggs of New York city will speak from a subject chosen by the audience at the regular meeting held by the Theosophical Society to-morrow evening, at 7:30 o'clock, at 221 Main street.

Continued on Page 11.

You Will be Surprised

To find so much attractiveness and style in a baby carriage for $10

ANTHONY & COWELL CO.

Common Pleas Division of the Su-

FORTY-TWO DAYS FROM SHIELDS.

British Steamer Munificent Loses Her Propeller.

New York, Jan. 2[illegible]—The British freight steamship Munificent came into port to-day 42 days from Shields. From Dec. 9, the day she left Shields, the vessel encountered rough weather, and as she was in ballast and stood well up in the water she made very little progress. The gales came from all points of the compass and piled up a confusion of seas.

When the passage had been four-fifths completed, on Dec. 17, the steamship's propeller dropped off. Luckily the Munificent is equipped with spars, and her canvas was quickly set in order to steady her in the wind. She was unable to make any progress, however, and for two days lay almost helpless on the water, until the Swedish steamer Oscar II., on the way from New Orleans to Hamburg, came along and offered assistance.

The Munificent was then too far out of the line of vessels bound for this city for her captain to hope to get a tow into port, and although the best the Swedish vessel could do would be to leave the Munificent at the Azores, Capt. Garrick decided that it was better to be taken back a thousand miles than to be left at the mercy of the elements any longer. He accordingly accepted the help of the Oscar II., and on Jan. 6 arrived at Fayal. At that port a spare propeller, which had been carried on board, was put in and the Munificent then set out again toward this port.

SPEAK OUT.

The Searchlight of Publicity is Pleasing Providence People.

Publicity is what the people want.
Let the public speak on the subject.
There has been too much claim—too little proof.
Claims made by strangers are not

BEST COPY AVAILABLE

890117010

The Emma Goldman Papers

[Interview] Free Speech? / Emma Goldman.– p. 8 ; 28 cm. In The Evening Bulletin [Providence]. –(Jan. 22, 1898).

Permission to reproduce or quote in any form must be obtained from Providence Public Library.

...Mr. Cook and Miss Goldman.

Mr. Cook ... strated with Mr. Vaughan for not ...ting "Columbia," his original poem, ... on the assemblage. Mr. Vaughan ... ed to do it. Then finally, by popular vote, it was agreed that Mr. Vaughan should withdraw and let Miss Goldman tell what there was to be told about Anarchy. This was not done without some protest on Mr. Vaughan's part, but that was the final action.

The meeting opened rather tamely. At first it looked as though there might be some trouble. It seems that last night was the night when the Plumbers' Union was to meet in annual conclave. The hall had been let to the Anarchists, though. It was a toss-up, "heads I win, tails you lose," and the Anarchists got it. There was some doubt at first whether the discussion would be on Anarchy or the proper method of fixing up a man's plumbing bill so he wouldn't feel called upon to shoot the man who attempted to collect it. The exponents of the former were Lieut. Horton and Sergt. Smith from the Central Station were on hand to see that there was no disorder. They found that the Anarchists had a license and did not interfere with them.

After the discussion with the plumbers had ended matters dragged. John Cook called the meeting to order. He impressed upon his hearers the fact that they were not there to open old sores. There was a sigh of relief from the audience, who probably had been dreading what the meeting held in store for them. Presumably Mr. Cook was alluding to the arrest of Miss Goldman on her previous visit. Mr. Cook further said that they were there to show them one of the deadliest enemies, and that was the thing from which government emanates—authority.

This authority ...moved Mr. Vaughan's ruin later on, as he probably agreed with Mr. Cook on that point at least. Mr. Cook as a matter of encouragement said that the little woman, the little heroine, Emma Goldman, will speak to you later on, but first I wish to introduce to you James F. Morton of Boston."

Mr. Morton of Boston is a young man. He reads poetry. He also reads it very well, as should all Bostonians. Moreover, Mr. Morton read some selections from Browning. What better proof that he comes from the city above named could be asked. In addition to this were inflammatory selections from Wordsworth, Shelley and Edward Carpenter. Then Louis Hammond sang a solo in Hebrew, which was followed by a recitation in the same language. Then came the disturbance. Then were the bombs thrown.

George Vaughan was called upon by Mr. Cook to read an original poem on "Columbia." Mr. Vaughan's speech may have borne that name, but it was not the "Columbia" that Mr. Cook was looking for. He began his speech by saying words to the effect that he thought enough poetry had been inflicted on the audience for one night. That was a slap at Mr. Morton, who had consumed about 45 minutes. The next statement was that Anarchists gloried in the fact that they could have a meeting without a Chairman. That was a rap at Mr. Cook, which that gentleman did not let go by him. Mr. Vaughan talked on Anarchy for 18 minutes; then Mr. Cook interrupted:

"I called you up there to read a poem on 'Columbia,'" he said, "and I will leave it with the audience whether you or Miss Goldman shall talk on Anarchy."

There were cries of "Miss Goldman," "Give us Miss Goldman," "Let him go ahead and talk" and others of a similar nature.

"You are no gentleman to interrupt me in this way," said Mr. Vaughan. "You have had enough poetry from that young man who talked for three-quarters of an hour, while I only talked 18 minutes."

Then Mr. Cook came in again:

"Shall it be this man or Miss Goldman?"

"Let us have Miss Goldman," shouted the majority of the 700 in the hall.

"I want it understood that I don't Miss Goldman, shrieked in walking 20 cents, "It's false, it's false. He did have his name on the bill in New York."

Then Mr. Vaughan rushed up the aisle to the rescue.

"Yes," he shouted, "and if it hadn't been for this brave little woman you wouldn't have had this meeting here tonight. Come, dear, let's go home." They went and the piano was rattled noisily as an accompaniment to their retreat.

Then Mrs. Goldman delivered her lecture on "Anarchy; What It Is and What It is Supposed to Be," withnut further interruption. She made the same arguments and advanced the same theories as on her previous visit.

TROLLEY ON THE BIG BRIDGE.

Two Trips Made Last Evening Around One of the New Loops.

New York, Jan 21.—(Special.)—Two trial trips of trolley cars were made this evening on the Brooklyn bridge and around one of the new loops which run across the Manhattan entrance. Two kinds of cars were used, an old-fashioned one having only two pairs of wheels preceding the second car, which rested on two trucks of four wheels each.

The last car was a large one, being of the latest pattern. On it were Chief Engineer Martin of the bridge, Bridge Commissioner Shea, the President of the Brooklyn Heights Railway Company, and Police Commissioner York. The outside loop was used. The big car made the run from Brooklyn in just four minutes. The ordinary bridge cable train takes between six and seven minutes to cross and the electric cars about four. In rounding the curve at the Manhattan entrance the large fender in front of the big trolley car struck one of the bridge pillars, making it necessary to stop the car and remove the fender until another pillar, which was also in the way, had been passed.

For from $10.00 to $20.00

One may select a baby carriage that is bound to suit any taste; 50 just arrived.

ANTHONY & COWELL CO.

BOSTON'S ALDERMEN.

Deadlock Broken by a Compromise.

Boston, Jan. 21.—The Post will say to-morrow that an agreement was reached this afternoon between the contending factions in the Board of Aldermen whereby Ald. Conry, a Democrat, will preside until July 1 and Ald. Dyer, a Republican, the remaining six months. This compromise breaks the deadlock over the Chairmanship and renders the appeal to the courts, which was made to-day, unnecessary.

Oil Stove Exploded.

Box 37, corner of South Main and Wickenden streets, was rung in about 5:30 o'clock last evening for a fire in the rear of 62 Wickenden street. The blaze started in a little cottage occupied by Charles C. Brown from the explosion of an oil stove. The flames were quickly extinguished after the arrival of the fire department before any serious damage was done. The property belongs to the heirs of Lorenzo D. Millard.

Siege of Havana.

How Lord Albemarle captured the city in 1762. Moro Castle defied English expedition 44 days.—Sunday Journal.

Populist Aldrich Seated.

Washington, Jan. 21.—The House committee on elections by a party vote on the contested election case of W. F. Aldrich vs. Thomas S. Plowman in the Fourth Alabama district decided to seat Mr. Aldrich, the Populist candidate. Mr. Plowman now occupies the seat.

the members of Lodge Prudence, No. 11, O. S. C., by a concert and ball, which was held in the Auditorium and which was a success in every particular. There was a large attendance, including many visitors from out of town, in addition to the members of the local clan.

Among those who were seated upon the platform were Grand Chief William Wallace, Chief James Harvey of Clan Cameron of Providence, Chief George McKenzie, Rev. Alexander McGregor, His Honor Mayor John F. Adams, ex-Mayor John W. Davis, David S. Fraser and James Melklejohn.

The concert commenced at 8 o'clock, and the following artists participated: Mr. George Fulton, tenor; Mr. Robert Donaldson, baritone; Mr. John Clegg, cornet soloist; Mr. William Neilte, clarionet soloist; Miss Katherine McLeod, contralto, Miss J. Tait, mezzo-soprano, Miss Agnes Hyde, reader and impersonator, Miss Corina Clegg, pianist; Imperial Orchestra, Sadler, W. Black.

After the Scotch overture, "Robin Adair," by the orchestra, and an address by the Chairman, Chief George McKenzie, the following programme was rendered, nearly every participant being obliged to respond to the encores:

Song, "The Highland Maiden's Toast," Miss J. Tait, song, selected, Mr. Robert Donaldson; reading, "Tam O'Shanter," Miss Agnes Hyde; cornet solo, "Bonnie Scotland," Mr. John Clegg; song, "Tom Glen," Miss Katherine McLeod; song, "Auld Lang Syne," Mr. George Fulton; address, "Robert Burns," Rev. Alexander McGregor, song, "Lass o' Ballochmyle," Miss Katherine McLeod; song, selected, Mr. Robert Donaldson; reading, "Mrs. Macpherson's Visit to New York," Miss Agnes Hyde; clarinet solo, "Coming Thro' the Rye," Mr. William Neelte; song, "The Star o' Robbie Burns," Miss J. Tait, song, "Oh Are ye Sleeping, Maggie," Mr. George Fulton; finale, "Auld Lang Syne."

At the conclusion of the entertainment the floor was cleared for dancing, and after Chief McKenzie and lady had led the long line through a series of intricate evolutions, dancing was enjoyed until a late hour, with a brief intermission for refreshments. The general floor director was Thomas Mulcheid and George McCreadie and James Dick acted as assistants. The committees in charge of the affair were as follows: Mr. James Melklejohn, Chairman; Mr. William Black, Secretary, Mr. James Bain, Treasurer; Mr. George McKenzie, Mr. Andrew Forester, Mr. Henry Craick, Mr. Thomas Mulrhead, Jr., Mr. Matthew Lang. Reception Committee—Mr George McKenzie, Mr. William Wallace.

"Prof. Baxter's Invention."

In the presence of about 800 persons the farce, "Professor Baxter's Great Invention," was presented last evening in High School Hall by a number of the students in the school. The entertainment was given under the auspices of the class of '98 and under the direction of Mrs. Cora H. Dimpsey, a teacher in the school. The cast of characters was as follows: Benjamin Franklin Baxter, Charles Aumann, '99; Peter Crawford, Philip D. Sherman, '98; Samuel Woolley, Charles F. Jenks, '98; Roxanna Tucker, Grace M. Hughes, '98; Dorothy Tucker, Mercy Kent, 1901; Mary Ann O'Flynn, Louise Fairman, 1901.

The story of the piece is based upon the incidents which happened to Prof. Baxter, who has invented a wonderful electrical machine, whereby any desired age may be restored to those past the "summer of life" who have sufficient courage to try the experiment. Dorothy Tucker, Woolley and Crawford are patients desiring the wonderful treatment. They are placed in the invention, Mary Ann consenting to accompany them, and startling results follow. Roxanna, Dorothy's sister, a confirmed old maid, consents to wed Prof. Baxter and Dorothy finds in Woolley her long lost lover, and, to the happiness of both, Roxanna consents to their marriage.

All of the parts were sustained in able manner, that of the professor, which was heir and the affair proved very pleasurable to all. The festivities opened with a grand march which was led by Charles Ryan and Miss Ida Murphy. The floor was in charge of Charles L. Ryan and his assistant was John T. Banks. The following acted as aids: Miss Lizzie Gorman, Miss Annie Powers, Miss Nellie Tripp, Miss Bertha Devlin, J. J. O'Connor, M. O'Clara, C. Jackson. The reception committee consisted of Richard McLoughlin John Goodwin and James McDonnell. The committee of arrangements was as follows: John T. Banks, Chairman, Charles L. Ryan Secretary; Peter H. Mosley, Treasurer; Edward H. Dempsey, John Goodwin Charles J. Morris, Thomas A. Sullivan and James L. McDonnell.

The "Typos" Banquet.

The members of Pawtucket Typographical Union, No. 212, held a banquet last evening in Havens's Nite room, and in addition to a large numbers of the members several invited guests were in attendance. After doing full justice to the repast which was provided, the party adjourned to the rooms of the union where there was a social session, and excellent entertainment being provided. The entertainment consisted of graphophone solo, solos under the direction of Frank T. Sibley, songs by Wm. Hamp Browning, readings and selections by Harry D. Gifford and J. Frank Dixon, mandolin selections by Alexander Crawshaw, and selections by the Electric Banjo Club. Previous to the banquet Fidelic Organizer of Rhode Island George R. Sullivan installed the following officers: President Fayette Gee; Vice President Thomas H. Harrison; Secretary and Treasurer John P. Dell; Sergeant-at-Arms—Ernest Rankine. The committee in charge of last night's affair consisted of John P. Dell, Frank T. Sibley, Thomas H. Harrison and Fayette Gee.

The union was organized Dec. 3, by State Organizer F. F. Sorbie called the meeting to order and F. F. Sibley was obligated as the first President. After taking the chair he administered the oath to the following charter members: A. J. Lewis, C. Taylor, C. D. Judson, D. B. Fuller, F. F. Ward, A. Hall, C. Rattnel, P. O'Donnell, W. H. Bosey, E. Sutcliffe, E. Lothrop and C. Spratt. There have been two deaths in the ranks of No. 212, that of Carl H. A. Raithel, who died in May, 1889, and John Leach, who died Nov. 10, 1897. The Pawtucket Union has had but little trouble with employers during the past 10 years. Only one strike occurred and that ended successfully for the union.

Court Love and Truth Hall.

The 23d annual ball of Court Love and Truth, No. 2, Foresters of America, was held last evening in Music Hall assembly rooms, and it was entirely successful. There was a large attendance, fully 60 couples participating in the dancing, the music for which was Auburn Club entertained about 60 of the members and invited guests at Aetna Hall, where dancing was enjoyed until the small hours of the morning. A collation was served. The gathering will long be remembered as one of the pleasantest meetings of the club. The music was furnished by George A. Slocum, piano, Charles McCloskey, violin, and Mr. T. Padley, cornet.

Mr. Arthur H. Griggs of New York city will speak from a subject chosen by the audience at the regular meeting held by the Theosophical Society to-morrow evening, at 7:30 o'clock, at 321 Main street.

Continued on Page 11.

You Will be Surprised

To find so much attractiveness and style in a baby carriage for the

ANTHONY & COWELL CO.

Common Pleas Division of the Supreme Court.—Providence County.

Friday Afternoon

(Before Mr. Justice Douglas.)

John D. Sullivan vs. Antonio Jackvony. Verdict for plaintiff for $81.

(Before Mr. Justice Bosworth.)

Herbert L. Leach vs. Inter-State Consolidated Street Railway Company. Matthew J. Leach vs. same. At the conclusion of the arguments of counsel the Court rises.

Adjourned to Saturday at 9:30 o'clock a. m.

Fashions.

Folly of Paris gives a variety of ideas on the new rest of the skirt. Illustrated in the Sunday Journal.

Roxbury Boy Housebreakers.

Boston, Jan. 21. Hawkins, Luptill, Davis and Shouies, the quartet of alleged Roxbury boy housebreakers, were given a hearing in the Roxbury District Court to-day before Judge Hoister. Just before the adjournment of the Court Henry E. Weeks one of the Government witnesses, fainted and had to be carried from the stand. The first case heard was that of Hawkins.

All of the four prisoners were then placed on trial on the charge of breaking and entering the residence of Albert L. Crowell. The case was not finished when Court adjourned.

Verdict for Plaintiff.

In the case of John D. Sullivan against Antonio Jackvony, which was on trial before Judge Douglas yesterday, the jury returned a verdict for the plaintiff for $7.81.

HUNTER BALTIMORE RYE.

10 YEARS OLD

The BEST Whiskey IN AMERICA.

Indorsed by Leading Physicians.

To Ladies obliged to use a stimulant it is recommended because of its Absolute Purity, Gentle Mellowness and Great Age.

WM. LANAHAN & SON, Baltimore, Md.

Sold at all First-class Cafes.

HANLEY, HOYE & CO., RHODE ISLAND AGENTS, Providence, R. I.

help of the Oscar II and on Jan. 5 arrived at Fayal. At that port a spare propeller, which had been carried on board, was put in and the Munificent then set out again homeward this port.

SPEAK OUT.

The Searchlight of Publicity is Pleasing Providence People.

Publicity is what the people want. Let the public speak on the subject. There has been too much claim—too little proof.

Claims made by strangers are not proof.

There is only one kind of proof for a Providence citizen.

The experience of people we know.

When friends and neighbors endorse. Make public statement of their case.

There can be no question about such evidence.

This is the proof we have.

Which backs every box of Doan's Kidney Pills.

No other kidney pills, no other kidney remedy.

Can produce such proof.

Here is one case of the many we have.

Mr. Herbert C. Bond, policeman, of 31 Lester street, says: "While on duty I slipped and fell, besides dislocating my shoulder and badly bruising my hip, I strained or wrenched my back just over the kidneys. The pain and shoulder were soon healed, but my back seemed to get worse and worse. I went back to duty as soon as possible, but the exposure to all kinds of weather only aggravated the trouble and I suffered a great deal. I used plaster after plaster without knocking under but finally I was compelled to quit. I was off duty 30 days, 10 of which I spent in bed. My physician got me on my feet again, but the pain was still there. I saw Doan's Kidney Pills at Lathrop's drug store, more out of curiosity than for any other reason, but all the results that I had tried previously had failed me to a end. I began taking them, however, and almost immediately began to feel better. I was soon entirely free from pain and felt as strong and hearty as ever. I do not believe there is a kidney remedy in the world equal to Doan's Kidney Pills."

Doan's Kidney Pills for sale by all dealers. Price 50 cents. Mailed by Foster-Milburn Co., Buffalo, N. Y., sole agents for the U. S. Remember the name, Doan's, and take no other.

WE WILL FURNISH YOUR

WEDDING CANOPY

And afterward anything in the DRAPERY and WALL PAPER line. Cover your Furniture, supply you with Window Screens, etc., etc., at prices as low as any in the city.

D. C. H. TINKHAM,

DECORATIVE UPHOLSTERER,

857 WESTMINSTER STREET.

Happy Homestead. No charge for estimates.

125 JMWFSHTuTS

RAW FURS WANTED

Such as Mink, Fox, Skunk, Otter, Muskrat, etc. Highest cash prices paid.

EDWIN G. BAKER, 104 South Water St.

BEST COPY AVAILABLE

The Emma Goldman Papers

890117008

[Summary of Lecture] In Hedley Hall / Emma Goldman.– p. 5 ; 28 cm. In The Evening Bulletin [Providence]. –(Jan. 24, 1898).

Obtained from the Providence Public Library, Providence, RI.

IES.

ntly Changing Bicycle.

DRAWBRIDGE OINT.

ointed Screws.
eed Engines.—
evel Gears for

pply chaugeable have been made.
t is desirable to evel road when for fast riding
or hills, sandy
, provided the
at will and the
as the parts of
ear. But as yet
ption has been
The rider is lim-anges cannot be
cial tools are re-
on requires time
The number of
e machine shops
d changed is too
Those able to
d put on another to remove chain
hain. The rider, ear and uses it
unless for spe-or lower gear is at event the al-professional re-

gear has been
by Mr. William and wheelmen
ted in it, even if ra weight and
It is stated that instantaneously

sengers to suspect that the factor of safety was pretty small.

Gimlet Pointed Screws.

In reply to the inquiry of an Iron Age correspondent in regard to the date at which gimlet pointed screws were first made, the American Screw Company of this city states:

"The query has raised the question as to what may properly be called "gimlet pointed" wood screws, for pointed screws were undoubtedly made as early as the year 1755, since a plane of that date containing them was exhibited at Worcester, Mass., in the year 1879, and in a French publication dated Paris, 1771, is an illustration of a tapered shank-screw, threaded to the point.

"The company has a sample card of Japy Freres, screw maker at Beaucourt, France, with gimlet pointed screws attached, not having tapered bodies, but practically the same as they are made to-day. This card was in possession of the New England Screw Company of this city and it is supposed that these screws were produced on American machinery, which was sent to Japy Freres from Poughkeepsie, N. Y., in 1855, or thereabouts.

"The United States patent No 154 dated March 30, 1837, to Sloat of Tymaqua, N. Y., and Springsteen of Poughkeepsie, N. Y., says "So that the screw may be made a gradual taper or all the way of a size, or give it an acute taper at the point, making what we call 'gimlet points.'" The Poughkeepsie Screw Company was chartered in 1836 and failed in 1839 and was an important concern in its day. A diploma awarded that company in 1837 by the Mechanics' Institute of New York city for "tapered wood screws" is held by the American Screw Company. Presumably, this last-mentioned type of screws went out of use with the failure of the Poughkeepsie Screw Company, for at that time die threading machinery began to be generally utilized and this type was unsuitable for making pointed screws.

"One of the then leading makers, the New England Screw Company of Providence, R. I., and one of the predecessors of the American Screw Company, however, about 1845 employed machinery that used a chasing tool and was able to produce a tapered screw, and probably did so upon the suggestion afforded by the sample card of French screws previously mentioned.

"About this time Gen Thomas W. Harvey and Thomas J. Sloan were separately engaged in constructing screw machinery in the same building in New York city, but to what extent they made pointed screws is not clear. There was difficulty in producing good points with any of the machinery at that time in use which might be noticeable were the roller absolutely hollow.

Slow, Medium and High Speed Engines.

There is a tendency on the part of designers of electric plants to adopt engines of medium (100 to 150 revolutions) and of high speed (300 to 600 revolutions), so as to combine the dynamo with the steam motor or to adopt the model of dynamo fly wheel. After considering the advantages of medium and of high speed engines as compared to normal speed engines (about 70 revolutions), a Power writer is convinced that he adoption of rapidly running machines is not generally justified.

The English have adopted vertical engines of very great speed for provisional plants, and as soon as the central station is on a good basis powerful motors of slow speed operating dynamos by belts or cables are adopted for the permanent plants.

On examining the two methods we find: The high speed engine is worn out sooner, and consequently requires much more steam from that moment. It must therefore be sunk quicker. Constructors of this type allege they do not get worn out any sooner, provided perfectly constructed. This reason is, however, not to be taken seriously. Does common sense not say that an engine can only do a certain number of revolutions? An engine of 150 revolutions will thus only last half the time of one making only 75, unless one could prove that of two engines made with the same care and material, the one which works slowest will be worn out first.

There are to be seen engines of 35 revolutions that have worked for more than 50 years and are only moderately worn out, although constructed with little precision, while those better made, turning at 70 revolutions, are more worn after 25 years use. A quick-running engine is also more liable to break and requires more repairs and attention. All the trials have proved that those engines, as well at medium speed as at great speed, consume more steam than slow-speed engines. These trials are besides in entire accord with the theory which says that the excess of consumption arises from internal condensation. These condensations, being repeated very often, increase evidently the consumption.

The consumption of oil is also excessive. In the engines of medium speed the stroke only diminishes, the diameters of the cylinders being sensibly the same as in the engines of slow speed. The consequence is that all parts having the same dimensions and turning quicker they require more oil. This also explains the small difference in the price between the two kinds of engines medium and slow speed.

Under these circumstances the power absorbed by the engine is also enormous. Experiments have proved that the bearings of an engine absorb half of the total power absorbed by the engine. The shaft of high-speed engines being of same diameter, the work on the piston remains the same, because the diameter has not varied, but this shaft, turning twice as quickly, absorbs certainly double the power. The engine constitutes only a trifling part of the total cost of an electric plant, while the coal consumption, which depends upon the type of engine, is the heaviest in cost. Such being the case, it is important to choose the most economical engine. Take the two following examples: 1. An engine of 150 revolutions having a dynamo fly wheel. 2—An engine of 70 revolutions driving a dynamo of normal speed 300 or 400 revolutions by belt or cables.

In the first instance the engine will cost a trifle less than in the second but the

IN HEDLEY HALL.

Miss Emma Goldman Again Holds Forth Under Difficulties.

UNDER AUSPICES OF WENDELL PHILLIPS EDUCATIONAL CLUB.

A Slight Misunderstanding In Money Matters Caused a Delay in Opening the Meeting, but a Characteristic Audience Was Finally Gathered, and the Anarchist Spoke at Considerable Length and with Some Vim.

Old fashioned people who heard that tremendous clap of thunder about 11 o'clock yesterday morning, said it was a sign that the backbone of the winter had broken. The faithful few of the Wendell Phillips Educational Club, before the day was out, realized that it was a portent of disaster, an omen of a calamity. It was a warning of a blow at freedom of speech such as might have caused more mighty results than something else. It was a tip of trouble to come, trouble that came with full force when Emma Goldman, the Anarchist, was locked out of Hedley Hall on Randall square.

Locked out, it was whispered, at the behest of the Socialists who were to occupy the hall in the evening, or because the amount of the rent was not at once forthcoming. And this, after the club had paid $1 in advance to bind the bargain. Pressure was brought to bear on Charles Cohen, the lessee of the hall, but he remained firm. Despair filled the heart of the faithful John H. Peck. He hastened to the hall, where some squares of wall paper, lettered on the back, announced the meeting.

"It's off!" he said. The 13 men and boys assembled around the door accepted his statement without comment. Then he started with another member of the club, to notify the lecturer, who had received a hint of trouble, and had not come to the hall. But the energetic speaker and martyr was not to be so easily snuffed out. She could feel her inner light burning with a free wick and a clean burner, and she declined to be thus discouraged. She sent them back again, and by the payment of three extra dollars, the hall was secured and the meeting began an hour late. Thus was a social revolution averted, and a deed more despotic in its way than the arrest of the Anarchist at her last visit here, prevented.

Hedley Hall has been so often filled with waves of hot argument and fiery speeches that the walls are smoky and black. The windows are washed once a year, perhaps, and are never opened, under any circumstances. The result, when the hall is packed full of Hebrews of both sexes, with a few Americans, is a combination of odors more strange and powerful than the atmos-

ST. VINCENT'S GUILD.

Observance of the Thirteenth Anniversary at St. Stephen's Church.

The 13th anniversary of St. Vincent's Guild, connected with St. Stephen's Church, was held last night. The members of the guild were present in a body, and occupied seats reserved for them in the centre of the church. The sermon was preached by Rev. Walter Gardner Webster, M. A., who took as his text, "Be not overcome with evil, but overcome evil with good." In substance, he said:

"Men frequently speak of the struggle of life, and bring before us the realization that this life we have to live is a serious matter; that there are difficulties with which we have to contend. These difficulties assume different forms. The worst, perhaps the most serious, are the insidious temptations of Satan.

"This epistle was written to the Christians in Rome, that great city of ancient times.

"How many young men have thrilled as they read of the triumph of that great city. At its magnificence and its glories. The Romans did not learn to reverence themselves, and that is the reason of their downfall and that of their fair city. There are three ways of overcoming temptation. Let us take the surmounting of one of the mountain peaks of Switzerland by three young men as an illustration of these ways.

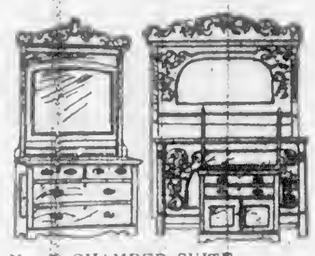
"The three young men start out blithely and merrily, but finally the way begins to grow hard. One says: 'It is easier to go down than it is to go up.' He goes down, at first gradually, then faster. At last he goes over a precipice to destruction.

"The other two young men go on. One decides to go alone without a guide. He steps on a treacherous piece of snow and ice and he, too, meets death. The third secures a reliable guide, and although the way is hard, he and his guide finally reach the top. The moral is that one yields willingly to temptation. The other tries to do battling in himself, and the other puts implicit trust in the Son of God and is led by Him to victory.

"In the youth Satan finds a particular field for practicing his wiles. He says to the young man: 'The Bible and Christianity are very well for old men and women.' It is then that Satan comes to us as a deceiver. There is no truth and no good but that which comes from God. When is resistance best made and when is it most effective? The answer is not difficult to find. Then the heart is receptive and absorbs the good influences which may be thrown around it."

The speaker referred to the upright life of William E. Gladstone and the influence for good which it was, and said that to live such a life the text must be followed out—"Overcome evil with good."

"It is by the cross of Christ that we are to conquer all, and this epistle is meant for this guild, for you are all included in the Church and are followers of Christ. You, as young men, have to meet the machinations of Satan, and what better examination have than that of St. Vincent. He faithfully adhered to his religion under the greatest persecution, and then and there, we are told, his glorification began. He maintained his faith in the Church and clung to Christ until, on Jan. 22, he was carried to the land of glory. Vincent is not victory. It is not the one whose



PRE-INVENTORY SALE

—OF—

Chamber Suites and Sideboards.

A large number of Chamber Suites and Sideboards on hand of which we wish to dispose before February stock taking. Every one of them in perfect condition and all this season's stock. If you are in need of a Chamber Suite or Sideboard this is

YOUR OPPORTUNITY.

1 No. 69 CHAMBER SUITE, was $25.00, clearance sale price 17.25

1 No. 36 CHAMBER SUITE, was $30.00, clearance sale price 19.00

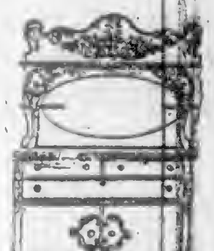
1 No. 47[illegible] CHAMBER SUITE, was $30.00, clearance sale price 20.00

1 No. 42[illegible] CHAMBER SUITE, was $33.00, clearance sale price 22.00

1 No. 1[illegible] CHAMBER SUITE, was $47.00, clearance sale price 37.00

1 No. 10[illegible] CHAMBER SUITE, was $45.00, clearance sale price 33.00

1 No. 1[illegible] CHAMBER SUITE, was $50.00, clearance sale price 39.00



1 No. 2[illegible] CHAMBER SUITE, was $60.00, clearance sale price 44.00

1 No. 9[illegible] CHAMBER SUITE, was $85.00, clearance sale price 49.00

1 No. 67[illegible] CHAMBER SUITE, was $56.00, clearance sale price 42.50

1 No. 66[illegible] CHAMBER SUITE, was $75.00, clearance sale price 52.50

1 No. 7[illegible] CHAMBER SUITE, was $86.00, clearance sale price 64.00

1 No. 283 SIDEBOARD, was $14.00, clearance sale price 10.00

1 No. 296 SIDEBOARD, was $20.00, clearance sale price 10.50

1 No. 800 SIDEBOARD, was $18.00, clearance sale price 13.00

1 No. 46 SIDEBOARD, was $20.00, clearance sale price 15.00

1 No. 286 SIDEBOARD, was $28.00, clearance sale price 18.00

1 No. 278 SIDEBOARD, was $27.00, clearance sale price 19.00

1 No. 841 SIDEBOARD, was $33.00, clearance sale price 22.50

1 No. 73 SIDEBOARD, was $34.00, clearance sale price 25.00

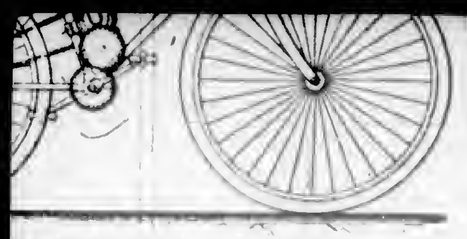
1 No. 327 SIDEBOARD, was $37.00, clearance sale price 28.00

1 No. 64 SIDEBOARD, was $38.50, clearance sale price 30.00

1 No. 215 SIDEBOARD, was $42.00, clearance sale price 30.00

1 No. 252 SIDEBOARD, was $50.00, clearance sale price 36.00

1 No. 70 SIDEBOARD, was $57.00, clearance sale price 40.00



1 No. 313 SIDEBOARD, was $60.00, clearance sale price 45.00

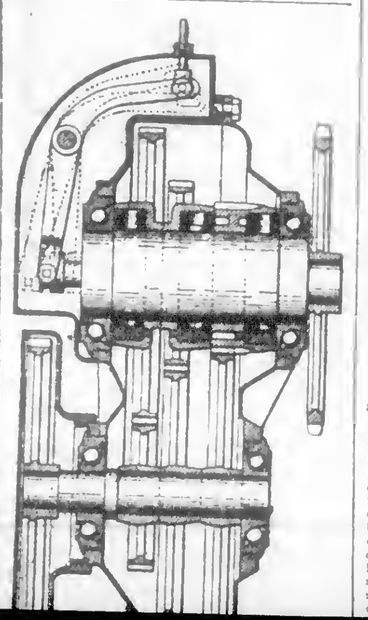
890117008

The Emma Goldman Papers

[Summary of Lecture] In Hedley Hall / Emma Goldman.— p. 5 ; 28 cm. In The Evening Bulletin [Providence]. —(Jan. 24, 1898).

Obtained from the Providence Public Library, Providence, RI.

ORLISS CHANGEABLE GEAR.



e connection the rear so that on a nger of run- ears are dis- ed in a case me. Three- tubular shaft orresponding power until d with the f the loose ovilled each recess of the act with it The ring is er of open- erse recess, ment which gear. This t each end. ring. f the tubu- ach of the sed at one crew-thread posite open r so as to bs are se- o the tubu- bes with a ovided with gs. These nd having s also have rolled by a n and slides d the slots a concaved the convex lower ends recesses are th reference convex sec- in the con- e other con- edge slight- f the convex bolts, and oved longi- tion a dis- the diame- central bolt he recess in rther move- rmit another nding recess n the corre- with which nstruction. In ous openings m one speed e practically gh a screw- nt, the screw- tubular shaft, locking-collr, ontains oil for e. The pro- ort for the ng end of the , with which engages. The pivot and is rank lever, to od is secured gh a slot, so through the lt. The upper to the bell- n a bracket of the frame ected with a ly supported a segment- ich the lever he slide per- connect with By moving and Sloan invented and patented a machine for doing this, as well as a screw, which is described in the following language from his patent, No. 4704, dated Aug. 30, 1846, reissued: "Making wood screws with the core of a cylindrical or nearly cylindrical form, and with a conical point, in combination with the thread of equal pitch along the conical point and body—that is, with all the convolutions at equal distances apart, and of gradually less depth from the base to the apex of the core." The Sloan inventions were purchased by the Eagle Screw Company of Providence—another of the predecessors of the American Screw Company—but this company did not furnish pointed screws in quantity until about 1852.

Sloan's style of screw, and mainly his inventions, are those in general use by screw makers to-day throughout the world.

Roving Frame Gear.

An improved bevel gear for roving frames, designed by Joseph J. Schofield of this city, is made in separable parts, in order that a worn out gear may be repaired without the removal of the driving shaft, and the driving gears attached.

The hub of the gear is permanently held upon the shaft by a set-screw, the said hub being made in one piece and provided with an external screw-thread and limiting-shoulder. The toothed segments of the gear are adapted to interlock with each other, one segment having projecting lips, which, at their inner sides are provided with the studs and the other segment is provided at its back with recesses, adapted to receive and fit the lips of the first segment, and stitutes only a trifling part of the total cost of an electric plant, while the coal consumption, which depends upon the type of engine, is the heaviest in cost. Such being the case, it is important to choose the most economical engine. Take the two following examples: 1—An engine of 120 revolutions having a dynamo by wheel; 2—An engine of 70 revolutions driving a dynamo of normal speed (300 or 400 revolutions) by belt or cables.

In the first instance the engine will cost a trifle less than in the second, but the dynamo will cost considerably more. The only thing in favor of the first instance is the absence of the belt, which takes 2 to 3 per cent. of the transmitted power. But this 2 to 3 per cent. or more is regained in the smaller consumption of the engine of 70 revolutions.

It remains only in favor of the engine of 120 revolutions, that it requires a somewhat smaller place.

But does this trifling advantage equal those which favor the engine of 70 revolutions, which has these advantages: Less steam consumed, less oil consumed, less power absorbed by the engine, less wear, fewer accidental risks, no clever machinists necessary.

Furthermore, in the first instance in case of accidents the motive power is entirely dependent on the electrical unit, whereas with a belt the dynamo has simply to be replaced by another one or by its neighbor, which means greater security. The number of spare units necessary will be smaller and the operation will be more profitable; moreover, no units of thousand horse-powers will be made idle for months by the engine or by the dynamo.

As to the tandem engine, it is inferior to compound engines not only on account of its steam consumption, as all the trials have proven, but also with regard to production. In fact, the entire power works on one end of the shaft, instead of being divided equally at each of the two ends with the fly wheel in the center. This necessitates a much stronger shaft, absorbing more power, the friction in the cylinder remaining the same and being even increased a little by the wear of the piston. Besides, the fly wheel for the tandem has to be heavier, as all the power is in two strokes per revolution, instead of in four strokes, as in the cross compound engines. These two reasons increase consequently in a large measure the absorbed power, and, of course, the consumption of steam and oil.

Tobacco Cutter.

A machine for reducing plug tobacco to shavings was patented recently by David Jackson of Pawtucket.

A pedestal or stand, cast hollow, has a chamber at its upper end to hold a vertical cutter disk. This chamber is divided through its center horizontally, and a gap is formed of the upper part that is connected by hinges to the lower part, to allow of ready access to the disk which is held fast on a horizontal shaft, that turns in bearings in each side of the lower part of the chamber, and has a balance wheel on its front end provided with a handle to turn the shaft and disk by. A horizontal trough extends out back from the chamber a little below its centre, and an opening is made from the trough to the inside of the case through which the tobacco passes to the knives in the cutting disk.

A slot is made through the bottom of the trough lengthways and a vertical pressure plate placed across the trough is arranged to slide in it and has an arm extending down through the slot to connect it with a nut on a screw below. This screw extends through the front and back of the chamber, in which it has bearings. A spacing gear wheel is on the shaft, just in front of the chamber, which has three teeth entering between studs on the face of a disk on a stud fast in the front of the case below the shaft. The periphery of the disk, between the teeth, is made on a circle of about the diameter of the pitch line of the teeth and the disk has the spaces on its circumference between the studs cut out in a concave shape on a circle of the same diameter, so that the

was a social revolution abroad, and a deed more despotic in its way than the arrest of the Anarchist at her last visit here, prevented.

Hedley Hall has been so often filled with waves of hot argument and fiery speeches that the walls are smoky and black. The windows are washed once a year, perhaps, and are never opened, under any circumstances. The result, when the hall is packed full of Hebrews of both sexes, with a few Americans, is a combination of odors more strange and powerful than the atmosphere in the vicinity of a gas works or a glue factory. Miss Goldman kept the air moving with waves of fiery eloquence, each applauded more freely than its predecessor. There were no police in the background, and the speaker was, perhaps, disappointed that they might not hear what she thought of them.

There were lots of small Jewish boys in that audience, and they nearly all crowded to the front, where they walked around and fell in with the applause. On the platform, in charge of the meeting, sat the venerable Charles Gano Baylor. Mr. Baylor introduced Miss Goldman, who was applauded tumultuously at frequent intervals throughout her address, in which she arraigned existing society and called for the abolition of law.

The address lasted an hour, and exhausted Miss Goldman, who is not at the best of health. At its close Mr. Cook said it had been suggested to him that she repeat the address in Hebrew. In view of the fact that so large a part of the audience was of that nationality, and that in the meantime Mr Baylor should favor the assemblage with a dissertation. Mr. Baylor was willing, and spoke on jew baiting, saying that all the artists, the statesmen, the authors the great men of the world at the present time are or have come from Jewish stock. This caused great applause, and he repeated it to the accompaniment of more applause.

Miss Goldman then started to talk in Hebrew, but with great presence of mind broke off almost at once and announced that a collection would be taken up to defray the expenses. Hats were passed around, and $3 6 earned from hunted capitalists was gained. While that was going on Miss Goldman passed around tickets, which for the small sum of 25 cents gave the holder a chance in the drawing of some articles made in prison by a young man of Pennsylvania, who had been in jail for the last four years for the crime of having been with the man who shot at the tyrant Frick at Homestead. No announcement was made of how the holder could learn whether or not he had drawn anything. The excitement of guessing at this was, presumably thrown in with the ticket.

After the address in Hebrew, questions were in order, and the air was filled with bobbing heads at once. Miss Goldman selected one out of the bunch and signed its owner to proceed. He spoke in Hebrew, and got plenty of applause, in which the small boys led, with the cheerful impartiality they had shown the lecturer. After some one had pulled the coattails of the speaker he sat down and mopped his brow, while Miss Goldman explained that the man had made an argument against that part of her address relating to laws. Questions and not arguments were wanted, she said, and she then put him to flight to the tune of more applause.

One man had the temerity to get up and say that Miss Goldman had spoken for two hours Friday night and for two hours that afternoon, and had not explained anything. Miss Goldman dismissed him with the announcement that he was a Social Democrat, and the Social Democrats were always making trouble. Then she explained anarchy and socialism again. Another speaker said he had read much about anarchy and its benefits, but had never seen anything that told how to put the principles in practice.

He was also disposed of, and then a contest commenced as to which one of half a dozen men in the rear of the hall should speak first. Then all talked together in Hebrew, which was somewhat confusing, and a member of the club, who had started to make an address from the platform, finally gave meant for this guild, for you are all included in the Church and are followers of Christ. You, young men, have to meet the machinations of Satan, and what better example can you have than that of St. Vincent. He faithfully adhered to his religion under the greatest persecution, and then and there, we are told, his glorification began. He maintained his faith in the Church and clung to Christ until on Jan. 22, he was carried to the gates of glory. Vincent is not victory. It is not the one whose armor has been laid aside but it means one that goes forth to conquer. And so bye and bye when we have laid aside our armor, if we are faithful in our warfare, we shall wear the crown of eternal life, and be received into the kingdom of heaven.

For from $ 6.00 to $20.00

One may select a bag or carriage that is bound to suit any taste. Call and see what we have.

ANTHONY A. COWELL CO.

MASSACHUSETTS DEMOCRACY.

Chairman Callahan Maintains the Integrity of His Election.

Springfield, Mass., Jan. 23.—Mr. Christopher T. Callahan, Chairman of the Democratic State committee, in an interview to-day with a Republican representative stated that he prepared an official statement concerning his position regarding the attempts being made to divide the Democracy of the State. Mr. Callahan says, in part, that the meeting held at the American House, Boston, on Saturday was held in strict accordance with the law; that all its proceedings were perfectly fair and legal, that no member of the committee was refused admittance; that Mr. Lee was not a member of the committee and had no legal right to participate in the proceedings, that no one but members was in the room; that the opposition refused to attend the meeting until the meeting had been called to order. Then the gentlemen "who are now seeking to overthrow the State committee organization" flocked into the room; that the opposition took a very active and prominent part in the proceedings, and that Mr. Conkley's nomination for Secretary was defeated by a vote of 24 to 18 with four not voting.

Mr. Callahan was then nominated for Chairman, and the gentlemen who favored Mr. Cooke's candidacy refused to vote and withdrew from the room after Mr. Callahan's election.

Mr. Callahan says that the contention of these gentlemen that they represent a majority of the committee is sufficiently answered by their failure to secure the presence of a majority at their adjourned meeting Saturday. He concludes his statement as follows:

"Being duly elected Chairman, I deem it tu be my duty to the Democrats of the State to discharge the duties of that office until displaced by a majority of the committee whose will, legally expressed, I shall at all times be ready to submit.

"But let it be clearly understood that the submission to the signature of any writing to the members of the committee affecting the Chairmanship is done without my consent and in no way justified by the action I have taken or any statement I have made, and that I shall pay no attention to any action taken outside of a regular and duly called meeting of the committee. The committee adjourns subject to my call, and any gathering not so called purporting to be a meeting of the Democratic State committee is illegal and without power. I appeal to members of the Democratic State committee to cease this destructive internal warfare and to join hands with me in a determined effort to build up and strengthen the Democracy of Massachusetts for the stern battle to be fought this fall for the advancement of the great principles proclaimed at Chicago in 1896."

A SWINDLER OF MASONS.

was $36.00, clearance sale price 40.00

1 No. 67 CHAMBER SUITE, was $56.00, clearance sale price 42.50

1 No. 69 CHAMBER SUITE, was $75.00, clearance sale price 52.50

1 No. 770 CHAMBER SUITE, was $96.00, clearance sale price 64.00

1 No. 387 CHAMBER SUITE, was $100.00, clearance sale price 67.00

1 No. 66 CHAMBER SUITE, was $110.00, clearance sale price 76.00

1 No. 69 CHAMBER SUITE, was $115.00, clearance sale price 83.00

1 No. 16 CHAMBER SUITE, was $125.00, clearance sale price 92.00

From $2.00 to $10.00 down and from 50c. to $1.00 per week buys any of the above suites.

1 No. 64 SIDEBOARD, was $38.50, clearance sale price ..... 30.

1 No. 215 SIDEBOARD, was $42.00, clearance sale price 30.0

1 No. 252 SIDEBOARD, was $50.00, clearance sale price 36.0

1 No. 70 SIDEBOARD, was $57.00, clearance sale price 40.0

1 No. 213 SIDEBOARD, was $60.00, clearance sale price 45.0

1 No. 248 SIDEBOARD, was $65.00, clearance sale price 47.0

1 No. 224 SIDEBOARD, was $85.00, clearance sale price 67.5

From $1 to $7 down and from 50c. to $1 per week for any of the above sideboards.

SPECIAL.—During this sale only, and with any of the above chamber suites, we will sell one woven wire or link spring, one soft top mattress and one decorated toilet set, worth $12.50, for 7.65

Household Furniture Co

231-237 WEYBOSSET STREET.

TROLLEY CARS ON THE BRIDGE.

Half-Hour Trips Made All Day Sunday.

New York, Jan. 23.—(Special.)—The long expected operation of trolley cars across the Brooklyn bridge began today, and all day there was a curious crowd at the New York end, watching the cars round the loop. The Graham avenue line of the Brooklyn Heights Railroad was selected as the one to make the trip, for the reason that that line carries the largest number of passengers to the bridge. The cars were run on a half-hour headway, and this arrangement will continue until the roadway is widened at the New York end, when all the lines will cross the bridge.

The cars used were of the large, double truck kind, so as to make the test as complete as possible. The first trip was made at 10 a. m., and there were 20 passengers from Brooklyn and the same number coming back. Every car that went over during the day carried "standing loads," and was crowded to the platform. Bridge Superintendent Martin expressed himself as highly pleased with the result of the experiment. The Graham avenue line will be the only one used until the roadway is widened.

FUNERAL SERVICES.

Ex-Representative Munroe.

The funeral of ex-Representative Joseph M. Munroe occurred at the Bethel A. M. E. Church at noon yesterday. The services at the church were largely attended by colored residents from all parts of the city and several societies of which deceased was a member were well represented. The services were set down for 12:30 o'clock and at that hour all the seats with the exception of a few rows in front of the chancel reserved for the family and organizations with which Mr. Munroe during his lifetime was connected were taken up. Upon the arrival of the funeral cortege the casket was taken from the hearse by the bearers, representing the Masonic order, and was carried up in

B. H. Gladding & CO.

Mark-Down Sale OF MEN'S FURNISHINGS.

Bargains in DOMET FLANNEL NIGHT SHIRTS

Only 69c.

Men's FANCY PLAID HOSE —choice styles—

25 and 50c.

SMOKING JACKETS, stylish and comfortable, closing out at Way Down Prices.

FLANNELETTE PAJAMAS

$1.00, worth $1.50.

Full line AMERICAN HOSIERY COMPANY'S Underwear and three months of cold weather to come. You may want to piece out for the season.

BROKEN lots of Ladies', Misses' and Children's Underwear

BEST COPY AVAILABLE

890117008

The Emma Goldman Papers

[Summary of Lecture] In Hedley Hall / Emma Goldman.– p. 5 ; 28 cm. In The Evening Bulletin [Providence]. –(Jan. 24, 1898).

Obtained from the Providence Public Library, Providence, RI.

ous openings
no one speed practically gh a screw-ut, the screw-

nubular shaft,
locking-bolts,
ntain oil for
. The pro-rt for the g end of the
with which ngages. The pivot and is tuk lever, to nd is secured
h a slot, so through the
t. The upper tu the bella bracket of the frame ected with a ly supported a segment-ich the lever he slide per-connect with
By moving ch to another
gh the bell-nf the gears
nd thereby on the pedal-
From the ends to and the shaft of at varying the driving-

a bicycle to be adapted obstruct in e rider, and protected so
th the least meet these a series of able diamethey are the plane of urs are ar-use the least ncised in a
The width of the bev-of the sad-transverse ns, including ail-shaft and lin the discranks of a hanging gear rts, provided ired together

of the casing
ball-bearings
as a bracket cured to the ng, by which the saddleially incloses frame of the be lubricated casing. The they revolve lubricated.

Bridge.

l bridge over a Point were aven by the w York. Now probable that ich has been wners as the
a street, will steel draw-

t Point bridge
eal engineer-ly it had not g time, and dministration ditional tim-Bristol pas-

SPEED CHANGING MECHANISM.

with perforations which receive the studs to hold the segments properly to each other. The segments have an interior screw-thread to fit the screw-thread of the hub, so that when the segments are screwed upon the hub they will be held in proper position by the screw-thread and the shoulder of the hub. By constructing the hub so that the segments are to be screwed up in a direction toward the pinion holding-gear, the required change of parts can be effected without changing the position of the hub upon the shaft or loosening it, which saves time in adjustment.

When the teeth of the gear have become worn out or broken, the segments can be unscrewed from the permanently set hub, and new segments secured in their places, and when the screw-threaded portion of the hub is made tapering, the shoulder may be dispensed with, the tapering form of the hub serving as a shoulder to limit the onward movement of the interlocked segments at the required position on the hub for the engagement of the teeth at the proper depth with the teeth of the gear without requiring the loosening of the hub from its set position on the shaft.

It is evident that the segments will be interlocked with each other by the hook-formed construction of the lips and the recesses so that when so constructed the studs may be dispensed with.

In another form the hub has a screw-thread adapted to receive the interlocked segments from the front end of the hub instead of the rear.

Typewriter Platen.

A typewriting machine platen, patented by Horatio G. Wood of Newport is designed to deaden the noise of the type hammers. The cylinder is made of aluminum and has a plaster of paris core. On the outside of the cylinder is a felt covering, and over the felt is a semi-elastic casing of rubber. The felt and rubber deaden the sound of the type-hammers, and the rubber serves also to prevent the digging of the type-faces into the paper upon the roller by providing a partially-elastic surface to receive the blows. The plaster of paris core is said to prevent vibratory sound shaft, that turns in bearings in each side of the lower part of the chamber, and has a balance wheel on its front end provided with a handle to turn the shaft and disk by. A horizontal trough extends out back from the chamber a little below its centre, and an opening is made from the trough to the inside of the case through which the tobacco passes to the shelves in the cutting disk.

A slot is made through the bottom of the trough lengthways and a vertical pressure plate placed across the trough is arranged to slide in it and has an arm extending down through the slot to connect it with a nut on a screw below. This screw extends through the front end back of the chamber, in which it has bearings. A spacing gear wheel is on the shaft, just in front of the chamber, which has three teeth engaging between studs on the face of a disk on a stud fast in the front of the case below the shaft. The periphery of the disk, between the teeth, is made on a circle of about the diameter of the pitch line of the teeth and the disk has the spaces on its circumference between the studs cut out in a concave shape on a circle of the same diameter, so that the peripheries of the two disks will fit together, and when a tooth has carried the disk by one of the studs one of the curved spaces between the teeth will enter one of the concave spaces between the studs and the disk will be prevented from rushing until another tooth reaches the next stud.

The disk is connected with the screw by a gear wheel on the back of the disk, the teeth of which engage with a gear wheel on the front end of the screw, so that the screw will only turn when a tooth in one disk moves a stud in the other disk and cannot move but so far however fast the machine may be run.

This intermittent motion of the screw is intended to avoid a difficulty met with in machine using a steady screw feed which presses the tobacco continuously on the disk between the knives, and from the nature of the plug tobacco makes the face of the disk sticky and causes friction that makes it laborious to turn the machine. But with the intermittent feed the tobacco is fed forward just as the knife reaches it, and is clear of the disk at all other times. Another advantage claimed for this feed is that the thickness of the shaving cut off is gauged exactly by the motion of the screw and not, as in the other case, by the distance the knife is set out of the disk.

The presser plate that pushes the tobacco into position to be cut by the knives is operated by the screw through a nut, which consists of a case attached to the plate and surrounding the screw and having a lever pivoted to the back of the nut and extending under the screw out in front, with a handle by which it can be raised so as to bring the screw threads on it into engagement with the threads of the screw, and a hook pivoted on the front of the nut at the top catches under the lever and holds it in engagement with the screw until the nut reaches the end of its motion towards the case, when a wire stud in the side of the case strikes the hook and pushes it from under the lever, so as to allow it to drop out of engagement with the screw and the motion of the presser plate ceases. Then it can be drawn back and another plug put in the trough in front of it and the lever again raised and secured by the hook and the cutting can be resumed.

Deputy Naquet Returns to Paris.

Paris, Jan. 23. M. Alfred Naquet, Deputy for Carpentras, one of the Deputies accused during the latest Panama Canal trial, has returned from London, where he went abruptly when the Chamber was asked for authority to prosecute him last March.

had pulled the coattails of the speaker he sat down and mopped his brow, while Miss Goldman explained that the man had made an argument against that part of her address relating to laws. Questions, and not arguments, were wanted, she said, and she then put him to flight to the tune of more applause.

One man had the temerity to get up and say that Miss Goldman had spoken for two hours Friday night and for two hours that afternoon, and had not explained anything. Miss Goldman dismissed him with the announcement that he was a Social Democrat, and the Social Democrats were always making trouble. Then she explained anarchy and socialism again. Another speaker said he had read much about anarchy and its benefits, but had never seen anything that told how to put the principles in practice.

He was also disposed of, and then a restless commence Lad to which one of half a dozen men in the rear of the hall should speak first. Then all talked together in Hebrew, which was somewhat confusing, and a member of the club, who had started to make an address from the platform, finally gave it up. Miss Goldman succeeded, by hard work, in restoring order.

"How long have we got the hall for?" asked one man.

"Until 6 o'clock," was the answer of Mr. Cook.

"Well, I don't intend to stay until then, whether the rest of you do or not," said Miss Goldman. She looked wearily at a man in the centre aisle who was trying to talk with his mouth, lids, hands and his feet at the same time, and then announced the meeting closed.

While the audience was filing down the steep stairs Mr. Cook announced that a woman was present who had spoken after the former meeting at Empress square and who desired to speak again. He said those who wanted to hear her could stay. A large number settled in their seats, and the woman, who afterwards said her name was Mrs. Held, talked in a weak vein of the glories of the higher life and read an extract from Longfellow. That settled most of the audience, and they went out until only a dozen or so were left, standing in front of the platform.

"Salvation Army plan?" asked one man. Someone told him that was what it amounted to, and then he took place beside the speaker and responded "Glory, Amen" at all the pauses.

"You should look to the higher life instead of Anarchy for the betterment of your condition," said the speaker earnestly and weakly. Her hair was gray and she spoke with evident effort.

"Political meeting in Dimond Hall next Sunday night," yelled a man outside the group. "John Nelson will explain to the Jews the new Constitution of the State."

"But the new Constitution is not finished yet," said another. "How can he explain that which is not completed?"

"That's all right," was the cheerful response. "John Nelson can do anything."

At 6 o'clock the janitor was trying to stop the flow of eloquence with the plea that it was time to shut up the hall.

Northern Newfoundland Icebound.

St. Johns, N. F., Jan. 24. A succession of northeast gales is driving the Arctic ice floe in upon the whole northern coast of this island and closing navigation for the winter. Several steamers and other vessels lying in this harbor are loading cargo and are likely to be caught by the barrier and kept here until the wind changes.

Numbers of the people in the northern bays are in destitute condition, but it will be difficult to get relief to them now.

that office until it is [illegible] by a majority of the committee [illegible] whose will, legally expressed, I stand [illegible] all times ready to submit.

"But let it be clearly understood that the submission for resignation of any writing to the members of the committee affecting the [illegible]ship is done without my consent, and is [illegible] in no way justified by the [illegible] I have taken or any statement I have made, and that I shall pay no attention to any action taken outside of a regular and duly called meeting of the committee. The committee adjourned subject to my call, and any gathering not so called purporting to be a meeting of the Democratic State committee is illegal and without power. I appeal to members of the Democratic State committee to cease this destructive internal warfare and to join hands with me in a determined effort to build up and strengthen the Democracy of Massachusetts for the stern battle to be fought this fall for the advancement of the great principles of Democracy proclaimed at Chicago in 1896."

A SWINDLER OF MASONS.

Prince of Wales One of George Fleming's Victims.

Seattle, Wash., Jan. 23.—(Special.)—Masons all over the world agree that George Fleming is one of the greatest swindlers of modern times. Fleming is now in the State penitentiary. He has confessed to having systematically swindled Masons of high degree the world over. Among his victims were Hannis Taylor, American Minister to Spain, the Prince of Wales, of whom he borrowed $150 at a dinner in Paris, and Sir Dudley Ward.

Fleming, although a rogue Mason, is so thoroughly versed in the work and secrets of the Order that he has been praised for his skill in going through its ceremonies by lodges and imposing on the knowledge of careless officers in rural districts. He gained an insight into the Order and worked himself along, gathering information as he went, until he learned by heart the rituals and the secret codes of the craft. For 10 years Fleming has travelled over the country borrowing money of prominent Masons wherever he went, representing himself to be a Mason in hard luck. His itinerary includes a trip around the world, stays at Paris, another at London and sojourns at Washington, Philadelphia, Chicago and New York. He changed his name frequently, but never his methods. In Kentucky he went under the name of Alexander Craig. St. Louis Masons knew him as William Mayo. To the Chicago metropolis he was known as Charles Wilson and in Pennsylvania as William Paul. Fleming imposed on Hannis Taylor for free passage to Gibraltar, and borrowed money wherever he went of Masons who could afford to lose it.

At the last session of the Washington Grand Lodge complaints were received concerning a swindler Mason, Grand Master Baker took up the matter with the Sheriff. Vanderwerker of this county, himself a Mason of high degree. Letters were sent to several Masonic lodges in the country. They received replies, all containing a description of a traveling Mason who was a swindler. The descriptions tallied and finally Fleming was arrested at Davenport, Washington. He confessed and was sentenced to two years in the penitentiary.

You Will Think of Us

When you are ready to purchase your baby carriage. New and beautiful lines just opened by ANTHONY & COGWELL CO.

Martin expressed himself as highly pleased with the result of the experiment. The Graham avenue line will be the only one used until the roadway is widened.

FUNERAL SERVICES.

Ex-Representative Munroe.

The funeral of ex-Representative Joseph M. Munroe occurred at the Bethel A. M. E. Church at noon yesterday. The services at the church were largely attended by colored residents from all parts of the city and several societies of which deceased was a member were well represented. The services were set down for 12:30 o'clock and at that hour all the seats with the exception of a few rows in front of the chancel reserved for the family and organizations with which Mr. Munroe during his lifetime was connected were taken up. Upon the arrival of the funeral cortege the casket was taken from the hearse by the bearers, representing the Masonic order, and was carried up in front of the chancel. The floral tributes were very modest in their character.

The societies attending in a body were King Solomon's Lodge, No. 5, A. F. and A. M., of which deceased was a Past Master; Hope Lodge, Order of Good Samaritans; Hope Lodge, No. 119, Grand United Order of Odd Fellows; representatives from St. Paul's Commandery, Knights Templars, and from military organizations with which he was at one time connected.

As the remains were borne through the church the choir sang "Jesus, Lover of My Soul." The services were conducted by Rev. B. Hammond, pastor of the church, assisted by Rev. J. H. Presley of the Congdon Street Baptist Church. After a hymn by the congregation Brother Thomas read from the Scriptures. Rev. Mr. Presley offered prayer and the choir sang "Abide with Me." The pastor addressed the congregation, speaking an eulogy of the deceased and advising his hearers to be prepared for the end. Mr. Munroe, he said, had made his peace with the Father. The life and characters of the deceased was beyond reproach. He had attained a prominence in the community which no other member of the race had attained in this city. Mr. Munroe, he said, was born in Williamsport, Pa., and was schooled in the common schools in Philadelphia, coming to Providence about 30 years ago. Subsequently he attended the Boston University and was admitted to the Rhode Island bar. Rev. Mr. Hammond referred to the public life of the deceased as a member of the General Assembly, to which body he had been twice elected.

The services were brought to a close by the singing of a hymn and the remains were conveyed to their last resting place followed by a large number of mourners.

Benjamin B. Adams.

The funeral services over the remains of Benjamin B. Adams were held at his late residence, 84 Prospect street, at 2:30 o'clock yesterday and were well attended. During his active life Mr. Adams was brought in contact with many of the more prominent manufacturers and business men in the city, and many prominent East Siders were present to pay a last tribute of respect to his memory. The services, which were held in the parlors of his late home, were very simple in their character, and at the request of the family floral tributes were omitted. The ritual of the Episcopal Church was read by Dr. Fiske of St. Stephen's Church. There were no bearers and the interment was at Swan Point Cemetery.

—choice styles—

25 and 50c

SMOKING JACKETS, stylish and comfortable, closing out at Way Down Prices.

FLANNELETTE PAJAMAS $1.00, worth $1.50.

Full line AMERICAN HOSIERY COMPANY'S Underwear and three months of cold weather to come. You may want to piece out for the season.

BROKEN lots of Ladies', Misses' and Children's Underwear Less Than Half Price.

124 JAB,MW&Stf

SCHENCK'S MANDRAKE PILLS

Cure Liver Complaint and all Stomach Disorders. Send for Dr. Schenck's Book. It's free. DR. J. H. SCHENCK & SON, Philadelphia.

126 JABTMdermtf

7 SUTHERLAND SISTERS' HAIR GROWER

Is the only preparation that will restore the hair to its original healthy tone.

—AT ALL DRUGGISTS—

J. ELDRIDGE,

DENTIST,

835 Eddy Street.

SETS OF TEETH AT REASONABLE RATES.

Those requiring partial or full sets of Teeth can depend in all cases upon the most perfect and satisfactory work.

Dr. Eldridge makes plate work a specialty. His method of making atmospheric suction plates has been pronounced unsurpassed.

With 25 years experience he feels confident of fitting the most difficult mouths.

Teeth extracted with all known anesthetics.

Filling done in the best manner.

People out of town can have their teeth and return the same day, and have their fare paid.

N. B.—The Eddy street electric cars will take you to the office door. J. ELDRIDGE.

o24 BMW3d 835 Eddy street.

BEST COPY AVAILABLE

890302000

The Emma Goldman Papers

[Summary of Lecture] Emma Goldman's Address / Emma Goldman. – p. 2 ; 43 cm.
In The Boston Daily Globe. –(Jan. 25, 1898).
Obtained from the Cornell University Libraries and Archives.

...a warrant that bristled ... important articles, too numerous ... to be considered at a single ... consequence the meeting ... to order ... in two weeks. ... Col. F. J. ... the ... usual. The ... hug-a-boo, ... there be five ... received a clean knockout ... in 4.

... consideration was given ... in regard to the building of ... engine, or hose house. The ... to build a wooden house ... of $7000 and called for an esti... upon a brick structure to cost ... or more. The information, and ... will be forthcoming in time to be ... upon at the adjourned meeting.

... that serious problem that was ... considered was the appropriating $52,000 ... schoolhouse of brick that would ... a town hall at the top or third ... containing a balcony that would ... a seating capacity for 1000 persons. ... was objected to by a number of ... persons, who contended that such a ... should be for one purpose ... that of a schoolhouse, and there ... danger in case of fire in having so ... persons assembled at such a ... The town, moreover, had already ... under consideration plans for a town ... The matter was referred to the ... committee, and will come up again in ... weeks.

... vote was passed to instruct the ... representative in the legislature ... take action for accelerating the ... projected work along the ocean shore ... Winthrop by the metropolitan park ... commission.

... was also voted to transfer $1469.20 ... the treasury fund to the payment ... bills.

An article that may be far reaching ... its effect was that of presenting a peti... to the legislature in regard to the ... purchasing and acquiring the property ... and rights of the Revere water company ... Winthrop. This was done in order to ... protect the town's interest, as the time ... such a petition to the legislature ... would soon expire, and in anticipation ... any future action of the town look... toward such purchase there would ... no unnecessary delay.

Mr Geo. E. Sleeper and Mr Chas. E. ... of the members of the water ... committee strongly advised such action, ... and it was so voted.

Eleven hundred dollars was voted to ... purchase land for the erection of an en... house at Winthrop Center.

The town treasurer was authorized to ... borrow $15,000 for schools, highways and ... other municipal purposes.

The chairman appointed the following ... gentlemen to act as a committee look... toward the advisability of the town ... owning an electric lighting plant and ... report to the March town meeting, and ... appropriated $100 for the expense of the ... committee: Alfred Tewksbury, C. P. ... Pike and Chas. W. Howard.

Sudden Death of Charles I. Spalding.

NORWICH, Conn, Jan 24—Charles I. Spalding, superintendent of the Uncasville manufacturing company, dropped dead in the Thames national bank today. He was 47 and was prominent in Masonic circles. He left a wife.

ECZEMA

Most Torturing, Disfiguring, Humiliating

Of itching, burning, bleeding, scaly skin and scalp humors is instantly relieved by a warm bath with CUTICURA SOAP, a single application of CUTICURA (ointment), the great skin cure, and a full dose of CUTICURA RESOLVENT, greatest of blood ... and humor cures.

Cuticura

... speedily, permanently, and ... economically cure, when all else fails.

... Soap And Cuticura, Cure, Rids Frees., Boston. ... How to Cure Every Skin and Blood Humor," free.

PIMPLY FACES Prevented and Beautified by CUTICURA SOAP.

CASTORIA

... Infants and Children

... New York recently bound for ... France, which is at present the ... carriers for many of the promi... European riders. He was com... to offer inducements to every ... prominent middle distance rider on the ... continent, and if possible to arrange ... terms with the best short distance men. ... Cordang, the long distance Dutch champion, and Huret, the long distance ... French champion, are also on the list.

Among the cities probably included in the circuit will be Buffalo, Rochester, Syracuse, Cleveland, Toledo, Detroit, Chicago, St Louis, Cincinnati, Pittsburg, Philadelphia, Baltimore, Washington, Toronto and Montreal. Negotiations are pending with other cities.

Cycle Notes.

The 12-hour race for amateurs at Coney Island last Saturday was won by J. Morey, who covered 180 miles and three laps on a 12-lap track. J. Vanderveer, with 176 miles and five laps was second.

Regarding the challenge of Miller, the winner of the recent six-day race at Madison sq garden, to meet Cordang or Huret in a 24-hour race, Le Vello, a French publication, says that either rider will meet Miller at any place except in America.

When the cyclists' touring club of England attains its 20th year, which will be on the 5th of next August, its membership will probably be something like 40,000, or not quite half that of the league of American wheelmen. At the end of 1897 the cyclists' touring club total was 44,498, and the aim of its officers now is to reach the 50,000 before the association is 20 years of age. An appeal has been made to all members to help in the recruiting, and the efforts are beginning to tell.

The associated cycling clubs of Long Island have decided to request the national racing board of the L. A. W. to refuse the granting of wholesale sanctions for race meets at any one track or to any one association in greater New York next summer, as it will prevent the local wheeling clubs from holding their customary race meets.

Advices from Freeport, L I, say that E. S. Edwards of the Century wheelmen of New York is making an attempt to ride 100 miles every day for a year. The route is the same as that which William Anderson followed in his attempt to ride 65 consecutive centuries.

WALLER HAS THE LEAD.

Start of the 72-Hour Bicycle Race at Pittsburg — The Colored Rider Has Dropped Out Already.

PITTSBURG, Jan, 24—The 72-hour bicycle race began at noon today, with 12 starters, including several bicyclists of national reputation.

The score at midnight was: Waller 220 miles 4 laps, Henshaw 197 miles 7 laps, Elkes 220 miles 2 laps, Dench 186 miles 5 laps, Gannon 183 miles 4 laps, Stewart 41 miles 10 laps, Miller 184 miles 1 lap, Schinneer 219 miles, Hall 215 miles 10 laps, Ruckel 167 miles 7 laps, Walters 213 miles 3 laps, Repine 86 miles.

Stewart, the colored man, is the only rider who dropped out tonight. The contestants at the end of the first day are going well and are apparently in good shape.

EMMA GOLDMAN'S ADDRESS.

Seeks the Overthrow of Authority as a Kind of Oppression.

Emma Goldman, the anarchist communist, addressed a meeting in Phenix hall last evening. The gathering was composed of economic students.

J. F. Moreton presided and in a brief speech introduced Miss Goldman. She at once proceeded to arraign the present capitalist system, which she maintained could not be changed by voting, but by the voluntary association of individuals determined to repudiate authority.

She maintained that authority is tyranny and that it has existed long enough; that no man was happy who was not free, and no man was free who had to submit to authority that was repulsive to him. People would not call ... and others thrown if there was less law, but when people reached that stage of development where they repudiated the principle of the representative system, government or authority they would be a freer and happier race.

"As long as you have private property," she said, "you need law to protect it," hence she did not believe in private property.

... Men who have insisted that the United States should not interfere, but should maintain a strictly neutral attitude, expressed the opinion that the Maine would not have been sent to Havana if her going there entailed any danger of an outbreak.

Mr Lodge was pleased. He recalled the fact that over a year ago, when the Cuban resolutions were being considered in the senate, he announced it would be the wise and proper thing to have U S vessels in Havana harbor.

"I said then, and I have never reversed my opinion, that when American interests and lives are even remotely threatened the flag of the nation floating from a man-of-war ought to be near at hand assuring protection.

"During the last Cuban revolution Pres Grant did not hesitate to have warships at Havana, and there is no reason why we should have delayed the action which has now been taken.

"No one can foresee what the result will be, but the people of the United States will feel safer if they know that the administration is not indifferent nor inactive."

It has been pointed out by men who have closely studied the situation that the sending of a ship to Havana merely to go into that port and out again would not suffice, and that if a naval vessel of the United States ever went into a Cuban port so long as the rebellion continued not only that ship, but perhaps other vessels, would have to remain there indefinitely.

Intervention or War.

It has also been asserted that whatever might be the motive for sending a ship, whatever explanation might be given, the act would be accepted by Spain and by the Spaniards in Cuba, as well as by the rebels, as the first step ultimately destined to lead to intervention or war.

It may be, as it has been freely asserted in administrative circles today, that these statements are overdrawn and exaggerated, but whether or not, the fact remains that here in Washington public men of both parties, men who are favorable to violent action as well as those of a conservative view, regard this action of the administration of the most extreme significance.

It has been freely asserted today that in sending a man-of-war to Havana the administration is playing a game of the boldest character and one which may lead to results of the gravest kind.

If, for instance, as was pointed out to me by a senator, a member of the committee on foreign relations, the Spaniards in Havana should regard the sending of the Maine as the first step toward in...

FUTURE WILL ...

Albertini Says The ... of the Maine at ... erally Known—W...

WASHINGTON, ... ada, secretary of t... Senor Albertini of ... Washington, were ... ing the day confe... concerning the Cub... ada said:

"The sending of ... whatever be the o... our opinion, proof ... such condition in ... holds that anarch... American citizens ... able to find protec... the impotent Span... have now the pro... vessel.

"It is a declarati... the United States ... the Spanish rabble ... trol the Spanish off...

"The attitude of ... and officials has ... presence of an A... Havana means in... edly they will nov... most natural thing ... send its vessels to ... ly power and Mr ... that his governmen...

"But we shall ... Weyler's subordina... Spain, that is, if ... Maine do not bring ... the conviction tha... case is the better p...

Senor Albertini ... the Maine will jus... events.

From his acquai... methods he says th... for apprehension ... shown, and he deci... Spain finds that Cu... of slaughter will ... the guns of Morro c... trained on the city ...

GREAT GRA...

Congressman Say... the Administrati... Act at Last.

WASHINGTON, ... members of the hou... eign affairs, especia... Heatwole and Par... cans, who had expr... the nonaction of th... house in the matter ... informed other mem... tee that there was a ... the republicans of ... their sentiments on ... a desire which the... All of these ... expressed t...

129

890308001

The Emma Goldman Papers

[Letters from a tour in America. In German] Reisebriefe aus Amerika. [Part 1] / Emma Goldman. – p. 94 ; 25 cm In Der Arme Konrad [Berlin]. –(Feb. 5, 1898).

Permission to reproduce or quote in any form must be obtained from the Zentrales Staatsarchiv (DDR), Merseburg, Germany.

Reisebriefe aus Amerika.

Von Emma Goldmann.

Unter diesem Titel veröffentlicht unsere tapfere Genossin im New-Yorker „Sturmvogel" eine Reihe Berichte von einer längeren Agitationstour, die sie in der zweiten Hälfte des vorigen Jahres durch die Vereinigten Staaten unternommen hat. Für unsere Leser in Deutschland enthalten diese Berichte Interessantes genug, um den „A. K." zur Wiedergabe derselben zu veranlassen. Sie werden daraus Land und Leute in Amerika eingehend und zwar von der Seite kennen lernen, die uns als allen Menschen, gleichviel welcher Nation sie angehören mögen, am meisten interessirt. Eine längere Einleitung, die nicht unbedingt zum Verständnis der Berichte notwendig ist, bleibt fort und es folgen nun die eigentlichen Reise-Schilderungen.

* * *

Am 2. September trat ich mit zwei Dollars in der Tasche meine Agitationsreise an. Der erste Haltepunkt war Providence, Rhode Island, eine Stadt von ungefähr 80000 Einwohnern, meistens Fabrikarbeitern. Rhode Island, obwohl ein puritanischer Staat, hat doch seinen Bürgern bis vor kurzer Zeit mehr Freiheiten und Privilegien gewährt als Massachusets oder Connecticut. So durfte beispielsweise jede Parteirichtung Versammlungen in den Parks oder Squares von Providence abhalten, ohne sich erst die übliche Erlaubnis vom Mayor holen zu müssen, ein Privileg, das keine andere Stadt in diesem freien Lande aufweisen kann.

Ich war schon mehrere Mal in Providence, hatte vor gutbesuchten Versammlungen gesprochen, ohne je von der Polizei behelligt zu werden, aber dieses Mal sollte es anderst kommen.

Meine Genossen und Freunde, die immer sehr rührig waren, hatten nun Versammlungen arrangiert, nachdem verabredet war, daß ich dieses Mal eine ganze Woche dableiben sollte. Am 3., 4. und 5. September sprach ich vor drei großartigen Versammlungen auf Straßenecken, am Nachmittage des 6. September in einer Halle, die bis auf den letzten Platz besetzt war. Die Polizei war überall stark vertreten, natürlich um mich vor der Wut der Menge zu beschützen. Am Abende des 7. sollte die letzte Straßenversammlung stattfinden. Mit einigen Freunden ging ich auf den dazu bestimmten Platz, doch als wir ankamen, fanden wir denselben von einem Redner der S. L. P. besetzt, der von einem Wagen herab die Zuhörer zu überzeugen suchte, wie herrlich alles in der Welt eingerichtet wäre, könnte De Lyon, Sqiuels, oder McGuire Präsident der Vereinigten Staaten sein. Um die Stimmenfängerei nicht zu stören, gingen wir auf einen andern Platz. Ein mit einer Donnerstimme begabter Genosse stellte sich auf eine Kiste und fing an, Publikum herbeizuschaffen, eine Arbeit, die nur der zu schätzen weiß, der derartige Versammlungen zu absolviren hat. In 15 Minuten hatte er ungefähr 300 Personen zusammen getrommelt. Mein Herold überließ mir die Kiste, von der aus ich nun die versammelten Kriegsvölker zu bearbeiten anfing. Kaum hatte ich aber angefangen, zu sprechen, als ein 280pfündiger Ordnungswächter mich rauh am Aermel zupfte und mit verstoffener Stimme schrie: „Sie müssen sofort aufhören, Sie dürfen hier nicht sprechen." „Mit welchem Recht unterbrechen Sie mich?" frug ich das Nilpferd. „Ich bin das Recht," schrie das von Schmalz triefende Ungeheuer. „Und ich habe das Recht, hier zu sprechen," und ich fuhr gemütlich in meiner Rede fort. Die Menge wurde über das Einschreiten der Polizei auf das Höchste entrüstet und Rufe wie dam the Police,

BEST COPY AVAILABLE

890308001

The Emma Goldman Papers

[Letters from a tour in America. In German] Reisebriefe aus Amerika. [Part 1] / Emma Goldman. – p. 94 ; 25 cm In Der Arme Konrad [Berlin]. –(Feb. 5, 1898).

Permission to reproduce or quote in any form must be obtained from the Zentrales Staatsarchiv (DDR), Merseburg, Germany.

to hell with them" wurden von allen Seiten laut. Es wäre sicherlich zu einem gehörigen Zusammenstoß zwischen Polizei und Volk gekommen, wenn nicht vier uniformierte Bulldoggen mich mit rauher Gewalt in einen Patrolwagen gepackt und sich mit diesem großen Verbrecher aus dem Staube gemacht hätten. Auf der Polizeistation angekommen, frug ich den Kapitän, weshalb ich eigentlich verhaftet worden bin. "Sie wurden verhaftet, weil Sie die Emma Goldmann sind." Eine derartige Antwort hatte ich natürlich nicht erwartet; wie sollte ich auch wissen, daß man in diesem Lande soweit gekommen ist, einen Menschen seines Namens halber zu verhaften? Einem amerikanischen Schergen begreiflich zu machen, daß ein Name unmöglich ein Verbrechen oder ein Vergehen in sich schließen kann, schien mir in dieser Situation überflüssig und ich ließ mich in stoischer Ruhe auf mein Nachtquartier bringen, nämlich auf eine schmutzige Zelle, deren Mobilar aus einer Holzbank und einem gewissen Gefäß bestand. Ich war sehr müde, und an derartige Hotels schon gewohnt, würde ich gewiß sehr bald in tiefen Schlaf verfallen sein, wenn nicht in der anstoßenden Zelle eine Frau in einem fort geweint und gejammert hätte. Die Aermste ging auf und ab und rief mit klagender Stimme: "Meine sechs Kinder, mein kleines Baby wird dir zu trinken geben, mein armer kranker Mann, laßt mich zu meinen Kindern, gebt mir mein geliebtes Baby!" So ging es die ganze Nacht. Ich suchte die Frau zu beruhigen und fing ein Gespräch mit ihr an. Es stellte sich heraus, daß ihr Mann zehn Monate krank und arbeitslos war, daß sie sechs Kinder habe, von welchen das älteste vierzehn, das jüngste ein Jahr alt ist, daß sie in ihrer Verzweiflung bei einem Rentier, für den sie früher gewaschen, ein Brod und eine Kanne kondensierte Milch vom Tische nahm und dabei ertappt wurde. Welchen Eindruck diese traurige Geschichte auf mich machte, kann man sich leicht vorstellen.

Ist nichts Neues, daß man den einsperrte, der seinen Laib Brot nahm, während solche, die Millionen stahlen, als angesehene Bürger, fromme Christen und gute Staatsmänner dastanden. Auch ist es nichts Neues, daß Tausende hungern, zerlumpt und verzweifelt umherirren, ohne zu wissen, wo sie ihr Haupt hinlegen sollen. Man wird abgehärtet, wenn man sich jahrelang mit Arbeiterfragen befaßt, menschliches Elend in allen seinen Formen kennen gelernt hat. Man liest die tagtäglichen Berichte über Not, Elend und Verbrechen und kann ruhig seinen Kaffee trinken, froh, daß man vorläufig nicht auch unter jener Unglücklichen ist, oder früher oder später ereilt unser einen ja auch dasselbe Schicksal. Aber der Jammer, die Verzweiflung dieser Frau, das Bitten und Flehen der Mutter um ihre Kleinen hatte einen Stein erweichen können. Indeß, was hilft das Mitgefühl, wenn man ohnmächtig hilflos ist, preisgegeben der Willkürlichkeit und der Gewalt. Ich wagte es nicht, der Frau Trost zuzusprechen, weil derselbe unter diesen Umständen wie Hohn geklungen hätte.

Am nächsten Morgen wurde ich mit anderen unserer, wenigen Insassen dieses wohnlichen Hauses vor den Richter geführt, der mich nach den üblichen Fragen, ob schuldig oder nicht schuldig, unter Bürgschaft stellte, und da dieselbe nicht gleich herbeigeschafft werden konnte, wurde ich armer Sünderin wieder abgeführt.

Um ein Uhr führte man mich zum Mayor nach der City Hall, der mich mit der Frage empfing, ob ich schwören oder versprechen wolle, in den nächsten drei Monaten nicht in Providence zu sprechen, dann würde er mich gehen lassen. Ich bedeutete ihm, daß ich weder schwören noch etwas versprechen kann; zu seiner Beruhigung aber könnte ich ihm sagen, daß ich mich auf einer Tour nach dem Westen befände, die mich ohne dies verhindern würde, in der nächsten Zeit Providence mit meinem Besuch zu beehren. Daraufhin ließ mich der Ortspascha laufen; im Grunde genommen war er froh, mich los zu sein, da meine Verhaftung sehr viel Unwillen und Proteste hervorrief und gar nichts vorlag, um eine Anklage gegen mich erheben zu können.

Hatten die Zeitungen schon vorher spaltenlange Berichte über die Versammlungen gebracht, so waren sie am Tage nach meiner Verhaftung voll von sensationellen Geschichten. Das Resultat der Komödie war, daß viele Leute den in Providence bestehenden anarchistischen Gruppen beitraten, die Versammlungen jetzt gut besucht sind und in allen Kreisen über den Anarchismus und Emma Goldmann diskutirt wird, eine propagandistische Errungenschaft, die der Polizei von Providence zu verdanken ist. Mir haben die paar Stunden Arrest nichts geschadet, im Gegenteil, ich bin um eine Erfahrung reicher geworden.

Arreste und Kerkerzellen mögen ja unter Umständen als annehmbare Unterkunftsorte betrachtet werden, ist man in denselben doch vor den Unbilden des Wetters geschützt. Wie es mit der staatlichen Beköstigung aussieht, ist eine andere Frage. In der Providenzer Polizeistation beispielsweise können die Gefangenen nicht über schlechte Kost klagen, weil sie einfach gar nichts zu essen bekommen. Wird Jemand am Nachmittag oder Abend verhaftet, so bringt man ihn erst am nächsten Morgen vor den Richter, der den Angeklagten entweder unter Bürgschaft entläßt oder demselben eine Geld- oder Gefängnisstrafe auferlegt. Hat nun der Gefangene nicht das nötige Geld um sich von der Gerechtigkeit loszukaufen zu können, muß er bis zum späten Nachmittag warten, ehe er nach dem Gefängnis gebracht wird. Während dieser Zeit hat er auch nicht einen Bissen zu essen bekommen. Die Meisten kommen, ohnedies schon mit leerem Magen, und da haben sie nun die beste Gelegenheit, zu erfahren, wie fürsorglich der Staat in puncto Verköstigung handelt.

Nach meiner sogenannten Ausweisung aus Providence, verbrachte ich daselbst noch einige Stunden in fröhlicher Gesellschaft von Freunden und fuhr am Abend nach Boston, wo man für den 12. September eine Versammlung arrangirt hatte, über deren Verlauf ich in nächster Nummer berichten werde.

Veränderte Welt.

Von Nikolaus Lenau.

Die Menschheit ist dahinter kommen,
Trotz aller Gaukelei der Frommen,
Daß mit dem Leben vor dem Grabe
Man endlich Ernst zu machen habe.

Zerbrochen ist des Wahnes Kette,
Die Erde sei nur Uebungsstätte,
Nur Voltigirbock sei das Leben,
Aufs Roß werd uns der Himmel heben.

Auf freiem, grünem Erdenrunde
Wird jeder bald schon hier zur Stunde,
Bevor das Grab ihn deckt mit Schollen,
Sein Rößlein weiden, tummeln wollen.

Verleger und verantwortlicher Redakteur Hermann Graß, Berlin. — Druck: W. Siebenmark, Frankfurter Straße 87.

BEST COPY AVAILABLE

890313010

The Emma Goldman Papers

[Excerpt from Lecture] What Emma Goldman Thinks of Patriotism / Emma Goldman.— p. 2 ; 43 cm. In The Pittsburg[h] Post. —(Feb. 25, 1898).

Permission to reproduce or quote in any form must be obtained from the University of Pittsburgh Libraries. Institutional Location: Darlington Memorial Library.

TTSBURG POST. FEBRUARY

FREED ON $4,000 BAIL, VON DER AHE IS HAPPY.

SECOND ARGUMENT IN HABEAS CORPUS PROCEEDINGS RESULTS IN DEFEAT BUT LIBERTY.

TRUST COMPANY GIVES BOND.

IT COVERS THE FULL AMOUNT OF CHRIS' LIABILITIES TO DATE.

After Announcing That He Wanted a Long Rest, the Ex-Baseball Magnate Leaves for St. Louis.

Chris von der Ahe, the kidnaped and imprisoned baseball manager, is this morning speeding across the country to St Louis. He has left the much-cramped existence of a limited cell and jail diet, and the memory of an exceedingly uncomfortable two weeks stay in Pittsburg. He is free, while the Mercantile Trust Company stands bound in the sum of $4,000 for the production of Chris at the proper time, until his case goes to the supreme court.

Although the second argument of habeas corpus proceedings in the United States district court resulted in defeat for him, Von der Ahe was, nevertheless, in a very jovial humor. Judge Buffington handed down his opinion, and then approved the bond furnished by the Mercantile Trust Company, after requiring it to specify that the appeal to the supreme court would be prosecuted in good faith. The bond also specified that Von der Ahe would pay the amount of the judgment and costs in the event of failure to prosecute the appeal successfully.

Judge Buffington's opinion was brief. It said the bail piece was issued by proper authorities, and likewise the issue by the prothonotary. Then Judge Buffington referred to the sensational statement which had been made by Von der Ahe's attorneys regarding an alleged agreement between Mark Baldwin and Von der Ahe. He said:

"The allegations that there was an agreement by the bailee that he would not demand or enforce the petitioner's return to Pennsylvania is not supported by proof, nor is there any evidence whatever to connect Baldwin with the arrest of petitioner by his bail, even if such arrest had been illegal. The taking by bail being adjudged lawful it follows that petitioner's subsequent detention on the capias was also lawful."

The appeal was immediately filed, after which Judge Buffington notified Mr. Ferguson to have his client in court at 2 o'clock, when he would be given his freedom, should the surety prove satisfactory. Von der Ahe was accompanied from the jail to the Federal building by Warden John McAleese.

He was detained an hour in the court room, there being some delay owing to the insistence of C. W. Ashley, representing Mr. Baldwin, that the bond should require payment of the claim against Von der Ahe in Allegheny county in default of surrender of his body, should the decision in the case be adverse. A new bond was then drawn up, and shortly after 3 o'clock Von der Ahe was given his freedom.

Von der Ahe walked from the court room looking like a different man. He shook hands with his attorneys, who expressed their gratification at his release. He also shook hands with Warden McAleese, whom he thanked for his kindness during his enforced stay in the Ross street bastile. Then he went to a hotel, had a bath and shave, and a dinner which included more things than are given out in everyday jail life. He also met a number of friends, who expressed their pleasure at seeing him out again. Von der Ahe talked about his imprisonment in a joking manner, but it was evident that it had been a bitter experience. He looked worn and haggard.

Von der Ahe left at 1:30 last night for St Louis. He refused to discuss his affairs, but intends taking a long rest for the present. He said Timothy Hurst, manager of the St. Louis baseball club, will have full swing in managing the organization this year. The club will train at West Baden springs, near St. Louis.

ECONOMY'S ANNIVERSARY.

Society Celebrates the Ninety-Third Year of Its Existence.

The ninety-third anniversary of the Economy society, which took place yesterday, is said to have been the most satisfactory ever held. There were many visitors present from Pittsburg, Alle-

WHAT EMMA GOLDMAN THINKS OF PATRIOTISM.

FEMALE ANARCHIST SAYS THE MEANING OF WORD IS NOT KNOWN IN THIS COUNTRY.

PATRIOT IS ONE WHO SLAYS.

SHOOTS DOWN HIS FELLOW-MAN UNDER LAW'S PROTECTION.

Series of Meetings Which Will Be Held in This Vicinity Opened Last Night on the Southside.

Emma Goldman, anarchist, agitated in Odd Fellows' hall, South Eighteenth and Sarah streets, last night. It was the opening of a series of meetings which she contemplates holding in this vicinity during the next few weeks. She was brought here by the agitation committee of Western Pennsylvania, working under the direction of the International Workingmen's association. Her subject last night was "Patriotism," and a large crowd was present to hear the fiery utterances as they fell, laden with molten metal, from the speaker's lips. Judging from the infrequency of any demonstration, however, the great majority of those present were there through curiosity more than sympathy with the cause which Miss Goldman represents.

"Patriotism," Miss Goldman thinks, is a word the meaning of which the vast majority of the people of the United States takes in entirely the contrary sense. "To be a patriot," she said, "one must wade ankle-deep in the blood of his fellow men. He must kill, slay, destroy in every conceivable manner and form, else he is not living up to the sacred meaning of that sacred word. The sheriff and deputies who ruthlessly shot down the miners at Hazleton were patriots in the strictest American sense. And as much, you may rest assured, they will be acquitted of the crime.

"In Chicago, some years ago, someone threw a bomb into a crowd around the Haymarket. For this supposed crime the lives of five men paid the forfeit. And yet who knows who threw that bomb? Was it ever clearly proved? No, but the voice of capital cried aloud for the blood of the accused, and in this country the voice of capital is always heeded. The tragedy in Hazleton is not hidden by any cloaks of mystery. Men among those deputies have been heard to say, 'I killed five of them, and could have killed nine,' making no secret of the crime, and yet he will go unpunished, for the voice and influence and wealth of the mine owners is whispering insidiously into the ears of justice that these men who did the shooting did so in preservation of the law, and in so doing acted solely as patriots, and should be protected rather than condemned for a crime so brutal.

"What constitutes a good citizen in this beloved free country of America? I can tell you. If a man has the ability to rob his neighbor under the guise of a legitimate speculation. If by slipping stealthily up behind him and inserting the knife into his back he robs him of his life under the pretext that the crime was committed to preserve the integrity of the Nation, men in office, and, alas, even many of you here to-night, place a crown of laurel and roses on his brow, and he is at once crowned a public-spirited citizen and a patriot of the first water. Is it so with the man whose daily existence and the lives of his family depends on a crust? Hardly. Let him but purloin one loaf from the bakery of his neighbor and a cell yawns before him.

"There is talk of a war between America and Spain. I am not allied with either country, but I tell you it is unsafe, even dangerous, for America to war with any nation. Her own governmental props need bolstering; they totter and are likely to fall at any moment, and it is my candid belief that if war would ensue an uprising of the masses upon whom the country is now depending for support would follow."

At the conclusion Miss Goldman was asked how she expected to bring about the reforms in the labor question which she agitates. She replied that there was only one way in which it could be done; that was by a popular uprising of the people. A revolution such as that of more than a century ago was surely fomenting, and in time, a short time at that, the clouds were bound to break. That, she said, is the only solution, and that was a day to which she is confidently looking forward.

WALLACE WAS SUBPENAED.

JOS. HORNE

FRIDAY MORNING,

A Hearty And Cordial Invitation to All.

We wish you would consider this in a general invitation to come and see t span new goods that the makers have br for Men's and Women's Spring wear.

Let us present you with the free store. Come in and take elevators to then leisurely go from floor to floor on a spection. The tour will be both enter instructive. Nearly 60 departments to in

Lace Curtains

A sort of hurry-up price has been put on I although the styles are all new and came in this we stock overreaches any other in the storekeeping store. We have all the late designs and we will sel

A pair at 50c, or

Fourth Floor.

Our Curtain Catalogue is at your service. Write us and we'll send you a copy by return mail.

Window Shades.

Unfortunately moving day in Pittsburg is "All-F April 1st. And if you are compelled to move, wo good idea to have the house you're going to measu and leave your order, so they will be in readiness f 1st of April? You will certainly avoid delay.

Shades, with spring roller, all complete, each. We will make any and all sizes of Fourth Floor.

A Mention of Rugs.

A great many call these great big rugs A druggets. There's not so very much in a name, yo still it does no harm to be correct. So we call th right name, and here are a few rug items that are wo sideration:

Smyrna Sakai Rugs.

9x12 ft.....
7x10 ft.....
6x 9 ft.....

Smyrna Wool Rugs.

4x 7 ft.....
3x 6 ft.....

China Lindo Matting.

40 yards in each roll, wort $12.00.....

Beautiful Ingrain Mats

1 ft. 6 inches x 2 ft. 9 inch
2 ft. 9 inches x 4 ft. 6 inch

Fifth Floor.

An Item of Importance to Men.

Some of you we presume—in fact know habit of sending down East for your Shirts. You tant prices—so much for the shirt, the balance becaus ern shirt. Now, if you are tired of getting shirts th is a suggestion. We have a book in which there are samples of shirtings. We may say that it contains every material that is used for shirts. You can

132

890313012

The Emma Goldman Papers

[Excerpt from Lecture] Emma Goldman Again / Emma Goldman.— p. 2 ; 43 cm. In The Pittsburg[h] Post. —(Feb. 26, 1898).

Permission to reproduce or quote in any form must be obtained from the University of Pittsburgh Libraries. Institutional Location: Darlington Memorial Library.

ill be from attack
ulk. The experihad charge of
al such meetings
t to trade. Frank ho engineered an ember triennial to
a few days ago esent proposed ial merchants of
will not approve ustrial depression
ring the last year
ll not be needed
ts of the world
ll over the land
ll be of benefit
ade of the world

ugh the efforts of the
that the triennial
Pittsburg from as been almost from
of his return to the

ET MONDAY.

m to Elect Of-the Street
ted.

ne workers have in ning that the new r the Union men to wage and to feel the ne Republican Central ed to-day to elect
for the Select and
ncils, to fill the
ed by the death of Shaffer.

ber.

She ran to the bedroom and opened the door, only to be driven back by a thick, suffocating smoke. Not a moment's hesitating was stopped her way to the bed where [illegible] that lay and taking the unconscious form in her arms hastily made out from the burning room. The engines [illegible] In the meantime Mrs. [illegible] were removed to the [illegible]. After a neighbor who [illegible] was dispatched for Dr. [illegible] who [illegible] in delicate [illegible] Mr. Washington [illegible] Mrs. Washington [illegible] Mrs. Washington [illegible] Mrs

The Emma Goldman Papers

890313014

[Excerpt from Lecture] Again Emma Goldman / Emma Goldman.— p. 3 ; 43 cm. In The Pittsburg[h] Post. —(Feb. 28, 1898).

Permission to reproduce or quote in any form must be obtained from the University of Pittsburgh Libraries. Institutional Location: Darlington Memorial Library.

beyond descent, and reptile ... became a proud, arrogant ... Its day of glory, the minister said, was its day of fate. It had done nothing since for humanity. It had only written a record of blood in Cuba and the Philippines.

ARBITRATION ADVOCATED.

Rev. S. Edward Young Talks on Spain, Cuba and United States.

Barbaric Want War.

Rev. S. Edward Young, pastor of the Second Presbyterian Church, spoke yesterday on "Spain, Cuba and the United States." His text was taken from Jeremiah, 5:29. "Shall not my soul be avenged on such a nation as this." He said in part:

"Shall the Spain of Ferdinand and Isabella and the greatest nation of the continent they helped discover duel at the Havana cathedral, where along the mortal remains of Christopher Columbus? One hundred million hearts throw louder till the answer comes. All Christendom looks and listens. Cuba for area is Pennsylvania elongated and frayed at the edges."

The preacher then gave a description of Cuba and followed it with a history of the islanders' war with Spain. He told how Spain had oppressed the weak natives, and how finally the worm had turned. He then gave a resume of famous wars, and how they had resulted, comparing them with international difficulties settled by arbitration. Continuing he said:

"Instead of massacring wounded, behold Florence Nightingale, Christian sanitary commission, Clara Barton and Red Cross, balming and nursing Cubans and Spaniards alike. Such arbitration and tenderness never were nor are apart from Christianity; always are where real Christianity is. All that is barbaric in America thirsts for Spanish blood; all that is Christly hopes the Gospel method may yet adjust the Cuban-Spanish-United States embroglio."

FRANK TALMAGE ATTACKED.

Rev. Dr. Mitchell Criticises That Chicago War Sermon.

Rev. Dr. J. T. Mitchell, pastor of the First Methodist Episcopal Church of Braddock, last night delivered a severe rebuke to utterances recently made by Rev. Frank DeWitt Talmage, of Chicago. He said:

"There is a young man occupying a place in the pulpit of our land to-day who is gaining much notoriety through the fact that he is the son of his father. Recently he declared that he was ready to leave the pulpit at any time and go to the front to fight against Spain. We may have war with Spain, but it is away out of place for a minister of the gospel to make such declarations. I venture the assertion that one Spanish regiment could whip into forgetful nothingness at the first charge 10,000 such preachers as this one."

WATCHING THE "ROOSTS."

Yaghum Headquarters Are Kept Under Police Surveillance.

Extraordinary efforts are being made by both the postoffice and police authorities to apprehend the letter-box thieves who operated successfully in the downtown and Hazelwood sections Friday night. Policemen in citizens clothes were patrolling the streets until 6 o'clock this morning. Government agents also kept watch on the boxes.

Belief that the robberies were committed by tramps has gained strength in police circles. A number of "yaghum roosts" are under surveillance, and it was stated last night that at least three of the men might be in custody by this morning. Police officials think the robberies were committed between 6 and 8 o'clock in the morning.

Commercial Freight Agent Changes.

The office of the commercial freight agent of the Baltimore & Ohio in Pittsburg will be moved from the present location, 412 Seventh avenue, to the second story of the Park building, Smithfield street and Fifth avenue.

Northward Bound Passengers.

TACOMA, Wash., Feb. 27.—The steamer South Coast cleared for Alaska with 35 passengers, 300 tons of freight and 60 horses from Tacoma.

Have you tried it yet?

Booth's Hyomei Cures Catarrh

vice presidency of the National organization, and the few enemies he has made by reason of his always honest and fearless conduct of affairs thought they saw a chance to down him in his fight for re-election as district president. A quick canvass of every local in the district was made, and it was learned that there was not sufficient strength to be mustered against him to make even a creditable showing, but the matter was not given up, and a systematic canvass was made, with the result that an opposition candidate was found who was willing to stand upon the old platform of rotation in office. President Dolan contented himself with the statement that if he was not wanted for the chief office of the district he had no regrets, and would gladly retire in favor of anyone the miners might deem proper to elect in his stead. So on with his friends, however, and the great majority of the miners, who recognized in his able and impartial management of the order the only real power of the organization in the district. They likewise began work, and it is absolutely certain, stated one of his supporters last night, that he will be elected again at this convention by an overwhelming majority.

W. N. McConnell, who has been superintendent of the open hearth department, retires from the Homestead Steel works March 1 to become general manager of the Buhl Iron works at Sharon, Pa. He will be succeeded by Reese James, who was superintendent of the open hearth department. George Forrester, who has been Mr. McConnell's assistant in the open hearth department, has been made superintendent of the new open hearth mill which will be completed in a month. The appointment of Mr James left a vacancy in the converting mill management. Stephen Leightner, of Braddock, was appointed to fill the vacancy. J. W. Janson, assistant chief mechanical engineer, leaves to-day for Sweden to take a position with the Iron and Steel association of that country. He will be succeeded by R. H. Stevens.

AGAIN EMMA GOLDMAN.

Belief in Providence, She Asserts, a Relic of Unenlightened Days.

It was a typical anarchistic affair, that Emma Goldman meeting yesterday afternoon. There were about 200 people present, mostly foreigners. They sat and heard with relish the speaker proclaim her contempt for a Divine Providence, denounce authority, ridicule in cutting sarcasm the rich, and talk of wreaking vengeance on Sheriff Martin and the Hazleton deputies for their "legal murders."

Miss Goldman was to have spoken at Marion hall, out Fifth avenue. Instead the lecture was delivered at the Imperial dancing academy, on Wylie avenue. The hall is a bare and dimly lighted second-floor room, and there was an anarchistic air about the place.

Cigarets, rolled by the smokers, sent heavy stringing fumes toward the ceiling. A boy, sallow faced and dark haired, distributed a paper, "Free Society," to all who entered, and answered some questions in broken English. There were probably 15 women in the hall, with as many children, who interrupted the discourse at times. Miss Goldman was half an hour late, but the audience regaled itself with the paper meanwhile. She came and was greeted with applause. She took off veil and hat, put on spectacles and walked to the platform. Her first words told the nature of her address.

"Workingmen and workingwomen," she said, "there is no necessity for an introduction. I have spoken too often in Pittsburg that you should not know me. I am opposed to a chairman and will conduct the meeting myself, hoping my hearers know well enough how to behave without subjection to constant calls for order. My subject is "Authority versus Liberty."

After the lecture Miss Goldman apologized for being compelled to take up a collection, hitting at the land-owner, the landlord. She then opened a discussion answering a few questions, closing with a little speech along the lines of her lecture.

LOOKING UP HIS RECORD.

Clinton Williams Retired 30 Days for Further Investigation.

Clinton Williams, who was arrested Saturday for selling his household furniture and hiding a clothes line full of clothes belonging to his wife and two children, was sent 30 days to the workhouse yesterday. William twice tried suicide after being arrested and spent five hours in a dungeon at Central station as a result. He spent yesterday singing gospel hymns and preaching fervent sermons to an imaginary congregation. His record will be looked into.

ED. WITTISH, 434 Fifth ave., Pittsburg, wants mortgages and securities. jy28-dsu-tf SITUATIONS WANTED.

Males.

POSITION — By honest industrious young man, of no bad habits, as distributer or sign tacker, best experience in running elevators, gilt-edge references. Address H 113, Office of The Post. fe27-3t

POSITION—By boy of 16 in an office or store, willing to work and can furnish good reference. Address W. C., 212 Fifth ave. fe27-3t

SITUATION By first class house and sign painter, grainer, varnisher and hard wood finisher. Address F. L. Shaffer, No. 1 Grandview ave., Thirty-fifth ward, Duquesne Heights. fe27-3t

POSITION By young man as plain cook or waiter. Address F. G. 29 Webster st. fe27-3t

POSITION - By young married man, good education, sober and industrious, well acquainted in both cities as warehouseman or shipping clerk, has had business experience and can furnish best of references. H 104, Office of The Post. fe27-3t

WORK At sign painting, paper hanging, or any kind by a colored man. Address Geo. W. Delaney, No. 6 Fisk st., Allegheny City. fe27-3t

POSITION as engineer or fireman; can do all repair work and erecting machinery, 14 years' experience, the best of city reference, can take charge of electric plant. J. C., 146 Bidwell st., Allegheny. fe26-3t

POSITION—By boy of 17 to learn electrical engineering. Address H 114, Office of The Post. fe27-3t

SITUATION by engineer, 15 years' experience, 8 years at last place. Address J. C. Davies, 11 Belonda st., Mt. Washington, S. S., Pittsburg. fe27-3t

POSITION—Druggist, 15 years' experience, references married. A. H. Parker, 910 Locust st. fe27-3t

POSITION—By a first hand bread and cake baker, city or country, can take charge of a shop, good references. Address G. Becker, Thirty-eighth ward P. O., Pittsburg, Pa. fe27-3t

SITUATION Male cook, waiter, clerk, cashier, hotel or restaurant, sober, age 26, and wife, A 1 hustlers, good service, reference H. Walters, 388 Fortieth st., corner Penn ave., city. fe27-3t

POSITION—As bookkeeper or assistant bookkeeper, by a graduate from high school, can do typewriting and can give good reference. Address J. V., 2626 Fifth ave., city. fe27-3t

POSITION—By an honest young man 20 years of age, with best of reference and bond, position at any kind of office work; moderate salary. Address H 106, Office of The Post. fe26-3t

POSITION—By a boy 18 years of age, just out of school; willing to work in store, warehouse, workshop, or anywhere, or to learn some good trade. Address M. J. M., Office of The Post. fe26-3t

POSITION—Having 20 years' experience at the marble and granite business, I desire a position with a good firm and steady employment, I understand the business well, can letter both marble and granite, do good carving, and held the position as foreman for 17 years with one man; I can give any reference you desire, and must hear from some one within 10 days. Address B., Box 113, Berlin, Somerset county, Pa. fe26-3t

POSITION—As bookkeeper by young man of experience in wholesale, retail and banking; want to make a change from present position; can furnish the best of references from present and past employers, and bond. Address Lock Box No. 4, Toronto, O. fe26-3t

SITUATION By a reliable and thoroughly competent young man, with three years' practical experience as bookkeeper or assistant; can furnish good reference, will work for small salary. Address H., Box 211, Washington, Pa. fe26-3t

WORK—By a first-class paper cleaner and general house cleaner. C. Evans, 1718 Webster ave. fe26-3t

SITUATION—By a first-class bread, cake and pastry baker, on Vienna bread, rolls, etc.; stock or compressed yeast; I will give one week as trial, and if I can't do the work I won't want a cent; reference given cheerfully. Address H. C. Manning, 71 Magee st. fe26-3t

POSITION—Man 26 years of age, with 11 years' experience, desires position with manufacturing company as shipping clerk. Address H 112, Office of The Post. fe26-3t

SITUATION—In retail grocery store, as clerk or driver; speak German and English; well acquainted in both cities. H 109, Office of The Post. fe26-3t

SITUATION—By young man of experience, as stenographer and typewriter; can furnish best of references. H 110, Office of The Post. fe26-3t

LOST.

LOST—A set of plans between Oliver station and Fourth avenue. Liberal reward if returned to F. Sauer, architect, sixth floor, Hamilton bldg. fe28-1t

Exchanges for cl...
Notes of other Na...
Fractional paper c...
els and cents ...
Lawful money re... vis Specie ...
Legal tender no...
Redemption fund ... treasurer (5 per ... lation)
Due from U. ... other than 5 per ...
tion fund
Total LIAI...
Capital stock paid...
Surplus fund
Undivided profits ...
penses and taxes ...
National bank not...
ing ...
Due to State ba...
and ...
Individual deposits ...
subject to check ...
Demand certific... of deposit
Certified checks ...
Cashier's checks ... standing
Total
State of Pennsylv...
ber, ss.
I, A. Long, ca... named bank, do ...
the above statement ...
of my knowledge ...
Subscribed and ...
this 28th day of F...
WM. F. H...
Correct—Attest
M...
F...
E... fe28-1t

SPECIAL...

Office of the ... Municipal ...
NOTICE is hereby ... (whether resident ... city of Pittsburg) ... buggies, etc., to the ... office forthwith. A... or before the first ... will be placed in the ... officer for collection ... tion fee of 50 cents ... persons neglecting ... first Monday in M... to a penalty doub... license, to be reco... legal authority of ... metal plates of ... turned at the time ... or 25 cents additio... each license. [illegible] one-horse vehicle, ... hicle, $10; each 4-h... four-horse hack, $... ber wheels drawn ... extra dollar will be ... diplomat horse on ... hicles.
fe2-d-11ap30

MONEY.

MONEY TO LOA... household furniture ... removal, easy pay... TIAL. Also, on go... short loans on real ...
No. 412 Fourth ave...
an10-dsu-tf

MONEY—Any per... a loan on household ... ons, pianos or hicy... from us on short n... borrower; goods le... sion. The Little ... Smithfield street.

MONEY to loan ... from $100 to $3... time payments, bri... PENN LOA...

MONEY TO LOA... estate. Immediately ... interest, bring deed... No. 6212 Penn ave.,...

SITUATION...

Fem...

POSITION in wall... lady, experienced; ... reference given. A... The Post.

SITUATION—By ... cook, best of refere...
fe27-3t

POSITION—An ho... or private family; c... I 1, Office of The P...

SITUATION—At ... housekeeper by a w... can give references; ... ply Mrs. M., 46 Fa... Pa.

SEWING—By a g... family sewing; wages ... of East End refere... The Post.

134

890413007

The Emma Goldman Papers

[Summary of Lecture] Various Voices / Emma Goldman. – p. 71 ; 37 cm. In Lucifer, The Lightbearer [Chicago]. –(March 2, 1898).

Obtained from the Stanford University Libraries, Stanford University.

through the trees with a giggling scamper, the tan-coues peter out a little to the shoulder and over the sleeper. He wakes, not drowsily, but all at once wide-awake, with eyes black on awakening, gray as the pupils close with the light, steel-gray as a lake without sunlight.

To be continued.

VARIOUS VOICES.

M. L. Studebaker, Fort Hunter, Pa.:—I enclose twenty cents; send "Personal Rights and Sexual Wrongs." If it were not for the bigotry of the people here I might get some subscribers, but the masses don't want the truth. They don't like the priests but I can't make them understand the Bible is only a mass of heathen literature, etc., but while the feeling is strong against priests, and what they call the abuse of government they are afraid they will be murdered in the absence of government.

H—— S. S——, London, Ky.:—I see you offer to give a thirteen weeks trial subscription and twenty-five cents' worth of literature, all for twenty-five cents. I enclose sixty cents and a list of the literature I want at present. Mrs. Josephine K. Henry, my friend, sent me a copy of the paper. I am very much interested in the subject of sexology. I am fully convinced of the unrighteousness and injustice of the present enslavement of women by laws of church, state and society. Am not just decided what is the best thing to be done, but I do want to learn. The gratitude of all women is due to you for the noble blow you are striking for the emancipation of their sex, and I tender mine with unstinted measure.

J. A. Wilson, Phila., Pa.:—A large and appreciative audience filled the hall of the Ladies' Liberal League last evening to hear Emma Goldman's address on "The New Woman." Miss Goldman does not believe in a new woman but rather in an emancipated woman freed from the shackles of law, church and society; the equal, and the equal only, of man. She pictured the false education of the sex taught from infancy. That her mission was to marry, and thus have a claim for support on a man, and yet totally unfit, because of lack of knowledge of her sexual functions and rights, to become a mother. The duty of a wife is treated as a subject too impure and immoral to be even hinted at before a priest or magistrate has handed her over, it may be, to some reformed rake for a husband. Instead of aping man as is the fashion of the would-be new woman Miss Goldman contends that both sexes are equal even under present social and economic conditions, and that a new man must first be had if he is to be worthy of imitation by the other sex. As at present conditioned no man is worthy of the labor bestowed on him by woman, who, in her household cares spends, on the average, more hours of toil than does the man, and who at a correct financial valuation on her services as housekeeper, cook and dredge, as well as nurse and trainer of her family, never can be repaid. She does not believe in angels, either masculine or feminine on earth. With most men woman is an angel before marriage and a devil after marriage. The whole address was a masterly arraignment of the double standard of morality of the sexes, and was listened to with close attention. A number of speakers took exception, in ten minutes addresses, to some of her points, but in her rejoinder Miss Goldman showed herself fully capable of upholding her end of the argument, and possessed of the courage to announce boldly and plainly her views and opinions on any given subject. She delivers several other addresses here before starting further west. Those who miss hearing her miss a treat.

Sophie M. Rivers, San Jose, Calif.:—Enclosed find fifty cents for three months trial subscription and for the books named. I am very much delighted with your dear paper, only I wish you had a different title. I am sure the paper, with a smoother name, would work its way into many families. "L[illegible] startling—not a suitable heading for a paper [illegible]. We must of necessity be careful what the w[illegible] long as we have to make our own living.

[The objection to the name Lucifer, though] an old one, and has been many [illegible] these columns. It is true that the name chosen for the weekly paper devoted mainly to [illegible] from sex-slavery is "startling" to the average reader. Most people have been told, from early youth, that Lucifer means the "devil," and to the average mind the word devil is the personification of all that is bad, wicked, sinful and destructive to human happiness, "in this world and in the next." That the name of our paper repels many people who would otherwise become readers and helpers is doubtless true. But there is another side to the question. The word Lucifer challenges attention. Women as well as men are everywhere learning to think for themselves, and one of the first things that a [illegible] pendent thinker learns is that his theological teachers are not to be trusted. That they deliberately teach what they know to be false, in order that they may obtain and retain power over the people. (I speak of the priestly hierarchy collectively, as organizations, rather than as individuals.) A very conspicuous example of their false teaching is the perversion of the meaning of the word Lucifer. This name, as all scholars know, belongs to astronomy, and not to theology. It means "light-bringing," and, very naturally, was anciently synonymous with "Morning Star." And so it has continued to mean, in the minds of all except the ignorant and superstitious priesthood and those who pin their faith to priestly dogmas. But now that modern science, with her "starry eyes," has shown the fallacy of the old myths and fables even the clergy are getting ashamed of their own perversions, as witness the rebuke administered by the Biblical Commentator Henderson—See Webster's Unabridged Dictionary, edition 1886, page 792, under the head "Lucifer":

"The application of this passage [in Isaiah—'How art thou fallen from heaven, Lucifer, son of the morning,' etc.] to Satan and to the fall of the apostate angels is one of those gross perversions of sacred writ which so extensively obtain, and which are to be traced to a presumption to seek for more in a given passage than it really contains—a disposition to be led by sound rather than sense, and an implicit faith in received interpretations."

The worst of all the enemies to woman's emancipation is priestly domination, and until woman herself finds out this fact but little can be done for her deliverance. The history of the word Lucifer is an excellent educator to show how utterly untrustworthy are the theologic guides upon whom woman has been taught to depend as her best friends. M. H.

Personal Rights and Sexual Wrongs.

Contains matter pertaining to the Legitimation League and the Personal Rights Association of England. Also, four and one-half page portraits of Mrs. E. Heywood, Moses Harman, Lillian Harman and Lois Waisbrooker, together with sketches of their personalities and work. By Oswald Dawson. Neatly bound in boards. Price, 25 cents. Address Moses Harman, [illegible] Congress st., Chicago.

The Adult for February

Contains Music, Religion and Sex, (I.) by Oxford Northcote; Maltha, by Lady Cook; "Love's Coming of Age," by Sagittarius; The Sex Philosophy of Exeter Hall, by W. F. Dunton; The Divine Woman, by William Platt; Two Gifts, by Edward Carpenter; Wonderland, (a poem,) by Amy C. Bowles; The Home and the Family, by Robert Braithwaite; Controversial Correspondence; William Platt and the Adult. Price, 10 cents. $1 a year.

LOVE, MARRIAGE, AND DIVORCE,

And the Sovereignty of the Individual.

A Discussion between Henry James, Horace Greely, Mrs. Stephen Pearl Andrews. There are here included the final replies of Mr. Andrews, printed by the New York Tribune, and a subsequent discussion, continuing twenty years later, between Mr. James and Mr. Andrews.

[illegible] to be TAKEN CARE OF. [illegible] freedom Mr. G. friendly co-operation, [illegible] vided for by another, and [illegible] and stolen. And the [illegible] wives as it is [illegible] house of bondage and [illegible] evils are inherent or incidental, whether they [illegible] administration of the institution, whether they are [illegible] by means of restriction, are the questions that are here [illegible]

Price 25 cents. Address Lucifer, [illegible] W. Congress street, Chicago.

BEST COPY AVAILABLE

135

890308002

The Emma Goldman Papers

[Letters from a tour in America. In German] Reisebriefe aus Amerika [Part 2] / Emma Goldman. – 31 cm. In Der Arme Konrad [Berlin]. –(March 5, 1898).

Permission to reproduce or quote in any form must be obtained from the Zentrales Staatsarchiv (DDR), Merseburg, Germany.

Nr. III

Vertraut. 5 ten März

Reisebriefe aus Amerika.

Von Emma Goldmann.

(Dem New-Yorker „Sturmvogel" entnommen.)

II.

In Boston sprach ich in zwei gutbesuchten Versammlungen, von da gings nach New-Haven, wo ich ebenfalls eine starke Versammlung hatte. Von New-Haven fuhr ich nach New-York und von da nach Philadelphia. In N. Y. sprach ich vor einer Protestversammlung gegen den Pabeltoner Mord von 21 Streikern. Ach, dieses Protestieren auf Worten hin ist die reinste Ironie! Ich möchte mich immer selber ohrfeigen, wenn ich nach einem gradezu bestialischen Gewaltakt, wie der vom Sheriff Martin verübte, nur dagegen rede, während jeder Nerv in mir zuckt, der herrschenden Klasse einen Beweis zu liefern, daß sie nicht immer ungestraft wehrlose Arbeiter morden kann.

In Philadelphia fanden sehr gut besuchte englische Versammlungen statt. Von dort ging über Washington nach Pittsburg.

In Washington fand keine Versammlung statt, aber ich machte dort Halt, um verschiedene Freunde des „Arm. Teufel" kennen zu lernen. Ich konnte nur einige dieser Brüder treffen und ich muß gestehen, daß mich der Abstecher nach Washington nicht reute, denn ich habe dort ein paar treffliche Menschen kennen gelernt.

Weider bleibt es einem in der Welt nicht erspart, wie den wackeren Menschen auch solchen Gesellen zu begegnen, bei deren Zeugung ein unverzeihlicher Irrtum begangen wurde. Diese Leutchen hätten nämlich als Vierfüßler zur Welt kommen sollen, denn als Zweifüßler sind sie weder Menschen noch Tiere.

Da war unter anderen ein Architekt, alter Abonnent des „A. T.", ein Regierungsknecht, ein Mensch mit einem „Ohrfeigengesicht", wie Freund Reitzel sagt, der nicht begreifen konnte, daß ich als Anarchistin den Sinn für das Schöne und Gute im Menschen erwecken möchte. So ein Staatsverbrechen, der Masse begreiflich machen zu wollen, daß sie auch ein Recht zum Leben hat!

Es wollte diesem Patron garnicht in den Schädel, daß ein Anarchist das Predigen von Entbehrung, Opfern, Geduld und Resignation den Pfaffen überläßt, um für den höchsten Genuß in jeder Form einzutreten. Natürlich nicht für den Genuß des Einzelnen auf Kosten der Anderen, sondern für das Wohlleben des Individuums, als auch für das der Gesamtheit. Was versteht übrigens so eine Regierungsseele vom Genuß?

Der Zweite ähnlichen Schlages war ein dicker Bierbrauer aus Cincinnati, ebenfalls ein alter Leser des „A. T.", der sich gerade in Washington aufhielt und im Hotel Fritz Reuter wohnte, wo auch ich abstieg. Dieser schien zwar irgend welche Begriffe vom Genuß zu haben, seine stark gerötete Nase veranlaßte mich, einen solchen Schluß zu ziehen. Ein Riesenkerl mit einem Wanst, bei dessen Anblick ich mir meiner Mängel in der Mathematik bewußt wurde; denn um das Quantum Bier zu berechnen, das dieses Faß in sich barg, dazu gehörten die mathematischen Kenntnisse einer Kowalewska*). Sein Schmalzgesicht glänzte nur so, als er hörte, daß ich die E. G. bin, und er traktierte sogleich die ganze Gesellschaft; ich arme Seele aber mußte dafür alle seine Familiengeschichten hören, und da er schon Großvater ist, so kann man sich denken, wie lang dieselben ausfielen. Er vertraute mir sogar die Nummer seines Zimmers an und frug so ganz nebenbei, welches Zimmer ich inne hätte. In der Hitze des Gefechts, oder des Gelages, um die Wahrheit zu gestehen, fiel mir diese Frage gar nicht auf, und ich sagte ihm meine Nummer.

Nach langem Hin- und Herdiskutieren über alle möglichen Tagesfragen wurde es 2 Uhr morgens und an der Zeit aufzubrechen. Ich war kaum eine halbe Stunde im Bett, als Jemand ganz leise an meine Thür klopfte. „Wer da?" rief ich; keine Antwort. „Who is there?"

*) Sophia Kowalewska, eine russische Sozialistin, bekleidete in Schweden eine Professur der Mathematik.

BEST COPY AVAILABLE

890308002

The Emma Goldman Papers

[Letters from a tour in America. In German] Reisebriefe aus Amerika [Part 2] / Emma Goldman. – 31 cm. In Der Arme Konrad [Berlin]. –(March 5, 1898).

Permission to reproduce or quote in any form must be obtained from the Zentrales Staatsarchiv (DDR), Merseburg, Germany.

riefe aus Amerika.

on Emma Goldmann.

Yorker „Sturmvogel" entnommen.)]

[illegible] II.

nch ich in zwei gutbesuchten Versamm-gings nach New-Haaen, wa ich eben-Versammlung hatte. Van New-Haaen

frug ich nachmals, indem ich glaubte, der Klapser verstehe nicht deutsch. Richtig war's mein dicker Bierbrauer aus Cincinnati. In meiner Empörung schnauzte ich ihn nicht übel an, ich brauche nicht erst zu betonen, daß ich dem Kerl einen solchen Sack voll Grobheiten sagte, daß er sich schleunigst trollte. Ich hatte die ganze Episade wahl kaum des Niederschreibens wert gehalten, würde dieselbe nicht Betrachtungen traurigerer Natur in mir wach gerufen haben.

Seit Jahren liest dieser „ordnungsliebende" Bürger (er sagte mir ganz stolz, daß er Republikaner und sein Ideal Karl Schurz ist) den „A. T." pardan, ich wollte sagen, er hält den „A. T." Denn wenn er den Inhalt desselben all die langen Jahre gelesen hätte, müßte doch ein wenig Freiheitssinn haften geblieben sein; er würde dann begreifen, daß eine Frau ebensa viel Recht hat, allein zu reisen, wie er, ohne Beleidigungen ausgesetzt zu sein. Soweit reichen aber die Rechtsbegriffe dieses versaffenen und verspießerten Kaffern eben nicht. — —

Pittsburg — dieses traurige russige Nest mit seinen madernen Zwingburgen der Arbeit und seinem Gefängnis, weckt immer die trübsten Erinnerungen in mir; — weilt doch in letzterem seit Jahren einer meiner teuersten Freunde, Alex Berkmann, den eine Bourgeais-Justiz nach einem mißglückten Attentat verdammt hat, seine jungen Jahre hinter grauen Wällen zu verbringen.

In P. wollte man dieses Mal keine Versammlungen für mich arrangiren, weil gerade Freund Berkmanns Angelegenheit vor the Board of Pardons gebracht werden sollte, und die dortigen Genossen befürchteten, durch mein offentliches Auftreten die Sache zu schädigen. Nachdem ich aber in Manaca, 27 Meilen von P., sprechen sollte und außerdem meine erst kürzlich aus dem Gefängnis entlassenen Freunde Nold und Bauer sehen wollte, so beschloß ich, einige Tage in P. zu bleiben.

Während meiner ganzen Fahrt von Washington nach Pittsburg regnete es fortwährend, und als ich meinen Bestimmungsart erreichte, gaß es, nur so, als ob eine zweite Sintflut auf die Menschheit herniedergesandt werden sollte. Schaden würde es wahrhaftig nicht, denn nur durch solch ein Ereignis könnte die Welt von allerlei Ungeziefer befreit werden. Unser Nold, der angehende Dichter (ach, wenn der nur das Dichten unterlassen würde —) und der große Bauernjunge mit dem goldenen Herzen erwarteten mich am Bahnhof. „Bringt mich nur gleich auf mein altes Quartier zu Gordon," bat ich die Brüder, denn ich bin todmüde. — Ja, ja, aber zuerst müssen wir einkehren.

Ich war über das Wiedersehen mit meinen lieben Zuchthausaögeln so erfreut, daß ich nicht nein sagen konnte, zudem war meine Kehle ziemlich trocken, und so ging es denn mit Sack und Pack bei gräßlichem Regen in eine Wirtschaft, deren Besitzer zur „A. T."-Familie gehört. Trotzdem fällt ihm aber doch das Herz in die Hosen, wenn ein Anarchist sein Lokal betritt, wie mir Freund N. sagte, mit einer Anarchistin könnte man übrigens schon eine Ausnahme machen, dachte ich mir. Der gute Mann schien über meinen Besuch erfreut zu sein und ließ gleich Essen und Trinken auftragen. Er war sehr aufgeräumt, rückte immer näher an meine Seite, zwinkerte mit den Augen, gleichzeitig ängstliche Blicke auf eine gegenüberliegende Thür werfend. „Was ist los, daß Sie immer nach der Thür blicken?" frug ich ihn. „Ja, wissen Sie, ich möchte gar zu gerne bei Ihnen bleiben, aber im anstoßenden Zimmer sitzt meine Alte mit noch einigen Klatschschwestern, und wenn sie erfährt, wer Sie sind, dann bin ich verloren. Um Gotteswillen, sprechen Sie nicht so laut." Trotzdem der Mann so gastfreundlich war, konnte ich doch nicht umhin, ihn wegen seiner Feigheit zu strafen, ich sprach und erzählte mit lauter Stimme, bis der arme Kerl es nicht mehr auf seinen Sitz aushalten konnte.

So gegessen und getrunken hatten wir ja, gekostet hatte es auch nichts, und dazu noch die Schadenfreude. Die Karavane konnte nun getrost abschieben.

„Jetzt können wir Dich nicht mehr zu G. bringen, es ist zu spät," pustete Bauer, der sich noch immer vor Lachen über das Erlebte schüttelte. Wir gehen jetzt in ein naheliegendes Gasthaus, dessen Inhaber auch ein „A. T."-Leser ist. Na, hoffentlich nicht so einer als unser Wirt. O, nein, das ist einer von den Radikalen, riefen meine Begleiter unisona. Also los. Dort angekommen, wurden noch einige Gläser hinter die Binde gegossen, während das Bauerlein mit den Hauswirt betreffs eines Zimmers verhandelte. Endlich, nach langem Warten, hieß es zu Bett gehen. Im Begriffe, von meinen Kumpanen Abschied zu nehmen, höre ich dicht neben mir eine kreischende Stimme: „Wir haben keine Zimmer für Frauenzimmer!" Was war zu thun? Ich konnte doch gegen den Willen der züchtigen Hausfrau nicht dort bleiben. Also Bündel und Begleiter gepackt und weiter geschaben. Der Wirt, dem meine Freunde gehörig den Kopf gewaschen, war ganz trostlos, als er hörte, wer dieses Frauenzimmer eigentlich ist, und er bat mich unter vielen Entschuldigungen, ja nur zu bleiben; aber ich hatte keine Lust, eine Keilerei zwischen Ehegesponsen zu verursachen und so blieb ich eben nicht. Wahin jetzt? „Weißt Du," sagte Bauer, der den Mut noch nicht verloren hatte, während der arme weichherzige Nold ganz verzweifelt war, „jetzt führen wir dich zu einem Genossen, da kannst Du übernachten." Meinetwegen in die Hölle, wenn ich nur schon ein Unterkommen habe. Auf dem Wege zu diesem Genossen fiel mir mein kranker Freund R. R. mit seinem „A. T." ein. Was der für Augen machen würde, könnte er sich manches seiner Abonnenten aus der Nähe besehen, müßte er, was das für Michel sind, wie wenig Einfluß sein Wirken auf diese Menschen ausgeübt hat. — Natürlich kannte ich bis dahin nur wenige Leser seines Blattes, sonst hätte ich nicht so urteilen können. Ich habe mich während der übrigen Zeit meiner Reise überzeugt, daß der größte Teil der Freunde desselben wirklich liebe und freie Menschen sind, die mir durch ihre Güte und Liebenswürdigkeit die unangenehmen Erfahrungen mit „A. T."-Lesern in Pittsburg und anderen Plätzen leicht vergessen ließen.*)

Der Genasse, von dem Bauer sprach, wohnte in einem Zimmer, in welchem sich sein ganzes Eigentum, Ehebett, Weib und Kind mit eingeschlassen, befand. Die sogenannte bessere Hälfte, eine aus der Hefe hervorgegangene Deutsch-Amerikanerin, die ich schon aon früher her als eine Xantippe kannte, schien nicht sehr erbaut darüber zu sein, daß ihr Mann mir seine Stelle im Bette abtreten sollte. Unter solchen Umständen, war mein Bleiben nicht sehr angenehm, aber ich war zu müde und abgespannt, um erst lange zu überlegen, ich war froh, mich endlich meiner nässen Kleider entledigen und in ein warmes Nest kriechen zu können, wo ich denn auch gleich in einen erquickenden Schlaf fiel.

Während ich nun von einer herrlichen Zukunft und freien, edlen Menschen träumte, brachte mich ein schreck-

*) Zur Ehrenrettung des „A. T." und seiner Leser teilen wir übrigens hier eine Briefkastennotiz mit, die Reitzel in der letzten Nummer des „Armen Teufel" an Emma Goldmann richtet: „Eine kleine Berichtigung mußt Du mir schon gestatten: Die beiden Herren, die Du in Washington 'traffst und von denen Du im „Sturmvogel" so unliebsame Dinge erzählst, der Regierungsarchitekt und der Bierbrauer, sind nicht Abonnenten des „A. T." D. Red.

R 94.

BEST COPY AVAILABLE

137

890308002

The Emma Goldman Papers

[Letters from a tour in America. In German] Reisebriefe aus Amerika [Part 2] / Emma Goldman. – 31 cm. In Der Arme Konrad [Berlin]. –(March 5, 1898).

Permission to reproduce or quote in any form must be obtained from the Zentrales Staatsarchiv (DDR), Merseburg, Germany.

licher Lärm in die öde Wirklichkeit zurück. Ich war zu schlaftrunken, um im ersten Moment die Situation zu erfassen; dazu war es im Zimmer dunkel. Endlich konnte ich am Fußboden zwei Menschen unterscheiden, die sich gegenseitig mit Fäusten bearbeiteten und dazwischen die heisere, rauhe Stimme der Frau hören, die ihren Gatten, den teuren, meinen Gastwirt, in der gemeinsten Weise beschimpfte. Die ganze Situation war so horrend, dabei aber so komisch, daß ich eigentlich nicht wußte, ob ich weinen oder lachen sollte. Ich zog mich rasch an und stürzte in den peitschenden Regen hinaus, um zu Bauer zu gehen, der in der Nähe wohnte.

Der arme Kerl, der schon längst schnarchte, kroch schnell in seine Unaussprechlichen und ging mit mir in Nacht und Nebel hinaus, ein Hotel suchen. Die traurige Affäre trug sich in Allegheny City zu, wo keine Hotels zu finden sind. Ein Wagen nach Pittsburg war um diese Zeit, 3 Uhr Morgens, auch nicht mehr zu haben; also hieß es laufen, eine angenehme Sache bei dem Hundewetter.

Nach zwei Stunden kamen wir endlich an einen Platz, wo man auch für Frauenzimmer Zimmer hat. Ich konnte lange Zeit nicht zur Ruhe kommen, denn die Ereignisse des Abends und hauptsächlich diese ekelhafte Familienszene standen noch zu klar vor mir. Eigentlich hätte mich eine derartige Affäre nicht alterieren sollen. Geht es denn bei Eheleuten überhaupt anders zu? Wie ist es möglich, daß zwei Menschen, die absolut nicht für einander passen, ihr elendes Dasein doch zusammen dahinschleppen. Was hält sie denn vereint? Diese Fragen durchkreuzten mein müdes Gehirn. Die Liebe, werden Manche sagen. Lächerlich! Menschen, die so wenig gegenseitig Achtung haben und sich mit Schmutz und Kot bewerfen, die sich sogar soweit vergessen, handgreiflich zu werden, solche Geschöpfe wissen nichts von der Liebe. Es ist nur die verfluchte Gewohnheit und Feigheit des Mannes sowohl wie der Frau, welche sie die größte Schmach viel eher ertragen läßt, als auseinander zu gehen, oder lieber den Tod einem solchen traurigen Leben vorzuziehen.

Ich war am nächsten Tage ganz zerschlagen und angeekelt von dem Schlamm, in dem sich die Menschheit wälzt. In diesem Zustande reiste ich nach Monaca, wo es mir in anderer Beziehung nicht viel besser erging.

Vom Mannesmut des Bürgertums.

Der bürgerlich-demokratische Berliner Arbeiter-Verein hat eine eigenartige Feier zum 50jährigen Revolutions-Jubiläum am 18. März projektiert. Er fordert alle Veteranen des Befreiungskampfes vom Jahre 1848 auf, sich am 14. d. Mts. an einem bestimmten Ort zusammenzufinden, um den Erinnerungstag festlich zu begehen.

Die Absicht mag eine gute sein. Aber es ist daran zu zweifeln, daß eine größere Anzahl der Leute den Mut finden wird, sich zu beteiligen. In den verflossenen 50 Jahren hat das deutsche Bürgertum soviel an Mut und Ueberzeugungsstolz verloren, daß es sich in Berlin nicht einmal dazu aufschwang, seinen Toten ein Denkmal zu errichten. Es ist eher anzunehmen, daß sich gar mancher grauhaarige Spießbürger seiner jugendlichen Begeisterung schämt, die ihn auf die Barrikade trieb, und den Kopf über diese Dummejungenstreiche schüttelt. — Vielleicht meldet sich Herr von Miquel! Er preußischer Finanzminister?

Verleger und verantwortlicher Redakteur: Hermann Greß.

BEST COPY AVAILABLE

890308003

The Emma Goldman Papers

[Letters from a tour in America. In German] Reisebriefe aus Amerika. Part 3 / Emma Goldman. – 25 cm. In Der Arme Konrad [Berlin]. –(March 12, 1898).

Permission to reproduce or quote in any form must be obtained from the Zentrales Staatsarchiv (DDR), Merseburg, Germany.

Reisebriefe aus Amerika.

Von Emma Goldmann.

(Dem New-Yorker Sturmvogel entnommen.)

III.

Angeregt durch den A. T., wahrscheinlich, wurde ich vom Turnverein in Monaca, Pa., eingeladen, dort über das Thema „Die Frau, Ehe und Prostitution" zu sprechen, was mich zu dem Glauben verleitete, daß die Turner von Monaca außerordentlich fortgeschrittene Kerle seien. Leider war meine Annahme zu voreilig. Einen Tag vor der Versammlung wurde ich nämlich benachrichtigt, daß dieselbe abgesagt wurde, weil die Hälfte der Mitglieder vor dem schrecklichen, unmoralischen Frauenzimmer E. G. Reißaus genommen habe. Unter anderen Umständen hätte mir ein solcher Fall nur Spaß gemacht, da ich aber, der Einladung des Monaca Turnvereins folgend, einen Umweg in meiner Tour gemacht hatte, so versetzte mich die Nachricht von der Feigheit der Jahnbrüder gerade nicht in eine rosige Laune. Diesen Helden zum Trotz ging ich dennoch nach Monaca und mit Hilfe eines alten Genossen und Mitgliedes des Vereins wurde die Versammlung doch zustande gebracht. Das Publikum war ganze 50 Mann stark und anstatt das Thema: die Frau, Ehe und Prostitution zu behandeln, sprach ich über das Kaffertum der Turner. Daß ich die Herren nicht geschont habe, beweist der Umstand, daß die Turner eine Woche später eine Versammlung einberiefen, um zu entscheiden, wen ich zum Kaffern gestempelt hätte. Wie mir aber der alte Genosse mitteilte, ließen sie diesen Punkt der Tagesordnung fallen, um sich nicht noch mehr lächerlich zu machen.

Nach meinen unangenehmen Erfahrungen mit dem Monaca Turnverein fuhr ich nach Chicago, um an der dort am 27 September stattfindenden Arbeiter-Konvention teilzunehmen.

Chicago ist zweifellos das London im verkleinerten Maßstabe, denn in keiner anderen Stadt Amerikas starrt einem das graue Elend Amerikas so grell ins Gesicht, wie gerade hier. Soweit ich in diesem Lande herumgekommen, habe ich noch nicht so viele zerlumpte Gestalten, verkrüppelte Menschen, abgezehrte Gesichter mit tiefliegenden Augen und abgestumpften Zügen gesehen, wie in dieser sogenannten Gartenstadt. Ich weiß nicht,

BEST COPY AVAILABLE

890308003

The Emma Goldman Papers

[Letters from a tour in America. In German] Reisebriefe aus Amerika. Part 3 / Emma Goldman. – 25 cm. In Der Arme Konrad [Berlin]. –(March 12, 1898).

Permission to reproduce or quote in any form must be obtained from the Zentrales Staatsarchiv (DDR), Merseburg, Germany.

ob es der Schmutz der Straßen, der Gestank des Chicaga River, der Rauch der Fabriken, der wie ein dichter Nebel über der Stadt liegt, der Menschenmarkt in Court Str., wo arme Mädchen aller Nationen für 25 und 50 Cents ihre kranken, müden Leiber verkaufen, oder ob es die Erinnerung an den gräßlichen Mord vom 11. November 1887 ist, das mir Chicago in solch düsterem Licht erscheinen läßt, – ich weiß nur, daß ein längerer Aufenthalt in dieser Stadt Selbstmordgedanken in mir erwecken würde.

Die Freunde und Genossen werden sich wohl noch erinnern, welch große Erfolge sich die Arbeiter allerorts von besagter Konvention versprachen. Dieselbe wurde auf einer Seite von Debs, der so radikal und energisch in der St. Louis-Konvention auftrat, und auf der anderen von den Vertretern der hungernden, verzweifelten, streikenden Grubenarbeiter einberufen. Auch ich maß der Konvention Wichtigkeit bei, und da ich ohnehin in verschiedenen von den Genossen arrangierten Versammlungen sprechen sollte, so ging ich einige Wochen früher nach Chicaga um mich an derselben zu beteiligen. Ich kann meinen Freunden die Versicherung erteilen, daß ich weder auf Kosten irgend einer Gruppe, noch als Vertreterin dorthin delegiert wurde. Ich hatte ein Mandat von einem N. Y. Arbeiter-Verein, lediglich zu dem Zweck, um zu den Verhandlungen zugelassen zu werden.

Die Konvention detailiert zu beschreiben, würde zu viel Raum in Anspruch nehmen, ich will mich daher begnügen zu sagen, daß ich einer solch lächerlichen, nichtssagenden, bedeutungslosen Affäre noch in meinem Leben nicht beigewohnt habe. Die Convention fing damit an, daß Gompers, der Groß-Mogul der American Federation of Labor, aus lauter Neid und Eifersucht über die Popularität Debs, den verschiedenen Organisationen, den Befehl erteilte, keine Delegaten dahin zu schicken, und Eugene Debs, der neue Messias, zeigte bei dieser Gelegenheit, daß er absolut nicht Herr der Situation war. Er ließ sich von Gompers einfach in's Bockshorn jagen und rief ebenfalls alle Delegaten der Sozialdemokratie ab, infolgedessen blieb die Konvention, mit Ausnahme jener Weniger, in Händen von Politikanten und Stimmhaschern aller Schattierungen. Dieses Gesindel brachte die Zeit damit zu, sich gegenseitig damit zu beschimpfen und die absurdesten Anträge zu stellen. Die Meisten kamen schon am Morgen im betrunkenen Zustande an, denn mit 5 Dollars pro Tag, so viel bekam jeder Delegat als Vertreter seiner Union, kann man sich schon ziemlich viel leisten, und das Geschrei und Gejohle den ganzen Tag über war geradezu haarsträubend. Zwei Tage wurden vergeudet mit der Prüfung der Mandate und die übrige Zeit mit Vorschlägen albernster Natur. Kein Wort über den Kohlenarbeiterstreik, über die brutale Behandlung der Arbeiter seitens der Minenbesitzer, Nicht der geringste Protest gegen die Ermordung von wehrlosen Arbeitern in Hazelton, nichts von alledem. Am Ende des zweiten Tages wurde ich dieses Schauspiels müde und überdrüssig. Ich wollte aus dieser Atmosphäre hinaus, aber zuerst mußte ich diesen verlorten, schmutzigen Gesellen meinen Standpunkt klar machen. Es gelang mir, das Wort zu ergreifen und das Resultat meiner halbstündigen Ansprache war, daß die besseren Elemente mit mir den Saal verließen.

Nach alledem glaube ich aber doch, daß meine Anwesenheit in der Konvention nicht ganz nutzlos war. Erstens hatte ich die Gelegenheit meine Ansicht über den Grubenarbeiterstreik, und über die Arbeiterbewegung im Allgemeinen vor Leuten zu bringen, die sonst nie in eine anarchistische Versammlung gehen, denn es waren da auch eine Anzahl Besucher aus allen Schichten der

BEST COPY AVAILABLE

890308003

The Emma Goldman Papers

[Letters from a tour in America. In German] Reisebriefe aus Amerika. Part 3 / Emma Goldman. — 25 cm. In Der Arme Konrad [Berlin]. —(March 12, 1898).

Permission to reproduce or quote in any form must be obtained from the Zentrales Staatsarchiv (DDR), Merseburg, Germany.

Bevölkerung zugegen. Zweitens habe ich mich mehr als je zuvor überzeugen können, wie schrecklich die Arbeiter dupiert und von ihren Vertretern ausgenützt und betrogen werden. Drittens hatte ich Gelegenheit, Debs, der den Arbeitern sehr viel versprochen und sehr wenig hielt, kennen zu lernen. Ich habe mich überzeugt, daß die Frau Recht hat, die mir einer Versammlung von Debs gesagt, er habe ein großes Herz, aber einen leeren Schädel. Er ist nicht der Mann seiner Zeit, es mangelt ihm an Energie und Willenskraft und er klappt bei dem geringsten Windstoß wie eine Fliege zusammen. Trotzdem er sich privatim zum Anarchismus bekennt, glaubt er doch, den Stimmkasten als Mittel, die Masse heranzulocken, gebrauchen zu müssen. Es unterliegt keinem Zweifel, daß er in seiner Art ehrlich ist und gute Absichten hat, aber was nützt das alles, wenn ein Mensch nicht die Kraft in sich trägt, offen hervorzutreten, der ganzen Welt die Stirne zu bieten, alle Schranken zu durchbrechen und seinen eigenen Weg zu gehen.

Die Genossen in Chicago hatten nicht nur keine einzige Versammlung arrangiert, trotzdem sie mir geschrieben hatten, daß deren ein halbes Dutzend meines Kommens warteten, sondern nicht einmal einen Wohnort für mich besorgt. Glücklicherweise traf ich einen alten lieben Freund in Chicago, der zwei Zimmer bewohnte und sich sofort bereit erklärte, mir eines davon zu überlassen. Zum Entsetzen aller Philister, Kalter Jungfern und Moralisten nahm ich die Gastfreundschaft meines Freundes an und zwar während meines Aufenthaltes in Chicago. Sei ihm [illegible] wenn nicht seine Wirtin ganz entsetzt über die Unanständigkeit ihres Mieters, eine Frau in seinem Zimmer zu beherbergen, gegen mein weiteres Verleihen Einsprache erhoben hätte. So mietete ich mir eine Bude auf eigene Faust, wo ich nun ungestört [illegible] konnte.

In Chicago blieb ich beinahe zwei Wochen. Während dieser Zeit sprach ich in sechs Versammlungen, die in Bezug auf Besuch viel zu wünschen übrig ließen. Bei einer Gelegenheit, beim Feste des sozialen Turnvereins, sprach ich über Freund Herrmann's Angelegenheit, sprach, wurden 35,50 Dollar zu seinen Gunsten kollektiert.

Von Chicago fuhr ich nach Milwaukee, wo ich drei Versammlungen hatte, von da wieder zurück nach Chicago, um in einer zu Gunsten der inhaftierten „Firebrand"-Leute einberufenen Versammlung zu sprechen. Der Erfolg derselben wurde leider durch Lucy Parsons geschwächt, indem sie statt die ungerechtfertigte, niederträchtige Verhaftung der drei Genossen in Portland und die immer mehr um sich greifende Zensur Comstock's und Konsorten zu verdammen, gegen den Redakteur des Firebrand, E. Addis, zu Felde zog, weil der Artikel über freie Liebe in den Spalten des Firebrand duldete. Abgesehen davon, daß der Anarchismus nicht nur die Freiheit auf ökonomischem und politischem Gebiete, sondern auch im sozialen und geschlechtlichen Leben lehrt, so hat L. Parsons am wenigsten Ursache, Abhandlungen über freie Liebe zu verwerfen und noch dazu zu einer Zeit, wo es galt, Genossen aus den Klauen der Ordnungsbanditen zu befreien. Ich sprach nach Parsons und hatte einen schweren Stand die unangenehme Stimmung, die ihre Auslassungen hervorbrachten, zu verscheuchen und es gelang mir auch, die Sympathie und die materielle Unterstützung der Anwesenden für das Portland-Trio zu gewinnen.

Ich kam nach einigen Wochen wieder nach Chicago, um in der [illegible] December-Feier zu sprechen und auch da, wie bei den anderen Versammlungen, machte ich die traurige Erfahrung, wie abgestumpft und gleichgiltig die Massen der Genossen sind. Die Erinnerung an den ungeheuren Mord von 18[illegible] d. Anblick des Schanddenkmals

BEST COPY AVAILABLE

890308003

The Emma Goldman Papers

[Letters from a tour in America. In German] Reisebriefe aus Amerika. Part 3 / Emma Goldman. — 25 cm. In Der Arme Konrad [Berlin]. —(March 12, 1898).

Permission to reproduce or quote in any form must be obtained from the Zentrales Staatsarchiv (DDR), Merseburg, Germany.

am Haymarket und die sich immer wiederholende Brutalität der Chicagoer Polizei hätten doch etwas Enthusiasmus und Feuer in der Brust der dortigen Arbeiter zurücklassen sollen. Nichts von alledem! Es kommen immerhin am 11. November einige tausend Leute zusammen, aber nicht weil sie das Bedürfnis haben, das Andenken der Gefallenen zu feiern, nicht weil sie die Schrecken der Erwürgung unserer Freunde nachempfinden, sondern sie kommen aus Gewohnheit. Darum fiel auch die vorjährige 11. November-Feier so zahm und lendenlahm aus und ich glaube, jede 11. November-Feier hatte denselben Charakter, seitdem sich die Arbeiter dem Befehle an diesem Tage nicht in Massen nach Waldheim hinauszugehen, ruhig beugten, statt sich dieses Recht zu erkämpfen.

Man stelle sich eine solche Feier, beginnend mit der Abspielung von Hymnen und Liedern wie „Morgen muß ich fort von hier", vor, folgt ein Krähen-, pardon Damenchor, ein Lied krächzend, so ein Lied das Stein erweichen, er, hierauf die langathmige Ansprache des englischsprechenden Festredners, der zum so und so vielten Male die Geschichte des Prozesses breittritt und zum Ueberfluß noch die Anwesenden mit der Recitation eines von ihm selbst verfaßten endlosen Poems regaliert. Zu all dem der Anblick der gähnenden, gleichgiltigen Masse — man kann sich unschwer vorstellen, welchen Eindruck eine derartige Affäre auf einen sensitiv und enthusiastisch veranlagten Menschen machen muß. Um das Interesse der Arbeiter dieses Landes wach zu halten, müßten jeden Tag die Lingg's und Andere für ihre Ueberzeugung an den Tod gehen, denn hierzulande hat nur das Bedeutung, was neu ist, das Alte zieht nicht mehr.

BEST COPY AVAILABLE

890223006

The Emma Goldman Papers

[Summary of Lecture] Emma Goldman in Philadelphia / Emma Goldman. – pp. 2-3 ; 43 cm. In Free Society [San Francisco]. – (March 13, 1898).

Obtained from the State Library of Pennsylvania. Institutional Location: Special Collections.

where the "violent Anarchist" has assassinated. Let the passive resistants, then, go to the ... offender with their doctrines. Do they preach to us not to strike back when smitten? Don't ... those who always aim the first blow, and you will save much time and labor.

Here are men crowded off the earth, comparatively, huddled in tenements. But here is vacant land all about them. It is impossible that such a condition should not cause question and thought—evolution. Having questioned, discussed and arrived at the conclusion that they have a right to the use of any unused land, they move onto it. Nobody is assassinated; nobody's life is endangered by these Anarchists. But all the same there will soon be a show of guns. Forced by whom? Who fires the first shot? Who is the first assassin of peaceable men?

In this example is proof of all I or any Anarchist claims in regard to violent resistance: that it is an inevitable part of the evolution toward free land and free conditions generally. Of what avail is the brain part of evolution if the consequent part is to be decried and discountenanced?

We need not worry about the Anarchist becoming too violent. It is the other fellow that needs watching. All intelligent students of history and sociology have discovered this fact.

Violence, force, is Anarchistic only when used in defense. But this cannot be construed to mean that we are to sit supinely and wait until the hand is raised to strike us. We threaten danger and destruction to no one. But the attitude of the opposition toward us is clearly demonstrated. We are to expect no quarter.

Now some will call this incendiary; and indeed the plain statement of facts is sometimes inflammatory, and ought to be. But I am not "advocating violence"—I do not need to. I see it coming, to my intense regret and sorrow.

Much has been said in praise and condemnation of some individuals who committed, some would say, unprovoked acts of violence in the name of Anarchy. The facts are very plain and simple. It does not seem that such cases would need to be discussed at all by intelligent persons. Those men were the product of conditions, the same as were the men attacked or assassinated. We do not know the motives that conditions had given those parties. How, then, shall we condemn? Their acts were as inevitable as the coming violent struggle, under existing conditions.

I have no hard words for any individual or class—the millionaire, the pauper, the slave-driver or slave—all are the products of conditions; the thoughts and the acts of each are alike inevitable. Not in the sense of foreordination, of course, but in accordance with inherited tendencies and the play of present environments upon the organism.

J. H. M.

* * * * *

WHY I AM AN ANARCHIST.

I try to do to others as I would have them do to me. I would not be governed, therefore I would not govern others, which constitutes me an Anarchist.

I say as did Christ, "Neither do I condemn them." "Father forgive them—they know not what they do." If I had been organized and environed as the most negative, ignorant so-called criminal I can think of, I should have done just as he did, therefore I have no right to punish him and do not favor laws that would. I have only a right to influence him by teaching and by example to do as I think right. I am therefore an Anarchist.

I have a right to love even my enemies. I do not allow myself to hate or think evil of others so far as I can avoid it. I am therefore an Anarchist.

I am naturally sympathetic with suffering, and do not try to suppress my sympathies, for I never thought them harmful. I am too sympathetic, if for no other reason, to kill any living thing, much less a fellow man, and for that reason I never owned a gun nor killed anything with a gun in my life.

I, being an Anarchist, could not sanction government, and therefore could not nor ever did ask for an office.

I never commanded anyone, for a command implies obedience—obedience implies inferiority of the commanded, and punishment for disobedience; for behind every command is hidden in ambush—"If you don't, I'll make you." I am therefore an Anarchist.

I have lived a life of Anarchy for sixty years. I have never cost the county or state a cent for my support in poorhouse, in office, or in court; but on the contrary, I have always paid a heavy tax assessed against me for which I never received a cent benefit except in the roads and bridges built. I never went to war to tax others to pay me a pension. I never went to law to tax others to pay for courts. I do not support churches for the reason that they are authoritative, sanction and foster governments, war and all other evils that government implies. Yet there are some, especially among professed christians, who do not love me as their teacher would if he were here. I feel sure that if Christ were here, and we could have a familiar conversation on sociological subjects, subjects he was so fond of discussing, that we would agree exactly. What he taught of sociology was profoundly true. Much of what he taught has since been demonstrated by Herbert Spencer and others of modern times to be true. He was the great sociological commentator and Anarchist of his time.

Of course, if he lived now, he would modify some things he said, but the main purport of all his teachings was just what Anarchists teach now. I know church members do not like to have his name associated with Anarchy, for the reason that they are either ignorant of Anarchy or christianity. I have asked, and now repeat the request, please point to a single word or action in Christ's short life on earth that does not fully comport with Anarchy. If you can, I will cease to quote him. Yet professed christians are the bitterest opponents of Anarchy we have. It is prima facia evidence to my mind that the Church is not christian. Of course, I mean the orthodox churches. There are a few churches, largely in the minority, that approach christianity in their ethical teachings. They are, however, illogical by not openly avowing Anarchy. Take the Friends or "Quakers." They oppose war and slavery logically, but illogically support government. They have never thought that all government is founded on war. If a command to pay your tax to support soldiers is disobeyed, the command is backed up by the sheriff, and he by his posse, they by the state militia, and the latter by the whole army of the government. Government is all and essentially physical force. Might is right. No appeal is made to the better emotions nor reason of men. Christianity and Anarchy appeal ENTIRELY and EXCLUSIVELY to LOVE and REASON.

It is not so difficult a matter, as some imagine it might be, to live an anarchistic life. One may not accumulate so much wealth, as society is now constituted, but the consciousness of having lived a non-aggressive Christ-life, void of offense to any man, is ample compensation for abstinence from so-called worldly pleasures, such as contentions, hatreds, law-suits, wars and offices of authority.

Christ might and doubtless would have lived to be over a hundred years of age if he had only kept his mouth shut. It is not for what any martyr for Anarchy ever did that he died, but for what his sympathetic and sanguine nature prompted him to utter. Simply for words, words, words, they died, and those words often disconnected and the sentences distorted to make a case of violation of man-made restrictive laws against freedom of speech.

I have never seen an Anarchist, but have read of them and have read their writings, and am fully persuaded that Anarchists, as a class, are the most noble, intellectual, philanthropic and sympathetic people living. It would not be strange if some Anarchist, driven to an insane frenzy on witnessing his comrades tortured—as 300 of them were in Barcelona, from which 28 died—to get them to confess to a crime they never committed, should assassinate Canovas the premier of Spain.

But notwithstanding the fact that diatribes, innuendoes, and epithets have been hurled at them, and even their name Anarchist is almost always used in an opprobrious sense, but one or two Anarchists in all the world have ever been proven guilty of infringing upon the rights or freedom of anyone. Why should they be so unreasonably accused of crime when the fundamental principles of Anarchism are equal freedom and non-aggression? Some Anarchists even go so far as to be non-resistants to force or persecution as Christ did. They are taxed to support governments, soldiers, pensions for soldiers and churches, none of which they endorse. They are the most patient, long suffering ... worst maligned and persecuted people anywhere ... found in the world.

I believe it was Rousseau who said the ... triotism was the last refuge of a ... Anarchists are not patriots. They believe as I do in the solidarity of the race; that if one member suffers the whole body is in pain. We are all interdependent creatures. If the most remote people on earth suffer, we feel it sympathetically.

I am an Anarchist because Anarchism appeals to every pure and noble emotion of the human soul. It is absolutely just, philanthropic, altruistic, and inspiring to every good action, and leaves no excuse or temptation to do a bad thing. I have never heard an effective argument against it. One argument often used against it consists in the question "What would you do with your criminals?" It is not a pertinent question to put to an Anarchist, for we challenge the world to disprove that government itself is the crime of crimes and the sole cause of all crime. We in turn ask our opponents, what are you going to do with your criminals? Now, since the prisons are bursting to overflow, and with criminals on the increase it is a serious question for them to answer.

A starving man might break into my house now, since there are so many against whom we bar our doors, but under Anarchist-Communism no laws nor locks would be needed.

No more important truth was ever uttered by Herbert Spencer than that, wherever society rids itself of an evil by coercive force, other evils as great or greater, unforseen, spring up in its place. "Coercion," says he, "can by no process be made equitable."

Governments have in all times vainly tried to suppress crimes, and people seem to learn nothing from history. People still have faith that if there was a strong repressive LAW, with a heavy penalty to its violation against a certain evil, the millenium would be here. Did they ever have any experience in smoothing and straightening a sheet of copper or tin that had become cockled, as we say, at one corner? If they put it on an anvil and attempted to straighten out the cockle with one fell blow they would find they had made a half dozen more small wrinkles unforseen and unthought of. Never, never, was evil corrected by evil! Government is evil. It is coercion. It is antagonistic to charity and every other elevating emotion. Since government has always failed to benefit the people, let us try freedom—Anarchism.

Hindsboro, Ill. J. C. BARNES.

* * * * *

EMMA GOLDMAN IN PHILADELPHIA.

The extraordinary popularity of Emma Goldman was again attested by the crowds that flocked to hear her. A large audience is no criterion by which to judge of the popularity of any speaker, but the ovations she received are sufficient confirmations. Comments were frequent anent her remarkable improvement in public speaking, and what greater achievements this remarkable woman may yet attain, if she reaches life's autumn, can only be conjectured.

Owing to the fact that Comrade Goldman delivered six lectures here last week, it is impossible to make any extended remarks, but I will attempt a fair summary of each of the lectures.

On Wednesday evening before the Ladies' Liberal League the lecturer spoke of "The New Woman." She made a brilliant plea for the economical, political and sexual freedom of her sex, endorsing the sentiment expressed by John Stuart Mills in his memorable speech in the house of commons, that "The principle which regulates the existing social relation between the sexes, the legal subordination of one sex to another, is wrong in itself and ought to be replaced by equity."

She said that from time immemorial woman had been subjected by Church and State to abject humiliation and that the farther away woman progressed from these gorgons the nearer she approached the goal of intellectual liberty.

On Thursday evening she spoke at the Single Tax society on "The Absurdity of Non-Resistance to Evil."

She showed the fallacy of the Tolstoic argument maintaining that the great reforms of the past were not attained through "passive resistance" but through force.

She very skillfully reviewed several great historical events and proved that they were successful only through the application of force.

She said she believed in non-acquiescence to injustice and not in a calm, docile submission to despotism.

890223006

The Emma Goldman Papers

[Summary of Lecture] Emma Goldman in Philadelphia / Emma Goldman. – pp. 2-3 ; 43 cm. In Free Society [San Francisco]. – (March 13, 1898).

Obtained from the State Library of Pennsylvania. Institutional Location: Special Collections.

with a quotation from Ibsen, that "when necessity breeds no revolt, then the people are not worthy of their own redemption."

On Friday evening she delivered an address before the Society for Ethical Research on "The Basis of Morality." This address was listened to by several well-known educators who have been holding their annual convention here. Comrade Goldman maintained that all morality is dependent upon what is known to moralists as the "materialistic conception", that is to say, the ego. She said she was thoroughly in accord with Frederick Nietzsche in his "Twilight of the Idols" when he wrote that "our present morality is a degenerate idiosyncracy which has caused an unutterable amount of harm."

To sustain her argument that morality depends upon individualistic conception she cited the irrefutable axiom of Kropotkin, that the man who steals a loaf of bread and the man who gives away his last shirt to a child are both actuated by the same egoistic impulse. She denied the right of Church or State to frame a code of ethics to be used as a basis for all moral action. She stigmatized such usurpation as vile casuistry. She showed the relation existing between morals and economics proving that economic thraldom is responsible for nearly all the crimes so-called, and she closed by saying that as long as the present system of economic slavery continues she believed with Lacassagne, that "every society possesses the criminals it deserves."

On Saturday evening Comrade Goldman addressed the German Anarchist society upon the subject of "Freedom." The hall was so densely crowded that the narrator was unable to obtain admission and is therefore unable to furnish FREE SOCIETY with an epitome of her remarks. Suffice it to say, however, that she handled the subject ably.

Comrade Goldman was billed to deliver two addresses before the Friendship Liberal League on Sunday. The subject of the afternoon's discourse was "Patriotism." She said that patriotism has always been "the last refuge of a scoundrel." That it is a tool wielded by subtle politicians to accomplish their own designing ends. The lecturer referred to patriotism as the antithesis of comradeship and solidarity. She said that the history of mankind proves the fallacy of a chauvinistic policy. It is a breeder of dissension and strife between the proletariat of different countries. She referred to patriotism as the Veil of Maya that obscures the real issues of the day.

The lecturer warmly eulogized the Communists for the destruction of the Vendome Column, and who while in the act of demolition, exclaimed: "We will not tolerate this barrier against our German brothers. Our cause is their cause."

She closed her remarks with an eloquent plea for the abandonment of patriotism and warned her auditors not to allow their minds to be circumscribed within the narrow confines of any nation, but to be men and women of universal sympathy.

"Charity" was the topic for the evening discussion. She commenced her remarks by drawing the line of differentiation between charity and assistance, stating that her experience as a trained nurse had justified her belief that hospitals being indispensable institutions, should not be included in the category of charity. She characterized charity as the crumbs that fall from the table of the modern Dives. Charity, said Comrade Goldman, is an indictment against christianity.

The lecturer applied her scalpel to the management of penal institutions (which are based upon "sweet" charity) and stated that the "festering dung-heap," commonly known as "society," was responsible for the very criminals that it attempts to reform by incarceration. She said that charity and justice were incompatibilities.

She spoke of foundling asylums as institutions created by society to hide the defects of its marital relations.

During the discussion that followed her remarks she was blackguarded by a notorious Camden pettifogger. I will contribute an article to your valuable paper upon this discussion, including Comrade Goldman's opening address, the criticism of an intellectual bastard and her clever rejoinder to him.

I leave it to the calm and philosophic consideration of the reader of this article who is the greatest benefactor to the human race, the wealthy Baroness Burdett-Coutts who distributes the very money in charity which is stolen from the laborers of England, or that poor, much vilified Anarchist propagandist who is endeavoring to eliminate those conditions in society which make charity a possibility.

Comrade Goldman has gone to Pittsburg to "spread the gospel." She has the affectionate esteem of her Philadelphia comrades, who believe in her undying fealty to the cause; in her intellectual and discoursive ability to expound and defend it; and in her indomitable will which is unswerved by either persecution or imprisonment.

O. SHELLING.

◆ ◆ ◆ ◆ ◆

"CALL FOR ACTION."

Comrade Bodendyke's call for action in the issue of No. 150 with reference to establishing a colony is disturbing the minds of radicals of late. It seems there is sickness in our ranks, and the expounders of such erratic ideas furnish proof of it. If I look at things rightly there can be no such thing as an Anarchist community successfully conducted. First, we have not the means to start it; second, we cannot live up to our ideal so long as the dominant system makes war upon us, and admitting this to be a fact, our sole aim should be to make war upon the prevailing system; or, in other words, to be the yeast to revolutionize an oppressed and superstitious people. To do this, and do it right, we must stay in their midst, and not fence ourselves up in a community or colony.

The only object we can have for any kind of association is not to try to free ourselves from surrounding conditions (and finally to prove it to be a failure where every one of the participants accuses the other of having brought it about), but associate to further the propaganda. Let us, instead of trying to bring about impossibilities, establish a center for distribution of literature. Go to work and do something, instead of bewailing our own inactivity, and soon we will have something else than such a state of things as we have now. Comrade Bodendyke cries: "I dread to work for a boss. I'd sooner go to war if I could." We are in war now, comrade, and you either do not realize it or else your servitude has so affected you that you would unconsciously fall into the trap of a boss again, because if you would co-operate with ever so many or few mechanics, you would be as much under the power of monopoly as now. Where would you get the raw material to work upon, if not from them? And to whom could you sell, if not to a monopoly-ridden surrounding? As things are we could not lift ourselves out of this mire by our own boot-straps. We shall have to get out of it, else clear it away. No other method is possible, however we may dislike it. Therefore, if everyone of the comrades would help clear away the miro of superstition, and not waste away his life-blood trying to elevate hims elf above it, we soon would have better conditions around us, and not until we do this will our surroundings improve.

Now, comrade, get up and go to war again and you will have better results than you have had during the past three years.

CLEMENS PFORTZNER.

Chicago, Ill.

◆ ◆ ◆ ◆ ◆

BIBLE TEACHING UP TO DATE.

"But Christ is ALL, and in ALL."

Logically therefore an Anarchist must be Christ and christianity Anarchism.

Paul realized the ideal Anarchy when he said, "Lie not one to another, seeing that you have put off the old man with his deeds; and have put on the new man, which is renewed in knowledge after the image of him that created him; where there is neither Greek nor Jew, circumcision, Barbarian, Scythian, bond or free; but Christ is all, and in all. Put on therefore as the elect of God, holy and beloved, bowels of mercies, kindness, humbleness of mind, meekness, long suffering, forebearing one another, and forgiving one another if any man have a quarrel against any; even as Christ forgave you, so also do ye."

Paul earned his living in the sweat of his face, and by thus following the first law of nature, he at last found the truth in other matters, and became a leader of the very class he before persecuted even unto death; and in many instances, (such as the above) preached freedom.

Booth, the self-dubbed general—a more appropriate title would be, aide de camp of the plutes—has commenced his campaign of degradation in California by saying: "We want, however, not more bibles, nor more truths, but more men and women who love the truth; christianity means real men and real women who live free from sin;" right you are, and one sin is that of keeping you producing nothing but childish superstition; the greatest sin, the concentration of all sin, is that of Labor submitting to legal robbery, through which those who produce rags, live in hovels and suffer [illegible]. tinue these conditions quietly is the [illegible] gated by the Salvation army. Brother [illegible] is not an attractive one, there being no [illegible] equity in enticing dupes to still crawl down the road to fall among thieves.

Those professing or attempting to lead [illegible] must first get rid of all the superstitions on which [illegible] were fed as babies, when they swallowed every lie the barons and priests selected from the [illegible] of biblical barons and priests, so as to retain them in bondage through ignorance.

Miss Francis Willard, the distinguished temperance advocate, for a long time preached intemperance as the cause of poverty and crime, but being an earnest seeker after truth she arrived at the conclusion that the unjust conditions under which Labor has to live, was the real cause of both the poverty and the crime.

Christianity means real men and real women, "who know their rights, and knowing, dare maintain them;" and they cannot carry this out in Salvation barracks, with hallelujah soup, and praise-the-lord-bare-bones. Let the general begin at the sore place; try the healing of the people by following the example of Jesus, and whip the money changers off the earth, clean out of the temple of humanity—then, and not till then, will there be peace on earth and good will between men—don't the Doctorers of Divinity know this?

But what is Booth's mode? raise the down-trodden? No, tread them down so deep in the mire of superstitious fear and submission, that they will never rise again! The plutocratic press gives us the news that an ovation headed by Oakland's mayor was accorded him, before entering his carriage to be driven to Hotel Meritt, where he told the interviewer, "Since my visit to America three years ago the increase in membership of the Salvation army is something marvelous. I also find among MY PEOPLE a great advance in the character of work, and their devotion to the great and good cause is beautiful in the extreme. It can be expressed in just three words; they are, poverty, chastity and devotion" (what keen perception!) "Among the Salvationists the world over the likeness is striking. They are willing to serve, obedient to authority, to suffer, and are the most lovable people on [illegible] of the earth. If the world goes on [illegible] a mighty force and a great aid to civilisation."

The offer of a civilization of robbed, crushed slaves is not enticing; no one wearing any uniform can be free, be he priest, police, or collector of odd trifles under false pretenses—the Pope must be Booth's model; the pennies come in so thick and handy in both cases, through fear of damnation, purgatory and hell.

We prefer to follow the carpenter who taught that the truth shall make us free; freedom in hell is preferable to a heaven-community of brass bands, banners and buncombe; howls and prayers, colonels and slaves.

The Salvation army is a positive block on the road to Labor's emancipation.

We may meet beyond the river to check your baggage, barons, priests and colonels; you have at least saved us that worry.

J. ALFRED KINGHORN-JONES.

◆ ◆ ◆ ◆ ◆

FOR CHICAGO.

Concert and ball of The International Group, Saturday, April 9., 1898, at 12th St., Turner Hall near Halsted St., for the benefit of FREE SOCIETY and the Berkman Fund. Comrade Emma Goldman will deliver an address. All comrades interested in our movement are earnestly requested to make this testimonial a financial success.

THE INTERNATIONAL GROUP.

◆ ◆ ◆ ◆ ◆

IMPORTANT NOTICE!

Allegheny, Pa.
February 19, 1898.

The committee which is assisting H. Bauer in distributing prizes has resolved to postpone this [illegible] until April 2, 1898, for the reason that most of the tickets are still outstanding.

Those having received tickets are kindly requested to settle and to return those not sold before March 29, 1898.

The Committee:

P. HAUBERT. H. G[illegible]
C. NOLD. A. F[illegible]
P. SCHLIFF. L. B[illegible]

BEST COPY AVAILABLE

890320006

The Emma Goldman Papers

[Excerpt from Lecture] Commune Celebrated / Emma Goldman.– p. 2 ; 43 cm. In The Pittsburg[h] Leader. –(March 13, 1898).

Permission to reproduce or quote in any form must be obtained from Pennsylvania Historical & Museum Commission. Institutional Location: Division of Archives & Manuscripts.

E SAME DATE.

CROCOLLEGIATE MEETS TSBURG ON ONE DAY.

iversity in a Decided Di- he State Intercollegiate e Figured on Doc Date, ir Constitution Fixes Hot Causes Trou-

n Pittsburg in the on connected with the parlors Y M C A yesterday al- during the session a de- lected situation developed with the coming annual ed for May 21

y stated in the "Leader," ercollegiate meet will be ong this year, as at first he 20th of the same month, on, however develops the day set by the constitu- ate association is May 21. e dates of the two meets day, 14th to be held in low the delegates to the e state organization over the error of the big meet t known Mr F W Mil- esented the Western and- Philadelphia meeting, says tes mentioned the date as It was published in the that way, he himself only istake by reading the con- e state association The he situation was made by yesterday's meeting and ted quite a commotion as be made somewhere. lleges entered the West- holds the most unenviable matter in so much that member of the Western ssociation, which will be state meet and further eet in charge An effort yesterday's meeting to maller meet one week, or May, an action made nec- ary that, unlike the state e date of the annual meet y the constitution of the tion. This change, how- he meet too late for the athletes which institution on the 26th An effort however, by the Geneva dd their team until the e Western university has ay one-half of the ex- ly so doing the matter e adjusted in that way. discussion which followed ent of the difficulty in- nade to hold the small e Monday following the at the W A J Grounds Issue with this proposi- ound that the Western could hardly compete in ree days and would prob- of the smaller meet At argument Delegate Mil- was forced to guarantee would put a team in the ents The final decision now depends on the ea college athletic board r colleges comprising the lvania association ac- pt the second date.

the subject above men- gates yesterday prepared s from which the offi- meet will be chosen A of the Schenley park as expected to meet with yesterday but did not rance The question of yet been finally decided. tives present at yester- ere President E M Long, ary J P Alexander of F Kirchner of W & of W P P George J Grove City college C R and W J Holmes of

HLETES, ATTENION

Association Preparing Annual Exhibit.

tor Aldrich, of the East A., has issued the fol- the athletic members of nur annual gymnasium reaching, and if we ex- the reputation we have we must begin our pre- e. We want at least 75 se 100 if they come We s of the students' class n club drill, 24 members rticipants to go in the d large squads for high- e German horse parallel ar, etc There will also thletic events—the rope the high jump or pole ork will be accompanied me a great deal of prac- e necessary and, above dance at practice.

nday, March 14, regular conducted on Monday, turday evenings at 8 afternoon at 4 o'clock. man who has been in whether he is in training not, and each man can ill go in—Please get in help to make the 1898 xt in the history of the tained its good name during the year just passed the business men have become interested and assure the club that in the event of a race being given during the season they will contribute liberally. The intention is to limit the membership to 75 and as it has to active members now this will be easily done during the summer, and the social part for next winter will be boomed.

P. A. C. BOXING TOURNEY.

Much Interest Evidenced in the Scanlon-Lehrman Bout.

"Honest Joe" Leonard the well known boxer and referee, has been agreed upon by the principals for the referee of the fistic boxing show at the Pittsburg athletic club next Monday night. The announcement of the selection was pleasing to the patrons of boxing for it insures the presence at the ring of a referee thoroughly competent and one with nerve to give a decision on the merits of the bouts.

This is the program: Six rounds between "Steve" Russell and Paddy Sullivan of Lawrenceville the featherweights; ten rounds between "Jimmy" Scanlon, of East End and George Lehrman, of the South Side, the undefeated heavyweights, and a four-round go if the entertainment proves too short. All these contests are for decisions. All the principals are anxious for a decision and want no unsatisfactory draws. The show will begin promptly at 8:30 P. M. and should be over by 11 P. M. All East Liberty street cars go right to the club house, on Shady avenue. The way that seats have been selling at Sterrett's drug store, in the East End, and at Pratt's on Wood street, downtown, indicates that the patrons of the sport appreciate the pleasure of seeing clean, fast, straight boxing, where everyone can have a seat and one seat is as good as another. The big bout between Scanlon and Lehrman is attracting great attention. Betting continues about even. Both have fought about ten battles without losing one. Both have been doing a daily drill and are in the fettle.

LISTS SOON TO BE OUT.

Entry Blanks for the Dog Show to Be Issued To-Morrow.

Preparations for the bench show announced for April 6, 7, 8 and 9 in Old City hall, to be given by the Western Pennsylvania kennel club, are progressing in a very satisfactory manner. Secretary P. S. Steadman has received many entries already, although the premium lists will not be out until to-morrow. After to-morrow they can be obtained from the office of the secretary, room 218 Lewis building. The entries will close on March 26.

Application has been made to the American kennel club for its sanction of the show and a special meeting of the directors will consider the matter on Tuesday. There is little doubt of the show receiving favorable consideration from the club. With the awards to count "A K C" the show will certainly be a success. The show committee are especially anxious for the local entries to be numerous and up to the standard. The premiums so far have been many and it is certain that the finest dogs of Allegheny county will be seen in the show.

The entries from a distance are certain to be few. It is understood that Dr. C. A. Longest of Boston, the proprietor of the finest kennel of bloodhounds in the world, will exhibit his prize winners here. The famous bench mastiff, Black Peter, just imported at a cost of $500, will also be a feature of the show. Dr. Longest claims Black Peter to be the finest specimen of brindle mastiff in the world. He has never been exhibited in America, although entered at the Brooklyn show he arrived too late to be benched.

The Central league club has co-operated with the Western Pennsylvania kennel club in the show and has offered all its special trophies and cups.

The show committee has decided that in breeds where no puppy class is provided in the prehiuim list, one will be made when four or more entries are promised. This action has been taken in response to numerous requests from exhibitors.

Secretary Steadman is in receipt of numerous letters from prospective exhibitors, endorsing the selection of judges as the best that could have been made. The selection of E. M. Oldham as man-

The Team Picked.

Washington, Pa., March 12.—The measuring for suits to-day for the following W. and J. students indicates that they will play on the varsity football team this season: F. Nesbit and Rodgers, '98; Allen, Elcher, Moore, Hawiman and C. Nesbit, '99, Carson, 1900; Kearns and Service 1901, and Theurer, 1902.

The candidates for the team have been practicing steadily this week at College park and the prospects for a winning aggregation are growing brighter every day.

DISORDERLY HOUSE RAIDED.

One Woman Tried to Escape and Had Her Clothing Badly Torn.

Captain Grant Smith and Officer Thos. Martin raided a disorderly house at 2708 Arlington avenue shortly before 11 o'clock last night and locked up the proprietor and four visitors. The proprietor was John Lawrence, colored. He was charged with keeping a disorderly house. The visitors were Mary Magill, Alex. Paxton, William Hughes and Louis Tellner. Mrs. Magill tried to escape arrest by jumping through a window. One of the officers caught her and dragged her back into the house, but in doing so tore most of her clothes from her. On the

COMMUNE CELEBRATED.

ANARCHISTS HEARD THEIR ORACLES TALK LAST NIGHT.

Emma Goldman Made Prophecies and Epigrams—It Was Her Last Appearance in Pittsburg for Some Time—There Was Speaking in a Variety of Languages and Music Added to the Enjoyment.

"Then there will be no more cries of 'Vive la commune,' but a glad shout, 'Long live anarchy, let there be freedom, happiness and plenty for all."

With this prophetic declaration Emma Goldman last night completed a word picture of the apotheosis of free society. Then she stalked off the stage. She wore a long red ascot puff tie and as the last words of her impassioned utterance died away the ends of it fluttered in the breeze created by her motions.

The Elite orchestra played the "Marseillaise." The harmony which prevails among Miss Goldman's admirers was illustrated while it was being played. A German Socialist muttered "D—— that hymn; the bourgeois government of France would have been dead years ago without it." Several French Anarchists went out humming:

'Marchons, marchons!
Q'un sang impur
Abreuve nos sillons."

They celebrated the twenty-seventh anniversary of the Paris commune. There were about 300 of them and they gathered in Imperial dancing hall, on Wylie avenue. It was to be Miss Goldman's last appearance in Pittsburg and an admission fee of 10 cents was charged to pay for music. After they had all got there the Elite orchestra played several tunes. Then a "Saenger Bund," composed of progressive brewery employees sang the "Lobgesang der Freiheit." If "Freiheit" had been there to hear them she would probably have preferred anarchy to any more of it. Then the speaking commenced. The first oration was in French and was by Louis Goazion. Mr. Goazion is a handsome young man with a pink and white Belgian bloom on his cheeks and a pretty little yellow mustache, which it must cost him a nickel extra to have curled whenever he gets shaved. He was manifestly out of place. He made a few remarks about the history of the Paris commune and concluded with the moral that when the people have all ceased to be ignorant the social question will be forever solved. There was no anarchy in that and the audience did not applaud. He sat down. More music, then address in Hebrew by Henry Gordon. When he opened his mouth the words flowed out of him faster than beer flows at an Anarchist picnic. He said the commune fell, but those who fought for it were heroes whose work brought the time of universal liberty nearer.

That was better and the audience warmed up. It was quite enthusiastic when after some more music Emma Goldman appeared and recited a German poem, which the master of ceremonies said was a call to liberty. In it she said several times, "Erwoche, folge mir und du bist frei." The Anarchists followed her closely through the poem, and felt free when it was over. The orchestra played some more and then Carl Nold spoke in German. He began by admitting that "die commune von Paris ist todt." Then he said the American workingmen know nothing about it and proceeded to instruct them with some choice "hoch Deutsch" and a lot of wind-producing gesticulation. He floundered around in the history of the commune awhile, and then switched onto the Cuban war. The gist of his views was that the Anarchists will not fight, it makes no difference if Spain sinks every American ship. "Wir wollen freiheit," he declared.

Some more music, and then came month for celebrations, and declared the people will some day be free in March. The French commune failed because the people did not understand their own power and trusted leaders. Next time there is a revolution they will not have any leaders, but will establish Anarchy and free co-operation. Her speech did not seem intended to establish any point in particular. Here are a few choice expressions:

"The French people are stupid but if the conditions in America prevailed in France they would overthrow the government as they did when they cut the throat of that beautiful woman, Marie Antoinette.

"The French soldiers sometimes side with the people but the

THE TREATMENT THAT C

The TREATMENT that CURES.

Doctor Copeland's New Treatment, that has lifted the darkness and blight of the word "Incurable" from hundreds of thousands of those cases of diseases in the Throat, Bronchial Tubes and Lungs, works its curative action for two reasons:

(1) It reaches every sore spot, from the orifice of the nose to the deepest part of the lungs, to the innermost recesses of the middle ear.

(2) Instead of irritating, inflaming and feeding the fires of the disease, it soothes, quiets, heals and cures.

What is the treatment that cures these conditions, once regarded incurable? By what process does it restore the diseased membrane, remove the poison and relieve the soreness of disease? Let the experience of persons cured and being cured tell.

HOW IT CURES COMMON CATARRH.

Here is a patient taking treatment for Catarrh in the Head. He breathes the soothing medication through his nostrils, and the nasal channels open up, the stuffed-up feeling in the head leaves and he can breath naturally through the nose again. The dull pains across the front of the head fade away, and the nasal membrane is soothed until inflammation and soreness are all gone. The bad odor of the breath passes away, and the lost sense of smell returns. The dropping in the throat is checked, the nose does not stop up toward night any more, the sneezing and snoffing have ceased, the discharge from the nose grows less and less and finally stops altogether. The disease has been checked and eradicated from the system before it ever reached the throat. It has not been driven down into his throat or into his lungs or into his ears, as is so often done by other treatments.

HOW IT CURES CATARRH OF THE THROAT.

Here is another patient who had Catarrh in the Head. He caught cold after cold, and the disease spread down into his throat. He breathes and drinks in the disease-banishing medication. It bathes the membranes of his head and throat. The soreness of the head and throat becomes less and the desire to hawk and spit is disappearing, the sense of taste is returning and the voice again becomes soft and melodious. There is no more gagging and vomitting in the morning. No longer does every exposure to the weather result in a stuffed-up throat that becomes sore and inflamed, and no longer does he find his throat and tongue dry as chips when he wakes from an unrefreshing sleep.

HOW IT CURES CATARRH OF VOCAL ORGANS.

Here is another patient who contracted Catarrh that extended from the throat into the glottis, the gateway that opens to the windpipe and lungs. This disease attacks the vocal chords, this sensitive instrument of the human voice, and soon mars its sweet tones or destroys them altogether. Here sits a lady, inhaling the soothing preparation. She has been ten months silent, and the treatment has already restored her voice. Who can say what joy she feels in being restored to the usefulness and the pleasure of conversation!

HOW IT CURES CATARRHAL DEAFNESS.

Here is another patient who for years had been a sufferer. Every [illegible] seemed to stay longer than former colds, and he noticed that his ears got stopped up and his hearing became duller and duller, and there were ringing and buzzing noises in his ears. The catarrh had passed upward and backward from the throat along the eustachian tubes leading from the throat into the ear. He had visited throat doctors and ear doctors and catarrh doctors without relief. In this condition we find him inhaling the never-failing medication, and soon he notices a change. The noises in the ear stop, there is no more discharge, the hearing gets better, and finally the tubes of the ears open up and something seems to give way in the head. His hearing had completely returned. No wonder he considers the result a marvel.

HEARING ENTI

Mrs. Rachel M street, city: "I h my head for a go time I took cold n denly become enti while it would se with a snap and I At last it became remained so until from Doctors Cope treatment has entir ing in my ear, and health has been g

HOME TREATM PATIENTS THE

Mrs. Annie M. street, East Liverp your new treatmen November 11, with sults. I am very pecially with the trouble. My stom hadn't much faith when

My Son S

"I thought that t thing quite so good that I used to "get somewhat disappoi send me the old tr the new treatment.

Christie Martin Hearing Restored and Head Noises

It has given greater troubled with chro asthma a good ma ose my name for a r for I certainly d method of treatment instrumental in help been all this time about giving my tes like having it publis it over it seemed se I had received so m your treatment. Be ment I couldn't sleep ing and wheezing. was weak and my Now I do not cough know that if it was cine I would be pre this kind of weather.

Making ap

In Tucker Co

J. M. Domer, county, W. Va.: "My 15 years as the result work, which is that nostrils would clog in them so I could mucus would drop int ing me to hawk and vomit in my efforts hearing became impai nervous trouble also In the Pittsburg pa cures accomplished b and Byers by mean Treatment decided me thn result of treatme returned as good as trils and throat do no My nerves are strong anything now, and I me."

In Butler

Miss Iola McCandl county, Pa.: "I had a general catarrhal bead, lungs and stoma which was always g during the winter mo always have a cold- would blow large cru trils. In the winter expectorate like one and had severe darti my sides. I doctored without benefit, until been cured by Docto Byers, advised me to received five months that I have been cur

145

890320006

The Emma Goldman Papers

[Excerpt from Lecture] Commune Celebrated / Emma Goldman.— p. 2 ; 43 cm. In The Pittsburg[h] Leader. —(March 13, 1898).

Permission to reproduce or quote in any form must be obtained from Pennsylvania Historical & Museum Commission. Institutional Location: Division of Archives & Manuscripts.

...tion was made by ...ny's meeting, and ...e a rammahon as ...e somewhere. ...ncerned the West... ...e most unenviable ...pin.so much that ...r of the Western ...on, which will be ...meet and further ...hurge An effort ...ny's meeting to ...meet one week, or ...nother made pos..., unlike the state ...f the annual meet ...onstitution of the This change, how...t too late for the ...s widely institution ...e 26th An effort ...r, by the Times ...ir team until the ...ern university has ...half of the ex... doing the matter ...ted in that way. ...n which followed ...the dilemma the ...to ... the small ...following, the ...& J. delegates ...with this propos... ...that the Western ...hardly compete in ...s and would prob... smaller meet At ...nent Delegate Mil... forced to guarantee ...put a team in the ... The final decision ...epends on the ...llege athletic board. ...ges comprising the ...association are ... second date.

...ubject above men... yesterday prepared ...m which the offi... will be chosen. A ... Schenley park ...ected to meet with ...rday, but did not ... The question of ...en finally decided ... present at yester... ...sident E M Lons, J. P. Alexander of Kirchner of W. & ... P., George J. ...City college C R. W. J Holmes of

TES, ATTENION

...lation Preparing ...al Exhibit.

...ldrich, of the East ...has issued the fol... ...thletic members of ...annual gymnasium ...ling, and if we ex... reputation we have ...must begin our pre... ...e want at least 75 ...if they come We ...the students' class ...b drill, 24 members ...to give a bar bell ...ints to go up the ...ge squads for high... ...man horse parallel ...te. There will also ...ic events—the rope ...high jump or pole ...ill be accompanied ... great deal of ne... ...cessary and above ...e at practice.

March 13, regular ...ucted on Monday, ...day evenings at 8 ...rnoon at 4 o'clock. ... who has been in ...er he is in training ... and each man can ...o in. Plans are in ...a to make the 1898 ... the history of the E BELT.

...lf "Champion of ... Will Fight Any...

...2.—Richard K Fox ...telegram to-day ...o signs himself ...orld." The dispatch ...me, Ind. ...tulations. Will ne... ...d fight two cham... ...cessary every year ...gers to defend the ...ors and the 'Police ... belt here."

... Joke.

...ch 12.—Harry Stees, ... and baseball play... ...e victim of a prac... ...y paper on Thurs... ...r under a Harrisburg ... by Mrs Harry ...rmation of Robert ...d ball with Stees ...ees was an appren... ...faine and had been ...n and his mother ...gh regarding busi... ...a reporter called at ... Muench street, to... ...himself, who pro... ...foud joke He had ...rrisburg since last

L GAME.

...e Championship ...ling League.

...Six bowling clubs, ...ogue, have played ... winter. The rule ... was between the ...rams, the Centrals ... championship. The ...ing of the clubs at ...ament:

	Won.	Lost.
.....	37	13
.....	34	16
	27

...great attention. Betting continues about even. Both have fought about ten battles without losing one. Both have been doing a daily drill and are in fine fettle.

LISTS SOON TO BE OUT.

Entry Blanks for the Dog Show to Be Issued To-Morrow.

Preparations for the bench show announced for April 6, 7 8 and 9, in Old City hall, to be given by the Western Pennsylvania kennel club, are progressing in a very satisfactory manner. Secretary E. S. Steadman has received many entries already, although the premium lists will not be out until to-morrow. After to-morrow they can be obtained from the office of the secretary, room 218 Lewis building. The entries will close on March 25.

Application has been made to the American kennel club for its sanction of the show, and a special meeting of the directors will consider the matter on Tuesday. There is little doubt of the show receiving favorable consideration from the club. With the awards to count "A. K. C." the show will certainly be a success. The show committee are especially anxious for the local entries to be numerous and up to the standard. The to just say — can have been many and it is certain that the finest dogs of Allegheny county will be seen in the show.

The entries from all time are certain to be few. It is understood that Dr. C. A. Longest, of Boston, the proprietor of the finest kennel of bloodhounds in the world, will exhibit his prize winners here. The famous bulldog mastiff, Black Peter, just imported at a cost of $2,500, will also be a feature of the show. Dr Longest claims Black Peter to be the finest specimen of bulldog mastiff in the world. He has never been exhibited in America, although entered at the Brooklyn show—he arrived too late to be benched.

The Central Bough club has co-operated with the Western Pennsylvania kennel club in the show and has offered all its special trophies and cups.

The show committee has decided that in breeds where no puppy class is provided in the premium list, one will be made when four or more entries are promised. This action has been taken in response to numerous requests from exhibitors.

Secretary Steadman is in receipt of numerous letters from prospective exhibitors, endorsing the selection of judges as the best that could have been made. The selection of E. M. Oldham as man-

The Team Picked.

Washington, Pa., March 12—The measuring for suits today for the following W and J students indicates that they will play on the varsity football team this season: F. Nesbit and Rodgers, '95; Allen, Elder, Moore, Bowman and C. Nesbit, '99, Carson, '00 Kearns and Service 1901 and Thorpe, 1902.

The candidates for the team have been practicing steadily this week at College park and the prospects for a whining aggregation are growing brighter every day.

DISORDERLY HOUSE RAIDED.

One Woman Tried to Escape and Had Her Clothing Badly Torn.

Captain Grant Smith and Officer Thos. Martin raided a disorderly house at 2706 Arlington avenue shortly before 11 o'clock last night and locked up the proprietor and four visitors. The proprietor was John Lawrence, colored. He was charged with keeping a disorderly house. The visitors were Mary Magill, Alex Paxton, William Hughes and Louis Tellner. Mrs. Magill tried to escape arrest by jumping through a window. One of the officers caught her and dragged her back into the house, but in doing so tore most of her clothes from her. On the way to the police station she made a desperate effort to jump out of the wagon and it required the efforts of two officers to hold her. Owing to her struggles to free herself she was almost entirely nude when she reached the matron's department at the Twenty-eighth ward police station.

BEAT THE HOTEL.

A New Yorker Worked the Hotel Anderson for His Board.

Addison Archer is charged with leaving the Hotel Anderson last night without settling his bill and E. E. Bonneville, the clerk, made information against him before Alderman C. F. Anderson, charging him with obtaining board by false pretense. Archer, however, had taken the 9 o'clock B. & O. train for the east before that was done, and Detective Thomas Richards telephoned to Connellsville to have him taken from the train and held until an officer could go after him.

Archer is about 30 years of age and is presumed to live in Philadelphia, to which city he bought a ticket yesterday. He had been at the hotel more than a week and had a young man in his employ as a secretary. He vouched for the secretary and promised to pay his bill. The secretary left for his home in Indianapolis on Thursday. Archer got Mr. Bonneville to cash a check for $25 yesterday. The check was given to Archer by Mordock, Kerr & Co., and is presumed to be all right. Mr. Bonneville was at the B. & O. depot to take the train for the east, but not having a warrant at the time could not arrest him. Archer left two trunks at the hotel and a bill of some $30 unpaid.

Archer, during his stay in Pittsburg, had been trying to work an advertising scheme, but his efforts to interest local daily papers were without success. The Newspaper Publishers' association turned him down at a meeting held last Tuesday, refusing to have anything to do with him or his advertising scheme.

Hit With a Bootjack.

Thomas Yackel was admitted to the South Side hospital yesterday suffering from injuries said to have been received by being struck on the head with a bootjack by Peter Planis. Both men were boarding at the same house. Planis was

'Marchons, marchons!
Q'un sang impur
Abreuve nos sillons."

They celebrated the twenty-seventh anniversary of the Paris commune. There were about 300 of them and they gathered in Imperial dancing hall, on Wylie avenue. It was to be Miss Goldman's last appearance in Pittsburg and an admission fee of 10 cents was charged to pay for music. After they had all got there the Elite orchestra played several tunes. Then a "Suenger Bund," composed of progressive brewery employees sang the "Lobgesang der Freiheit." If "Freiheit" had been there to hear them she would probably have preferred anarchy to any more of it. Then the speaking commenced. The first oration was in French and was by Louis Gouzion. Mr. Gouzinn is a handsome young man with a pink and white Belgian bloom on his cheeks and a pretty little yellow mustache, which it must cost him a nickel extra to have curled whenever he gets shaved. He was manifestly out of place. He made a few remarks about the history of the Paris commune and concluded with the moral that when the people have all ceased to be ignorant the social question will be forever solved. There was no music by in that and the audience did not applaud. He sat down. More music, then address in Hebrew by Henry Gordon. When he opened his mouth the words flowed out of him faster than beer flows at an Anarchist picnic. He said the commune fell, but those who fought for it were heroes whose work brought the time of universal liberty nearer.

That was better and the audience warmed up. It was quite enthusiastic when after some more music Emma Goldman appeared and recited a German poem, which the master of ceremonies said was a call to liberty. In it she said several times, "Erwoche, folge mir und du bist frei." The Anarchists followed her closely through the poem, and felt free when it was over. The orchestra played some more and then Carl Nold spoke in German. He began by admitting that "die commune von Paris ist todt." Then he said the American workingmen know nothing about it and proceeded to instruct them with some choice "hoch Deutsch" and a lot of wind-producing gesticulation. He floundered around in the history of the commune awhile, and then switched onto the Cuban war. The gist of his views was that the Anarchists will not fight. It makes no difference if Spain sinks every American ship. "Wir wollen freiheit," he declared.

Some more music, and then came Goldman. She thought March a great month for celebrations, and declared the people will some day be free in March. The French commune failed because the people did not understand their own power and trusted leaders. Next time there is a revolution they will not have any leaders, but will establish Anarchy and free co-operation. Her speech did not seem intended to establish any point in particular. Here are a few choice expressions:

"The French people are stupid but if the conditions in America prevailed in France they would overthrow the government as they did when they cut the throat of that beautiful woman, Marie Antoinette.

"The French soldiers sometimes side with the people, but the American militia never will. Its members are the sons of the rich and it is sport for them to shoot workingmen.

"The people must help themselves; it is not in the power of God or the devil to help them."

"Patriotism is idiocy; religion is ignorance; capitalism is slavery.

"A year is a good deal for Zola; it would be little for us, who are no better than dogs and have comrades in prison for 22 years.

"The American government is no better than that of crazy Wilhelm and Wilhelm ought to be given a gun so he could blow out his own brains."

McKees Rocks Gospel Meetings.

A series of Gospel temperance meetings will be conducted at McKees Rocks and Esplen this week, under the direction of Rev. G. H. Vibbert, of Boston, Mass. The meetings will be held at 7:45 each evening, and the following schedule has been arranged: Monday, March 14, at the Presbyterian church, McKees Rocks; Tuesday, March 15, at the Methodist Episcopal church, McKees Rocks; Wednesday, March 16, at the United Presbyterian church, Esplen; Thursday, March 17, at the Presbyterian church, McKees Rocks; Friday, March 18, at the Methodist Episcopal church, McKees Rocks; Saturday, March 19, United Presbyterian church, Esplen. Special services will be held at the United Presbyterian church, Esplen, at 2:30 P. M., on Sunday, and at the Presbyterian church, McKees Rocks, on Sunday evening, at —On next Thursday evening Old City hall will be the scene of a patriotic celebration by the president, students and friends of Holy Ghost college. In connection with Father Murphy's lecture, which will be the great event of the evening, the following attractive program will be given: Orchestra, "Gems of Ireland," "Irish Brigade," "Medley of National Airs;" chorus, "Oft in the Stilly Night," College Glee club; song, "Oh, Breathe Not His Name," Robert Boss; song, "'Tis a Handful of Earth," Master J. Hayes; chorus, "The Minstrel Boy," college Glee club; song, "Who Fears to Speak of Ninety-eight?" Mr. David T. Moore; song, "Kerry Dance," Thomas Trudell, Albert Eschman and John Hayes; "Itich and Rare Were the Gems She Wore."

Catarrh in the Head. He breathes the soothing medication through his nostrils, and the nasal channels open up, the stuffed-up feeling in the head leaves and he can breath naturally through the nose again. The dull pains across the front of the head fade away, and the nasal membrane is soothed until inflammation and soreness are all gone. The bad odor of the breath passes away, and the lost sense of smell returns. The dropping in the throat is checked, the nose does not stop up toward night any more, the sneezing and snuffling have ceased, the discharge from the nose grows less and less and finally stops altogether. The disease has been checked and eradicate from the system before it ever reached the throat. It has not been driven down into his throat or into his lungs or into his ears, as is so often done by other treatments.

HOW IT CURES CATARRH OF THE THROAT.

Here is another patient who had Catarrh in the Head. He caught cold after cold, and the disease spread down into his throat. He breathes and drinks in the disease-banishing medication. It bathes the membranes of his head and throat. The soreness of the head and throat becomes less and the desire to hawk and spit is disappearing, the sense of taste is returning and the voice again becomes soft and melodious. There is no more gagging and vomitting in the morning. No longer does every exposure to the weather result in a stuffed-up throat that becomes sore and inflamed, and no longer does he find his throat and tongue dry as chips when he wakes from an unrefreshing sleep.

HOW IT CURES CATARRH OF VOCAL ORGANS.

Here is another patient who contracted Catarrh that extended from the throat into the glottis, the gateway that opens to the windpipe and lungs. This disease attacks the vocal chords, this sensitive instrument of the human voice, and soon mars its sweet tones or destroys them altogether. Here sits a lady. Inhaling the soothing preparation. She has been ten months silent, and the treatment has already restored her voice. Who can say what joy she feels in being restored to the usefulness and the pleasure of conversation!

HOW IT CURES CATARRHAL DEAFNESS.

Here is another patient who for years had been a sufferer. Every fresh cold seemed to stay longer than former colds, and he noticed that his ears got stopped up and his hearing became duller and duller, and there were ringing and buzzing noises in his ears. The catarrh had passed upward and backward from the throat along the eustachian tubes leading from the throat into the ear. He had visited throat doctors and ear doctors and catarrh doctors without relief. In this condition we find him inhaling the never-failing medication, and soon he notices a change. The noises in the ear stop, there is no more discharge, the hearing gets better, and finally the tubes of the ears open up and something seems to give way in the head. His hearing had completely returned. No wonder he considers the result a marvel.

Mrs. Rachel Naumer, 15 Machon st., City, Testifies to Dr. Copeland's Skill in Curing Deafness.

HOW IT CURES BRONCHIAL CATARRH.

Here is another patient who was always sensitive to the weather. He contracted Catarrh of the Head, and it passed to his throat, then down the windpipe and into the bronchial tubes. He coughed at night so that he could not sleep; there was pain behind his breastbone and under his shoulder-blades. When he coughed he brought up a frothy, grayish material, streaked with blood. He lost appetite and strength. He tried cough syrups and different medicines to no avail. He now breathes in with full inspiration the restoring and soothing medicine. The sore spots along the bronchial tubes heal, the cough ceases, the pain leaves. The appetite and strength return. He is again a well and happy man.

HOW IT CURES CATARRH OF THE LUNGS.

Here is another pitiful case. He had all the history of colds and catarrh extending downward from the nose to throat, to glottis, to windpipe, to the bronchial tubes, and then into the small tubes of the lungs. His cough always

...I thought that ... thing quite so good ... that I used to get ... somewhat disappoin... send me the old tre... the new treatment, pow...

Christie Martin, Natro... Hearing Restored in L... and Head Noises Cured.

it has given greater relief. troubled with chronic bro... asthma a good many year... use my name for a referenc... for I certainly do rec... method of treatment. I fe... instrumental in helping oth... been all this time in Making up My M...

about giving my testimonia... like having it published, bu... it over it seemed selfish on... I had received so much h... your treatment. Before be... ment I couldn't sleep at nig... ing and wheezing. The h... was weak and my stomac... Now I do not cough and v... know that if it was not fo... mine I would be pretty we... this kind of weather."

In Tucker County,

J. M. Domer, Alber...

county, W. Va.: "My troub... 15 years as the result of ex... work, which is that of a... nostrils would clog up and... in them so I could not b... mucus would drop into my ... ing me to hawk and gag ... vomit in my efforts to cl... hearing became impaired, ... nervous trouble also follo... In the Pittsburg papers ... cores accomplished by Doc... and Byers by means of ... Treatment decided me to w... the result of treatment my ... returned as good as ever, ... trils and throat do not clog ... My nerves are stronger, a... anything now, and it does ... me."

In Butler Cou...

Miss Iola McCandless, ...

county, Pa.: "I had been ... a general catarrhal condi... head, lungs and stomach ab... which was always greatly ... during the winter months. ... always have a cold in my ... would blow large crusts o... trils. In the winter I wo... expectorate like one with... and had severe darting pa... my sides. I doctored cons... without benefit, until a fri... been cured by Doctors C... Byers, advised me to cons... received five months' treatm... that I have been cured. ... I saw that the cure was ... permanent before I gave th... I have not had a bad col... have no cough and have no...

In Jefferson Cou...

Mr. L. R. Llewlyn, Con...

ferson county, Pa.: "I was ... years, and doctored all th... out relief. One doctor said ... bled with heart failure, and ... told me that I would neve... work in the mines again. ... sulted Doctors Copeland and ... weak and nervous, had no ... not eat enough to give ... strength for my work. Wh... eat caused a miserable f... stomach, bloating, rifting, ... general distress. I also ha... my head and lungs. My ... throat were clogged up ... mucus, and I had a very ... received five months' tre... Doctors Cupeland and By... was influenced to consult ... ing of the cures published ... I want to add my testimo... their treatment in serious ... bles."

In Lawrence Co...

H. Rosenkrans, Eli...

Lawrence county, Pa.: "... consulted Doctors Copelan... was in a very miserable ... my head, stomach and ne... I had constant ringing n... head, which almost drove ... nostrils were stopped up ... taste in my mouth in the ... no appetite for food. My ... turbed by horrid dreams, ... ed my nervous system. I ... tired, aching and trembling ... out, worse than if I had ... all night. I thank God ... Copeland and Byers' trea... easy to take and gives s... God help you to continue ... work."

FREE CONSULTATIO... AND EXA...

Doctor Copeland's ... Deafness, his Two ...

880926024

The Emma Goldman Papers

A Letter from Emma Goldman / Emma Goldman.— p. 3 ; 28 cm. In Solidarity [New York]. —Vol. 1, no. 9 (March 15, 1898).

Permission to reproduce or quote in any form must be obtained from the University of Michigan, Harlan Hatcher Graduate Library. Institutional Location: Labadie Collection, Emma Goldman Papers, Department of Rare Books and Special Collections.

SOLID

A LETTER FROM EMMA GOLDMAN.

Dear Comrades - Hurrah for the new paper! Though I don't care for the name "Solidarity" (we have had experience with it before), yet I hail its appearance, knowing how sadly a paper is needed in New York. After all, what's in a name? The principles and tendencies of a paper are all-important, and knowing the comrades who are to conduct "Solidarity," I am satisfied that our ideas will be ably set forth in its columns. I cannot tell you how many people are now interested in the philosophy of Anarchy. Even the most conservative clubs and organizations, that only a few years ago would have refused to listen to a professed Anarchist, are now inviting Anarchist lecturers. They have learned that conservatism is fast losing ground, and that nothing but advanced and radical ideas meet with popular approval. The Friendship Liberal League, of Philadelphia, for instance, has heretofore been controlled by its older members, who for twenty five years have been killing God one night and reviving him the next; who have ceased to believe in a heavenly Lord, and yet have stood by without protest while earthly lords were robbing the people. Even these "pillars of society" have been taught the lesson that the old order changes and gives way to the new. The comrades of Philadelphia, who arranged five meetings for me in the city of Brotherly Love, had a hard battle with these gentlemen, who had decided that no Anarchist should speak from the platform of the League. The younger members, however, together with our energetic comrades, won the victory. In spite of the strenuous opposition of the "respectable element," we had two glorious meetings at the League, in the afternoon and evening of Sunday, Feb. 20th. I lectured on "Patriotism" and on "Chastity." The comrades have sent reports to "Free Society" and other liberal papers, so I will refrain from telling you the details.

In Pittsburg the comrades have arranged meetings for almost every night of the three weeks I expect to stay here, to try my endurance they say, but you know how much it takes to tire a woman of talking.

Here, too, I have had proof that our ideas are marching on. The Glass Blowers' Union, No. 36, of Monaca, Pa., the largest and most conservative labor organization of the country, had me down to speak on "Majority Rule," Saturday, Feb. 26th, at a meeting specially arranged for me. I must say that I was treated with unusual politeness by the committee who showed me every attention. Of course, I care little for such courtesies but I think we have cause to be satisfied with the progress of the propaganda when we, who have until recently been treated like criminals, or else according to the "Christ of the Free thinkers," Bob Ingersoll, ought to be treated like lunatics, are invited to expound our doctrines, and are listened to with enthusiasm by people who a few years ago joined in the plutocratic cry "Hang the Anarchists."

I [illegible] to give you a better report [illegible] when I return home, [illegible]

LATTIMER.

Society is saved again! The Lattimer jury has returned the verdict which all level-headed observers expected from the first. How could it have been otherwise? A lot of workingmen, whose only function in our society is to earn dividends, interest and profits for their masters, became dissatisfied with the rations, shelter and clothing allowed them, and laid down their tools. They struck for higher wages, better treatment, and what not. This, I believe, is still permitted them. The "Injunction" method has not as yet been adopted against coal miners, but the strikers must be very peaceful and law abiding, as the law is construed and executed by the servants of the masters.

Of course, the labor leaders and labor politicians tell us that these poor slaves of Hazleton were all of them peaceful and law abiding.

Quiet, peaceful behavior was preached to them by their priests, and respect for the law and good citizenship generally, was most strenuously recommended them by their champions of press and forum; and peaceful they doubtless were, for the coal mines are still in operation and the towns are still standing. Nevertheless, we need not believe that "scabs," workingmen who would not join the strike, were treated all too gently by the strikers.

But in spite of all their protestations of peace, it is doubtless true that the mine owners and managers were afraid of them. It is impossible for the well-fed and well-conditioned exploiters to realize how awfully degraded are the victims of their exploitation.

In such cases they always imagine the strikers will act like men. [illegible] what would have been left of the [illegible] barons' possessions if the coal miners had acted like men—that is, like [illegible] accustomed to walk on their hind [illegible] and believing in their right to live [illegible] earth?

An evil memory and certain [illegible] documents, I fancy. And just as [illegible] mediæval baron went to sleep at night [illegible] with visions of a horde of invading [illegible] ants in mind, so our modern barons live always in the shadow of an [illegible] ized uprising of their victims.

It is quite easy to understand, therefore, how the young gentlemen of the [illegible] regiment faced the crisis. They [illegible] their Winchesters or shotguns [illegible] taking their [illegible] servant, the [illegible] sheriff of the county along, proceeded to meet the foe like valiant men, [illegible] defending their [illegible] in their own way the lawful and constitutional way, be it remembered.

The miners of Hazleton had decided to march on Lattimer to persuade the fellow workers of that place to join the strike. They were fools enough to go unarmed, in obedience to the advice and entreaties of their leaders. They were met on the way by Sheriff Martin and his masters, who advised, implored and ordered them to go back, but they relied on certain vague words, printed in certain musty old books about the right of peaceable folk to walk on the public highways, and insisted on going. Sheriff Martin, making use of a convenient trolley car, intercepted them on

BEST COPY AVAILABLE

8809216024

The Emma Goldman Papers

A Letter from Emma Goldman / Emma Goldman.— p. 3 ; 28 cm. In Solidarity [New York]. —Vol. 1, no. 9 (March 15, 1898).

Permission to reproduce or quote in any form must be obtained from the University of Michigan, Harlan Hatcher Graduate Library. Institutional Location: Labadie Collection, Emma Goldman Papers, Department of Rare Books and Special Collections.

servative class ——— only a few years ago would have refused to listen to a professed Anarchist, are now inviting Anarchist lecturers. They have learned that conservatism is fast losing ground, and that nothing but advanced and radical ideas meet with popular approval. The Friendship Liberal League, of Philadelphia, for instance, has heretofore been controlled by its older members, who for twenty-five years have been killing God one night and reviving him the next; who have ceased to believe in a heavenly Lord, and yet have stood by without protest while earthly lords were robbing the people. Even these "pillars of society" have been taught the lesson that the old order changes and gives way to the new. The comrades of Philadelphia, who arranged five meetings for me in the city of Brotherly Love, had a hard battle with these gentlemen, who had decided that no Anarchist should speak from the platform of the League. The younger members, however, together with our energetic comrades, won the victory. In spite of the strenuous opposition of the "respectable element," we had two glorious meetings at the League, in the afternoon and evening of Sunday, Feb. 20th. I lectured on "Patriotism" and on "Charity." The comrades have sent reports to "Free Society" and other liberal papers, so I will refrain from telling you the details.

In Pittsburg the comrades have arranged meetings for almost every night of the three weeks I expect to stay here, to try my endurance they say, but you know how much it takes to tire a woman of talking.

Here, too, I have had proof that our ideas are marching on. The Glass Blowers' Union, No. 26, of Monaca, Pa., the largest and most conservative labor organization of the country, had me down to speak on "Majority Rule," Saturday, Feb. 26th, at a meeting specially arranged for me. I must say that I was treated with unusual politeness by the committee, who showed me every attention. Of course, I care little for such formalities, but I think we have cause to be satisfied with the progress of the propaganda, when we, who have until recently been treated like criminals, or who, according to the "Christ of the Free Thinkers," Bob Ingersoll, ought to be treated like lunatics, are invited to expound our doctrines, and are listened to with enthusiasm by people who a few years ago joined in the philocratic cry, "Hang the Anarchists!"

I will be able to give you a better report of my tour when I return home, which will be in the latter part of April. So far, meetings have been arranged until March 13th in this city. After that in Cleveland, Detroit, Chicago for two weeks; in Cincinnati by the Liberal League of Ohio, another free thought society that has never invited an Anarchist speaker before; St. Louis and other cities. In fact I think of extending my present tour as far as San Francisco, Cal.

I need not assure you of my hearty co-operation; it is a matter of course that I will do my best for Solidarity. Please send me several hundred copies of the first number. With best wishes for the success of your enterprise I remain must be very peaceful and law abiding as the law is construed and executed by the servants of the masters.

EMMA GOLDMAN

Rochester, N. Y. March 1898

Of course, the labor leaders and labor politicians tell us that these poor slaves of Hazleton were all of them peaceful and law abiding.

Quiet, peaceful behavior was preached to them by their priests and respect for the law and good citizenship generally, was most strenuously recommended them by their champions of press and forum; and peaceful they doubtless were, for the coal mines are still in operation and the towns are still standing. Nevertheless, we do not believe that "scabs," workingmen who would not join the strike, were treated all too gently by the strikers.

But in spite of all their protestation of peace, it is doubtless true that the mine owners and managers were afraid of them. It is impossible for the well fed and well-conditioned exploiters to realize how awfully degraded are the victims of their exploitation.

In such cases they always imagine the strikers will act like men. And what would have been left of the coal barons' possessions if the coal miners had acted like men—that is, like men accustomed to walk on their hind legs and believing in their right to live on this earth?

An evil memory and century old documents, I fancy. And just as the medieval baron went to sleep at night—with visions of a horde of lawless serfs in mind, so our modern barons live always in the shadow of an unavenged uprising of their victims.

It is quite easy to understand, therefore, how the young gentlemen of the region faced the crisis. They took their Winchesters or shotguns and, taking their humble servant, the high sheriff of the county, along, proceeded to meet the foe like valiant men defending their right to live in their own way (the lawful and constitutional way be it remembered).

The miners of Hazleton had decided to march on Latilmer to persuade the fellow workers of that place to join the strike. They were fools enough to go unarmed, in obedience to the advice and entreaties of their leaders. They were met on the way by Sheriff Martin and his masters, who advised, implored and ordered them to go back, but relied on certain vague words, printed in certain musty old books about the right of peaceful folk to walk on the public highways, and insisted on passing. Sheriff Martin, making use of a convenient trolley car, intercepted the men on the road and drew up his forces on either side, largely in order to keep the strikers to the road if they still insisted on going to the Lattimer breaker. Then, when the procession of men came up, he went forward to meet the leaders. There he read the Riot Act, the star spangled banner, emblem of freedom etc. The sheriff and a couple of deputies and the [illegible] who carried [illegible] Then the sheriff [illegible] Martin [illegible] Not [illegible] and [illegible] [illegible] [illegible]

890308022

The Emma Goldman Papers

[Letters from a tour in America. In German] Reisebriefe aus Amerika. Part 4 / Emma Goldman. – 33 cm. In Der Arme Konrad [Berlin]. –(March 26, 1898).

Permission to reproduce or quote in any form must be obtained from the Zentrales Staatsarchiv (DDR), Merseburg, Germany.

Reisebriefe aus Amerika.

Von Emma Goldmann.

(Dem New-Yorker „Sturmvogel" entnommen.)

IV.

Von St. Louis aus wandte ich mich nach Capelingers Mill, einem im südwestlichen Teile Missouris gelegenen Farmerstädchen, von wo aus mir eine englische Genossin im Verein mit ihrem Manne, die seit 6 Jahren als Farmer in jener Gegend ansässig sind, eine Einladung zugehen ließ, dortselbst in mehreren von den Beiden zu arrangierenden Versammlungen zu sprechen. Nach 20-stündiger Fahrt per Bahn und 4 Stunden der Pein in einem Farmerwagen, gezogen von zwei halboerhungerten Pferden, einen Weg entlang, wo man jeden Augenblick nahe daran ist, Hals und Beine zu brechen, langte ich endlich am Ziel der Reise an.

Aber es war der Mühe wert, den Weg gemacht zu haben, denn ein dankbareres Publikum habe ich nirgends getroffen. Alle 4 Versammlungen waren für die dortigen Verhältnisse sehr gut besucht, und so groß war das Interesse der Leute, daß viele von ihnen sich nicht scheuten, 4 bis 6 Meilen zurückzulegen, um in jeder Versammlung anwesend zu sein.

Tagsüber kamen verschiedene Farmer zu mir, um ihr Leid zu klagen, das Leid, das sich wohl wenig von dem der Fabrikarbeiter unterscheidet und doch eigentümlich in seiner Art ist. Trotz schwerer Arbeit können sie doch nicht soviel zusammenbringen, um ihr Stückchen Land abzuzahlen, so daß sie Hals über Kopf in Schulden stecken; zudem ist die örtliche Bodenbeschaffenheit eine schlechte und gewährt nur armselige Ernten. Frisches Fleisch wird von den Farmern als der größte Luxus betrachtet, und es ist ihnen sehr selten gestattet, davon zu genießen. Die Hütten, die noch vor dem Bürgerkriege gebaut wurden, sind in einem solch schlechten Zustande, daß sie die Leute kaum vor den Unbilden der Witterung schützen. Zu alledem beutet der Staat diese Aermsten in Form von hohen Steuern und Abgaben aus. In solch elender Lage plagen und schinden die Menschen sich dort ihr ganzes Leben lang thatsächlich für den Großgrundbesitzer. Was Wunder, wenn sie rebellisch werden, wenn sie sich empören, wenn sie jedes Mittel willkommen heißen würden, das sie aus dieser Misere befreien könnte. Immer sich in der freien Natur bewegend, nicht umgeben von dem korrumpierenden Einfluß des Stadtlebens, besitzen die Farmer mehr Mut als die Fabrikarbeiter, sie sind nicht so demütig und zufrieden als die Letzteren, aus welchen Gründen sie auch die Ersten wären, die bei einer ausbrechenden Revolution zu den Waffen griffen. Angesichts solch guten Materials ist es nur zu bedauern, daß von anarchistischer Seite bis jetzt sehr wenig für die Aufklärung der amerikanischen Landarbeiter gethan wurde.

Von vielen Glückwünschen und Dankesworten der wackeren Farmer begleitet, fuhr ich zurück nach St. Louis. Ich sprach dort bei der 11. November-Feier, die im Allgemeinen viel zu wünschen übrig ließ, und am folgenden Tage im Trades and Labor-Council, einer Körperschaft bestehend aus Vertretern verschiedener Unions. Trotzdem ich dort die Krebsschäden des Trades-Unionismus und die Korruption der Führer ganz gehörig blosstellte, scheint doch meine Ansprache nicht ohne Wirkung geblieben zu sein; denn wie ich seitdem durch einen Genossen aus St. Louis erfuhr, zeigen sich jetzt die Herren dieser Körperschaft Anarchisten gegenüber etwas toleranter. Sie müssen doch endlich zur Erkenntnis gelangen, daß man heutzutage nur durch Propagierung von Streiks, Achtstunden-Arbeitstag, 1. Mai-Feier usw. den Arbeitern ökonomische und politische Freiheit nicht verschaffen kann.

(Schluß folgt.)

BEST COPY AVAILABLE

890308021

The Emma Goldman Papers

[Letters from a tour in America. In German] Reisebriefe aus Amerika. [Part 5] / Emma Goldman. – 32 cm. In Der Arme Konrad [Berlin]. –(April 2, 1898).

Permission to reproduce or quote in any form must be obtained from the Zentrales Staatsarchiv (DDR), Merseburg, Germany.

Der arme Konrad. (Berlin)

14. Berlin, 2ten April 1898.

Reisebriefe aus Amerika.

Von Emma Goldmann.

(Dem New-Yorker „Sturmvogel" entnommen.)

IV.

(Schluß.)

So hat sich denn mein seit Jahren gehegter Wunsch erfüllt und da bin ich denn endlich in Detroit —. Gar Vieles hätte ich über Detroit und die dortigen Freunde zu berichten; da ich aber, um allen gerecht zu werden, sehr viel Raum in Anspruch nehmen müßte, und ich die Absicht habe, mit dieser Nummer meine Reisebriefe zu schließen („Gelobt sei Gott!" werden wohl viele ausrufen) so will ichs versuchen, mich so kurz als möglich zu fassen. Auf meiner ganzen diesmaligen Tour, sowie auf früheren Vagabundenzügen wurde mir nirgends so viel Gastfreundschaft, Gutes und Liebes erwiesen wie in Detroit; nicht nur seitens meiner speziellen Freunde, deren ich bei meiner Ankunft nur sehr wenige hatte, sondern auch von Körperschaften, darunter die Turner, Central Labor Union u. s. w. wurde ich auf die aufmerksamste und zuvorkommendste Weise behandelt. Am liebevollsten und thatkräftigsten von Allen hat mich Freund Robert Reitzel in seinem „Armen Teufel" unterstützt.

Der große segnende Einfluß, den dieses Blatt auf die Propagierung freiheitlicher Ideen und Bestrebungen ausübt, macht sich nicht nur allein in Detroit fühlbar; obgleich der „A. T." nicht vorgiebt, ein Organ der Anarchisten deutscher Zunge zu sein; (er hat seine eigene und eine verflucht schneidige dazu) wirkt er allerorten für individuelles, freies Denken und die anarchistische Weltanschauung mehr als irgend ein Blatt, welches irgend eine dombastische Devise zur Schau trägt.

Die 11. November-Feier welche am 16. November in der dortigen Turnhalle stattfand, erinnerte mich an die ersten riesigen Versammlungen in der Cooper-Union in N. Y., welche nach der Ermordung unserer Chicagoer Genossen abgehalten wurden: da war Feuer und Enthusiasmus vorhanden und Jeder schien, wenn auch nur für den einen Abend, der Gefallenen in würdiger Weise zu gedenken. Die zweite Versammlung, die sozusagen am gleichen Tage arrangiert wurde, war ebenfalls gut besucht, und die dritte und letzte, welche in einer Kirche stattfand, setzte dem Ganzen die Krone auf. Es hat wohl schwerlich je eine Versammlung so viel allgemeines Aufsehen erregt wie gerade diese. Daß ein Pfaffe so viel Toleranz besitzen soll, einem Verfechter freier Ideen seine Kanzel anzubieten, ist an und für sich schon als ein großes Wunder zu betrachten; daß er aber dieses Anerbieten gar einer Anarchistin machte, war einfach unerhört; selbstverständlich habe ich die Gelegenheit benützt, um von der Kanzel herab nicht das Wort Gottes, sondern den Anarchismus zu verkünden. Man höre und staune, die Kirche, in der mir außer Anderen auch die Schafe in Christo andächtig zuhörten, steht noch an demselben Platz: weder Schwefel und Pech regnete auf das „entweihte Gotteshaus", noch holte es der Teufel mit all der sündigen Brut, die sich darin befand.

Es waren nicht die Erfolge der Versammlungen in Detroit allein, die mir soviel Befriedigung verschafften; ich gedenke auch der Freude, die mir der Verkehr mit den vielen lieben Menschen bereitete und der angenehmen, fröhlichen Stunden, die ich in deren Gesellschaft verlebte.

Der Abschied fiel mir recht schwer, aber da nun einmal geschieden werden muß, so segelte ich am 20. Nov. per Boot nach Cleveland ab.

In Cleveland fanden 4 Versammlungen statt, von denen drei sehr gut und die vierte nur spärlich besucht war. Auch dort lernte ich einige ausgezeichnete Menschen kennen, die mich mit Güte und Zuvorkommenheit überhäuften.

Von Cleveland gings nach Buffalo, wo es einigen Freunden trotz aller von gewisser Seite in den Weg gelegten Hindernissen gelang, zwei englische und eine deutsche Versammlungen zu veranstalten. Eine der für mich veranstalteten englischen Versammlungen fand im Spiritualisten-Tempel statt, der Meinung der Spiritualisten gemäß eine Auszeichnung, welche außer mir nur noch dem Genossen John Turner zuteil wurde.

In Rochester, der letzten Station meiner Tour, sprach ich ebenfalls in 3 Versammlungen. Und da R. sozusagen meine Vaterstadt war, kann es nicht Wunder nehmen, daß ganz „Jerusalem" auf den Beinen war, aber auch Amerikaner und Deutsche kamen in Massen, um das Wundertier zu schauen, das noch vor ungefähr 9 Jahren für 2,50 Dollar per Woche als Fabrikarbeiterin ihr Dasein fristete.

Einer meiner Ex-Ausbeuter, mehrfacher Millionär und Fabrikbesitzer, der sein ganzes Vermögen aus den Knochen der Arbeiter gepreßt hat, fand sich veranlaßt, mir einen Besuch abzustatten. Der alte Sünder befürchtete wahrscheinlich, daß ich einen für ihn persönlich ungünstigen Einfluß auf seine Arbeiter machen werde. Er war ängstlich bemüht, mir begreiflich zu machen, wie human und gerecht er seine Arbeiter behandle und wie er sie mit Wohlthaten überschütte. Ich habe dieser elenden Kreatur, diesem deutsch-jüdischen Emporkömmling, meine Meinung in unzweideutiger Weise zu verstehen gegeben, worauf er sich wie ein begossener Pudel schleunigst trollte.

Am 14. November kam ich endlich nach 14wöchentlicher Abwesenheit in New-York wieder an. Im Ganzen genommen kann ich mit dem Erfolg meiner Reise zufrieden sein. Ich besuchte 18 Städte und sprach in 40 Versammlungen, erwarb mir sehr viele gute und teure Freunde und hatte Gelegenheit, mich zu überzeugen, daß das Geschrei von gewisser Seite, Amerika sei nicht der Boden für den Anarchismus, falsch ist. Die Amerikaner sind von Natur selbstständig veranlagt und mehr als ein anderes Volk befähigt, die Ideen des Anarchismus zu begreifen; es ist somit nicht ihre Schuld, wenn sie bis jetzt wenig davon wissen, sondern Schuld Derer, welche die „Bewegung" nur in Deutsch machten und mit allen möglichen Mitteln die Aufklärung in englischer Sprache hintertrieben haben. Die anarchistische Propaganda in englischer Sprache zu betreiben war und bleibt die Hauptsache; denn nur wenn das englischsprechende Element sich unseren Anschauungen anschließt, wäre auf einen Umsturz der Verhältnisse in Amerika zu hoffen.

Na, glücklicher Weise ist ja von jener deutschen Bewegung wenig übrig geblieben, die Alten gehören nur noch Gesangvereinen und Logen an, verkriechen sich in ihre Bierwinkel, wo sie über Unmoral und Ungehorsam der Jugend losziehen. Die Jungen, welche sich von den anarchistisch-kommunistisch-autonomistischen Dogmen und Vereinsmeiereien emanzipiert haben, ziehen ihre eigenen Wege und verbreiten auf selbständige Art die Ideen der Freiheit. —

BEST COPY AVAILABLE

881029006

The Emma Goldman Papers

[Excerpt from Lecture] Animal Instincts of Man / Emma Goldman.— p. 8 ; 28 cm. In The Rocky Mountain News [Denver]. —(April 15, 1898).

Obtained from the University of California, Berkeley. Institutional Location: Doe Library.

:R RICHARDSON CLOVER, U. S. N.
ned as the Probable Chief of the Naval Intelligence Office

AT S NEAR

ies From Hostile
tates.

be Powers the In-ue.

ele-American Liberation War by s Dis-ce.

The morning
tches from the e same tenor.
vitable is uni-
ng of hostility papers contain culating upon securities, the
s. ally: "Spain's
e no effect exe issue. The ntervene, while ited States nor is doubtful McKinley re-
the situation.
ide of popular war." m what it calls
ident" signing
rints a remark-overt Anglo-el the liberation
n overwhelming
ting editorially hronicle thinks to seek to bring entente, espe-
ion interests of reat Britain in

WILL FORCE SPAIN TO YIELD

(Continued From First Page.)

has supported his government. He has abandoned all hope of a peaceful adjustment.

A member of the Spanish legation today said that Spain would put up a long and vigorous fight. "We may lose," said he, "but irreparable damage will be done to your commerce."

Archbishop Ireland still hopes for peace. He is in constant communication with the Vatican and it is understood that the pope has advised the queen regent to give up Cuba rather than fight. It is not believed that she dare comply with the pontiff's request. Such an act would almost certainly be followed by an uprising on the part of the Weylerites and the Carlists.

PLOT AGAINST THE MARIETTA

Spaniards Fail to Blow Up the Gunboat in Chilian Waters.

Special to The News.

NEW YORK, April 14.—The Herald's Valparaiso cable says that a plot against the American gunboat Marietta has been foiled. Our minister to Chili was informed that when the ship reached this port on its way to the United States resident Spaniards would attempt to blow her up. He informed the Chilian government and the latter took vigilant precautions. The gunboat has sailed on her way around Cape Horn.

LEE TO COMMAND VOLUNTEERS

President to Appoint Him Leader of the Virginia Forces.

Special to The News.

NEW YORK, April 14.—The World's Washington leader says the president has decided to appoint Lee to command the Virginia volunteers and may call on them to go to the front first of all the volunteer forces.

Congress may pass a special act making Lee major general of volunteers.

SAYS WAR IS INEVITABLE.

Special to The News.

orous Fight Against the Proposed Increase in the Standing Army—New Mexico Land Bill.

NEWS BUREAU,
WASHINGTON, D. C., April 14.

Special to The News.

It is probable that little business will be transacted in congress from this time until the passing of the war cloud, that does not pertain to our foreign relations. There is no doubt that congress will adjourn as soon as international security is restored, and the Republican party will appeal to the people in the fall elections on the record as made up. If so, it will be "riding for a fall" with a vengeance, for the record of the dominant party has been ridiculously weak and vacillating. It has achieved none of the things it was pledged in the platform adopted at St. Louis, and—except that its leaders have permitted themselves to be irrevocably committed to the gold standard—there has been a rank failure even in a legislative demonstration of loyalty to the money power. The Gage currency plan died a-bornin', and nothing else worth mentioning has been considered by the banking and currency committee. In fact, the utter inability of the banking and currency committee to get together and agree upon any legislation has disgusted Joseph H. Walker, the typical Yankee capitalist, who presides over the committee. "Why doesn't your committee report some currency bill?" he was asked by The News correspondent.

"Agree on anything!" he said, with great scorn, "why, that committee can't even agree to adjourn. The only way we ever close a meeting is by enough members getting up and going away to break a quorum. Then we have to quit."

The failure of the committee and the congress to pass any currency legislation acceptable to the money lords of the country is not, however, to be taken as in the slightest degree indicative of a failure in loyalty to them. The bankers and stock brokers have not been able to get an agreement upon any legislation, but it is because they could not agree among themselves as to just what they should demand. Thus, with all the willingness of the Republican congress to serve its moneyed masters by direct legislation on the currency question, nothing has been or will be done in that direction.

In many respects the second session of the Fifty-fifth congress is doing nothing as strictly as did the first session, during which congress simply met when Reed was willing and adjourned whenever he ordered.

\+ \+ \+

Representative John C. Bell made a vigorous speech in the house in opposition to the bill to increase the standing army. He said he was against the bill because he considered 25,000 men as enough for the regular army, either in times of war or peace. "I object to the bill also," continued Judge Bell, "because I think it is wholly oblivious of all the laws of human nature. In the last war President Lincoln and his advisers ignored the same law of human nature. They first started as though they had the idea that it was to be a war of the Republican party. That it was in other words to be a Republican war. You know what effect that had. You known that the great apathy it created in the Democratic states. You know that they said if this is to be a Republican war we are not in it, of course. But when old Ben Butler was called to the capitol of the nation he said, 'Mr. President, let me go into these great Democratic strongholds; let me advise them that this is a popular war in favor of the Union—a war by the people, for the safety and integrity of the constitution, and you issue commissions to Democrats, and they will give full support to it; it will give an opportunity to Democrats to serve as officers in young men live there with her and that two young ladies living in the neighborhood had attempted to undermine her in the attachment of the young men.

Miss Zearing further charged that for years she had suffered silently the caustic remarks of members of Central Presbyterian church, who attributed ignoble motives to acts which she performed in true Christian spirit and that instead of helping her save from eternal ruin young men without friends, members of the church did all they could to destroy her influence.

The matter will be investigated prior to the next meeting of the presbytery.

THEY HAD A MYSTIC INITIATION

Kansas Fraternal Insurance Company Used Strange Methods.

Secretary of State C. H. S. Whipple has been attending the United States district court at Topeka, Kan., as a witness in a case in which the charge brought is using the United States mails to defraud. Edward Roselle, the secretary of the Fraternal Aid association of Wichita, is the accused. It has been the practice of his company to serve with a mystic initiation all persons subscribing to its benefits. Roselle claimed to have initiated J. M. Richey and sister and a short time after the initiation he announced Richey's death, which he said occurred in a runaway accident in Bandito, Huerfano county, Colorado. The claim for the insurance money, amounting to $3,000, was accompanied in the mail by affidavits signed and sealed by a notary public. Suspicions of members of the insurance company were aroused. A letter to the secretary of state of Colorado brought forth the fact that no such notary as was named in the papers is registered in the office here. It was also discovered by the company in Wichita that the physician purporting to have examined Richey, whose name was given as J. H. Cammack, did not live in Bandito, nor had anyone ever heard of him.

Mr. Whipple's presence at the trial of Roselle was needed to prove that the notary mentioned was not in existence. Court adjourned until next week to allow the secretary to come to Colorado and attend the meeting of the state board of equalization.

ANIMAL INSTINCTS OF MAN

Emma Goldman Delivers Her Second Socialistic Lecture.

Emma Goldman, the New York labor leader spoke to a good sized audience at the Trades assembly hall last evening, William Holmes presiding. Miss Goldman said in part: "If you wish to destroy selfishness, you destroy life. You would change economic conditions, for it is something that will be found in all communities. We understand perfectly well that the man who takes a piece of bread from a little child who is starving, or the man who gives such a child food is acting on the same principle in their minds. If there were not animal instincts in a man he would not enjoy either action. There can be nothing so important as in developing the individual. If that is done he will hope that others will change the existing conditions and will join the movement himself.

NEW DEPARTURE ON WEST SIDE

Arbor Day Services Held in Advance of Holiday.

A new departure was yesterday inaugurated in Arbor day observation in the West Side schools. Heretofore very little interest has been taken in the doings of the day, on account of a holiday being declared. Exercises were held in district hours if there is a sediment or is also convincing proof that ou and bladder need doctoring. A overlooked, is that women suffe from kidney and bladder troub

do.

Dr Kilmer's Swamp-Root is t ery of the eminent physician tist and is not recommended f thing, but will be found just $25

Redu
of $5
China plates counter sign—n service very ra induce copy.

Do

LIVELY TIMES IN T

CHURCH LEADERS MIX U UNFORTUNATE AFFAIR
MR. PASSMORE.

With Arms Around the Preacher's Neck They
Him a Liar and Sugg
That He Is Also a Scoundrel.

During the deliberations of t
the Passmore trial at Trinity ch
nesday night, Rev. Dr. C. M. C
W. C. Madison, Rev. E. J. Wil
Passmore and a number of lay congregated in the pastor's stud
the verdict. A discussion aros Dr. Madison and Mr. Passmore.
tor placed both his arms arou minister's neck and shouted in Mr. Passmore is very deaf, "Y cal, I have talked with you errors and prayed with you but do right."

The Lie Passed.

The statement was repeated s times before Mr. Passmore wa understand. He laughed and s tor, you haven't done that and you to point to a single instan
I have failed to preach the go
The doctor again embraced reltrant and called louder than lle, you lie," but Mr. Passmore

BEST COPY AVAILABLE

881029004

The Emma Goldman Papers

[Excerpt from Lecture] Christian Idea Is False / Emma Goldman.– p. 8 ; 28 cm. In The Rocky Mountain News [Denver]. –(April 16, 1898).

Obtained from the University of California, Berkeley. Institutional Location: Doe Library.

Mail from St. Vincent, Cape Verde Is., says a Spanish fleet of six torpedo boats, two ironclads and one transport is there awaiting orders.

...ERN NEWS FROM WASHINGTON

Stanton Military Reservation Bill—Shafroth's Bills Favorably Reported.

NEWS BUREAU.
WASHINGTON, D. C., April 15.
... to The News.

...house committee on military affairs favorably reported the Gaitinger bill ...ing the Fort Stanton military reservation for the use of a Boston Invalid aid ...ation.

+ + +

...house committee on public lands ...afternoon favorably reported both ...afroth bills reported in yesterday's ...ches.

+ + +

...war department has officially re... to Delegate Fergusson that Fort ...d will not be discontinued.

+ + +

... F. Walden and Miss Warrie H. ... have been designated as members ... board of civil service examiners in ...office at Boulder, Colo.

+ + +

...ostoffice has been established at ...k, Saguache county, Colo., with ... J. Martin as postmaster.

...FF WEBB IS DANGEROUSLY ILL

...ttalion of Physicians Called ...at Night, but Their Diagnosis ...is Withheld.

... to The News.
... DIEGO, Cal., April 15.—Sheriff E. ...b, who returned to this city a few ...s ago from Los Angeles, has taken ...ed turn for the worse and his end ...ght to be very near. A consultation ... physicians was called to-night at ...ck, but the result of their diagnosis ... withheld. Sheriff Webb is at ...and Date streets with his daughter ...s Libbie Webb.

...IFF WEBB DANGEROUSLY ILL.

...patch was received from Sheriff E. ...b at San Diego last night which ... that he had taken a turn for the ...nd was unable to retain food. As ...ver in the dispatch, Harry Chitten..., member of the firm in which Sheriff ...s identified, left for San Diego.

SLIDE MINE CAVE-IN.

... to The News.
...LDER, Colo., April 15.—It was ru... here to-night that a disastrous ... had occurred an the Slide mine ...ld hill. The Slide is the deepest ...um mine in the state, being 1,100 ...ep. It is understood that no men ... the portion of the mine that caved ...t but particulars cannot be secured ... times.

...UMMING BIRD MINE SOLD.

... to The News.
...S, Idaho, April 15.—The Humming ...ine, owned by the Shaughnessy ... company of Salt Lake, was sold ... sheriff to-day to satisfy the claims ... miners and other creditors. It is ...able property and was bid in by ... W. S. McCormick of Salt Lake, ...enting some of the stockholders.

...BRIGHTON CATTLE SALE.

... to The News.
...HTON, Colo., April 15.—An important ...tle deal was consummated here ...day, W. E. Evans sold 875 head of ... to Alex Shears of Denver for $28 ...

ranch of James King, twenty miles southwest of Laramie on the Big Laramie river and burned over an area of over 2,000 acres before it spent itself. The fire started from some dead grass in a ditch which had been set afire and soon got beyond control. Several large stacks of hay belonging to Mr. King and others were destroyed and it was with great difficulty that he could save his ranch buildings. A party of Laramie persons who were coming across the fields were surrounded, but escaped without trouble by driving into a small pond of water.

BOSTON'S RECEPTION TO MR. BRYAN

Arrangements Completed for Entertainment of the Silver Advocate, and White and De Armand.

Special to The News.
BOSTON, April 15.—Arrangements were completed to-night for the reception of William J. Bryan, Senator White and Congressman De Armond to-morrow. The affair promises to be the grandest political affair of recent years in this section. Mr. Bryan will arrive from Connecticut early to-morrow morning with State Committeeman Walsh, and be tendered an informal breakfast. From 12 to 1 he will receive at the American house, and at 2:30 o'clock be tendered a banquet, at which practically every Democrat of note in New England will be in attendance. Mr. Bryan will speak on the issue of the day. In the evening he will address a mammoth mass meeting.

WALLACE, IDA., HOTEL BURNED

Charred Remains of an Old Veteran Found in the Ruins.

Special to The News.
WALLACE, Ida., April 15.—Al Page's three-story hotel at Wardner was consumed by a fire commencing at 2:30 this morning. About eighty men were sleeping in it and Mr Page visited every room, waking all the sleepers, and it was supposed all had escaped. But about 9 o'clock the remains of a man were found in the ruins. There seems no doubt they are those of John J. Gallagher, who had been working in the Last Chance mine for three weeks. He was about 60 years of age and nothing is known of his antecedents beyond the fact that he had a discharge from the One Hundred and Eighth Pennsylvania volunteers, dated August 13, 1865. The head and limbs were missing, only the charred trunk remaining. The origin of the fire is unknown; but it started in the third story in a room occupied by eight miners, and a miner's candlestick is suspected. Mr. Page estimates his loss at $35,000, with only $6,100 insurance. He is already putting up temporary quarters and will rebuild immediately. It is the fourth hotel he has lost by fire in the town during the past eleven years.

TRAFFIC ON COEUR D'ALENE LAKE

Special to The News.
WALLACE, Ida., April 15.—The Northern Pacific resumed traffic on Coeur d'Alene lake to-day, after having been closed down since last fall. Connection is made with the Oregon Railway and Navigation company at Harrison.

FIRST OF SALVATION ARMY COLONY

Special Car Leaves Chicago With Destitute Families for Prowars County, Colo., Homes.

Special to The News.
CHICAGO, April 15.—A special car containing a large number of people who have found city judicious use of these several appropriations for the seven school buildings mentioned a few other schools may receive some artistic attention.

The committee of this year has decided to recommend to its successor the permanent placing in schools, otherwise unsupplied with art reproductions, the pictures acquired by the art committees of preceding years for circulation among the schools.

An important decision of the present committee is to the effect that all pictures and other art works placed in the schools by the club committee shall be understood to remain permanently under the authoritative care and direction of the club, as represented by its art committee of each succeeding year.

Interest of the Pupils.

The serious work of our committee has been this year, as in former years, abundantly rewarded by the eager interest taken in its plans by both pupils and teachers of the schools. The parents and friends of the pupils have shown no less interest in the work, and numerous art leagues formed by them are effectively active in proving their appreciation of the educative value of art, by securing artistic decoration for some of the schools still outside the reach of the club.

The gratifying results of the work apportioned to the club committee on pictures for the public schools seem a fresh demonstration of the pleasant fact that unforeseen and often indirect but always positive good follows every progressive effort made on true lines.

By the courtesy of the Artists' club of Denver all the pictures, casts and potter... purchased for the Denver schools by the art committee will be placed on exhibition in their rooms in the Tabor opera house block during the first week in May. All members of the club and friends of the schools are cordially invited to view the collection before its distribution to the schools for which it has been selected.

Respectfully submitted by the chairman of the committee on pictures for the public schools of the Woman's club of Denver.

ST. BERNARD A LIFE SAVER

Year-Old Puppy in Arvada That Has an Eye to Business.

J. T. Brock of Arvada has a year-old St. Bernard dog that is a born life-saver. Yesterday morning the animal saw several geese swimming in a pond and he concluded they needed assistance, so he brought them to shore amid much screeching and fluttering of wings. Mr. Brock whipped the dog in an attempt to teach him not to interfere with geese. Later in the day Mr. Brock's little boy tumbled into a tub of rain water and the St. Bernard promptly fished him out alive.

HITZLER WAS DISSATISFIED.

Alexander C. Hitzler, who was mentioned in The News yesterday morning as a pupil of Miss Zearing, the Sunday school teacher who provided a home for three of her pupils who had differences with their parents, has written saying that he was not drawn from Miss Zearing's house by the designs of other young ladies, but left there because he did not relish the attractions of Miss Zearing as offered.

REFUSED TO RETURN HOME.

Maud Miller, the 14-year-old daughter of Mrs. Emma Miller of York and Colfax avenue, was arrested yesterday in company with Heitle Huseman, six years her senior. Maud ran away from home to join Heitle, and refuses to return. Former Detective Gordon is said to have been mixed up in the matter and Chief Farley will follow up the information.

CHARGES BELIEVED ABSURD.

J. V. Brown, charged with enticing Jennie Comer, appeared before Justice Crane yesterday afternoon and gave bonds for his appearance. Brown is a Globeville druggist and his friends brand the charges as absurd.

and all the events in American history in which the Red Men, though under other names at first, figured very prominently. Past Great Sachem Adam Geiger told of the relation of church and state to fraternalism and Great Junior Sakamorn Charles S. Metcalf outlined the standing of the organization in Colorado. Joe Newman, Benny Allen, Charles Witter and Harry Linton received much applause for musical selections.

EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE NAMED

Preparations Being Made for County Teachers' Association.

County Superintendent of Schools W. H. Knapp yesterday appointed the following as members of the executive committee of the Arapahoe County Teachers' association: Professor E. R. Downs, principal North Side High school, district 17, chairman; Principal A. W. Elder, Longfellow school, district No. 1; Principal H. S. Phillips, Logan school, district No. 2; Mrs. Mary E. Smith, Harman school, district No. 4; Principal M. E. Eagleton, Littleton schools, district No. 6; Principal L. H. Hall, Lower Clear Creek schools, district No. 16; Principal W. H. Eagleton, Villa Park school, district No. 21; Principal S. T. Shipman, Petersburg school, district No. 22; Principal J. J. Ward, Brighton schools, district No. 27; Principal Kate A. Gardiner, University Park schools, district No. 35; Principal Clara E. Lowell, Montclair schools, district No. 44.

The committee will meet in County Superintendent Knapp's office at 4:30 this afternoon to arrange a programme for the next meeting of the association, Saturday, April 30.

CHRISTIAN IDEA IS FALSE

Turning the Other Cheek Opposed to All Physical Laws.

Mrs. Emma Goldman lectured last night to a small house at Union hall. The subject was, "The Absurdity of Non-Resistance," which she did not handle with sophistical tongue.

She opened by saying: "Any educator who advocates the theory of non-resistance does not understand nature. Resistance is one of the bases of nature. Our books on the physical sciences teach us that for every action there is an equal and opposite reaction, and what holds good throughout the physical world, holds in the mental, or in the chemical. There is absolutely no such thing in the world as non-resistance, and the Christian idea of turning one cheek after having been smitten of the other, is false."

TRIED TO ROB A PASSENGER

Negro Pursued by Depot Policemen Who Fired Several Shots.

The eyes of the depot policemen carry an unusual glitter now-a-nights. They are looking for a suspicious negro, who made matters warm Thursday night. Shortly after 11 o'clock the character rode a wheel into the depot yards and boarded a passenger coach wherein a lady was dozing. His avident intention was to rob her, but Policeman Love espied him and was about to bring him within reach of the patrol when the fellow broke and ran across the tracks. Love emptied the contents of his revolver after the fleeing figure, giving chase, followed by Officer Sullivan. But the negro disappeared in the darkness. He had stolen the wheel.

CATTLE IN SEARCH OF GRASS

Quarantine Restrictions Removed From Pacific Coast Stock.

State Veterinarian Charles Gresswell

BEST COPY AVAILABLE

881011004

The Emma Goldman Papers

[Excerpt from Lecture] Emma Goldman, Anarchist / Emma Goldman.– p. 16 ; 34 cm. In The San Francisco Call. –(April 27, 1898).

Obtained from the University of California, Berkeley. Institutional Location: Doe Library.

bility rests upon Contractor
. but in order to acquit themselves tual complicity in the job they will mpelled to set up the plea of gross-egligence. O'Brien, who is Director
's brother-in-law, draws a salary of month from the department to pre-just this kind of work. His duty as tor requires him to measure every of lumber delivered to the depart-and to see that it is of the quality for.
an O'Brian is so closely related to a or whose influence among the other ers is most potent, he may have nt it entirely unnecessary to devote me to the city. Besides, his private cts, in which lumber played an im-nt part, demanded much of his time
the city paid for.
for Contractor Swift, the best advice
est ardent well wisher can give him strive long and faithfully to lose the ation he has among the members of umber Dealers' Association.
Buildings and grounds committee of ision Directors, as constituted last was composed of Burns, chairman, allagher and Drucker. This com-had entire charge of all the re-under investigation. It ordered the done and the lumber with which t aid. If the members accepted se reports as correct without any igation they will have an opportu-to try and convince the Grand Jury
t was the proper thing to do.
er, who is already under indict-but still has more to say in the meetings than the other eleven Dis combined, was chairman of the e committee last year, his associbeing Burns and Armor. Burns and r are fast friends, and it was they transacted all the business of the ittee. Armer was thrown in the dis-soon after the committee was d, and was never given an opportu-
to attend its meetings.
was not notified of the call for ngs, and finally he became so dist with the manner in which the ittee was conducted that he red from it. Consequently Waller and will have to tell why Contractor s bills were audited when they had g but O'Brien's word for it that umber at all had been furnished.
committee of the Grand Jury, with
rs. Holt, Campbell and Rickard, ued its investigation all day yes-
y. Its first visit being made to the ount School, away out in the Mis-District. It was while the party was at school that one of the experts a casual remark that disclosed a channel for the drainage of the l funds. Grand Juror Bauer reed that the hauling of lumber must ffitable, judging from the bills paid department.
ert Campbell, who is a member of Lumber Dealers' Association, red that the association had a regular ule of rates for hauling. He said

EMMA GOLDMAN, ANARCHIST.

A little woman—she can't be five feet tall—her round, slender figure neatly dressed in black, a bunch of carnations at her belt and one glowing vividly in her brown hair, a white collar at her fair throat and white lace falling over her tiny hands. Her eyes are beautifully clear and gray, her forehead is fine and low, though the head itself seems narrow, the small nose is a bit blunt and the thin lips have an habitual disdainful curl that is far from that had the money been properly c ed each month the shortage would have occurred.

Edwin Warfield, president of Fidelity and Deposit Company of M land, which was Widber's sole surety rived in the city yesterday morning left last evening, the object of his trip being to investigate and confer decide upon the course the com should adopt. There was a conferen his apartments at the Palace Hotel terday at which Mayor Phelan wa earnest and interested member, an result was a formal demand upon city to bring proceedings, first ag whatever estate Widber may have then upon the chairman of the board should have counted the money.
The position of the company was lined to the Mayor in the following munication, a copy of which was
him:

To the City and County of San Fran Although no demand has been made upo we, taking notice of the fact that one A tus C. Widber, formerly the Treasurer o City and County of San Francisco, ha faulted in the sum of one hundred eighteen thousand dollars, more or less,
that we, the Fidelity and Deposit Compa
Maryland, a corporation duly orga created and existing under and by virtu
the laws of the State of Maryland, ar sole surety from the first of January, upon the official bond of said Augustu Widber for the sum of one hundred tho dollars, do hereby state that in entering said bond of said Augustus C. Widber, w cepted and became liable upon the same dar and by virtue of the law that require President of the Board of Supervisors in junction with the County Judge and Au of said city and county, every month examine the books of the said Treasurer, shall be permitted, and it shall be their
to see and count over all the money maining in the hands of such Treasurer, it appearing to us that said President o
Board of Supervisors and County Judge Auditor have wholly failed in the perf
ance of their duties to examine the boo
the said Treasurer and to see and count all the money remaining in the hands of Treasurer.
Now, Therefore, we state for the benef the said city and county of San Fran that we require it under the law of the of California, relating to the rights of ties to proceed against the said Augustu Widber and his estate and to pursue its edy against the President of the Board Supervisors and all other persons who be liable and responsible in the premises to take all other remedies which the Fidelity and Deposit Company of Mar cannot, itself, pursue, and which lighten its burden.
Thereafter the said Fidelity and De Company waiving all technicalities hereb clares that it will pay any balances or d for which it may be liable under its bond
the law and to the full extent thereof.
Fidelity and Deposit Company of Mary per EDWIN WARFIELD, Presid

Another letter demanding that sui brought against the estate of Widber also served upon the Mayor, and al

881011004

The Emma Goldman Papers

[Excerpt from Lecture] Emma Goldman, Anarchist / Emma Goldman. – p. 16 ; 34 cm. In The San Francisco Call. –(April 27, 1898).

Obtained from the University of California, Berkeley. Institutional Location: Doe Library.

EMMA GOLDMAN, ANARCHIST.

A little woman—she can't be five feet tall—her round, slender figure neatly dressed in black, a bunch of carnations at her belt and one glowing vividly in her brown hair, a white collar at her fair throat and white lace falling over her tiny hands. Her eyes are beautifully clear and gray, her forehead is fine and low, though the head itself seems narrow, the small nose is a bit blunt and the thin lips have an habitual disdainful curl that is far from pleasing.

This is Emma Goldman, the anarchist, who suffered a year's imprisonment in New York for "inciting to riot."

"I didn't incite to riot," she said to me after last night's meeting was over. "I merely quoted Cardinal Manning's words: 'Necessity knows no law'."

"But there was an implication, wasn't there? You meant them to riot?" I asked her.

Incite to riot?

Why this five feet of feminine anarchy is the most dangerous enemy society has. Had she lived a century ago she'd have been beheaded. Two centuries ago Emma Goldman, anarchist, would have been given over to the loving embrace of the Jungfrau; while in the sixteenth century she would have been nicely boiled in oil or beheaded and then neatly broken on the wheel.

But this little Russian woman, with her thickened speech, her good rolling r's, her disdain of rhetorical rules, her vehemence of expression, her potent, unstudied postures, is the most interesting woman I ever met. She has life, she has courage, she has brains. She is fiercely consistent, unwaveringly true and, though I can't agree with her, I believe her to be absolutely sincere.

You should hear her talk. It doesn't matter whether you're socialist or anarchist or are endowed with a blessed indifference of isms in general. You can better afford to miss hearing Melba or even Bernhardt than listening to this genuine creature. She is San Francisco's sensation, as she was that of New York and Chicago; and next to the departure of the soldiers who marched off to Cuba, there is nothing so thrilling as listening to Emma Goldman. For nothing cows this woman, who alludes, in her full, strong contralto, to the Deity as "the old gentleman who employs full-stomached idlers, priests, rabbis and ministers to mind his business"; who attacks the Press, and charges it with the responsibility of the war with Spain; who speaks mockingly of President McKinley as "a low politician," and says that it was honesty among thieves that made De Lome so express himself; and who then turns upon the people themselves present and taunts them with their ignorance, their helplessness, their gullibility.

"You—you—you fools," she cried, "you slaves, who prate of humanity! Did you interfere in humanity's name when Sheriff Martin and the other murderers, his deputies, shot the strikers down? O, no, you did nothing of the kind! You believe what you're told to believe, you do what you're told to do. You stand like cattle before the bulletin boards with the war news. What for, my friends, what for? That the ruling classes may rejoice; that the yoke may press tighter upon you; that your blood and your body and your purse may suffer. And then you talk of freedom, of liberty!"

O, the contempt in this woman's voice! O, the power she has over this large audience that shouts bravos and stamps and roars in response to her fiery words!

"As if a workingman could ever be free! Why, you are slaves, slaves. And 'the brave boys, the brave boys,' "she went on, quoting sarcastically. "I say 'the brave boy' who goes to offer himself in battle while his father slaves and sweats at home and his sister sells herself in the streets deserves the lash —and I hope he gets it."

I asked Miss Goldman later whether she didn't fear to address men in such terms as this.

"Never," she answered. "I have talked to workingmen at the mines, in Chicago, during strikes and never once was molested."

She doesn't mince words, this fierce, scornful woman. She denounces the present war—all wars—as a relic of a barbarous time. She declares that the men we honor—Washington, Jefferson, and Wendell Phillips—were not patriots, but rebels. She deplores love of country because it makes one intolerant.

"Do you mean to tell me,' she demands, one little hand outstretched and the other braced upon her hip; "do you mean to tell me that it is wise and noble to throw yourselves like wild beasts upon the Spaniards, and that you'll believe it perfectly wise and perfectly legal and noble simply because you're told so by the press and the pulpit—the pulpit," she sneered, "for war!—and the monopolists and the Government that is not by the people and for the people? They tell you you'd tear yourselves to pieces if you had no leaders. Who does the lynching in the South—the white or the black?"

Miss Goldman's speech is epigrammatic; it is highly quotable. "The world is my country," she declares. "To do good is my only religion." Freedom, freedom, is her cry. According to her creed every barrier is tyranny; every Government, all laws, an imposition.

And the remedy?

"I may be a fool; I am not a prophet," she answered a question from the gallery, with a swagger, the only betrayal of self-consciousness she was guilty of last night.

This small fire-brand will suggest no remedy save this:

"Truth is a dangerous weapon in the hands of working men and women. Your enemy is not in Spain, but in Washington; not in Madrid, but here in San Francisco, in New York, in Chicago. I believe in holding up a looking glass before you, so that you can see and know yourselves. When you are educated, when you realize your power, you'll need no bombs, and no dynamite or militia will hold you."

...all had been furnished. ...tee of the Grand Jury, with ...t, Campbell and Rickard, ...vestigation all day yes... ...that visit being made to the ...hool away out in the Mis... ...It was while the party was ...ed that one of the experts ...ed to mark that disclosed a ...f ... drainage of the ... Grand Jury or lumber re... ...the hauling of lumber must ...ed from the hills proper ... who is a member of ... Lumbermen's Association, re... ...association had a regular ...ct of ... Building. He said ...distributed and a large map ...ered, showing those dis... ...member was permitted to ...than the schedule rates. ...beside, he said, is $2 25 per ...d to ... county line $2 50, ...the two longest hauls in the ...

...r Truman stated that on one ...rth of lumber for one of the ...hools the city had been ...for mill work and hauling, ...of the cost of the material. ...e that the Grand Jury will ...hase of the job to the fullest ...on as the present line of in...hed.

...ount School yard was re... ...some additional class rooms ...last vacation, consequently ...lumber was large, being as ...000 fancy shingles (best ...tract price $1 90 per 1000; this ...ce paid. 37,926 feet of 2-inch ...s of varying width; 10,000 feet ...ed. The experts found 15,500 ...n shingles, contract price 99 ...0, 27,500 feet of No. 2 and 3 ...0 feet of 4x4 redwood. The ...n robbed of 13,500 shingles, ...planking and 2500 feet of 4x4 ...addition to being shamefully ...the quality received. Here, ...other schools, the experts ...ingly liberal allowances for ...to quote Expert Holt, any ...furnished lumber for the ...on the experts' measure... ...know there would be some... ...carry away.

...the Horace Mann School on ...ret had new classrooms ...for lumber as paid by the ...tors calling for 3645 feet of ...ngue and groove flooring; ...x8 rustic; 22,000 shingles; 3452 ...planking, and 940 feet of 4x4 ...e experts' figures show 2400 ...ng; 1950 feet of rustic; 14,000 ...feet of planking, and 451 ...dwood.

...the Buena Vista primary on ...near Eighteenth, disclosed ...iggest steals yet brought to ...ity paid for 46,591 feet of 2-...s and received 22,000 feet, a ...feet; 11,670 feet of 4x4, and ...feet, a difference of 5820 feet, ...f stepping, of which no trace ...overed.

...utting this case of robbery ...s made a jump to the down... ...alighting first on the Whit... ...on Harrison, near Fourth. ...awful, those responsible for ...illing even to divide, but in... ...allowing the city a third of ...aterial it had paid the high... ...The bill called for 55,740 feet ...king, but only 20,500 feet were ...feet of 3x6 redwood at $8 95 ..., but for which pine at $7 40 ...ed, and only 9200 feet deliv... ...et of 4x8 redwood, in place ...feet of 4x6 and 4722 feet of ...7490 feet, was found; 750 feet ...of which but 504 feet was in ...d 422 feet of 2x12, which ...feet under the experts' tape

...King Primary, on Bryant ...Eighth, concluded the day's ... Here the city got about ...her it paid for, except step... ...ch only a fourth could be ...l the stairways in the build... ...easured. The 44,760 feet of ...rged for actually measured ...ith an allowance of nearly ... the experts. Twenty-... ...ven hundred and seventy-... ...4x4 proved to measure 9800 ...of these measurements in... ...of material in the yard not ... the replanking of the yard

...of California, relating to the rights of sure... ties to proceed against the said Augustus ... Widber and his estate and to pursue its reme... edy against the President of the Board of Supervisors and all other persons who may be liable and responsible in the premises and to take all other remedies which the said Fidelity and Deposit Company of Maryland cannot, itself, pursue, and which would lighten its burden.

Thereafter the said Fidelity and Deposit Company waiving all technicalities hereby declares that it will pay any balances or deficit for which it may be liable under its bond and the law and to the full extent thereof.

Fidelity and Deposit Company of Maryland, per EDWIN WARFIELD, President.

Another letter demanding that suit be brought against the estate of Widber was also served upon the Mayor, and also a third letter, in which the position of the company is again outlined and the demand is made that the Mayor be made a party to another suit for recovery.

"We are not raising technicalities," said Mr. Warfield, in speaking of his company, "but we have a right under the law to seek every means of lightening the burden upon us either by recovery from the estate of the persons we guarantee or by suit and recovery against those whose business it was not only to protect him but to protect us. We had what was called a thirty-day risk on Widber—that is, we went on his bond with the knowledge that the money in his charge was required to be counted every thirty days by a responsible board or commission, and with the expectation and the tacit understanding that the officials whose duty it was to serve on this board would attend to their duties. We did not insure them for the performance, consequently we cannot be held responsible for what happened as a result of their dereliction.

"We contend that the shortage would never have taken place had Widber known that the money would be carefully counted every month; and we assert that the way in which it was counted gave him the knowledge that he could steal from the treasury with impunity; further, granting that the money was properly counted every month, it is plain that the shortage would have been discovered long before it had reached the sum it was eventually found to be, and therefore by their neglect the commissioners have rendered us liable for two or three times as much as we would have had to pay had they discovered the defalcations as soon as they should have done.

"We do not object to pay the loss, and we will not raise technicalities, but we have a right to redress from those who have made such a defalcation possible by neglecting a duty designed to make such a state of affairs impossible."

It is expected that Widber's estate will be large enough to cover a good part of the defalcation. He is said to own an interest in a mine worth $50,000, which has upon its dumps sufficient ore to yield $50,000 more. The surety company is entitled to all this, and having obtained it the liability of the Mayor and his financial assistants will occupy the attention of the courts.

THE MAYOR RESISTANT.

He Charges the Guarantee Company With Having Adopted Equivocal Methods.

Mayor J. D. Phelan is much exercised over the prospect of being compelled to make good the ex-Treasurer's shortage, and last night issued the following statement:

"I saw President Warfield of the Fidelity and Deposit Company of Maryland by appointment at 4 o'clock this afternoon in his room at the Palace Hotel. City and County Attorney Creswell was with me. Representing the company was not only the president, but its attorney, C. H. Wilson of 590 California street, and for a part of the time Mr. Peixotto, representing ex-Treasurer Widber, was also present.

"This is the first time I have had any communication with the company, the bond having been approved by Mayor Sutro. There is nothing in the bond that re-

880926032

The Emma Goldman Papers

A Short Account of My Late Tour / Emma Goldman.— p. 2 ; 36 cm. In Solidarity [New York]. —(June 15, 1898).

Permission to reproduce or quote in any form must be obtained from the University of Michigan, Harlan Hatcher Graduate Library. Institutional Location: Labadie Collection, Emma Goldman Papers, Department of Rare Books and Special Collections.

SOLIDARITY.

An International Review of Anarchist Communism.

PUBLISHED SEMI-MONTHLY

at No. 50 First Street, New York City.

Price 50 cents per year. Single copy 2 cents. Large discount on orders of 100 or more.

Address all orders and communications to JOHN H. EDELMAN, 50 First St. All money should be sent to CHAS. B. COOPER, Treasurer, 50 First St., N. Y. City.

A SHORT ACCOUNT OF MY LATE TOUR.

I had promised friends and comrades to give a detailed account of my tour through the States in the form of traveling notes, either in "Free Society" or in "Solidarity." But on thinking the matter over, I concluded that this would be impossible, for if I should give a full history of all my experiences, all I encountered, and the many incidents which I recall, the people I met and their characteristics, during eighteen weeks on the road, it would fill a book of considerable size. As time and space will not permit me to do this now, I must beg my friends to accept a short account.

I left New York with $2 in my purse and a ticket to Philadelphia, my first stopping place. Through the kind assistance of various comrades I traveled to the Pacific Coast, South as far as Los Angeles, and North to Portland. I have visited in all eighteen cities, among them Philadelphia, Pittsburg, and in the Western Pennsylvania mining districts, McKeesport, Roscoe, Newton, Manaca, and Homestead, where six years ago the slaves of Carnegie's iron and steel mills fought like men to protect their lives and liberty for a time, only to return to greater hardships and humiliations than ever. I was in Cleveland, Detroit, Chicago, Milwaukee, Cincinnati, St. Louis, Denver, Salt Lake City, San Francisco, San Jose, Los Angeles and Portland, but was compelled to cancel engagements in Tacoma and Seattle and other places on account of misunderstandings. I addressed 66 meetings and conducted a debate with a leading Socialist in San Francisco. On looking back over my tour I can say without flattering myself too much, that I have done good work. I have made friends for the cause of liberty, have done away with a good deal of prejudice formerly entertained by different people against Anarchy and Anarchists, and have won a number of personal friends. In fact I was received with open arms wherever I went, and the comrades did their utmost to make my visit pleasant in every respect. Of course I also made enemies. I do not understand why some people assert that America is a poor place for the spread of radical ideas. My experience in my last two trips has been that this country is an excellent field for them. I believe that if we only had a few able, energetic workers going constantly back and forth between the Atlantic and Pacific we would have a strong movement in a short time.

It will surprise many of the comrades to learn that very little is known of Anarchy in the West. "Yet much money and time have been spent in literature, papers, pamphlets, etc.," some will exclaim. That is true, but unfortunately the papers, pamphlets and leaflets have only reached the few, not the many. It is only of late that a Western paper has been doing good work in propaganda, and that is "Free Society." The Western people are ready to accept radical ideas, [illegible] are now paving the way for Anarchy very rapidly.

[illegible] of the Workmen is of [illegible]

East. Sunday laws, moral laws, laws prohibiting speech in the open air, etc., are little known in the far West, and I hardly think ever will be. This alone makes life pleasanter on the Pacific than here, where every bluecoat exercises the power of a Czar.

Therefore, if the time, energy and money used in propaganda in the East had been devoted to the Pacific Slope we would have had a very different movement. However, better late than never. Philosophic Anarchy is still new to the American tongue. Let us continue our efforts, carry on an energetic propaganda, and we will soon see that intelligent Americans will join hands with the intelligent people of all countries in the battle for liberty.

I have often heard reformers say that the working class does not revolt because it is not yet wretched and starving enough, and that the sooner economic conditions get worse the sooner they will revolt. This is another wrong conception of men and conditions. Take the coal miners, the most ill paid and ill treated wage workers in existence. To try to describe the condition of the miners of Western Pennsylvania is to attempt the impossible. In many places grown men, with families, have not been able to earn more than $1.50 a week. They are herded together in miserable, filthy hovels, 12 or 15 people occupying one room; for how else can they pay rent? Yet these men do not revolt, and never will. They have not the strength. They are like animals—dumb, stupid, indifferent, ready to lick the hand that lashes them. But when I reached the districts where they earned $5 and $6 a week (a fortune [illegible] as they work), I found men carrying themselves with some pride and self respect, and open to ideas. It is therefore an unpardonable mistake to sit with folded hands awaiting the development of things to such a state that it will be too late to act. Men with empty stomachs do not fight for freedom. They fight for bread, and as soon as they get the crust, gnawing on it they forget their good intentions to fight for more. I have not spent 18 weeks in missionary work without learning that it is useless to appeal to the overfed, but still of less use to appeal to the underfed. To be successful we must reach that class whose brains have not yet been destroyed by starvation.

The convention of the Social Democracy, held in Chicago June 7th, which I attended as a visitor, was a fiasco, as many such have been. For the credit of the colonization side, however, be it said that it was their intention to develop a sound, healthy, economic movement, leaving all politics to the politicians. The will was strong, but the flesh was weak, not strong enough to maintain their position to the last, they compromised, that is, they dropped one, politics, but accepted the other, the colonization propaganda. I have no faith in either, for I know that nothing short of the propaganda against political control and against economic dependence will satisfy.

I will write no more of my tour, as most of the meetings have been reported in "Free Society" and in "Solidarity." I will add that some of my lectures are to appear in "Free Society" shortly. Let me also add that before long I will start on another tour. Therefore, not good-by, but au revoir.

Fraternally, EMMA GOLDMAN

New York, July, 1898.

OUR "TAGGED" SOLDIERS.

The "Coming Nation" says:

[illegible] soldiers who go to Cuba wear numbers not [illegible]. Private soldiers are not worth knowing by name. Some of the generals, majors or colonels will wear [illegible]. They are our aristocracy. The "incentive" offered by the [illegible] is something fearful and wonderful to behold. Tagged and numbered [illegible] a battle for the liberty of [illegible] so far.

How common it is that whenever our State Socialist friends come across, in our present system, some detail that will be a feature of their own, if it ever comes into operation, they invariably kick against it. Witness the above protest against tagging and numbering. But why complain? The State-Socialist system would work out to the same end because it is simply the same present governmental system, with the lines drawn tighter and everything more rigid and stereotyped than we have it now. The State-Socialists of a generation or so back knew this, intended it, and in their writings frankly outlined the Socialist scheme on this very "tagging and numbering" system. In these days of my inquiring middle-age, I often recall such State-Socialist literature as I read in the days of my inquiring youth. Its advocacy of these tagging and numbering methods, of cell-like simplicity of surroundings, and the general reduction of life to the monotony and discipline of the army and the penitentiary kept me from ever getting up any enthusiasm for State-Socialism.

Our modern State-Socialists object to this army and penitentiary method being taken as a model as much as we Anarchists do; but they fail to see that centralization, regimentation, disciplining of the individual, and this very tagging and numbering, must be the result of their system. It works out into open day even now in all they do, both in their present organized efforts and in their fictional literature. Every one is to be, and is, dragooned by the majority, whether you take the living examples of Ruskin and the S. L. P., or examine literary fiction like that of Bellamy. State-Socialism does not get rid of the people corresponding to "generals, majors or colonels," or "captains of industry." Through its tyrannical method of "majority rule" it would hand everything over to a centralized governmental clique more powerful than is the present one, and its administrators, no matter by what names you might call them, would still be "on a pinnacle, you see," and the tagging and numbering would go on as before.

It would be a good thing, as an eye-opener, if some of the State-Socialist literature of a generation or so back were reprinted in our day. As a starter, I suggest the republication of "Social Architecture," by an "Exile," published in London, in English, many years ago. It is a picture of tagging and numbering, of regimentation, ascetic simplicity, etc., etc., all set forth as the ideal. To-day State-Socialists would disclaim the ideal, but they hold fast to the methods which would inevitably produce it. They endeavor to meet criticism of their always-honestly-held ideas by telling us of the great things that could be done for humanity by machinery and natural resources all held and worked by a centralized monopolistic state, compelling all through majority rule (if only that majority is a Socialistic one) to work for the "general good" instead of for private gain.

"Just how officials put "on a pinnacle, you see," by a State-Socialistic majority, are to become more angelic, more honest or humane than those elevated to a pinnacle by any other kind of a majority, is never explained. The appeal to the "general good" as the aim, while throwing an air of justice and humanity over the scheme, is delusive and conceals the fact that the method proposed is in effect a consolidation of all the forces of tyranny into a form much more dangerous than the present one. Deciding the general good by Socialistic majority rule is nothing more than the present method of governing by the alleged will of the majority through the representative system, with one fatal difference. That difference is that the present State, which pretends to (but does not) carry out the will of the majority, owns very little, and its control over what it does not own can be and is limited. There is a limit to the power of the State now, even when it has a majority; outside of officialdom there are things the State cannot yet control. Hence there is some freedom. State-Socialism endows the State with complete ownership, and outside of officialdom there is no control, and even the "majority" ceases to have what little freedom it now has.

Of the two, the present system is by far the better. It is better that a comparatively few, in the army, navy, and other penitentiaries should be "tagged and numbered" than that all should be.

"Private soldiers are not worth knowing by name." Well, under State Socialism, private citizens would not be worth knowing by name. They could only be working ciphers, completely in the hands of State officials elected by majority decision. "Majority decision" to-day puts things in the hands of officials controlled by and doing the bidding of "bosses." Majority decision by Socialistic majorities would produce the same contradiction. It does so to-day, among the Socialists. After the majority has spoken, at present the Hannas, Crokers and Platts dictate. The Socialists already have their Hannas, Crokers and Platts, eager for the spoils of a party which has no prospect of power. Into what hands will Socialism fall when it does get power? Into hands that will "tag and number" worse than those in which we are at present, to the extent that they can control all instead of part.

The "incentive" offered by a Socialistic state owning and controlling everything "is something fearful and wonderful to behold" in comparison to the "incentive" held out by the present State owning and controlling less. Away with the State in any form.

CHAS. B. COOPER.

(From the Boston "Evening Transcript.")

A business-busy looking man on the train who got off in Connecticut, said: "It's not the Socialists or Anarchists who open up big squares and fill them with flowers. Anarchists haven't got anything but their jaw. It's religion does everything in this world, and lots of times it's rich folks' religion. What is it makes an ambulance with a hurt bricklayer in it take its place by right in front of a rich man's carriage? Isn't that religion? Yes, sir." And his companion made answer with evident sincerity: "Yes, sir; and wouldn't it make a difference in things if every man could be a good, decent Christian gentleman?" Yes it would, a decided difference. They would soon be burning witches again and heretics and infidels. As to liberty, here is an illustration from the same paper:

FIRM AGAINST TOBACCO.

(From the Boston "Evening Transcript.")

The United Presbyterian General Assembly of the United States, which meets in Omaha, Neb., the 24th of next month is to act upon a resolution directing that no minister shall engage in home mission work as a beneficiary of home mission funds, nor shall any one be employed by the General Assembly or Board of Home Missions in administrative or clerical capacity, and who is to be paid for his services from funds contributed for home missions, who is addicted to the use of tobacco in any form. This resolution is in accordance with the action of the General Assembly in 1870, when it was voted that "the use of tobacco is demoralizing in its tendency, and should be discountenanced by all who profess the Christian name," and in 1879, when it was resolved that "no student addicted to the use of tobacco in any form be granted aid by the board." This resolution was reaffirmed in 1885, 1888 and 1895.

Wouldn't it be a fine world to live in if such fellows had the power to decide what we could and what we couldn't do?

BEST COPY AVAILABLE

851024004

The Emma Goldman Papers

Miss Emma Goldman Replies to Questions Asked by Mr. F.B. Livezey / Emma Goldman. – 28 cm. In The Sentinel [Detroit]. –(July 30, 1898).

Permission to reproduce or quote in any form must be obtained from the University of Michigan, Harlan Hatcher Graduate Library. Institutional Location: Labadie Collection, Agnes Inglis Papers, Department of Rare Books and Special Collections.

DETROIT, SATURDAY, JULY 30, 1898. ONE DOLLAR PER

MISS EMMA GOLDMAN

Replies to Questions Asked by Mr. F. B. Livezey.

She Does Not Favor Compulsory Education or Force as Anarchistic Propaganda —Interesting Letter.

To the Editor of The Sentinel:

In your paper of July 23 I notice an item headed "Emma Goldman Wanted," in which Mr. F. B. Livezey, of Sykesville, Md., sends me his compliments and inquires whether I am in favor of "compulsory education," and whether I advocate "force" in the propaganda of anarchy. He also states that he is in sympathy with my antagonism to marriage and the clergy, and with my appreciation of Jesus Christ.

May I ask that you be kind enough to publish this reply to Mr. Livezey's queries:

I do not favor compulsory education; nor have I ever lectured in favor of it. Not only do I not believe in it, but I am entirely opposed to our present school system, considering it injurious to the natural faculties of the child. I know by my own experience that instructors and teachers can seldom regard the individual abilities and inclinations of their pupils; they must follow the lines laid down by the board of education and stuff the children's heads with a lot of rubbish, which only hardens the little minds and which is of no benefit to the children.

Until instructors will make it a special study to understand the nature of their pupils, their physical and mental wants, their trials and worries, their pleasures and sorrows, children will leave their schools automatic machines and not thinking and reasoning young men and women.

I have never advocated "force" for the propoganda of anarchy, nor do I know of any anarchist who has done so.

Every student of anarchist philosophy knows that anarchy has nothing to do with force and violence; that it denotes peace, safety and liberty, and does not recognize the right of one to rule, injure or coerce the others.

But every anarchist is also a student of history, and as such he or she must recognize that the ruling classes have never granted privileges to the oppressed until forced to do so by the latter.

Judging from the events of the past and present, there is no doubt in my mind that the struggling masses of the present century can expect nothing from their masters, and if they want to

Boss Comstock. Certainly Mr. Livezey must know by this time that free press and free speech are things of the past; that Comstockism is fast spreading in this country, destroying the liberty of each victim it reaches. True, Comstock has not succeeded in crushing the right of expressing one's opinion entirely, but the pen can no longer be used as openly as at the time when such biggots as Comstock were not known.

Every liberty-loving man or woman must be antagonistic to the clergy and our marriage institutions, and oppose them as obstacles in the way of freedom and as impertinent meddlers in private affairs.

I do not recollect ever having expressed my appreciation of Jesus Christ, and therefore I do not consider myself deserving of Mr. F. B. Livezey's compliments.

ing "homes" for the new comers at $9.80 for each house.

A simplified combination of the Thorne and Cox typesetting machines will soon be on the market.

The city of Hamilton, Ont., has decided to employ only union labor in the construction of sewers.

The Italian parliament has seated Signor Norfri, Socialist, who was cheated by the capitalistic parties at Turin.

The labor forces of Brisbane, Australia, have organized a new labor party and adopted a strong Socialist platform.

Cramp & Sons, Philadelphia shipbuilders, will construct two battleships and to gunboats for the Russian government.

Notwithstanding times are dull in the slack barrel line in Chicago, Coopers' Union No. 15 continues to grow in membership.

tion will be the protege an Standard Oil company, and a New York companies are in

The New South decided to do without the al men contractors in building tion of the Inverell-Moree ra work is to be carried out by der government supervision.

Since 1887, when it was l government whiskey monopo
the Swiss people $8,600,000, otherwise have gone into pri
The monopoly has also paratively decrease the con whisky.

Ten large envelope compa
solidated into the United Sta
Company, with a capacity fo 17,000,000 envelopes a day, of commercial envelopes.

Shafer's Store is the Hub of the City's Commerce.

THIS WEEK (Monday) we began a grand UNLOADING SALE of our entire stock MEN'S and BOYS' CLOTHING. This is no half hearted effort—no ordinary cleaning up sale with only the profits sacrificed—but a gigantic trade convulsion—a cutting into cost that will create a commotion, not only among Clothing dealers, but throughout the community generally. Everybody in Michigan who wears Clothing is personally concerned in this sale. We will not carry a dollar's worth of Clothing over from this season to the next if we can possibly avoid it. We are about to take our first inventory; our record of sales for the first six months will soon be determined and we want to make it a big one. For these reasons and also because we desire to close our first half year's business with a huge advertisement for unprecedented value giving—we offer Clothing to the men and boys of Detroit and Michigan at prices guaranteed to be the lowest ever named here or anywhere else for like quality. That you may comprehend the full import of this offer, we might add that it includes

Choice of any Suit in this store—the pick of the Very Finest Tailor-made Outfits (Heavy Clays alone excepted) —a selection from ALL styles of cut—ALL materials—ALL sizes—for only $7.50

When you stop to consider that this sale embraces hundreds of Suits that have retailed all this season at $15, $18 and $20 you will begin to appreciate the full import of this announcement—the extraordinary character of this offer. Medium and low priced Suits go at proportionately reduced prices.

YOUTHS', BOYS' and CHILDREN'S SUITS are correspondingly cut to close out, it being the intent, as already [illegible] to make a clean sweep, dispose of everything in the line of Clothing now in this store.

Don't procrastinate—an opportunity like this is not likely to come again in a life-time. The chance to select ANY Suit in Shafer's store to choose from all—for only $7.50 is a proposition that no other dealer can duplicate—a concession that in human probabilities we will not care to repeat under any circumstances. Orders by mail promptly filled.

C. A. SHAFER

General Outfitter.

156

851024004

The Emma Goldman Papers

Miss Emma Goldman Replies to Questions Asked by Mr. F.B. Livezey / Emma Goldman.— 28 cm. In The Sentinel [Detroit]. ÷(July 30, 1898).

Permission to reproduce or quote in any form must be obtained from the University of Michigan, Harlan Hatcher Graduate Library. Institutional Location: Labadie Collection, Agnes Inglis Papers, Department of Rare Books and Special Collections.

the contracts a he employment of rivate and public ttested to by the
of the several rship.

ations for The
be mailed to Block, 101-Street. New

BOARD.

Do In Their Case.

ase betwen of Lansing rinting Company
ednesday last it
e member of the ation and Modlans, was present.
ed themselves as the case, but the full board should lge Robbins said
leavor to get the
also desired to he case, notwith-
wed one member ad and take testioard, T. H. Robe, nearly 600 miles was almost im-to attend. His robable. Mr. Carl member of the
in time to attend.
by the court and
les that the award from the time of ation (July 1), an n till August 16.
nuous efforts will board present.

been appointe Commission, an-
of the bill for that
ssion of congress:
er, Lorimer, Lov
ell; Senators Kyle,
tiel and Mallory.
e completed by the names of repre-
pital and agriculworkers' Nationa

on its plan of putts into operation.
rected at Sweetser county, Ind., and at Toledo, O. It os a dozen plants
ational Association
tering the co-opera-ong time and also
s and markets.

I have never advocated "force" for the propoganda of anarchy, nor do I know of any anarchist who has done so.

Every student of anarchist philosophy knows that anarchy has nothing to do with force and violence; that it denotes peace, safety and liberty, and does not recognize the right of one to rule, injure or coerce the others.

But every anarchist is also a student of history, and as such he or she must recognize that the ruling classes have never granted privileges to the oppressed until forced to do so by the latter.

Judging from the events of the past and present, there is no doubt in my mind that the struggling masses of the present century can expect nothing from their masters, and if they want to change their conditions and bring about a state of society in which no one shall enjoy the toil of his fellow man they will only succeed through the social revolution, never through peaceful methods.

As to individuals using force: well, whether we agree with them or not, whether we like them or not, such cases will occur from time to time, as a natural result of the causes existing in society. Let me give you an example. You will no doubt remember the shooting of Prime Minister del Castello, of Spain, by the young student Angellillo Goll.

If Canovas had not re-established the Inquisition in Spain, if he had not caused 300 innocent workingmen to be tortured in the most barbarous and inhuman way in the prison of Montjoich, the world had never heard of Angellillo Golf. He, whose heart was filled with love and sympathy for his fellow men, would not have thought of shooting Canovas, as he was too gentle, refined and noble even to hurt a fly. But Canovas del Castello, with his murderous genius, has produced a Golf, just as Caesar produced a Brutus.

We might as well fight against cyclones, earthquakes, tornadoes, lightning and other phenomena, as to fight against individual acts of violence. They have been and will be as long as we retain the causes which produce them; and I look upon such occurences as warnings of the coming danger to the tyrants of the world.

Of course I understand that violent acts do not change conditions unless a change has taken place in the minds of the people. Yet individual acts often set men to thinking and then books, papers, lectures and other methods of propaganda develop the first thought, which deeds like Angellillo Golf's, Santa Caseria's, Alexander Bergman's and others have first stimulated.

I hardly think Mr. Levisey will succeed in proving to me that the pen is anarchy's best weapon at present. It might have been so were it not for that Comstockism is fast spreading in this country, destroying the liberty of each victim it reaches. True, Comstock has not succeeded in crushing the right of expressing one's opinion entirely, but the pen can no longer be used as openly as at the time when such bigots as Comstock were not known.

Every liberty-loving man or woman must be antagonistic to the clergy and our marriage institutions, and oppose them as obstacles in the way of freedom and as impertinent meddlers in private affairs.

I do not recollect ever having expressed my appreciation of Jesus Christ, and therefore I do not consider myself deserving of Mr. F. B. Livezey's compliments.

If Christ existed, of which I am not quite positive about, as there are so many pros and contras, he undoubtedly was a reformer; but unfortunately he advanced ideas based on sentiment and not on reason. I suppose this is the reason why priests, parsons and preachers have been able to use his teachings for their own benefit, causing humanity so much suffering. I prefer modern reformers, who base their philosophy both on sentiment and reason, knowing full well when people will learn to reason there will be no room for gods, devils or their emissaries, priests, Comstock and other parasites.

In conclusion I would like to thank Mr Livezey for his high appreciation of me, but as he has gained this only from a description in Free Society, he may yet change in opinion should he ever meet the original of that description.

EMMA GOLDMAN

New York, July 23, 1898.

GENERAL LABOR NOTES.

Cry for the Label.

Butchers are on strike at Indianapolis.

Hallnorth's Garden Theater at Cleveland is still on the unfair list.

At Geneva, Switzerland, 1,000 carpenters and cabinetmakers are on strike.

The bone, sinew and brains of the western hemisphere will celebrate Labor Day.

Twenty Socialists were elected to the municipal council at Zurich, Switzerland.

The Purrington Paving Brick Co.'s yards at Galesburg, Ill., have been unionized.

In the late elections Copenhagen, the capital of Denmark, went strongly Socialistic.

It is probable that Victoria will soon follow South Australia in giving women the suffrage.

White workmen in a steel works at Pueblo, Col., have been displaced by negroes. The management is now erecting and Cox typesetting machines will soon be on the market.

The city of Hamilton, Ont., has decided to employ only union labor in the construction of sewers.

The Italian parliament has seated Signor Norfri, Socialist, who was cheated by the capitalistic parties at Turin.

The labor forces of Brisbane, Australia, have organized a new labor party and adopted a strong Socialist platform.

Cramp & Sons, Philadelphia shipbuilders, will construct two battleships and 10 gunboats for the Russian government.

Notwithstanding times are dull in the slack barrel line in Chicago, Coopers' Union No. 15 continues to grow in membership.

The officers of the Western Labor Union, the new western federation, report that they are deluged with applications for charters.

Charters have been issued by the Metal Polishers to unions in Philadelphia, Thompsonville and Stamford, Conn., and Kewanee, Ill.

The English Association of Operative Cotton Spinners has a fund of £235,000, an increase of £36,000 in one year. The membership is 17,760.

The Birmingham, Eng., municipality is the latest to follow the examples of Liverpool and Sheffield and buy out the private electric lighting company.

Machines to turn out 288,000 fruit jars a week have been put into a glass plant at Washington, Pa., and the factory refuses to close down during summer.

Forty local coopers' unions have voted in favor of paying strike benefits to the members of local Union No. 1 who went on strike at Swift's packing house in Chicago.

In Hamburg, Germany, 1,000 journeymen bakers are on strike; 55 bakeshops, employing 200 men, have acceded to the demands of the men and are not affected.

The unions of Colorado are assessing their members 5 cents per week for the support of the miners at Lafayette, Col., who have been on strike for four months.

As a distributing concern Cleveland's Industrial Co-operative society has discontinued business. The organization will be kept up as a social educational institution.

Bronko Pete—Did ye lynch that hoss thief ye caught over at Red Dog? Alkali Ike—Nope. The durn sneak had got out an injunction forbiddin' it before he stole the hoss.—New York Journal.

The slack barrel bosses of Dallas, Tex., say that if the Coopers' Union does not accept a reduction of 2 cents on slack work they will cease making it. The men look upon the threat as a bluff.

A gas trust with a capital stock of $78,000,000 has been formed. The combina-

The New
decided to do men contract tion of the I work is to be der governme
Since 1887, government the Swiss peo otherwise ha
The monopol paratively d whisky.
Ten large solidated into Company, wi
17,000,000 en of commercia says there's a
The freque dangerous brought publ
the press is c
no misunder
month of last 30 females w
and color wo

HELP US

And Help
Int

Short wee matters of our friends
ly appreciat ment. Mak the point, s will reach u
each week.
news;
Election
Any actio
by your o
hours, boy Notes of penings in meetings, o Grievance factory, sh dangers to children, o Ideas u remedies,
form, or co
ries advanc
Write o per, and s
lly for publ
good faith.
Direct
Sentinel,
Griswold
New Tak

Buy un

157

880712001

The Emma Goldman Papers

New York Anarchist Leaders Denounce the Murder of Austria's Empress / Emma Goldman. – p. 20 ; 28 cm. In The World. – (Sept. 18, 1898).

Obtained from the University of California, Berkeley. Institutional Location: Doe Library.

EW YORK ANARCHIST LEADERS DENOUNCE THE MURDER OF AUSTRIA'S EMPRESS.

J. L. Fireman

They Say that Lucchesi Is the Natural Result of Prevailing Conditions but They Do Not Excuse His Crime.

The New York Anarchists denounce and repudiate Lucchesi, the assassin of the Empress of Austria. He had no "justification" according to their code for slaying a human being unhappy and not looked for. No distinct nationality is recognized by the Anarchists, they are all brother comrades. The ringleader of a secret band of Italian Anarchists in Zurich who plotted the murder of Humbert, the Duke of Genoa and the Austrian Empress is described by the Swiss police, and is well known Anarchists here.

The name of Lucchesi is not known by them, and while he may have called himself an Anarchist he did not, so far as New York members know belong to a "group." Indeed anarchy does not recognize a united assembly. With its theories everything rests in the individual.

Salvatore Pallavicini, the leading Italian Anarchist, was found at the place of business of the reigning piece of his group in Macdougal street.

Pallavicini received the reporter courteously and introduced him to several men present, some of whom were writers and editors.

BY S. PALLAVICINI.

To the Editor of The World:

A woman is a woman, and I am too much of a man to raise my hand against the weaker sex.

This reason alone would prevent my disapproving Lucchesi's crime.

But there are many others.

I don't recognize individual acts unless prompted by good reasoning power in the man or woman and unless the effect of the deed has been previously taken into consideration.

We do not wish to kill anybody, and yet I would not own that revolution is to be disregarded, for without an armed uprising the education of the unjust classes, blinded by money power, hence you will find a great number of Anarchists there.

And look at the measures against them. Don't you know that where oppression is greatest crime grows to gigantic proportions?

The Meaning of Anarchy.

Anarchy [illegible] We do not want to kill men but desire a social system to regenerate them.

We want to build on the debris of present kingdoms, empires and bourgeois republics the kingdom of peace, justice and true liberty for all.

The deserved result is the ordinary penalty imposed on the professional criminals alone, all men who are known as Socialists or Anarchists. This penalty is confiscation or some insane until for habitation. Pierre Gay ate paid ten cents a day for living exposes.

Hundreds and thousands of intelligent young men are condemned every year to the penitentiary. For instance, they [illegible] anarchy accepts [illegible] and I personally am one of them.

[illegible] a personality is dead man, [illegible] I renew and in the [illegible] whatever he [illegible] have been, no life was lost. I admit, in order to terrorize [illegible] Anarchists, sentenced Vaillant to death.

[illegible] Anarchy and assassin, who [illegible] Carnot was [illegible]

The Case of Canovas.

[illegible] he Spanish [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] countrymen.

Canovas was a [illegible] bright man, he should have known better than to [illegible] a reign of [illegible] [illegible] of throwing the bomb in a Barcelona cafe.

Karditzi shot at the King of Greece purely out of a personal grudge and his deed would not be recognized by Anarchy, yet he was one of our believers.

BY EMMA GOLDMAN.

To the Editor of The World:

EVEN if this man Lucchesi declared himself an Anarchist I would be the first one to say he is not one.

Any man who understands the philosophy of anarchy could never commit such folly. The philosophy of anarchy forbids the destruction of human life, particularly in a useless manner.

Had this man chosen Francis Joseph for his victim I would have approved it, because he in his fifty years' reign has succeeded in bringing his empire nearly to dissolution.

While yet a young lad, in '48, he was the first one to set an example of cruelty by ordering the captive fighters [illegible] ing, sorrowful appeal of a mother for her son?

You may try to locate his incentive in the hatred the Italians have for the Hapsburgs for their injustices, but do not charge Anarchy if deeds of villainy unworthy

S. PALLAVICINI.

BY EMMA GOLDMAN.

To the Editor of The World:

EVEN if this man Lucchesi declared himself an Anarchist I would be the first one to say he is not one.

Any man who understands the philosophy of anarchy could never commit such folly. The philosophy of anarchy forbids the destruction of human life, particularly in a useless manner.

Had this man chosen Francis Joseph for his victim I would have approved it, because he in his fifty years' reign has succeeded in bringing his empire nearly to dissolution.

While yet a young lad, in '48, he was the first one to set an example of cruelty by ordering the captive fighters [illegible] change to defend themselves by arms or law ordering them shot down like dogs.

The most conservative people of his land opposed this act as unworthy of a monarch.

Had Lucchesi immortalized his name by the dethronement of the Spanish Queen Regent it would also be accepted by me. She did not utter one word to prevent the Barcelona horrors.

It was there that, during a religious procession last year, a bomb was thrown by a man whose identity remains hidden up to this day.

The Barcelona Horror.

Yet for the crime more than three hundred radical workingmen, professional men and artizans were arrested and subjected to tortures too horrible to relate, a very repetition of the quondam Spanish inquisition.

All this was her work and the work of Canovas del Castillo, who has since met retribution at the hands of An-

First Signed Statements Given to a Newspaper by New York's Italian Anarchist and "New York's Louise Michel."

country and none of them would approve of this murder.

EMMA GOLDMAN.

VIEWS OF OTHER LEADING ANARCHISTS.

I do not like the killing of a woman, but I feel that Lucchesi has been called to do this bloody act by reasons that are above my right to judge.

N. SLOTTO.

I do not approve the bloody murder at Geneva. I am unable to understand the causes which impelled Lucchesi to act as he did.

C. FERIARA.

No, Lucchesi has not done a logical deed. Women are to be respected. But before I pronounce a definite opinion I would like to read the reports of the trial. I have very little faith in the official telegrams.

G. IMPERATO.

A SIBERIAN TRAIN.

Surpasses in Cozy Luxuries Any American "Limited."

A new Siberian railroad train which has just received the approval of M. Khilkow, Russian Minister of Ways and Communications, is something of a marvel even in these pleasure-loving days.

This is what the "semi-barbarous Russ" has provided for passengers in the wilds of Siberia. There are five coaches, two second class, one first, one dining-car, one baggage van. There is a bathroom with gymnastic apparatus, a library in several languages, a piano and selection of music, maps, guide-books, albums of views, an ice-cellar, an arrangement for boiling water in three minutes, plates which indicate the next stopping-station and show how long the train stops.

The windows are protected by plate-glass guards. The first coach is an "observation car." A stationary bicycle, with arrangements for measuring in minutes and kilometres the work done; a barber, qualified to give medical assistance, and a superintendent who speaks Russian, French, German and

BEST COPY AVAILABLE

880712001

The Emma Goldman Papers

New York Anarchist Leaders Denounce the Murder of Austria's Empress / Emma Goldman. — p. 20 ; 28 cm. In The World. —(Sept. 18, 1898).

Obtained from the University of California, Berkeley. Institutional Location: Doe Library.

ANGIOLILLO SHOOTS CANOVAS

Canovas and H. Petrel[illegible] in the uniform in which they fought for Cuba—From a Photograph

LUCCHESI STABBING THE EMPRESS OF AUSTRIA

BY S. PALLAVICINI.

To the Editor of The World

A woman is a woman, and I am too much of a man to raise my hand against the weaker sex.

This reason alone would suffice for my disapproving Luccheni's crime.

But there are many others.

I don't recognise individual acts unless prompted by good reasoning power in the man or woman and unless the effect of the deed has been previously taken into consideration.

We do not wish to kill anybody, and yet I would not call that revolution if to be disregarded, for without an armed uprising the elevation of the working classes, bilkled by money power cannot take place.

If a comrade comes to me and says he wants to kill somebody, I tell him, "Do as you please. You have a right to your own opinions and to carry them out in accordance with their promptings, always bearing in mind that one's own liberty ends where that of others begins."

It would do me no good personally to see the death of a tyrant effected, but the classes would be benefited by the removal of oppression if would meet with my approval.

Why Luccheni is an Anarchist.

The act of Luccheni cannot be regarded as a benefit for our party from any standpoint. He has not [illegible] strated any utility by his act. As Italians being more dangerous when they are converted to anarchism than other nationality I will say that [illegible] Italians are perhaps more dangerous Anarchists than those in any other political creed.

But this is not all the [illegible] are handled with greater [illegible] oppression by the Government [illegible] tides in Italy than in any other [illegible] hence you will find a great number of Anarchists there.

And look at the measures against them. How I can know that where oppression is greatest crime grows to gigantic proportions!

The Meaning of Anarchy.

Anarchy [illegible] We do not want to kill men. But to overthrow a social system to regenerate humanity.

We want to build on the debris of present kingdoms, empires and tyrannical republics the kingdom of peace, justice and true liberty for all.

The domicile [illegible] the ordinary penalty imposed [illegible] the professional provincials upon all men who are known as Socialists or Anarchists. The penalty is condemnation to some island or for habitation in [illegible] and penalties a day for [illegible]

He knows a [illegible] of intelligent [illegible] published every year.

Two assassinations [illegible] say, they are the [illegible] documents in the hands of [illegible] of Europe.

Many earnest [illegible] leave their homes after [illegible] opinions and to carry them [illegible] accordance with their principles.

[illegible] of [illegible] than one other man [illegible] with [illegible] to be [illegible] Anarchists.

An Appeal to Americans.

[illegible] could [illegible] think of these regulations [illegible] out to you, an American, in [illegible] Russia to [illegible] alongside of [illegible] the Americas!

[illegible] Frenchman [illegible] of Pasteur that [illegible] oppression by the Government [illegible] It was on act [illegible] had a beneficial effect [illegible] in the Russias in France, and hence anarchy accepts it and I personally approve of it.

Carnot was certainly a good man, but when Caillaux threw a bomb in the Chamber of Deputies whether his [illegible] was lost. Carnot in order to terrorize [illegible] Anarchists, murdered Vaillant to death.

This [illegible] was [illegible] by Anarchy and Caserio who stabbed Carnot, was [illegible]

The Case of Canovas.

It is [illegible] say that Canovas the Spanish [illegible] the [illegible] the head of the [illegible] Anarchy [illegible] Canovas was a criminal, a bright man he should have known better than to [illegible] murder of innocent [illegible] in order to [illegible] of [illegible] Bowing [illegible] in a Barcelona cafe.

Cardinal shot at the King of Greece [illegible] out of a personal grudge and has [illegible] would [illegible] the [illegible]

[illegible] victims [illegible] every year.

[illegible] assassinations. I will say, they [illegible] the [illegible] documents in the hands of [illegible] Europe.

Many earnest [illegible] leave their homes after [illegible] opinions and to carry them [illegible] accordance with their principles.

[illegible] of [illegible] than one other man [illegible] with [illegible] to be [illegible] Anarchists.

An Appeal to Americans.

[illegible] could [illegible] think of these regulations [illegible] out to you, an American, in [illegible] Russia to [illegible] alongside of [illegible] the Americas!

[illegible] Frenchman [illegible] of Pasteur that [illegible] oppression by the Government [illegible] It was on act [illegible] had a beneficial effect [illegible] in the Russias in France, and

ing, sorrowful appeal of a mother for her son."

You may try to locate his identity in the hatred the Italians have for the murderings for their injustices, but do not [illegible] Anarchy of deeds entirely unworthy.

S. PALLAVICINI.

BY EMMA GOLDMAN

To the Editor of The World

EVEN if this man Luccheni declared himself an Anarchist, I would be the first one to protest against it.

Any man who understands the philosophy of anarchy could never commit such folly. The philosophy of anarchy forbids the destruction of human life, particularly in a useless manner.

Had this man chosen Francis Joseph or his victim I would have approved it because he in his fifty years reign has succeeded in crushing his empire nearly to dissolution.

While yet a young lad, in '48, he was the first one to set an example of cruelty by causing the captive fighters for freedom and, without giving them a chance to defend themselves by arms or law, ordering them shot down like dogs.

The most conservative people of his land opposed this act as unworthy of a monarch.

Had Luccheni immortalized his mama by the dethronement of the Spanish Queen Regent it would also be accepted by me. She did not utter one word to prevent the Barcelona horrors.

The Barcelona Horrors.

Yet for his crime more than three hundred radical workingmen, professional men and artizans were arrested and subjected to tortures too horrible to relate, a very repetition of the quondam Spanish inquisition.

All this was his work and the work of Don Leo del Castillo, who has since met retribution at the hands of Angiolillo.

In my opinion, Luccheni was an individual who saw that life had nothing in store for him, and having nothing to lose has destroyed life.

And I should consider him a drank or insane. Rather say that he is a product of present economic, political and social injustices.

I formed this opinion when I heard of the Empress' death and before I learned anything about the man, who as I heard later, did not know father or mother.

Just as little as the moon can dim the splendor of the barking of a dog, just as little will the philosophy of Anarchism lose of its grandeur because of acts committed by social outcasts.

Because so many Italians have figured as political assassins it does not follow that Anarchists would select Italians as martyrs.

Every man acts individually and [illegible] happen to be very zealous [illegible] have many Italian Anarchists in the [illegible]

LEADING ANARCHISTS.

I do not like the killing of a woman, but I feel that Luccheni has been called to do this bloody act by reasons that are above my right to judge.

N. BLOTTO.

I do not approve the bloody murder at Geneva. I am unable to understand the causes which impelled Luccheni to act as he did.

C. FERRARA.

No, Luccheni has not done a logical deed. Women are to be respected. But before I pronounce a definite opinion I would like to read the reports of the trial. I have very little faith in the official telegrams.

G. IMPERATO.

A SIBERIAN TRAIN.

Surpasses in Cozy Luxuries Any American "Limited."

A new Siberian railroad train which has just received the approval of M. Khilkow, Russian Minister of Ways and Communications, is something of a marvel even in these pleasure-loving days.

This is what the "semi-barbarous Russ" has provided for passengers in the wilds of Siberia. There are five coaches, two second class, one first, one dining-car, one baggage van. There is a bathroom with gymnastic apparatus, a library in several languages, a piano and selection of music, maps, guide-books, albums of views, an ice-cellar, an arrangement for boiling water in three minutes, plates which indicate the next stopping-station and show how long the train stops.

The windows are protected by plate-glass guards. The last coach is an "observation car." A stationary bicycle, with arrangements for measuring in minutes and kilometres the work done; a barber, qualified to give medical assistance, and a superintendent who speaks Russian, French, German and English accompany the train, which is lighted inside and outside by electricity. A lavatory has been so fitted in the second-class car that the enthusiastic photographer can change plates and develop negatives during the journey. Electric fans and portable electric reading lamps are in each compartment. The kitchen can furnish a hot dinner for sixty people. Paper and envelopes are supplied gratis at the buffet. There is no charge for the barber, but two rubles is the price of a bath.

The whole Asia railroad travelling is surprisingly cheap, and the [illegible] Siberian railroad is no exception to the rule. Less than a cent a mile is the usual cost of travelling in Siberia.

A JOKE FROM PUNCH.

Commander—What is your complaint are not this boy?

Bluejacket—Well, sir, as I was a-walkin' arft this 'ere boy, 's up an' calls me a bloomin' idjit. Now, now would you like to be called a bloomin' idjit, suppostn' you wasn't one?

BENJ. FINCH, 108 YEARS OLD.

The pride of Bread Hollow, Greene County, N. Y. is Benjamin Finch. Mr. Finch was born July 6, 1790, is one hundred and eight years old and can hear clearly, but has been blind three years. He is a basket maker by trade and has had fourteen children. Of his four sons two fought in the civil war. One of them was buried a few days ago at the age of eighty-six.

Mr. Finch's wife with whom he had lived for seventy years, died twelve years ago. Only his youngest child is now living, but he has a sister one hundred and four years old.

Benjamin Finch, of Allaben, N. Y.

FROM HAPPY WIFEHOOD TO SELLING PAPERS ON PARK ROW.

DOWN on Park Row, in the [illegible] of the surging human stream [illegible] a woman selling newspapers. Since [illegible] and refined her bearing is stamped with the seal of a gentlewoman.

Her garments, though well worn, are of fashions in make and fine texture. They are worn with the distinction of a well-bred woman.

Men and women in the throng pause to take a second look at the [illegible] corner—for now she is to the business.

Shrinking from the [illegible] she holds out her papers, timidly bidding for their disposal.

The woman is Mrs. Helen Hall. Her story a tale of sorrow [illegible]

"I only ask to be allowed to earn my living in peace and to be free from persecution," she said in a quiet, cultivated voice. I have no other wish or desire. Yes sell the papers in the [illegible] but I miss [illegible] at [illegible]

Helen Hall had a rich beauty and the advantages of education and a comfortable home. Life was to her happy [illegible] when no premonitions of the future darkened the horizon of her dreams. There were many admirers and suitors, but the spoiled girl at last picked up a crooked stick.

Then there was more cloudy weather than sunshine. The [illegible] daughter came to bring gladness to the young mother, but joy was clouded by [illegible] woes.

The storm burst the wedded pair were [illegible] and with [illegible] Mrs. Hall [illegible] [illegible] had promised much and made a cozy home. [illegible]

Then came an [illegible] of a serious nature. Returning home at dusk one winter evening, an [illegible] elevator shaft yawned for the young woman, who fell [illegible] stories. A frightful wound on the head and a broken arm made Helen Hall an [illegible] for many months. The [illegible] [illegible] weakened arm still bear testimony to the accident.

The Beginning of the End.

Nursing and medical attendance made heavy inroads on Mrs. Hall's slender means. While lying ill, half-dazed by the [illegible] she was told [illegible] Work but determined to [illegible]

the stricken woman resumed [illegible] Moving to a boarding-house, she set [illegible] to seek employment.

At last that was a dreary task. [illegible] home [illegible] and where [illegible] spoke to [illegible] with. I sought anything honorable. I was even willing to [illegible] but my broken arm [illegible] from that [illegible] long time. I tramped the streets utmost begging for work. But my trouble had [illegible] and I was hounded by detectives [illegible] and women. My every move was shadowed until my days and nights were one long horrible dream.

"One night after [illegible] a boy [illegible] for work I went in [illegible] boarding-house. The doors were closed, and every [illegible] was in prayer. [illegible]

"Then came the sights of the river and [illegible] I felt that my mind and body had been strained beyond endurance.

"As I wandered [illegible] the river front I passed the Young Woman's Christian Association. I wondered if I could not get help there. For a year or more I had gone in there frequently for meals and my face was well known.

"I went in and told them that I was homeless and they directed me and gave me a reference which admitted me to my present home. It is a home for working women and is comfortable. To me it is a haven of rest. I pay [illegible] a week for a clean comfortable bed. There are [illegible] women several girls in a room, but they are the better class of working women.

The New Life, the New Work.

"After I was admitted that dreary night I murmured a prayer of thankfulness. The fears seemed further off, and I awoke next morning with renewed hope. I remembered an acquaintance uptown who was a newsdealer.

"I went to him, told him my terrible straits and asked him in mercy to help me. He gave me an armful of papers and I started on my new career.

"I began uptown, but found Park Row a better place. I manage to make enough each day for food and shelter, but hope to earn more after I get over my timidity."

SADA, HYPNOTIC VIOLINIST.

The Pretty Girl Violinist of Ohio.

Sada is an Ohio girl who has been making a sensation in Europe as a violinist.

She is a hypnotic player. After winning the highest praise in the Continental capitals she is coming back to her native land to hypnotize her countrymen.

By what charm this strange child exerts such a peculiar power the critics cannot decide. As soon as the nerve of her violin steal through the house a strange lethargy seizes the audience, and they drop into a waking slumber.

Her control of the violin is wonderful. The magnetic strains soothe the audience into a state of tranquillity which borders strongly on the hypnotic state.

BEST COPY AVAILABLE

880616008

The Emma Goldman Papers

An Undelivered Speech / Justus Schwab, Ed[ward] Brady and Emma Goldman.— p. 8 ; 35 cm. In Liberty [New York]. —Vol. 13, no. 9 (Jan., 1899).

Obtained from the University of California, Berkeley. Institutional Location: Doe Library.

a moral condemnation, but from a sudden disgust and shudder. Whence this intensity of feeling? Perhaps we shall be told that at bottom we are not quite sure of ourselves? That we set about us betimes thorough edges of the sharpest contempt, in order to make it impossible for us to leap over our own contempt in the decisive moment when old age makes us weak and forgetful? In all sincerity, this supposition is false, and he who makes it knows nothing of what moves and determines the free spirit; how little to him does the change of opinion in itself appear as contemptible! On the contrary, he reverses in the ability to change one's opinions a rare and high distinction, especially if it continues unto old age! And his ambition (and not his pusillanimity) aspires even to the forbidden fruits of the spernere se sperni and the sperners se ipsum; while the fear inspired thereby in the vain and the comfort-loving is with him entirely out of the question! In addition to all this, the thesis of the innocence of all opinions is as certain to him as the thesis of the innocence of all actions; how could he turn judge and executioner before the apostate of intellectual liberty! The aspect of this apostate rather affects him as one afflicted with some loathsome disease affects the physician; the physical disgust engendered by the spongy, soft, overgrowing, festering masses dominates for a moment the reason and the will to help. Thus our good will is overcome by the thought of the enormous dishonesty which must have operated in the apostate of the free spirit,—by the thought of a general degeneration affecting the very framework of the character.

An Undelivered Speech.

The following correspondence explains itself:

NEW YORK, DECEMBER 7, 1898.

Dear Mr. Tucker:

The Alexander Berkman Defence Association is making an attempt and moving heaven and earth to have our friend, Alexander Berkman, pardoned.

It becomes necessary to plead with Mr. Carnegie, and solicit his aid for that purpose. Mr. Carnegie is reported to be in New York at present.

Will you kindly coöperate, select others you may choose, and act as spokesman?

If so, we will ever pray, etc.

Fraternally yours, for the committee,

JUSTUS SCHWAB.
ED. BRADY.
EMMA GOLDMAN.

NEW YORK, DECEMBER 11, 1898.

To Justus Schwab, Ed. Brady, and Emma Goldman, representing the committee of the Alexander Berkman Defence Association:

FRIENDS,—Answering your letter of December 7, honoring me with an invitation to act as your spokesman on the occasion of a proposed visit to Mr. Andrew Carnegie to solicit his aid in securing the release of Mr. Alexander Berkman, I hereby gratefully accept your trust, and I submit herewith a draft of the remarks which it is my intention to make to Mr. Carnegie, should the plan be carried out in the manner proposed.

I beg to add that, should the tenor of these remarks prove unacceptable to you, a withdrawal of your invitation would be received by me in perfect good part.

Awaiting your pleasure, I am

Yours sincerely,

BENJ. R. TUCKER.

Mr. Carnegie:

Mr. Alexander Berkman, who is now serving a sentence in a Pennsylvania prison for an attempt to kill your business partner, Mr. Henry C. Frick, in 1892, and the Alexander Berkman Defence Association, which is seeking to shorten that sentence, have asked me to solicit, on their behalf, the exercise of your influence with the Pennsylvania pardoning power, to the end that Mr. Berkman may go free. In compliance with their request I come to you.

You, in considering this petition, will be largely influenced, and very properly, by the attitude of your petitioners. In determining what that attitude is, you surely will take it for granted, as I take it for granted, that they approach you as penitent sinners, asking forgiveness and seeking remission of penalty. Their very appearance before you, in person or by proxy, on such an errand, must be taken to indicate that what they once regarded as a wise act of heroism they now regard as a foolish act of barbarism; that the method of reform by violence which they once thought efficacious they now think futile; that they keenly regret the attempt upon the life of Mr. Frick; that the six years of Mr. Berkman's imprisonment have convinced them of the error of their ways; and that henceforth they will neither commit, counsel, or approve any acts of violence whatsoever. Any other explanation of the prayer of these petitioners is inconsistent with their lofty character. Certainly it is not to be supposed for a moment that men and women of their courage and dignity, after shooting a man down deliberately and in cold blood, would then descend to the abject and basely humiliating course of begging their victim and his friends to leave them the freedom to assault him again. It is obvious, then, that they come here to-day in an attitude of sincere repentance,—no longer as reformers, but as reformed, and asking for liberty as a reward of their reformation. Now, sir, you are too close a student of social problems to need any argument of mine to convince you that punishment of the truly penitent is not politic on the part of society. In thus establishing the reality of their contrition, I am sure that I have commanded your assent to their petition.

But I cannot close without saying another word, no longer as their spokesman, but for myself. My own attitude in asking you to favor mercy for Alexander Berkman is not that of these petitioners. I do not appear here to-day as a repentant sinner. In my record on this matter there is nothing for which I have occasion to apologize. I reserve all my rights. In the past, in the exercise of my liberty, I have refused to commit, counsel, or sanction violence, but, since circumstances may arise when a policy of violence will seem advisable, I decline to surrender my liberty of choice. I have never so much favored force as to attempt assassination, and I have never so much opposed force as to be willing to pledge myself never to resort to it. If I, then, ask your intercession in favor of Mr. Berkman, I do so without occasion for penitence or promise, and less in his interest (although I shall be glad to see him free again) than in your own and that of good order, hoping that such a concession on the part of those who now have him in their power will lessen the temptation to a renewal of the policy of violence, and will induce a state of public feeling that will insure enlarged opportunity for that peaceful evolution of opinion which alone can avert social upheaval and all its attendant terrors. And, each in his respective way, your petitioners will ever pray.*

NEW YORK, DECEMBER 13, 1898.

Mr. Benj. Tucker:

DEAR SIR,—Prompted by humane feelings, we may perhaps have gone too far to invite you to so excite the sympathy of Mr. Carnegie in an act of justice,—viz., the pardon of Mr. Alexander Berkman.

We will by no means enlist the aid of Mr. Carnegie, the author of "Triumphant Democracy," from your point of view, and therefore respectfully beg to withdraw the invitation sent you.

Sincerely yours, for the committee,

JUSTUS H. SCHWAB.
EDWARD BRADY.
EMMA GOLDMAN.

* It should be stated that my representation of the attitude of the petitioners does not justly apply to such of them as have steadily discountenanced propaganda by deed from a day ante-dating Berkman's act of violence. Justus Schwab certainly is one of these exceptions; perhaps Edward Brady also.

State Socialism and Anarchism

HOW FAR THEY AGREE,
and
WHEREIN THEY DIFFER.

By BENJ. R. TUCKER.

The opening chapter of "Instead of a Book" reprinted separately. The best pamphlet with which to meet the demand for a compact exposition of Anarchism. 88 pages. Single copy, 5 cents; 10 copies, 28 cents; 100 copies, $2.40. Postage included. Mailed by the publisher,

BENJ. R. TUCKER, Box 1312, New York City.

A Blow at Trial by Jury.

By BENJ. R. TUCKER.

An examination of the special jury law passed by the New York legislature in 1896. A speech delivered by the editor of Liberty at a mass meeting held in Cooper Union, New York, June 25, 1897, under the auspices of the Central Labor Union, Typographical Union No. 6, and other labor-organizations. Distribution of this pamphlet among lawyers and legislators will tend indirectly to interest them in Anarchism. 48 pages. Single copy, 5 cents; 10 copies, 28 cents; 100 copies, $2.40. Postage included. Mailed by the publisher,

BENJ. R. TUCKER, Box 1312, New York City.

INSTEAD OF A BOOK:

BY A MAN TOO BUSY TO WRITE ONE.

A FRAGMENTARY EXPOSITION OF PHILOSOPHICAL ANARCHISM.

Culled from the Writings of BENJ. R. TUCKER,
EDITOR OF LIBERTY.

With a Full-Page Half-Tone Portrait of the Author.

A large, well-printed, and excessively cheap volume of 534 pages, consisting of articles selected from Liberty and classified under the following headings: (1) State Socialism and Anarchism: How Far They Agree, and Wherein They Differ; (2) The Individual, Society, and the State; (3) Money and Interest; (4) Land and Rent; (5) Socialism; (6) Communism; (7) Methods; (8) Miscellaneous. The whole elaborately indexed.

Cloth, One Dollar; Paper, Fifty Cents.

Mailed, post-paid, by the Publisher,

BENJ. R. TUCKER, Box 1312, New York City.

VOLUNTARY SOCIALISM.

BY

F. D. TANDY.

A complete and systematic outline of Anarchistic philosophy and economics, written in a clear, concise, and simple style. It is followed by a suggestive bibliography of books of service to those who wish to study the subject more deeply, and contains also a complete index. 228 pp. 12-mo.

Price, Cloth, $1.00; Paper, 50 Cents.

Mailed, post-paid, by

BENJ. R. TUCKER, Box 1312, New York City.

THE THIRTY-SIX TRADES OF THE STATE.

BY

ARSENE ALEXANDRE.

Translated from the French by Benj. R. Tucker. Showing the State as a jack-at-all-trades and good at none. Single copy, 3 cents; 10 copies, 10 cents; 100 copies, 80 cents. Postage included. Mailed by the publisher,

BENJ. R. TUCKER, Box 1312, New York City.

THE SCIENCE OF SOCIETY.

BY

STEPHEN PEARL ANDREWS.

A well-printed book of 165 large pages, consisting of two essays bearing the following titles respectively: "The True Constitution of Government in the Sovereignty of the Individual as the Final Development of Protestantism, Democracy, and Socialism"; "Cost the Limit of Price: A Scientific Measure of Honesty in Trade as One of the Fundamental Principles in the Solution of the Social Problem."

This work is an elaborate exposition of the teachings of Josiah Warren by one of his foremost disciples.

PRICE IN CLOTH, $1.00; IN PAPER, 50 CENTS.

Mailed, post-paid, by

BENJ. R. TUCKER, Box 1312, New York City.

MUTUAL BANKING.

BY

WILLIAM B. GREENE.

Showing the radical deficiency of the existing circulating medium and the advantages of a free currency; a plan whereby to abolish interest, not by State intervention, but by first abolishing State intervention itself.

One of the most important works on finance in the English language.

New and Cheap Edition.

PRICE, TEN CENTS.

Mailed, post-paid, by

BENJ. R. TUCKER, Box 1312, New York City.

THE BALLOT.

BY WILLIAM WALSTEIN GORDAK.

A short poem illustrating the absurdity of majority rule. Printed as a leaflet, with an effective advertisement of Liberty on the back. Excellent for propagandism.

Ten Cents Per Hundred Copies.

Mailed, post-paid, by

BENJ. R. TUCKER, Box 1312, New York City.

160

880617013

The Emma Goldman Papers

[Excerpt from Lecture] Free Speech Suppressed in Barre, VT / Emma Goldman.—pp. 1, 3 ; 36 cm. In Free Society [San Francisco]. —Vol. 5, no. 17 (March 5, 1899).

Permission to reproduce or quote in any form must be obtained from The New York Public Library, Astor, Lenox and Tilden Foundations. Institutional Location: Rose Pesotta Papers, Rare Books and Manuscripts Division.

AFTER LENOX AND ... FOUNDATIONS

FREE SOCIETY

ENTERED AT SAN FRANCISCO POSTOFFICE AS SECOND-CLASS MATTER.

An Exponent of Anarchist-Communism: Holding that Equality of Opportunity alone Constitutes Liberty; that in the Absence of Monopoly Price and Competition Cannot Exist, and that Communism is an Inevitable Consequence.

VOL. V. NO 17. SAN FRANCISCO, CAL., SUNDAY, MARCH 5, 1899. WHOLE NO. 205

SOMETIME.

A dirge for the minds in thrall—
A wail for the bondaged soul—
Oh, give us hearts like beaten steel,
Or else o'er fate control.

A wail for the seamstress lone
Who toils for her daily bread,
Until there gleams in her golden hair,
Full many a silvery thread.

And a dirge for the workman brown,
Whatever may be his name,
Who crushes thoughts with his hammer strokes,
That might give him world' fame.

But a shout for those who lea
The battle hymn of life,
And calmly sing it amid the jar
Of Truth's unequal strife.

One thing we are glad to know,
As we wrestle with demon powers
In less than a hundred years, their hearts
Will lie as low as ours.

But a dreadful doom awaits
The men who have tricked and lied,
And pressed their heels on their brother's necks,
Until reason itself has died.

But I rather would be a serf
And exist on the rich man's crumbs,
Than to have his gold and his shrinking soul,
When the lay of reckoning comes.

And after a weary while,
Somehow through the scourge of pain,
Will come the knowledge—not a I have lived,
Nor al. have died in vain.

San Diego, Ca.. M. J. [illegible]

* * * * *

FREE SPEECH SUPPRESSED IN BARRE, VT.

In vain have our fathers fought, until were the battles, wasted the lifeblood of our best men. Centuries of oppression, the denial of liberty of conscience, the ruthless slaying of all those who dared to think, who dared to speak, sent the small band of Pilgrim Fathers from despotic tyranny to people a new country. The right to think, the right to speak has always found staunch defenders in hilly Vermont. There manhood grows, there manhood lives—or shall we say it lived? Shall we think that the sturdy race of men, who risked their lives in defence of free speech, has been supplanted by pigmies and by weaklings? It almost seems so.

Hark, read and consider! "One Emma Goldman" has the chief of police of Barre, Vt., pleases to term this fearless, progressive, energetic woman) had the hardihood to deliver some lectures in our State. Three meetings were held in Barre, all were well attended, all three were exemplarly orderly, the crowd was eager to hear what the speaker had to say. Not the slightest disorder was noticeable, if we except some hissing at the last meeting, which was generally attributed to the lack of good manners on the part of the hissers. As is her wont, Emma Goldman told the good people of Barre some unpalatable truths. But truths they were, no one could gainsay that. Repeatedly the challenge went forth to dispute them successfully,—no one could do it.

Seeing that the common people began to open their eyes, that they began to recognize the great [illegible] from our moral system,—[illegible] were, of course, hit by [illegible] the workers, persuaded their tool, the Mayor of Barre, to prevent any further lectures. In obedience to this command, one Warren Howland, chief of police, by Patrick Brown, forbade the hall keeper to rent his hall for any further lectures. If this [illegible] wanton, brutal denial of the right of free speech (guaranteed by that idol of the people, the Constitution of the United States), it was perpetrated on the 31st of January, in Barre, Vt. Evidently Emma Goldman did not state falsehoods, evidently she did not incite to riot. For had she done so the police would have arrested her. But they had to prevent her in one way or the other from enlightening her listeners, and as the easiest way, they chose to trample upon your rights. It was plainly shown that you have no rights which the clubbing policeman is bound to respect. Free speech forsooth! It is dangerous to the welfare of present society to tolerate it, and, therefore, they muzzle all who have something to say. This is the new order of things—the moneybag is almighty; bow down before it or you will be silenced.

Will you, descendants of those men, who spent their best energies, their best years, their own heart blood in fighting for the right of free speech, buckle down before a petty tyrant? Today it is a stranger—an Anarchist; tomorrow it will be you who will be forbidden to express your opinion. Nay, nay, let us by all means assert our manhood, let us show the world that that spirit which craves for freedom, and which grants freedom, is still alive in us. Let us say, and let us say it in unmistakable terms, that we, one and all of us, are ready to sacrifice all, even our lives, for freedom of conscience, freedom of speech, and freedom of action.

As to the particular case in question: Having no other means to give a shadow of excuse, the perpetrators of this outrage have resorted to infamous lying. They accuse Emma Goldman of having exclaimed "God bless the hand that blew up the Maine!" They circulate the falsehood that she had said that all those boys who went to the front in our late war with Spain deserved to be shot. All who know the nature of Miss Goldman are ready to state that such words could not come from her lips; she, being an atheist, could not ask the blessing of God for any one; and as to the other slander, every one knows that she has always the greatest pity for those unfortunate men, who were duped by capitalistic instigators of that war into giving up their lives, that those vultures should extract riches from embalmed beef, by which they poisoned those poor boys.

We append here an extract from the undelivered speech entitled "Authority vs. Liberty:"

Have you ever, my friends, thought about the meaning of authority and about its injurious effects upon Liberty? I doubt that you did, for else how could you continue to worship it, to kneel before its altars and offer such awful sacrifices to this insatiable monster. Let me show you what authority has done, look what it is doing today, be it exercised under the cloak of religion, government, paternal rights or public gossip. Let me impress you with the disastrous results it has produced, and some of you those who think, those who love liberty—will agree that authority must be replaced by liberty.

There was a time, when to doubt the powers of God and his representatives meant death, horrible torture, agonizing persecution. Hideous and countless crimes were committed in the name of God, and his self appointed part ly representatives perpetuated their existence by compelling implicit obedience to their authority. No one is able to tell all the struggles, all the sufferings, through which the rebellious minds went on account of the tyrannical absurdities of Church authority. Thousands, yea, millions of lives were sacrificed, the earth was deluged with the blood of heretics before the authority of gods and devils lost its hold upon the thinking men and women. Thousands refuse allegiance to religion today, they know that it is rooted in ignorance, fraud and humbug; and they combine their efforts to pull down the relics of Church authority. The growth of freedom from Church authority, Church despotism would be very encouraging indeed—but for the fact that a large number of unbelievers, freethinkers, atheists and infidels have not yet advanced far enough in freedom to benefit the world at large. Unfortunately they have only changed the form of authority; they have done away with the authority of the Bible and have replaced it with that of the statute book. They are ready to persecute and to condemn all those who refuse to acknowledge the right of the State to dictate to society just as quickly as the religious monomaniacs were to burn heretics and witches.

What is the statute book? Nothing else but the commands of earthly gods, monarchs, despots, czars, kings or presidents. True, to disregard heavenly authority meant persecution and death, yet it is still more dangerous to rebel against earthly authorities. They are so much more numerous, they have so much more power to back them, they can enforce their will in so many ways, that it sometimes seems as if there were no salvation for mankind. It is easy to convince a man nowadays that a supernatural being is an absurdity, that the story of creating the world out of nothing is ridiculous; science has demolished these fables; intelligent men and women do no longer spend their time in killing dead gods, nor are subject to Church authority.

Much more difficult it is to convince men that the authority of government of the State, is injurious, and that man made laws are the worst foes of society. Abolish all laws? Do away with the State? You destroy society, people say when one enters into the discussion of the fallacy of belief in authority. No intelligent man or woman wants to destroy society, for society and State are not identical. Hear what Thomas Paine says: 'Society has grown as necessity of man, but government out of folly of mankind.' He said it a hundred years ago, and we have learned that the State is really of recent date, while society exists since the world exists. I do not distinguish between monarchy and democracy, whether one man or a dozen of men backed by force represent authority it is the same sin; the results are the same. They exercise their power at all cost and check every independent tendency. The statute book forbids theft, robbery and murder as crimes against the law, but those who worship these new gods profit by it. Thou shalt not kill, steal rob and cheat, says the law, at the same time under its very wing wars are carried on, whole nations are destroyed, prisons are crowded, armies enlarged, battleships built, thousands beheaded, garotted, hung and sent to the electric chair, while a few are getting richer and richer, monopolizing half the earth, and the great mass of producers hunger, the army of the unemployed is on the increase and uncounted thousands of children die for lack of food and want of air.

And why all this misery? Because the State authority has taught you so long the sacred rights of property that you have learned to take it as truth. You do not recognize that it is the statute book by which capitalism is maintained; you do not understand that there is a new trinity: God, Capitalism—God, the State and God, the Church. So long have you submitted to this "worthy" trinity that you believe that authority is absolutely necessary and that if it be abolished men would cut each other's throats. How little you know of human nature, how little you know its history. Says Kropotkin, the scientist, "You fail to recognize that the most glorious epochs in humanity were those in which the liberties were not destroyed by the State and when masses of men lived in free communities and free federations." Only those who do not think, who do not reason, who accept everything as it is because they do not investigate still cling to authority. Intelligent people see clearly that authority in any form is but a check to development and growth, that it is but a chain tied to a man from

(Continued on page 3.)

BEST COPY AVAILABLE

161

880617013

The Emma Goldman Papers

[Excerpt from Lecture] Free Speech Suppressed in Barre, VT / Emma Goldman. — pp. 1, 3 ; 36 cm. In Free Society [San Francisco]. —Vol. 5, no. 17 (March 5, 1899).

Permission to reproduce or quote in any form must be obtained from The New York Public Library, Astor, Lenox and Tilden Foundations. Institutional Location: Rose Pesotta Papers, Rare Books and Manuscripts Division.

preachers convert you to the True Religion before making its blessings so necessary to you. But your estate and your children still remain. I will administer the one, and furnish a suitable Training in Civilization for the other."

And then the Muse of History made another entry under the head of, "Treasons to Liberty."—John H. Marble in San Francisco Star.

• • • • •

FREE SPEECH SUPPRESSED IN BARRE, VT.

Continued from page 1

cradle to grave which hinders the free use of his limbs. It has terrorized the mass of mankind into submission and slavery, it maintains itself by force only, producing cunning, slyness and violence.

Some I hear ask: "Do you not acknowledge authority in science, art and literature?" Most certainly I do. But that authority has no force to back it, it cannot compel my acception nor can it prevent my rejection of it. If, for example, I refuse to accept Spencer as an authority on Communism, he cannot punish me, he cannot imprison me, he cannot hang me. He represents his thoughts only, and probably does not care one bit whether men accept his theories or not. But should I refuse to recognize the order of the chief of police in Barre, which prevents my speaking to you, I should find myself in your prison in short order. There lies the difference. Behind Spencer there is no force, behind your chief of police are the clubs and pistols of your policemen; and it is this brutal force that makes authority a curse to humanity.

Let us see, on the other hand, what liberty has brought us, and then choose whether you prefer to bow your neck before authority or walk erect under the banner of liberty.

